That is not unreasonable. For a man, if wrongly transported—as in the case of Mr. Barber, the solicitor—can afterwards have compensation made, but not so if wrongly hanged. Thus it occurs that not unfrequently murderers escape conviction sorely against the feeling both of the public and of the jurors themselves. At the Maidstone Assizes, July, 1865, two acquittals greatly astonished the public. One of these was the case of Thomas Jones, tried for the murder of his child at Woolwich. It was proved that the child had been given to the prisoner alive and well, and that it was found in the Thames dead, and with a weight tied to it to prevent its floating. Other evidence was given which all tended to show that the prisoner was guilty of murder. Everybody in Court was confident that Jones must be found guilty, and the black cap had been placed within reach of the Judge to be put on. But the jury greatly surprised the court by a verdict of "Not guilty." The prisoner immediately fell down insensible in the dock. In many cases jurors have openly acknowledged that they had refused to convict because the penalty was capital. One of the jurors empanelled to try the six persons charged (March 1856) with the peculiarly brutal murder at Matfen, near Newcastle, was remonstrated with by a gentleman, who expressed the astonishment of himself, and of the local public generally, at the verdict of acquittal then returned. The juror admitted that he and his associates believed the charge to have been substantiated, but added, that there was not absolute certainty; and, said he, "We could not consent to hang six persons except on perfectly certain evidence." Lord Cranworth, in reply to a question by Mr. Justice O'Hagan, admitted—

> "I have known one or two instances in which the prisoner was tried for murder, which, to my mind, was clearly made out; but nevertheless he was acquitted, and I believe the acquittal was because the jury did not like to convict in a case where capital punishment would follow. I have observed that."

Sir George Grey, in his evidence, quoted the following:—

> "There is one remarkable case which occurred at Winchester not long ago, in which a man was tried for the murder of a woman. There was every presumptive evidence of his being the guilty person, and I believe nobody entertained any doubt as to his guilt; but the jury asked the Judge in that case whether they could find a verdict of manslaughter. The Judge said, 'No; it is either murder or nothing,' and they found a verdict of not guilty. I think that they would have found a verdict of manslaughter if they could."

There was the case of the boy Challoner, in Canada, who, to avenge an outrage offered to his sister, followed an officer into the field where his troop was at exercise, and shot him dead with a pistol. Though there was no doubt whatever about the facts, and it was known that he had repeatedly threatened to serve the officer out, he was found not guilty, and at once set at liberty. This and other cases fully bore out the opinions of the learned counsel which he had read, and who were men as well capable of forming an opinion as the Judges themselves, and who had declared their belief that in very many cases it was impossible to procure a conviction from juries. He maintained that capital punishment did not deter crime on account of the uncertainty of the punishment. It failed to produce any check in the case of the Fenians, for the pistol of Manchester by which a policeman was shot, was echoed by the powder barrel at Clerkenwell, and from the moment of Barratt's conviction of this offence to the day of his execution, the enormity of the crime was lost in pity for the criminal; and it was to the fact that Fenianism was made treason-felony in Ireland, and not high treason, that they could attribute the convictions that had taken place in that country. Did any hon. Member believe that had treason-felony been capital any convictions would have been obtained? In conversation with a learned Judge who took a different view of the question of capital punishment to himself, his Lordship said, "If you only saw the class of men brought before us you would be convinced that nothing but capital punishment would deter them;" but, strange to say, the present law did not deter them from committing murder. What we wanted was a punishment. He wanted the punishment to be so certain that it would prevent the committal of those offences, and not so uncertain that there were 250 chances to one that a man who committed murder would not be executed. Four of the Royal Commissioners were in favour of the abolition of capital punishment. Mr. Justice O'Hagan was in favour of its abolition, but he doubted if public opinion was ripe for it; but he (Mr. Gilpin) begged to tell that learned Judge that public opinion was in advance of him, the Home Office, and the Government, on this subject. Of late years there had been some remarkable instances of distinguished persons who had avowed a change in their opinions on the subject. Mr. Waddington, the late Under Secretary of the Home Office, came to the conclusion that capital punishment must be abolished. Earl Russell, who had through a long life opposed this measure, expressed himself, in the introduction to the new edition of his work on The English Constitution, as being favourable to the abolition of capital punishment—

"For my own part, I do not doubt for a moment either the right of a community to inflict the punishment of death, or the expediency of exercising that right in certain states of society. But when I turn from that abstract right and that abstract expediency to our own state of society—when I consider how difficult it is for any Judge to separate the case which requires inflexible justice from that which admits the force of mitigating circumstances—how invidious the task of the Secretary of State in dispensing the mercy of the Crown—how critical the comments made by the public—how soon the object of general horror becomes the theme of sympathy and pity—how narrow and how limited the examples given by this condign and awful punishment—how brutal the scene at the execution—I come to the conclusion that nothing would be lost to justice, nothing lost in the preservation of innocent life, if the punishment of death were altogether abolished. In that case a sentence of a long term of separate confinement, followed by another term of hard labour and hard fare, would cease to be considered as an extension of mercy. If the sentence of the Judge were to that effect, there would scarcely ever be a petition for remission of punishment, in cases of murder, sent to the Home Office. The guilty, unpitied, would have time and opportunity to turn repentant to the Throne of Mercy."

With regard to the probable effect of the abolition of capital punishment in diminishing crime, he would quote from a speech of his right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade the testimony of local governors of States in the American Union—

"In the State of Rhode Island, one of the small States of America, with a population of not more than 200,000, capital punishment has been abolished. The Governor, the Hon. J. Pye Smith, writing from the Executive Department, March 21, 1864, says—

"'1. The death penalty was abolished in this State in the year 1852. 2. I do not think its abolition has had any effect upon the security of life. 3. Is the law against the death penalty sustained by the public opinion of the State?—Very decidedly. 4. Are convictions and punishments more certain than before the change was made?—I think they are. 5. What is the punishment now inflicted on such criminals as were formerly punished with death?—Imprisonment for life at hard labour. I have conversed with one supreme Judge, State attorney, and warden of the State prison, and they support my own established views upon the subject."

"In a second letter, dated April 4, he says:—'Our present able Chief Justice says:—"Although disposed to the present law when passed, I am equally opposed to a change in it until the experiment has been tried long enough to satisfy us that it has failed. I am clearly of opinion that the present state of the law is sustained by public opinion, and I believe it will continue to be until it is satisfactorily shown that crimes against life have been considerably increased in consequence of it. My observation fully justifies me in saying that conviction for murder is far more certain now in proper cases than when death was the punishment of it."'

"Here is the answer received from the Hon. Austin Blair, the Governor of the State of Michigan:—'1. The death penalty for murder was abolished March 1, 1847, when the revised statutes of 1846 went into effect. 2. Life is not considered less secure than before; murders are probably less frequent in proportion to population. Twenty years ago the population of the State was 300,000, and we have now a population of about 900,000. Then it was chiefly agricultural, and now we have mines of copper, iron, coal, &c., bringing into proximity dissimilar classes, and increasing the probabilities of frequent crime. Before the abolition of the death penalty murders were not unfrequent, but convictions were rarely or never obtained. It became the common belief that no jury could be found (the prisoner availing himself of the common law right of challenge) which would convict. Since the abolition there have been in seventeen years thirty-seven convictions. 3. There can be no doubt that public opinion sustains the present law and is against the restoration of the death penalty. 4. Conviction and punishment are now much more certain than before the change was made. Murder requires a greater amount of proof than any other crime, and it is found practically that a trial for murder excites no very unusual interest.'

"It therefore does not make a hero of the criminal. The letter proceeds:—'5. The punishment now is solitary confinement at hard labour for life. Since 1861 this class of prisoners have been employed as other prisoners, as it was found difficult to keep them at work in cells without giving them tools, and there was danger of their becoming insane. The reform has been successfully tried, and is no longer an experiment.'

"The last letter is from the Hon. J. S. Lewis, the Governor of Wisconsin, and is dated March 29, 1864:—'The evil tendency of public executions, the great aversion of many to the taking of life rendering it almost impossible to obtain jurors from the more intelligent portion of the community, the liability of the innocent to suffer so extreme a penalty and be placed beyond the reach of the pardoning power, and the disposition of courts and juries not to convict, fearing the innocent might suffer, convinced me that this relic of barbarism should be abolished. The death penalty was repealed in 1853. No legislation has since re-established it, and the people find themselves equally secure, and the public more certain > than before. The population in 1850 was 305,000; in 1860 it was 775,000. With this large increase of population, we might expect a large increase of criminal cases; but this does not appear to be the case."—[3 Hansard, clxxiv. 2098-9.]

He would only trouble the House with one quotation further; but it was an important one, from Professor Upham, of Maine—

> "Kennebunkport, Maine, May 4, 1869.
>
> "My dear Sir,—The law of Maine in relation to capital punishment, which has been on the statute book for thirty-five years, remains unaltered; I think you have a copy of it. During that time there have been four executions within the limits of the State; two by the authority of the national courts for crimes punishable with death, committed on the high seas; in cases of which kind, if I understand it rightly, the United States courts and laws have exclusive jurisdiction, just as they would have exclusive jurisdiction in cases of treason against the United States. In case of crimes punishable with death under the authority of the State, if the person is convicted, he cannot be executed until the expiration of a year, and then the law leaves the matter in the hands of the governor, who may either leave the criminal in prison, or if in his judgment the public good requires it, order him to be executed. During the long period of about thirty-five years, two only have been put to death under the State laws; one for attempting the life of the warden of the State prison, and the other for special atrocities in the crime for which he was convicted, the peculiar circumstances in each case furnishing a justification to the people of a course on the part of the executive authority which is practically obsolete. The people of Maine feel as safe under their system as any people in the world. But we have two powerful auxiliaries. Firstly, we keep the school-houses open; secondly, we keep the dram-shops shut. I know of no State that has returned to capital punishment after having once abolished it. Education, temperance, just laws, and light taxation, and, above all, a true and living religious sentiment, do more for the protection of the people than the death penalty.
>
> "Respectfully yours,
>
> "THOMAS C. UPHAM."

He had only now to thank the House for the attention they had paid to a long and, he feared, tiresome speech, on a subject of great importance. He wanted, if he could, to purge the English statute book of its blood law, to improve and increase the security of society, and wipe away from the House and the country the danger and the fearful responsibility of shedding innocent blood. He wanted to make convictions more certain, and to make punishment follow more surely on crime; to save his right hon. Friend and the Home Office from the perpetual misery of having to decide on the guilt or innocence of a criminal, respecting whom the utmost exertions are used to save him from death; and to bring our laws into greater conformity with the spirit and precept of Him, "who yet willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live." The time would speedily come, when the scaffold would be gathered to its kindred —the rack, the thumb-screw, and the Scavenger's Daughter—and other relics of a regretted past abhorred of man and reprobate of Heaven.

> "Luke's iron crown, and Damien's bed of fire,"

MR. R. N. FOWLER said, after the eloquent and exhaustive speech of his hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, he must ask the indulgence of the House in rising to support a cause which in former years had been advocated from these Benches by no less eminent a Member of the Conservative party than his right hon. and learned Friend the present Lord Chief Baron. He believed that the uncertainty of the punishment was a great reason for the increase of the crime. The relaxation of the law of capital punishments in this country had been found to work well. He had been deeply impressed, several years ago, by the account of a speech, given in the life of his illustrious father, Sir T. F. Buxton, by his hon. Friend the Member for East Surrey. Some fifty years ago Sir. T. F. Buxton brought the then state of the law, as regards capital punishment, before the House, and mentioned that the linen bleachers had petitioned for an alteration in the capital punishment in regard to offences against them. Parliament acceded to the Petition in the spirit described by the poet—and the result was that the robbery of linen bleaching grounds had become extinct. He had been very much impressed with the circumstances mentioned in the book, and he had made inquiries as to what had been the result of capital punishment in other cases. At that time our law was written in letters of blood. He had a great veneration for the memory of Lord Eldon and Lord Ellenborough; but we must bear in mind that they lived at a period when public opinion was rendered reckless of life by a long European war. He had obtained statistics from the blue book, on capital punishment, which showed the percentage of convictions for certain crimes in the ten years, from 1826 to 1835, when capital punishment was in full operation for all sorts of crimes, and the percentage of convictions in the ten years, from 1854 to 1863, when capital punishment was abolished in all cases except murder. In the first period, out of every 100 committals for forgery there were sixty-two convictions; for arson, twenty-five convictions out of every 100 committals; for rape, sixteen convictions; for assaults with intent, sixty-one convictions; and for sodomy, twenty-one convictions. In the latter period, from 1854 to 1863, the convictions for forgery were 80 per cent of the committals; for arson, 56 per cent; for rape, 39 per cent; for assaults with intent, 67 per cent; and for sodomy, 32 per cent. The percentage of convictions had also increased in the case of horse-stealing, sheep-stealing, and cattle-stealing. Those figures bore out the argument that where capital punishment was inflicted juries were very unwilling to convict, and that the certainty of punishment was much greater where death did not result. Another set of statistics showed the number of convictions and executions for wilful murder only in England and Wales since 1861, when attempted murder ceased to be a capital offence. In 1862, there were twenty-nine convictions and fifteen executions; in 1863, twenty-nine convictions and twenty-two executions; in 1864, thirty-two convictions and nineteen executions; in 1865, twenty convictions and eight executions; in 1866, twenty-six convictions and twelve executions; and in 1867, twenty-seven convictions and ten executions. The House would, therefore, not be surprised to find that, as only a small proportion of those sentenced to death were executed, the feeling among the criminal population was that for murder there was a very good chance of escaping punishment. Deterrence depended entirely on certainty of conviction and punishment, and the uncertainty which attached to the present state of the law as regarded both was, in fact, a great inducement to crime. Under the old law a great portion of the executions were for forgery. Now, as a banker, he belonged to a class deeply interested in the suppression of forgery; but he fearlessly stated—and he would appeal to the hon. Member for Shaftesbury (Mr. Glyn) for confirmation—that nothing would induce the banking community to return to the old law. He did not see the Governor of the Bank of England (Mr. Crawford) in his place, or he should confidently make a similar appeal to him. Some people connected with the Bank of England used at one time to boast that they had procured the execution of thirty persons per year for the forgery of £1 notes. They must all rejoice, however, that capital punishment in these cases had been abolished, and he was sure that no member of the mercantile community would wish to return to the old state of things. It was true that the old degrading exhibition of public executions had ceased to exist; but it was a mistake to suppose that executions had a deterrent effect, for he could quote the evidence of a chaplain of great experience in gaols, that out of some hundred cases in every instance, except four, in which a person was executed, that person had witnessed a public execution before committing his own crime. The statement that juries hesitated to convict was fully borne out by the number of cases in which they returned verdicts of acquittal; and that made the argument irresistible, that the present system had the very opposite effect to that which was intended. The operation of the Home Office in these cases demanded consideration; and here he wished to speak with the utmost respect of the right hon. Gentleman who had charge of the Department. He had not the honour of any private acquaintance with the right hon. Gentleman, nor had he the good fortune to be a member of the party of which the right hon. Gentleman was so distinguished an ornament. At the same time, he had been greatly impressed with the dignity, the courtesy, and the ability with which the right hon. Gentleman transacted the business of his Department in the House. He therefore hoped it would be understood that in blaming the system he meant no disrespect to the present Home Secretary, in whom he had as full confidence as he could have in any man in such matters. He might say the same of the right hon. Gentleman's three predecessors (Sir George Grey, Mr. Walpole, and Mr. G. Hardy). All four of these Gentlemen, apart from the question of party, had possessed the entire confidence of Parliament, and had carried out their duties with singular ability. He wished it to be understood that, in finding fault with the system of the Home Office, he was still of opinion that there was no public man to whom its administration might be more safely delegated than the right hon. Gentleman who now filled the Office of Home Secretary. When the present law was passed, it was intended that when a man was publicly tried and convicted the sentence of the Judge should be carried out. But in consequence of the great change in public feeling, immediately a man was sentenced to death constant appeals were made to the Home Office, and his ultimate fate did not depend on a public tribunal, but on a secret and irresponsible one in the Home Office. He might instance the case of Palmer, of Rugeley, the notorious poisoner, than whom a greater villain was not to be found in the history of crime. He was tried by three most learned and most eminent Judges; the trial was conducted by the most able men at the Bar—including the present Lord Chief Justice—it lasted for a fortnight; the prisoner was found guilty; public opinion endorsed that verdict; but from the day sentence was passed to the day of execution, the Home Secretary was persecuted by memorials on the ground that there was some uncertainty as to whether the scientific evidence could be relied on. It seemed to him most undesirable that the life of a human being should hang on the judgment of one man, however able he might be. The Home Secretary had to decide on evidence which was communicated to him, but which was frequently not known to the public; and the public were often left to wonder why it was that the Home Secretary reprieved one man and executed another; and in that way a most invidious duty was placed on the Home Secretary, which it was impossible that he could discharge with satisfaction to the public or to himself. It had been often argued that there was no sufficient punishment to substitute for capital punishment; and this argument had been put forward by the noble Lord the Member for King's Lynn (Lord Stanley); but he might cite the opinion of no less eminent an authority than Sir Walter Crofton, that imprisonment for life might take the place of the death penalty. The Capital Punishment Commission made several recommendations in their Report on this subject; but only one of these recommendations—that for the carrying out of executions privately—had yet been acted upon. That was, no doubt, a most desirable and useful reform; but if capital punishment was to continue to be enforced, the other recommendations of the Royal Commissioners should also be carried out. On these grounds, because he believed that capital punishment led to uncertainty of conviction; because he objected to place the life of a human being in the hands of a secret and irresponsible tribunal; he gave his cordial and earnest support to this Bill, the second reading of which he had the honour to second.

> "Evertere domos totas optantibus ipsis, > Dii faciles;"

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a second time."—(Mr. Gilpin.)

Mr. J. D. LEWIS, in moving that the Bill be read a second time this day three months, said, the question was one which had occupied his anxious attention for some years, and he was glad to hear his hon. Friend the Member for Northampton (Mr. Gilpin) base his Motion on the only practical and intelligible ground on which it could be based—that the abolition of capital punishment would diminish the number of murders and prevent crime. There were two main points for consideration. First, was there an unwillingness on the part of juries to convict? If so, that was tantamount to saying that death punishment was inconsistent with the public feeling on the subject, and then unquestionably they ought to accede to the second reading of this Bill. The other question was, what had been the result of the change in the law now advocated where it had occurred in countries resembling, in some degree, our own? He agreed with his hon. Friend in stating that he would not take the opinion of a Judge as to the advisability of doing away with capital punishment, for the Judge's opinion on such a point would be no better than that of any other man; but the opinion of a Judge was entitled to some weight on the question as to whether there was any difficulty in getting a jury to convict in murder cases. Five Judges were examined before the Commissioners, and they all bore testimony to the fact that there was no difficulty in getting convictions in murder cases. Those Judges were Lord Wensleydale, Lord

Cranworth, Baron Martin, Baron Bramwell, and Justice Willes, and Lord Cranworth was the only one who remembered a single case in his experience in which a jury had acquitted a prisoner on account of their objection to capital punishment. The legal authorities who supported an opposite view on this point before the Commissioners were mainly two — the hon. and learned Member for Tiverton (Mr. Denman) and Sir FitzRoy Kelly, and Sir FitzRoy Kelly had only been engaged in one murder case in the whole course of his life. The balance of evidence was therefore very strongly in favour of juries being willing to convict. As to the second point, he had received a circular from the Society for Promoting the Abolition of Capital Punishment, giving the results of the abolition of capital punishment in other countries; but it was remarkable that Tuscany was not mentioned in the document. In Tuscany capital punishment had been abolished for some years, and it had been followed by a large increase in the crime of murder, and especially in cases of murder committed for the mere sake of plunder. He could cite the case of a Swiss canton — Neuchâtel — in which capital punishment was abolished, where nineteen murders occurred in the fifteen years preceding the change, the average population of the canton being 90,000; and forty-five murders took place in the fifteen years succeeding the change, the average population being 100,000. That certainly was not an encouragement to proceed in the direction of doing away with the punishment of death. Crossing the Atlantic, he quite admitted that this punishment had been successfully abolished in one or two States; but the condition of society in those States ought to be borne in mind in connection with the fact of the abolition of death, for it was of material importance. What was that condition? Why, it was the custom to appoint what were called "vigilance committees," who strung up, without trial, murderers, garotters, and rowdies, in order to deter others from following criminal pursuits. If such a state of society existed in this country, and the citizens of London had the power of executing summary punishment upon the pests of humanity, the passing of such a Bill as that under discussion would not be a matter of such importance. But if the present law were repealed, he believed one of the greatest deterrents to crime would be removed. When he was travelling in Rhode Island, a schoolmaster committed some misbehaviour in regard to a young girl who was one of his pupils, whereupon her father and brother went out armed with firearms, with the avowed intention of shooting him if they could find him. He was assured that if they killed him they would not be brought to trial for the murder. It was therefore not a good argument to point to it and to the United States, where such customs prevailed, as favourable examples of the good resulting from the abolition of capital punishment. He believed that the abolition of that punishment would not only remove a great deterrent of crime, but it would also operate most unfavourably in another direction. Men who had committed murder might possibly reform during their imprisonment, and a strong cry and agitation would be got up against the cruelty of keeping a man incarcerated for a lifetime. The consequence would be that persons like Rush, Manning, Greenacre, and others, would be met walking about the streets of London as reformed characters. He, for one, should strongly object to be a resident in any place where such characters went about at large. He was not adverse to the carrying out of the recommendations of the Commission of 1865-6; but he altogether objected to the Bill as it stood. If it were carried, a corresponding change would have to be made in the scale of all punishments. It would never be tolerated that a ticket-of-leave man who broke into a house and stole the plate, but without doing any personal violence to any one, should be sentenced to penal servitude for life, while another man who committed a burglary, in which he had cut the throats of a man and his wife, and perhaps, in addition, thrown the maid-servant over the balusters, was sentenced to the same punishment. No young Member of that House would willingly choose such a subject for his first speech; and he could assure the House that it was only from a sense of duty he now moved that this Bill be read a second time that day three months.

MR. TIPPING, in seconding the Amendment, said, to his mind the real practical question which they had to consider was, whether in highly populous countries there was or was not a certain incorrigible class whom nothing but the punishment of death would deter from the commission of murder. If there were such a class—and it seemed to him that there was—he thought capital punishment ought not to be abolished. He did not believe that criminals had a greater horror of penal servitude for life than of death. Numberless cases that had actually occurred could be quoted to the contrary. At the same time, the more we could narrow and confine that punishment to the class of premeditated and cold-blooded murders the better. The crime of murder required further and more precise definition; but capital punishment was the specific and natural preventive of cold-blooded and premeditated murders. He feared that the reluctance of juries to find a prisoner guilty of murder under the present state of the law was a proof of the enervating and emasculating tendency of the day. The jury took an oath to give a verdict according to the evidence, and the result of their verdict was nothing to them, seeing that they were not responsible for the laws. With respect to the argument that forgery had decreased since the abolition of capital punishment for that offence, he thought the decrease was due rather to the improved means of detection since the days of Fauntleroy than to the alteration in the punishment. He, for one, was not prepared to destroy the musical scale of finality in punishment, by depriving it of its great and final note. As he did not believe that capital punishment either led or induced to crime, he should oppose the Bill.

Amendment proposed, to leave out the word "now," and at the end of the Question to add the words "upon this day three months."—(Mr. J. D. Lewis.)

Mr. Serjeant SIMON denied that the question of abolishing capital punishment was only mooted by the Society of Friends. It had extended far beyond that respectable body, and now found advocates amongst the members of every religious denomination and of every shade of political opinion. The feeling against capital punishment was a growing feeling, and the question was one of juridical science, with which the Legislature would have to deal on high moral as well as practical considerations. The great object of punishment was stated by all philosophical jurists to be —first, the correction of the offender; and, secondly, to deter others from committing the offence. It could not be denied that capital punishment failed in the first object, because you could not correct a man by putting him to death. In the second place, capital punishment was not a deterrent against murder. Human life seemed to him so sacred that the State was not justified in taking it away unless an overwhelming case were made out for its necessity; and he did not believe that such a necessity existed. One of his great objections to capital punishment was, that if they made a mistake they could not undo it, they could not make atonement to the sufferer. He could enjoy even the solace of knowing that the stain had been wiped away from his name, and that the infamy of the sentence had been removed. Another objection was the uncertainty of the punishment, for the deterrent effect of any punishment depended much more upon its certainty than upon its severity. Some persons disbelieved in the unwillingness of juries to convict; but his own experience caused him to differ from that opinion. Those who attended the criminal trials must recollect how in cases of murder, owing to the nature of the punishment, the most solemn appeals were made by the counsel for the prisoners to the juries, and how those appeals shook the feelings and judgment of the strongest men. When certain death was the consequence of their verdict juries were cautious—indeed, more than cautious—in pronouncing it. How could his hon. Friend distinguish bad cases of murder from other cases. He supposed he referred to murders of unusual atrocity; but was it not equally atrocious, for example, for a woman during a series of months to administer slow poison to her husband? Juries were often influenced by the consideration that the criminal was a woman, and yet no case could be more hideous than such a case of slow poisoning. When reference was made to the effects resulting from the abolition of capital punishment in foreign countries it should be remembered that there, as in this country, in cases where capital punishment was abolished, there was apparently an increase of crime, because the convictions were more numerous. He should not object to see a reformed criminal walking the streets, and such an expectation should, in his opinion, be an additional reason for supporting the Bill. Another objection he had, it might be said, was of a religious character. People believed in a future state, and were taught that their lives should be spent in preparing to meet death as a joyful passage to eternity. The punishment of death set that principle at nought; it stamped death as a terrible punishment, as a degrading and infamous thing, and surrounded with every circumstance of shame and contempt. His hon. Friend who had moved the Amendment (Mr. J. D. Lewis) stated that the Legislature could not persist in outraging public feeling by keeping any man in prison for life; but he differed from his hon. Friend upon that point. He believed that society would be anything but hostile to the perpetual imprisonment of a man who had committed an atrocious murder. His own belief was that the time had gone by for the preservation of capital punishment, which seemed to partake more of the character of retribution than of what should be the true motive of the State in inflicting punishment. Believing, as the result of personal experience, that capital punishment did not act any more as a deterrent than a secondary punishment would do; that it led to great uncertainty, and induced hope of escape in the criminal; and that it placed the Home Secretary very often in positions of great difficulty and uncertainty, making him the arbiter between life and death, he thought it would be a change for the better if it were abolished altogether.

MR. SCOURFIELD dissented from the proposition that the first object of punishment was the reformation of the offender.

MR. SERJEANT SIMON said, he had explained that there were two primary objects of punishment as laid down by the highest legal authorities—first, the correction of the offender; and next, the deterring example.

MR. SCOURFIELD said, that anyone who had ever had occasion to sentence a prisoner to imprisonment must have felt, in doing so, that there was very little chance of the criminal being reformed, though he knew that during the period of incarceration society would be safe. Two questions had been mixed up in this discussion which ought to be kept perfectly distinct — one was the question of capital punishment, and the other was the action of the Home Office. As regarded the functions of the Home Secretary, that subject had been treated some years ago in so exhaustive a manner by the late Sir George Lewis, that he felt it unnecessary to do more than refer hon. Members to that speech, which he always regretted had not been published in a separate form. As to the sentence of death, it was said by hon. Members that it admitted of no reversal. But what sentence was it possible to pass without producing consequences which it was impossible to reverse? Some of the punishments which had been suggested as substitutes for the penalty of death could never practically be carried out. With all the horror that he entertained of taking human life, he would far rather sentence a person to death than to perpetual solitary imprisonment; for while you had no right, according to some, to divorce the soul from the human body, you had still less right to debase the soul and reduce a human being to the level of a brute. Whatever system might be adopted, it would always be necessary, he thought, to keep on foot the punishment of death to meet cases of the highest atrocity. It must be remembered that we lived in a sensational age, when our sympathies were liable to be strongly excited by passing events, and when great virtues and great vices equally caught hold of the public mind. A man in a comparatively humble position, struggling hard to pay his debts and to overcome difficulties, attracted little attention, and passed away very often with few to assist him. But a man who was guilty of fraud on a gigantic scale, or who committed a murder under picturesque circumstances, was apt to become an object of sympathy on the part of the public, who frequently laid more stress on the sanctity of human life where the murderer was concerned than in the case of the person whom he had murdered. He had been much struck some years ago by an article in the Edinburgh Review, which contained a quotation from the pages of a French author to this effect:—"By all means let capital punishment be abolished; let reverence for human life be observed, but"—to use the French expression—"Que messieurs les assassins commencent."

Mr. HIBBERT supported the Amendment, though not because he was satisfied with the present state of the law. While cases of brutality and atrocity were so frequent, and when so much carelessness of human life was exhibited, he was not prepared to vote for the abolition of capital punishment. Some alteration of the law was necessary; but they ought to proceed gradually to limit the operation of capital punishment. Had there been opportunity on the previous evening it was his intention, therefore, to have given notice of the following Amendment:—

> "That it is not desirable to proceed with the second reading of this Bill till the recommendations of the Capital Punishment Commission in reference to the punishment of murder have been further considered by Parliament."

The Commissioners had paid very great attention to this subject, and when the position and character of those Commissioners—including the noble Lord the Member for King's Lynn (Lord Stanley), and the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Board of Trade—were considered, the greatest weight must be attached to their conclusions. The Commissioners held that a change was necessary in the definition of murder, and one of the alternatives suggested by them was that there should be two classes of murder, and that the punishment of death should be applicable only to those of the first degree, where murder was committed with malice aforethought, while in other cases there should be punishment by penal servitude for life. If such a proposition were carried into law it would get rid of many of the cases of uncertainty referred to in the debate; it would relieve juries of much trouble, and the Home Secretary of some of the most difficult business he had to perform. He wished to narrow into a small compass the cases in which capital punishment should be inflicted. As to the punishment of penal servitude for life, there was now no penal servitude for life which was carried out for life. There was almost a certainty of a man so convicted being remitted out on leave at the end of twenty years. Were hon. Members prepared to establish a state of things in which every man who had committed a murder should be loosed upon society at the expiration of such a period? It was quite possible, however, to establish in some secluded part of the country a prison where criminals could be kept for life; in Belgium, and one or two other foreign countries, prisons existed where men had been detained for twenty-five or even thirty years without detriment to their health. He believed, with the late Sir Samuel Romilly, that public security did require the retention of the punishment of death. He sympathized in the desire of his hon. Friend to humanize the law, and should be ready to assist him, and he thought much progress had been made in public feeling on this subject. He trusted that his right hon. Friend at the Home Office would give some promise that he would undertake to legislate on the recommendations of the Capital Punishment Commissioners, or otherwise carry out some plan for altering the definition of the law of murder.

Mr. BRUCE said, he felt sure the House would agree with him that his hon. Friend the Member for Northampton (Mr. Gilpin) had no need to make any apology. All who heard the speech would admit that it was powerful and eloquent, and that it had in it the best of all the ingredients of eloquence—that of earnestness. In opposing the Motion upon the second reading, he was not about to do so on the ground that the present law was perfect or in a satisfactory state; the arguments which had been adduced by various speakers, whether they supported or opposed the Bill, were conclusive upon that point. What were the facts with regard to the sentence of death for murder? During the last six years, apart from the present year, 155 sentences of death were pronounced, of which only eighty-two were executed. Of the remaining seventy-three, but twenty were cases of infanticide; there were, accordingly, fifty-three cases in which the punishment of death was remitted, or exchanged for some other punishment. Forty-four of these were sentenced to penal servitude for life, one for fifteen years, one for ten years, one for one year, four were pardoned, one became a lunatic after his sentence and before the time came for execution, and one committed suicide who would otherwise have suffered. It was impossible to assert that this was a proper or satisfactory state of things, and he would undertake to say that the law could not exist at all were it not for the large discretionary power intrusted to the Home Secretary, which devolved upon him duties, not only of the most difficult, but of the most painful character. It was hard, for instance, to justify the continued existence of a law under which it was not merely in the power, but became absolutely the duty of the Secretary of State to remit sentences of death solemnly passed by a Judge after verdict found by the jury. In accordance with long tradition in his Office, it was the duty of the Home Secretary to remit the extreme sentence in all cases of infanticide. Another custom which had grown to be invariable—at least he had not been able to find a single exception—was that no sentence of death was ever inflicted in a case where, in the opinion of the Judge, it ought not to be inflicted. Everybody acquainted with the subject must be aware that after every Assize there were Judges who hastened to inform the Home Secretary that although, according to the definition of law, the jury had been right in finding the prisoner guilty of murder, and although the Judge was himself bound to pass sentence of death, yet, in his opinion, that sentence ought not to be carried into execution. Then no inconsiderable number of cases arose where the Judge passed sentence of death, himself disagreeing with the jury. In the two latter classes of cases, the Home Secretary, whether he agreed with the opinion of the Judge or not, was bound, according to the practice, to abandon his own opinion and act upon that of the Judge—morally bound, he meant, of course, for there was no legal obligation resting upon him beyond the precedents invariably recognized by his predecessors. A third class of cases, extremely difficult to deal with, and exposing the holder of the Office to comments, harsh and very frequently unjust, was when fresh evidence arose after the conviction of the offender; and he must say that, in his opinion, this was the weakest part of our present system, and one deserving the most serious consideration of the Legislature. The case was that of a very poor class of persons, who either were unable to obtain legal assistance, or, from their position or perhaps from their previous character, excited but little sympathy in the neighbourhood, and facts which might have told in their favour were not brought out till the consciences of those acquainted with those facts were aroused by the impending death of the convicts. Cases such as these were by no means infrequent. In his short experience he had already had two or three signal instances in which evidence of the most undoubted importance had been kept back, either from want of means on the part of the prisoner to have his case properly investigated, or from want of interest on the part of those by whom the evidence could be given. One of the first cases he had to adjudicate upon was that of the convict Bisgrove, the circumstances of the murder being such as in themselves to excite suspicion of insanity. Without any quarrel, or object to gain, he dashed out the brains of a sleeping man, and then went to sleep beside him. On being awakened and told of the murder he went off into a fit, and during the trial he again went into a fit. No evidence was adduced before the Court as to the previous life of this unhappy man; but after sentence had been passed the conscience of the neighbourhood was aroused, and information was given which led to a discovery of what the facts really were—namely, that for three years he had been subject to fits of epilepsy, and, while quite peaceable at other times, under the influence of these he was dangerous, so much so that he had been dismissed from one employment. With a knowledge of these facts, it was impossible to allow the sentence of death to be carried out, and the result of two medical examinations since instituted at different places, and conducted by most competent persons, established that the prisoner was actually insane. These facts showed that there were defects in our law requiring serious consideration, and the application of legislative remedies. His hon. Friend the Member for Oldham (Mr. Hibbert) suggested the proper answer to this Bill when he invited him to give, on the part of the Government, an undertaking that an attempt would be made to improve the existing state of the law in the manner indicated by the Report of the Royal Commission. He would, however, remind his hon. Friend that the Government of Earl Russell, through their Lord Chancellor (Lord Cranworth), introduced and carried a Bill through the House of Lords upon this subject; and that, after the change of Government, their successors, not unmindful of their obligations, took up the measure. In consequence, however, of the many imperfections which were pointed out, his right hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Mr. Walpole) withdrew the Bill. And it was within his own knowledge that in the succeeding year another Bill was drawn by the counsel to the Home Office, in which he endeavoured to meet the difficulties raised upon the discussion of the former Bill; but the Bill was not presented, as its provisions did not appear to the Home Secretary fully to meet the objections. His hon. Friend had referred to the recommendations of the Royal Commission; but many of those recommendations had been attacked by some of the ablest writers on Criminal Law, and his own opinion was that, if legislation were possible, as he believed it to be, they must not follow too closely the recommendations of the Royal Commission. As to the measure advocated by his hon. Friend the Member for Northampton (Mr. Gilpin), he must say that neither in his executive nor in his individual capacity was he prepared to adopt the suggestion that in all cases the punishment of death ought to be done away with. He believed the punishment of death to be a very powerful deterrent; and, to say that it did not deter all criminals was no answer whatever, for the same remark might be made of punishments of any and of every kind. Those best acquainted with the criminal classes were of opinion that there were very many of them upon whom the punishment of death exercised a very powerful influence, and who were prevented by the fear of death alone from committing the most atrocious crimes. Of this they had a very strong instance, indeed, in the sister country. He had been repeatedly told, during the late discussions on agrarian outrages in Ireland, that if it were possible to detect one man and punish him with death, these outrages would cease, such having been the experience on former occasions. The facts mentioned in the present discussion with regard to the application of Lynch Law afforded another proof of the deterring effect of capital punishment, though inflicted in a lawless way. It was easy to believe that, if a whole population were well educated and living under the influence of a healthy public opinion, capital punishment might be abrogated without danger. But he was sorry to say we had in all our large cities a certain number of degraded and lawless individuals. It was a fact to be mentioned with shame; but the fact itself was beyond all question, that the tendencies of this class were only kept in check by fear of the most severe punishments. He admitted that public opinion was divided on the subject of capital punishment, and, perhaps, on the whole, the opinion against it was growing. But if there were many cases of persons who had committed atrocious crimes escaping with what would appear to be a light or insufficient penalty, public opinion, he believed, would very soon undergo a change. The hon. Member for Pembrokeshire (Mr. Scourfield) was correct in saying that the punishment of solitary confinement could not be carried beyond a certain extent without endangering the reason of the prisoner; and he understood that the period beyond which that punishment could not safely be continued was about two years. It had been found impossible to retain an effective hold over the conduct of the prisoner when the element of hope was excluded. Under these circumstances, he could not support the second reading of this Bill. His own opinion was, that the action of the Home Office was very much in accordance with the legislation that the majority of Members would wish to see in action. The only sufferer under the present system was the Home Secretary, upon whom it imposed an immense amount of labour and anxiety. He could not agree with those hon. Members who thought they saw a startling discrepancy between the decisions of different Home Secretaries, or even of the same Home Secretary; and he thought that their belief was founded upon a want of minute knowledge of the details of each individual case upon which their theory was founded. He gladly availed himself of that opportunity to vindicate the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Morpeth (Sir George Grey) from charges that had been made with reference to the decision at which he arrived in the cases of Wright and Hall. Wright had formed an illicit connection with a woman with whom he was living, and he seized a weapon and applied it to such a part of her body as showed that he intended to kill her, and the law not recognizing the provocation, the crime was held to be deliberate murder. His right hon. Friend was, in this case, of opinion that, under the circumstances, the law should take effect. As to Hall, he murdered a young woman who, a few days after his marriage, deserted him. He met her in company with the man she had gone to live with, and they both jeered and laughed at him. At her father's house he appealed to her to return to him, promising to pardon all that had occurred, but she refused to return. He then provided himself with a pistol, invited her to take a walk, and deliberately shot her. It was true that in this case there had been a certain amount of premeditation; but, at the same time, there had been intense provocation, and the feeling in Birmingham in favour of the prisoner was so great that the right hon. Gentleman found it to be quite impossible to allow the sentence of the law to be carried into effect. In Winsor's case, again, although the enormity of the offence was undoubted, still the sentence having been postponed for six months in order that important questions of law might be determined, the right hon. Gentleman had thought that it would not be right, after that lapse of time, to permit the prisoner to be executed. It had been suggested that the right hon. Gentleman had left Wright for execution in consequence of having been waited upon by a deputation of 2,000 working men, and because he was afraid that it would be supposed that he had yielded to a menace; but having been Under Secretary for the Home Department at that time, he could state that the right hon. Gentleman had not been influenced by any such unworthy motives. He had indicated, to the best of his ability, what he regarded as being the defects of the present system. He quite agreed that the letter of the law should be brought, as far as possible, into harmony with its practice, and that it was a grave fact that there should be such a discrepancy between the number of persons sentenced to death and those who were executed, as introducing the element of uncertainty; and he also was of opinion that measures should be taken to insure the fullest means of defence to the prisoner. But having said that, he was not prepared to go further; he was not prepared to say that in no case where the fact of desperate and intentional murder had been clearly proved, the punishment of death should not be inflicted. Where the present law had failed was in consequence of a laxity in the rules, by which the crime of murder was defined. Juries, for instance, having refused, against the opinion of the Judge, to convict in cases where the prisoners were drunk at the time of committing the murder. The hon. Member had pointed to those cases as indicating a disposition on the part of juries to shrink from convicting in cases where the offence was punishable capitally; but, in his opinion, it merely showed that the juries were inclined to exercise their own judgment as to what constituted wilful murder. Believing the law to be just in itself, and in accordance with the opinion of the great majority of people in the country; and believing, also, that it would not be safe to abolish capital punishment, he could not support the second reading of the Bill.

MR. HADFIELD asked the House to consider whether the crime of murder had increased or decreased; or, in other words, whether the punishment of death had a deterrent effect. The few executions proportionately to the number of sentences showed that there was something wrong in the present state of things. Practically, now, only murder was punished with death, in consequence merely of the discretion exercised at the Home Office, and without any sanction by Parliament. There was now scarcely any case of hanging for infanticide, and as to treason, there would have been no conviction for that crime after the late Fenian disturbances in Ireland if the punishment of disembowelling and quartering was to be inflicted. The softening of the law had been fruitful in diminishing crime; and even if public opinion were at present not advanced to the point of abolishing capital punishment, he had no doubt that it soon would be.

MR. GILPIN, in reply, disavowed any intention to speak disrespectfully of the late Home Secretary (Sir George Grey); no man had greater reason to speak with the highest respect of the ready and careful consideration which that right hon. Gentleman gave to every case that was brought before him; but his object had been only to show that in the case of a rich man there was more power of bringing evidence forward than there was in the case of a poor man. The Home Secretary said that Wright had received only slight provocation; but that provocation was that an infuriate woman dragged him out of bed by the hair of his head. The right hon. Gentleman had also said much as to the deterrent effects of this punishment. In answer to this he would only quote the Rev. John Jessop, who had been ten years chaplain of Horsemonger Lane Gaol. In reply to a question by the Duke of Richmond, he stated—

> "The number of prisoners who come under my observation is very much larger than the number in Newgate."

In 1863 there were committed to Newgate 1,770 prisoners, and to Horsemonger Lane 3,798 prisoners, being 2,028 more than to the former. During the past ten years twenty-eight persons have been committed to Horsemonger Lane Gaol for murder. Mr. Neate, M.P., then asked Mr. Jessop—

> "From your intercourse with the criminal classes, are you not disposed to think that they are not much deterred by capital punishment?"

He replied—

> "I do not think that they are deterred to any appreciable extent. I think that an injury is inflicted upon society by capital punishment, inasmuch as it deteriorates the moral sense of the masses. I think that it brutalizes them."

In answer to questions put by Mr. Waddington, Under Secretary of the Home Office, Mr. Jessop expressed his opinion that penal servitude for life would be, at least, as deterrent as capital punishment to those persons who give any thought to the consequences of their crime; that the majority of the offenders take no thought of the consequences, but reckon upon entire impunity, and that "the great uncertainty renders them entirely reckless." He disputed the statement of his hon. Friend (Mr. Lewis) as to the experience of Tuscany, and reminded him that the Minister of State had been interrogated by a Member who had challenged his statistics, and had admitted errors in them. The Home Secretary, in admitting that Charlotte Winsor could not be executed because six months had elapsed since her trial, had passed as great a censure upon the law as he could do himself. He should certainly divide the House upon the question.

MR. HENLEY said, he did not think that there was any man who in the early part of his life had stronger opinions upon this subject than he had. That opinion was very much created by the expressions of Judges and others, who at that time expressed strong opinions on the subject; but he had watched for a very lengthened period the administration of the law, and he could not resist the logical conclusions from the facts. The Secretary of State for the Home Department had said that, in his opinion, the law was deterrent; and because it was not deterrent in all cases that was no reason why it was not in some. No doubt this was sound reasoning; but when he looked at the whole class of crimes from which the punishment of death had been removed, and was unable to find any increase in this class of crimes over murder, for which the punishment had been retained, he could not bring himself to believe that capital punishment had that deterrent effect that some persons believed it had. The opinions of the Judges and the police were entitled to the greatest weight; but they did not weigh with him against facts. They had now before them the facts of more than thirty years, and he did not think that any one who looked carefully into those facts could maintain that the crimes from which the penalty of death had been removed had thereby increased. As to the crime of rape, perhaps some persons might come to a contrary opinion; but it must be recollected that at the time of the remission of the penalty the evidence that was necessary to prove the crime was materially changed, and that what was previously very difficult to prove had now become comparatively easy. Another matter was this, that as to murder, out of every three persons accused only one was convicted, whilst of all the other classes of crime where three were accused two were convicted. This weighed heavily on his mind, for he believed that if criminals ever calculated at all in reference to punishment the escape from conviction must be a great element of consideration. As to any future dallying with the definition of the law of murder, he was not sanguine that anything could be done in that matter. He must confess that what had been thrown out on that point rather strengthened the conviction of his mind that the simple way of dealing with the difficulty was to get rid of capital punishment altogether. He looked upon this Bill more as an expression of opinion by certain Members in that House, than as a measure at all likely to be enacted, because, at that late period of the Session, it was utterly impossible to believe that it could be passed into a law. After the most mature reflection he had come to the opinion that capital punishment might be safely abolished, and he would therefore vote for the second reading, if the hon. Gentleman opposite (Mr. Gilpin) called for a division upon his Motion.

MR. W. M. TORRENS said, he thought that the supporters of the principle of this Bill ought to feel thankful to the right hon. Gentleman for the speech he had just made. Surely they had a right to triumph in the adhesion of the right hon. Gentleman, whose long standing in that House and superior judgment upon all matters that came before it rendered the opinions he had just expressed extremely valuable to the advocates of the present Bill—opinions which he did not shrink from avowing, after his long experience of political life, upon the inexorable logic of facts.

Question put, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

The House divided:—Ayes 58; Noes 118: Majority 60.

AYES.

Anderson, G.
Armitstead, G.
Blake, J. A.
Bowring, E. A.
Brady, J.
Brewer, Dr.
Bright, J. (Manchester)
Brown, A. H.
Candlish, J.
Carter, Mr. Ald.
Cowen, J.
Craufurd, E. H. J.
Dalrymple, D.
Delahunty, J.
Dixon, G.
Downing, M'C.
Fawcett, H.
Fitzmaurice, Lord E.
Fletcher, I.
Fordyce, W. D.
Graham, W.
Gray, Sir J.
Hadfield, G.
Henley, rt. hon. J. W.
Holms, J.
Illingworth, A.
Johnston, A.
Laslett, W.
Lawson, Sir W.
Leatham, E. A.
Lush, Dr.
Lusk, A.
Mackintosh, E. W.
M'Laren, D.
Maguire, J. F.
Melly, G.
Miall, E.
Morley, S.
Mundella, A. J.
Palmer, J. H.
Parker, C. S.
Philips, R. N.
Potter, E.
Reed, C.
Robertson, D.
Rylands, P.
Salomons, Mr. Ald.
Salt, T.
Shaw, R.
Simon, Mr. Serjeant
Smith, E.
Stacpoole, W.
Stapleton, J.
Tite, Sir W.
Torrens, W. T. M'C.
Villiers, rt. hon. C. P.
Wright, Colonel
Young, A. W.

TELLERS.

Gilpin, C.
Fowler, R. N.

NOES.

Adam, W. P.
Adderley, rt. hn. Sir C. B.
Akroyd, E.
Allen, W. S.
Amphlett, R. P.
Arkwright, A. P.
Assheton, R.
Ayrton, A. S.
Aytoun, R. S.
Ball, J. T.
Barrington, Viscount
Baxter, W. E.
Bolckow, H. W. F.
Briscoe, J. I.
Brodrick, hon. W.
Bruce, rt. hon. H. A.
Campbell, H.
Cardwell, rt. hon. E.
Carnegie, hon. C.
Cartwright, F.
Cawley, C. E.
Cecil, Lord E. H. B. G.
Chambers, M.
Cholmeley, Sir M.
Colebrooke, Sir T. E.
Collins, T.
Corrance, F. S.
Crawford, R. W.
Cubitt, G.
Dalrymple, C.
Davie, Sir H. R. F.
Denison, E.
Dickinson, S. S.
Dimsdale, R.
Dodds, J.
Dodson, J. G.
Duff, M. E. G.
Edwardes, hon. Col. W.
Elphinstone, Sir J. D. H.
Enfield, Viscount
Erskine, Vice-Ad. J. E.
Ewing, A. O.
Eykyn, R.
Feilden, H. M.
Fellowes, E.
Figgins, J.
Finnie, W.
French, rt. hon. Col.
Garlies, Lord
Glyn, G. G.
Gore, J. R. O.
Goschen, rt. hon. G. J.
Gourley, E. T.
Grant, Colonel hon. J.
Gray, Lieut.-Colonel
Greaves, E.
Grieve, J. J.
Gurney, rt. hon. R.
Hamilton, J. G. C.
Hay, Sir J. C. D.
Henley, Lord
Hibbert, J. T.
Hill, A. S.
Hodgson, W. N.
Holford, R. S.
Hope, A. J. B. B.
Hoskyns, C. Wren-
Kinnaird, hon. A. F.
Laird, J.
Lambert, N. G.
Langton, W. H. P. G.
Lawrence, W.
Loch, G.
Lowther, W.
M'Lagan, P.
Maitland, Sir A. C. R. G.
Matheson, A.
Mellor, T. W.
Meyrick, T.
Milles, hon. G. W.
Moncreiff, rt. hon. J.
Monk, C. J.
Montgomery, Sir G. G.
Mowbray, rt. hon. J. R.
Neville-Grenville, R.
Nicol, J. D.
Noel, Hon. G. J.
Ogilvy, Sir J.
Otway, A. J.
Patten, rt. hon. Col. W.
Peel, A. W.
Phipps, C. P.
Powell, W.
Raikes, H. C.
Read, C. S.
Russell, A.
Scott, Sir W.
Selwin-Ibbetson, Sir H. J.
Sidebottom, J.
Smith, W. H.
Starkie, J. P. C.
Stepney, Colonel
Sturt, Lt. Col. N.
Sykes, Col. W. H.
Talbot, J. G.
Taylor, rt. hon. Col.
Tollemache, J.
Walker, Major G. G.
Wedderburn, Sir D.
Welby, W. E.
Wheelhouse, W. S. J.
Williams, W.
Wilmot, H.
Winterbotham, H. S. P.
Wise, H. C.
Wynn, C. W. W.
Young, G.

TELLERS.

Lewis, J. D.
Tipping, W.

Words added.

Main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to.

Bill put off for three months.

GAME LAWS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

[LORD ELCHO.]

(Lord Elcho, Sir Graham Montgomery.)

[BILL 36.] SECOND READING.

Order for Second Reading read.

LORD ELCHO, in rising to move that the Bill be now read a second time, said, that as, at this late period of the Session, it was hopeless to expect that it should pass into law during the present Session, he should conclude by withdrawing it. He wished, however, in the first place, to make a few observations upon the subject. Three Bills had been introduced into the House during the Session; the first, introduced by himself in the Session of 1867, had formed the basis of the legislation recommended by the Select Committee, to whom a similar Bill had been referred; the second, by the hon. Member for Linlithgow, whose Bill had also been referred during the same Session to a Select Committee, who had not adopted it as the basis of the legislation they proposed; and the third, by the hon. Member for the Wick Burghs, which rendered valid all agreements respecting game which tenants and their landlords might think fit to enter into. There was no hope of any one of these Bills becoming law; and seeing that to be the case, the hon. and learned Member for Wick (Mr. Loch) gave notice for the appointment of a Committee to inquire into the subject. The principle of inquiry appeared to have been admitted on all hands. The only question seemed to have been as to the form the inquiry should take. His hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Portsmouth (Sir James Elphinstone) proposed, as an Amendment to the Motion of the hon. and learned Member for Wick, that the inquiry should be by a Commission, and not by a Committee. He therefore hoped that the Government would not attempt legislation on the subject until there had been an inquiry. His hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Portsmouth, who was in the habit of speaking his mind in plain terms, had said, on a former occasion, that this Scotch Game question was one of the greatest impostures of the day. The question had been made a stalking-horse at Scotch elections. He did not pretend to say that there were not cases in Scotland of excessive game preservation; but he believed they were few. They could not legislate generally for occasional abuse in the agricultural districts. Such abuse was no reason why they should abolish the whole of the Game Laws where game was a most valuable description of property, and where it did no injury to tenants. He maintained that even in the rural districts the cases of over-preservation of game were few in number, and they certainly ought not to legislate without having all the facts before them. As regarded hares, he knew that in his own county there was only one hare now for ten that existed when he was a boy. Unquestionably there were one or two cases of great abuse of excessive preservation—of excessive sale of game —which had given a bad name to game preserving, and he admitted that a stop ought to be put to such an evil either by legislation or by public opinion; but what he asked for was an inquiry which should extend to England as well as to Scotland. He confessed, however, that he had not much confidence in the action of the Government in this matter, seeing what they had done in the cases of the Annuity Tax and the Law of Hypothec. It appeared — with respect to Scotch measures, at all events—that the Government were ready to vote for the second reading of Bills which they did not approve. He believed the reason of this to be a disinclination, on the part of the Government, to do anything which might be displeasing to any portion of their good Scotch majority. Only yesterday Scotch Members, in their appeal to the Government on the Parochial Schools Bill, said, in effect—" We supported you thick and thin during the debates on the Irish Church Bill; won't you, then, in return, do as much for us?" This question of the Game Laws had been made a hustings question in Scotland. It had been made a shibboleth at the elections; and when he observed the tone taken by hon. Members on this subject, he could not help thinking that their feelings must be that they had only to open their mouth wide enough, and the Government was sure to grant what they asked for without inquiry. He regretted that there should be any thought of agitation on this question without inquiry. He believed public opinion to be against the excessive preservation of game; and he believed that if the landlords would let their tenants shoot hares and rabbits they would still have as much game as they would care to shoot. This was a very wide question. He was prepared for a change in the law; but he was not prepared to go the length of the hon. Member for the Wick Burghs, and say that when one man had got something to sell, and another man wanted to buy it, the Legislature should step in and prevent that. He said, with regard to this question of game legislation, that in every country where there were no Game Laws there was a strict law of trespass, and nowhere was the trespass law more strict than it was in America. If the tenant was oppressed by his landlord with regard to game, he should be able readily to obtain redress. That was his broad view of this question. He hoped his learned Friend the Lord Advocate would not introduce a Bill on the subject, on behalf of the Government, until a Commission of Inquiry, both for England and Scotland, had ascertained the facts of the case, and had enabled them to legislate wisely and for the benefit of all concerned.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a second time."—(Lord Elcho.)

SIR DAVID WEDDERBURN wished to explain that his opposition to the Bill did not arise from any objection to the principle or to the Preamble, but solely from the inadequacy of the means proposed to effect the result aimed at. Were such a Bill to become law, professing to amend the Game Laws of Scotland, but leaving altogether untouched numerous and important points which could not be lost sight of in any satisfactory measure, he believed the farmers and the people of Scotland would feel that their wants and their wishes had been ignored by the Legislature, and that the time for considering and redressing their grievances had been indefinitely postponed.

MR. LOCH said, he regretted the manner in which this question had been dealt with by the noble Lord (Lord Elcho) and the hon. Member for Portsmouth (Sir James Elphinstone); but there was a method in the bluntness of the hon. Member for Portsmouth, for it enabled him to prevent the inquiry which the Government had in view, and which would probably have elicited many facts useful for the purpose of legislation. That was the effect of his interposing a proposal for a Commission in lieu of a Committee. When the hon. Member had gained his point, he said not one word about either the one or the other, and at once threw up his Motion for a Commission. He (Mr. Loch) was glad to be able to believe that this was not a party question. He had reason to believe that there were Gentlemen on the other side of the House who were anxious to see a remedy applied to the present state of things; while, on the other hand, he was sorry to say there were Gentlemen on this side who, though they had been inexorable with regard to Irish curates, on the question of foxes and rabbits were strong Conservatives. It was with reluctance he had moved in this matter; but circumstances had given him an opportunity of observing the evils arising from the present state of the Game Laws in Scotland, and also of seeing how great were the advantages arising from a good feeling between landlord and tenant. When the meeting of Members was held on this question, the details of the noble Lord's Bill were not considered. Only that the noble Lord, on a former occasion, had referred to certain agricultural meetings, he should not have alluded to the fact that at those meetings the noble Lord's Bill was described as a "pretence" and a "sham," and as a Bill which was not intended to accomplish any good. He did not agree with the hon. Member for Linlithgowshire in his views on this subject; but no one could doubt that hon. Member's honesty of purpose, and his efforts were entitled to be spoken of with respect, as they had been at the meeting. He thought some of the clauses of the Bill of the hon. Member for Linlithgowshire so wide that they would encourage poaching. In his own Bill he proceeded on the principle that neither by common law nor by statute was there any property in game. The statutes having reference to game were, in fact, only a code of regulations with reference to the killing of wild animals. They were, therefore, as much within the ken of Parliament as were the laws which regulated public-houses. The grievance consisted in excessive preservation. His object had been to provide a remedy for that evil by giving landlords and tenants equal power to kill hares and rabbits, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary; but there was due provision in the Bill for the compensation of landlords on account of interference with existing contracts. This question, however, should be dealt with as one affecting the community at large, and hence he proposed to prevent such contracts from being entered into in future. The law of Scotland was opposed to a landowner's creating a nuisance on his estate, and no one could deny that an excessive congregation of hares and rabbits constituted a nuisance. The analogy of the law with regard to the truck system was also in point. The hon. Member then cited some old Scotch laws in support of his view.

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, he thought that the noble Lord (Lord Elcho), who had referred to several acts in his political life, had, in his conduct with reference to the subject of Reform, scarcely been so consistent himself as to be entitled to bring a charge of that nature against any other hon. Member. He (the Lord Advocate) begged to say that the Scotch Members who sat behind him were a more numerous phalanx than they ever were before, and they were as honest, as independent, and as perfectly ready to redeem their pledges as any other Members of that House. It was because they thought there was a grievance, and because they thought it was not an imposture, that so much time and trouble had been spent in the consideration of the subject. That was his view, and he believed it was the view entertained generally by the people of Scotland. Whether that grievance might be exaggerated or not was another matter; but he thought it was not fair, on the part of the noble Lord the Member for Haddingtonshire and other Scotch Members, to say that this question had been used for party purposes, and as a means of stirring up agitation on the hustings. The hon. Gentleman the Member for Portsmouth (Sir James Elphinstone) might be excused in the matter, as he and his constituents of Scotland were not of the one way of thinking. So much for consistency in general. The Government had carefully considered the proposal of issuing a Commission, as suggested by his noble Friend; but they did not think that that would be the best mode of adjusting the matter, because, in their opinion, there was already sufficient information to enable them to legislate, if legislation were found necessary. The whole subject would receive careful consideration during the Recess, with a view to legislation, if it was thought advisable to make any alteration in the law.

SIR JAMES ELPHINSTONE denied that he had made any imputation upon his hon. Friend the Member for Wick. He had certainly stated that the way in which the Game question had been handled at the elections in Scotland was an injustice; but he had not the slightest intention of connecting with that statement his hon. Friend, whose father as well as he himself he had known for many years. His charge of profligacy had been made against the clause which proposed to sanction the departure from agreements which had been voluntarily entered into by those who proposed to break them. But the charge of profligacy was no new charge in the House of Commons, for it was no very great length of time since Lord Palmerston had said that none but a profligate Government could ever propose the disestablishment of the Irish Church. With regard to the general question, he wished to say that the Government came to a distinct understanding with them that the Committee was to be withdrawn, and that, before legislation took place, there should be an inquiry by a Royal Commission. ["No!"]

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Quite the reverse. The Government never said a single word pledging themselves to a Royal Commission.

SIR JAMES ELPHINSTONE admitted the Government did not pledge themselves; but they had a majority in the House, and they were going to a division, when overtures were made to them that they should allow the matter to drop, on the understanding that the Government would legislate upon the question; but that, previous to legislation, a Royal Commission should issue to inquire into the subject. ["No, no!"] He appealed to the hon. Member for Berwickshire, to the noble Lord, and to hon. Members who were present on that occasion, to say whether what he had stated was not the fact?

MR. ROBERTSON: The Government agreed to legislate; but they did not agree to the appointment of a Royal Commission.

SIR JAMES ELPHINSTONE said, he would not detain the House any longer. He would only say, in conclusion, that he could not see the necessity for legislation on this subject.

Debate adjourned till To-morrow.

And it being Six of the clock, Mr. Speaker adjourned the House till To-morrow, without putting the Question.

SANITARY ACT (1866) AMENDMENT BILL.

On Motion of Mr. Secretary BRUCE, Bill to facilitate the borrowing Money in certain cases for the purpose of "The Sanitary Act, 1866," and the Acts amending the same, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Secretary BRUCE and Mr. KNATCHBULL-HUGESSEN.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 244.]

~~~~~~

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Thursday, 29th July, 1869.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading—Fisheries (Ireland) * (236).

Second Reading—Contagious Diseases (Animals) (217); Jamaica Loans * (204); Savings Banks and Post Office Savings Banks * (211); Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal * (195); Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c. (209); Valuation of Property (Metropolis) * (229); Public Schools Act (1868) Amendment * (232); Millbank Prison * (234), postponed; Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment * (235).

Committee—Contagious Diseases * (221); Pharmacy Act (1868) Amendment * (108-238).

Committee—Report—County Courts (Admiralty Jurisdiction) Act (1868) Amendment * (173); Shipping Dues Exemption Act (1867) Amendment * (178); Cinque Ports Act Amendment * (216).

Third Reading—Bankruptcy (208); Prevention of Gaming (Scotland) * (206), and passed.

Withdrawn—Ecclesiastical Courts (191).

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS BILL.

(The Earl of Shaftesbury.)

(NO. 191.) BILL WITHDRAWN.

THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY said, the Select Committee had reported this Bill with Amendments; but the Session being now so far advanced, he felt it useless to proceed further with it. He should take the earliest opportunity next Session of re-introducing it.

Bill (by leave of the House) withdrawn.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) BILL—(No. 217.)

(The Lord President.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

EARL DE GREY AND RIPON, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, that although it consisted of 126 clauses it was, in fact, a measure for consolidating the existing law. That being so, it would not be necessary to detain their Lordships by a minute statement of the details. As their Lordships were aware, the Privy Council was already invested with large powers with reference to the contagious and infectious diseases of animals, but many persons interested in agriculture desired special legislative provision for dealing with two wide-spread diseases, pleuro-pneumonia and sheep-pox. Authority was consequently given in the Bill to deal with these diseases in a stringent manner—especially with pleuro-pneumonia, which was highly infectious, and more certainly fatal. The principal new provisions of the Bill were those relating to the regulations for the importation of foreign cattle, the Government having felt it their duty, while preserving to the public the benefit of free trade in cattle and a free supply of food, to strengthen the powers intrusted to the Executive of so regulating the importation of foreign cattle as to prevent the introduction of diseases. The principle of the Bill was to give large discretionary powers to the Privy Council, so that their action might be varied according to the different circumstances of different countries. With regard to the supply of foreign cattle for the London market, it had been found necessary under the present system to draw a cordon round the metropolis, so that all beasts, whether foreign or domestic, which came within it, were prohibited from leaving it alive. This restriction, checking the movements of cattle, had operated very inconveniently to home breeders, and had been much complained of; and the Government had endeavoured to remove it without running the risk of introducing into this country diseases brought by foreign cattle. Power was given to the City of London to provide a market to which all cattle coming from suspected countries would be sent, none being permitted to be taken alive beyond a certain circuit. This market would have to be constructed before the end of 1872. He had no doubt the City of London would carry out the arrangement; but, in case of its default, that part of the Metropolitan Market Act which gave it a monopoly against all other persons within seven miles of a certain point would be abolished, so that other parties would be able to step in and provide what was needed. The new market would be subject to the approval of the Privy Council, and the cordon would then be removed. He believed that the operations of home breeders would thus be facilitated, while guarding against danger from foreign animals.
~~~~~~

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(The Lord President.)

The Bishop of GLOUCESTER and BRISTOL said, he was glad to find that in this Bill protection was provided against the frightful and needless suffering undergone by cattle during the transit, and at the port of landing; and he was deeply grateful to the Government for having taken into consideration the evils they endured: but he would venture to suggest that the 64th and 76th clauses should be carried a little further. Their Lordships would have seen in The Times of that morning a letter on this subject from Professor Moffett, of the Queen's College, Galway. He had previously received a manuscript copy of the letter, and should have read it to the House, had it not already obtained full publicity. It had been hoped that conveyance by railway would considerably mitigate the sufferings formerly undergone; but no one could have been at a railway station, and seen the crowded cattle trucks full of beasts frantic with thirst and crowding, without being struck with horror at their sufferings. It was therefore with great satisfaction that he saw some provision made to remedy this dreadful evil. The 64th clause provided that animals should not be more than thirty hours in the trucks without being supplied with food and water; and evidence had been offered that they could fast twenty-four hours. This might be the case under the ordinary conditions; but when crowded in a truck, and exposed to every kind of terror, thirty hours were much too long a time, and he hoped that, in Committee, the Government would consent to reduce the number of hours to twelve. The 76th clause empowered the Privy Council to enforce that food and water should be supplied to animals, upon their being landed at our ports from a foreign country; but he thought that the Government might carry this matter further, and insist on food and water being supplied to them during the voyage. Nothing but the greed and rapacity of those engaged in the cattle trade prevented this being done; and it might easily be accomplished by providing that an inspector should be attached as supercargo to vessels engaged in the transport of cattle. But he thought they should be also protected from unnecessary suffering in conveyance by railway. It was true that persons having animals carried in a cruel way were liable to punishment; but there was a difficulty in enforcing the law. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, of which he was a Vice President, had successfully prosecuted a dealer who, at his own risk, hired a railway truck and forced six animals into it; but there should be some general order, enabling railway companies to prevent over-crowding, on on the part of rapacious persons. He could assure their Lordships that the sufferings of cattle formed a subject of grave consideration among a great many reflecting persons, and that any legislation which would tend to alleviate them would be hailed as an honour to the country.

Lord COLONSAY rose to point out a difficulty which might arise in Scotland from the use of the term "local authority," as regarded counties; and objected to the option given to the Commissioners of Supply, as to whether the rate should be borne by the landlords or should be shared between them and their tenants. This would be invidious; and it would be better for Parliament to decide the point, the usual custom being that rates were divided equally between the landlord and the tenant.

Lord EGERTON of TATTON was glad the Government had taken steps to guard against other diseases besides cattle plague.

The Earl of ROMNEY referred to the great and unnecessary suffering caused by thirst, and expressed approval of the limitation suggested by the right rev. Prelate.

EARL DE GREY AND RIPON, in reply, said he should be happy to consider the Amendments of the right rev. Prelate. Both aspects of the case should be taken into account, for the untrucking of animals to supply them with food and water was attended with suffering. He feared that the points raised by the noble and learned Lord, as to Scotland, could not be dealt with consistently with the privileges of the other House.

Motion agreed to; Bill read 2ª accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House To-morrow.

BANKRUPTCY BILL—(No. 207-8.)

(The Lord Chancellor.)

THIRD READING.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3ª."—(The Lord Chancellor.)

LORD ROMILLY said, that before the Bill was read the third time he desired to point out that, as the Bill now stood, a person who drew a bill payable at any future day and who thereupon sold all his property and absconded from the country before the Bill became due, could not henceforth be made bankrupt until after the bill had arrived at maturity, and after all the property had been abstracted. This was an entire change in the law as it now existed, and one which would give rise to great frauds. The Select Committee, however, having been divided on this point, he should not revive it. He believed it also to be a great mistake to make the amount of dividend the criterion of a bankrupt's honesty. The effect of it was to induce persons to obtain a large amount of goods on the eve of bankruptcy, which they knew they could not pay for, in order to raise the dividend to 10*s.* in the pound, and he feared this would give rise to frauds which the penal clauses would not sufficiently check. The valuation of the assets—if this principle were adopted—ought to be made at the time of the adjudication. This would be less objectionable, and the bankrupt ought not to be punished on account of difficulty or neglect in realizing those assets, being a matter over which he had no control.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR denied that the Bill made the dividend the sole criterion. A bankrupt's liability would not continue if the failure to pay 10*s.* in the pound arose from faulty collection of the assets; and it would cease if the creditors expressed an opinion that the bankruptcy was due to unavoidable misfortune.

Motion agreed to; Bill read 3ª accordingly, with the Amendments; further Amendments made; Bill passed and sent to the Commons.

PRESENTATION OF BENEFICES BELONGING TO ROMAN CATHOLICS, &c., BILL—(No. 209.)

(The Archbishop of Canterbury.)

SECOND READING.

THE BISHOP OF GLOUCESTER AND BRISTOL said, that his most rev. Friend (the Archbishop of Canterbury), who was unavoidably absent, had requested him to move the second reading of this Bill. The object was to repeal a clause in an Act of William and Mary, which provided that clergymen presented to benefices by the Universities on account of the patrons being Roman Catholics should forfeit such livings if they failed to reside during the whole year, with the exception of sixty days. The general Act of 1 & 2 Vict., c. 106, allowed other incumbents three months' absence, the penalty of exceeding it being simply ecclesiastical censure, and this Bill proposed to bring the former class under the same rule.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol.)

LORD CAMOYS said, he had expected, considering the liberality of sentiment of the most rev. Prelate, that the object of the Bill was to repeal the disqualification under which Roman Catholic patrons alone laboured. Surely, there could be no greater danger to the Church of England from Roman Catholic patrons than from Jews and Dissenters, every presentation being subject to the license of the Bishop? Roman Catholics were now obliged to sell the next presentation; but, if the incumbent died before this was done, one of the Universities presented; but such patronage might be relinquished without much loss, there being but a small number of livings, held by the Duke of Norfolk, himself, and other Roman Catholic Peers.

The Bishop of GLOUCESTER and BRISTOL said, he could hardly undertake the responsibility of stating what the opinion of his most rev. Friend the Archbishop of Canterbury was on the subject mentioned by the noble Lord. For his own part, he had no objection to say that there was, in his opinion, a considerable amount of inconvenience in connection with the patronage as exercised by the Universities.

Motion agreed to; Bill read 2ª accordingly, and committed to a Commitee of the Whole House To-morrow.

House adjourned at half past Six o'clock,
till To-morrow, half past
Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, 29*th July*, 1869.

MINUTES.]—Supply—considered in Committee —Civil Service Estimates.

Public Bills—Resolutions in Committee—East India Loan; Harbour of Galle Loan.

Ordered—First Reading—Expiring Laws Continuance* [245]; Offices Abolition* [246]; Dividends on Public Stocks* [247].

First Reading — Prevention of Gaming (Scotland)* [248].

Second Reading—Basses Lights (Ceylon)* [224]; Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment* [227]; Accounts, &c. Presentation* [240]; Charity Commissioners* [239].

Committee — Report — Public Works (Ireland)* [202]; Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act (1863) Amendment* [55]; Nitro Glycerine (re-comm.)* [235]; Volunteer Act (1863) Amendment* [236]; Zanzibar (Jurisdiction of Consul)* [237]; Criminal Lunatics* [172]; Clerk of Assize* [203]; Militia (Ireland)* [228]; New Parishes and Church Building Acts Amendment* [225]; Seamen's Clothing* [242]; Local Officers Superannuation (Ireland)* [87].

Considered as amended — Telegraph [233]; Seeds Adulteration* [222]; Inclosure Awards (County Palatine of Durham)* [210]; Local Officers Superannuation (Ireland)* [87].

Third Reading—Telegraph [233]; Seeds Adulteration* [222], and passed.

POOR LAWS—KEIGHLEY UNION.

QUESTION.

Mr. H. B. SAMUELSON said, he wished to ask the President of the Poor Law Board, Whether his attention has been called to a Letter signed J. A. Busfield, which appeared in the "Times" newspaper of 22nd July, to the effect that an order had been made by the Guardians of the Keighley Union, that neither food nor the opportunity of obtaining food by work shall be provided for the inmates of the casual ward in that Union; and, whether that statement is true; whether the same practice prevails in other Unions; and, if so, whether the practice does not require immediate prohibition?

Mr. GOSCHEN said, in reply, that the statement in Mr. Busfield's letter was not perfectly accurate, and the explanation he had received from the guardians did not fully agree with it. The real order was as follows:—

> "The Committee leave it optional for vagrants to leave the workhouse in a morning without breakfast, or to stay until noon and pick oakum in return for their breakfast."

However, for six months, owing to the reluctance of the vagrants to perform the task of work, there had occurred no case of vagrants performing the work and receiving breakfast, and that circumstance had given rise to the impression that breakfast was under no circumstances supplied. The general practice in workhouses was to enforce work, and then give breakfast, and he thought that the custom at Keighley Union of making both the work and the breakfast optional was not one to be commended, though it was not so barbarous as might have been inferred from the statement which had been published.

NAVY—FRESH WATER FOR THE FLEET.—QUESTION.

Sir JOHN HAY said, he would beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty, Whether any regulations have been issued restricting the quantity of fresh water to be used at sea, with a view to economy of fuel for distillation? He put the question in consequence of seeing it stated that the crew of one of Her Majesty's ships now sailing round the world had suffered from want of fresh water.

Mr. CHILDERS: Sir, when I first saw my hon. and gallant Friend's Notice on the Paper I imagined that he was about to suggest a new field for economy, which I confess I should never have thought of. But he now states that he refers to a letter in a newspaper—which I regret should have been written by an officer in the service—as to the allowance of water in the flying squadron, and I have only to say that no regulation on this subject has been made by the present Board of Admiralty. The only reference to the supply of fresh water which I can find is a suggestion that, in the Mediterranean, ships should fill up at certain ports where they often call.

SCOTCH AND IRISH FISHERIES.

QUESTION.

MR. STACPOOLE said, he would beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty, How many Government steam vessels, sailing vessels (exclusive of Revenue Cutters), and ships boats' crews have been employed, and for how long during the past twelve months, for the supervision and protection of the Scotch Fisheries; and, to ask the same question in reference to the Irish Fisheries?

MR. CHILDERS said, in reply, that last year two vessels were employed, one upon the East Coast of Scotland, and the other upon the West Coast, with the small vessels attached to them, for the protection of the Scotch fisheries; but this year one of these had been reported as not being necessary, and one vessel, with the small vessels attached, would be employed. On the Irish coast there was a vessel attached to each of the three stationary ships which were available for the protection of Irish Fisheries. Some months ago he had placed himself in communication with his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, the result of which had been that when vessels were required for the protection of fisheries they would only be sent upon a requisition from the Secretary of State. He did not think that the Navy was the proper body to carry on the ordinary police protection of our in-shore waters.

THE CORONATION OATH—QUESTION.

MR. WHITE said, he wished to ask Mr. Attorney General, Whether it be the fact that by reason of the late repeal of the Legislative Union of the Churches of England and Ireland, the statutory form of the Coronation Oath, so far as it related to the United Church of England and Ireland is also virtually repealed; and, if so, whether it is intended to submit to Parliament any measure whereby a new form of Oath may be substituted for the same?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL: Sir, I have to remind my hon. Friend that the words of the Oath taken by Her Majesty on her Coronation are not words prescribed by any Act of Parliament. The only two Acts of Parliament whereby the form of Oath has been prescribed are these—the 1st William and Mary, s. 1, c. 6, the words of which are—

> "Will you to the utmost of your power maintain the laws of God, the due profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant Reformed religion established by the Law; and will you preserve unto the Bishops and Clergy of this Realm, and to the churches committed to their charge, all such rights and privileges as by Law do, or shall, appertain and belong to them?"

That is the form of words prescribed by the 1st William and Mary. Then follows a statute of the 5th Anne, upon the union between England and Scotland. And that Act, after making provision that that Union shall not affect the Established Church of England, proceeds to say—

> "Every King and Queen succeeding shall take and subscribe an Oath"—

Observe, not prescribing the particular form, the words of the statute being in general terms—

> "To maintain and preserve inviolate the said settlement of the Church of England, and the doctrine, worship, discipline, and government thereof, as by Law established, within the kingdoms of England and Ireland, the Principality of Wales, and the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and the territories thereunto belonging."

That is the last statute which has prescribed any form of Oath. Perhaps, I am not correct in saying that this prescribes a form of Oath. It only indicates the general character of the Oath to be taken. The Act of Union made no mention of the Coronation Oath, but it united the two Churches of England and Ireland. Upon the accession of George IV. to the Throne it became a matter of serious consideration whether some alteration of the Oath would not be desirable in order to meet the altered circumstances produced by the Union. It was suggested by the Archbishop of Canterbury that some change should be made. The matter was considered by Lord Eldon, who was then Lord Chancellor, and by the Law Officers of the Crown, one of whom was Lord Lyndhurst, and it was agreed by them that it was in the power of the Privy Council to change the words of the Oath, and to adapt it to the altered circumstances of the case; and, accordingly, a change in the form of the Oath was then made by order of the Privy Council, adapting the Oath to the union of the two Churches. Upon the accession of Her Majesty the question of the Coronation Oath was again considered, and the words which constitute the present Oath, and which were taken by the Queen, were then settled by the Privy Council. I believe the persons who settled the form of the Oath were Lord Melbourne, the Prime Minister; Lord Cottenham, the Lord Chancellor; Lord Lansdowne, and Lord Russell; and I rather think the Law Officers of the Crown, Lord Campbell and Lord Cranworth (then Sir John Rolfe) were consulted. It was under the Order of the Privy Council at that time, that the words of the Oath taken by Her Majesty were settled, and those words were these—

> "Will you maintain and preserve inviolately the settlement of the United Church of England and Ireland, and the doctrine, worship, and government thereof, as by Law established within England and Ireland, and the territories thereunto belonging?"

Therefore, I say, in answer to my hon. Friend, that if the Privy Council had the power to change the form of the Oath, so as to adapt it to the altered circumstances produced by the union of the two Churches, the Privy Council must have the same power of altering it now, so as to adapt it to the new state of things produced by the separation of the Churches; and, if that it be so, no Act of Parliament will be necessary; and I believe it is not the intention of Her Majesty's Government to bring in any Act.

ARMY—MONCRIEFF GUN CARRIAGES.

QUESTION.

CAPTAIN BEAUMONT said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for War, If the mode of mounting the guns at the Coalhouse Fort is decided; and, if so, whether they are to be mounted behind shields or on Moncrieff gun carriages?

MR. CARDWELL said, in reply, that the armament of the Coalhouse Fort had not yet been decided on; but he supposed the Question had respect to the assumption—which he had no doubt would turn out to be well-founded—that the Moncrieff carriages could be applied as successfully to guns of twelve or eighteen tons, as they had been already to the smaller guns.

ARMY—CASE OF DR. MACLOUGHLIN.

QUESTION.

MR. BRADY said, he wished to ask, Why Dr. Macloughlin has not been restored to his position in the Army, in accordance with the several recommendations of the Commander-in-Chief?

CAPTAIN VIVIAN replied that, in the very voluminous correspondence which existed on this subject in the War Department, and which chiefly consisted of letters from that gentleman, there was no trace of his ever having been recommended to be reinstated in the service. The case had been considered by various Commanders-in-Chief and Secretaries of State for War—by the Duke of York, Lord Hill, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Palmerston, Lord Panmure, Mr. Sidney Herbert, and General Peel, all of whom had concurred in opinion that he should not be reinstated.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES' ACTS.

QUESTION.

MR. W. LOWTHER said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether his attention has been called to a draft of Bill to consolidate, with Amendments, the Acts relating to Friendly Societies; whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to legislate on the question of Friendly Societies; whether Her Majesty's Government intend to adopt any of the suggestions contained in that draft of Bill; and, whether they will recommend issuing a Royal Commission upon the subject?

MR. BRUCE: Sir, I do not think the suggestions to which the hon. Gentleman refers are such as the Government could adopt. With respect to the Question whether it is the intention of the Government to legislate on the subject, I beg to state that they have at this moment under consideration the point whether they should proceed to amend the law by way of legislation, or whether they should institute a preliminary inquiry by way of Royal Commission.

MEXICAN BONDHOLDERS.—QUESTION.

MR. H. B. SHERIDAN said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether, in the event of the Mexican Bondholders' Committee sending out forthwith a special agent to the Mexican Government, with a view to the conclusion of some satisfactory arrangement of the claims now pending between that Government and British subjects, any aid of an official character could be given by Her Majesty's Government?

MR. OTWAY: Sir, the hon. Gentleman is of course aware that our diplomatic relations with Mexico have been for some time past interrupted, in consequence of proceedings of the Mexican Government, which have been alluded to more than once in this House. We are unable, therefore, to give any official aid to the agent of whom the hon. Member speaks. Her Majesty's Government is well aware of the importance of the claims of British subjects on the Mexican Government, both in regard to their pecuniary amount and the serious questions involved in them, and we should hear with much pleasure that satisfactory arrangements of these claims had been made.

NAVY—ADMIRALTY CONTRACTORS.
QUESTION.

SIR JOHN HAY said, he wished to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty, If he will lay upon the Table of the House Return of the Contracts in force at the Admiralty on the 1st day of December 1868, and the names of the Contractors; of the penalties at that date falling due upon any then existing Contracts, and of the names of the parties so contracting whose character is considered by him to be unsatisfactory; and, of the names of the firms or others excepted now from Government Tenders, and of the causes for such exclusion?

MR. BAXTER: Sir, a Return of formal contracts, even if it were desirable to furnish it, would not give the hon. and gallant Gentleman the information which he wishes, inasmuch as many persons have transacted business with the Admiralty who are not contractors; and there is certainly no intention of laying on the table of this House the names of individuals or firms with whom, as responsible Financial Secretary, I decline to have commercial relations of any kind.

SIR JOHN HAY: I beg, Sir, to give notice that I shall renew the inquiry early next Session.

PARLIAMENT—REPORTERS' GALLERY.
QUESTION.

SIR JOHN GRAY said, he wished to ask the First Commissioner of Works, If his attention has been called to the ill-ventilated and otherwise insufficient accommodation provided for the gentlemen who represent the Public Press in this House, which renders the discharge of their duties dangerous to health; and whether he will take means during the Recess to provide a waiting room, refreshment room, and lavatories suitable for educated gentlemen?

MR. LAYARD, in reply, said, he was sorry to say he could confirm the expressions made use of in the Question of the hon. Gentleman. He had himself examined the accommodation provided for those who reported their proceedings, and he must confess that nothing could be worse, whether as regarded ventilation or the accommodation necessary to carry on their duties, and other arrangements which gentlemen in their position had a right to require from the House. But he was at a loss to know how to give that accommodation. The thing, he feared, was impossible. He thought he saw his way to give increased ventilation, and if he could give increased room he would be very glad to do so. He might take that opportunity of stating to the House that he had reason to believe the Lords would agree to the suggestions that had been made by some Members of that House with regard to the dining room, and before the close of the Session he hoped to be able to submit a proposition which the Lords had made on the subject, and to take the opinion of the House upon it.

SUPPLY.

Order for Committee read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

ARMY—OFFICERS OF THE ARMY IN JAPAN.—OBSERVATIONS.

Colonel NORTH, in rising to bring under the consideration of the House the present position of the Officers of the Army stationed in Japan as to pay and allowances; and to ask, upon what grounds the Lords of the Treasury have refused to carry out the recommendations of the Secretary for War and of His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, that the rates allowed for Japan should be assimilated to those granted in China, said, that as the question did not involve either religion or politics, he hoped to receive the support of all parties. The officers originally received the same pay and allowances as those in China, but a short time ago a deduction of 25 per cent was made from the allowances granted to the officers stationed in Japan, on the ground of certain advantages enjoyed by them, which had, however, all disappeared, while the cost of living there remained as high as in China. The first to suffer were the officers of the second battalion of the 9th Regiment, who in October, 1867, in a memorandum which was laid before Major General Guy, and by him transmitted to the Military Secretary of the Horse Guards, represented that the necessary expenses to which officers serving in Japan were subjected far exceeded even those which prevailed in China. Notwithstanding this, they had been subjected to a reduction of one-fourth of the allowances granted in China, so that they had to meet largely increased and increasing expenditure upon reduced allowances. That letter led to a request from the War Office to Major General Brunker, who had succeeded General Guy in command, to obtain trustworthy evidence of the cost of living in China and Japan respectively. Major General Brunker, in a letter dated "Head Quarters, Hong Kong," stated that he had assembled boards of officers in both countries, and that the Hong Kong Board reported that the cost of living at that station had increased from 25 to 30 per cent during the last ten years. The report of the Yokohama Board showed that the salaries of the employés of the banking and mercantile houses varied from £300 to £500 per annum, exclusive of board, lodging, and medical attendance, which income they received also while on leave in England one year in six, their passage money being also paid out and home. On the 17th of June, 1868, Major General Brunker made his report to the Horse Guards. It had been stated that the allowances granted to the officers in Hong Kong and China were necessary, because it was impossible for them to do their duty without the use of "chairs," and that the officers in Japan did not require "chairs," and were, therefore, not put to that expense. The winter, however, at Yokohama was long and very severe, and the price of coal was enormous, amounting sometimes to $22 a ton. The officers at Yokohama were also obliged to pay for the water they used. Upon the arrival home of the 9th Regiment, at the half-yearly inspection, held at Dublin on the 6th of October, 1868, a respectful remonstrance was made to General M'Murdo, who was then the general in command, against the reduction of 25 per cent from the China scale of allowances enforced against the officers while serving in Japan. The officers stated that the Commission at Hong Kong had sent in its report, but that no reply had yet been received to their representations. On the 18th of November, 1868, a letter was received from Secretary Sir John Pakington, stating that he had applied to the Lords of the Treasury for their consent to allow the rates allowed for Japan to be assimilated to those granted in China. He (Colonel North) begged now to refer to a long correspondence which took place some years ago between the War Office under different Secretaries at War and the Treasury on the subject of the great expense incurred by the officers of the Queen's Regiments stationed in China. On the 22nd of March, 1859, General Peel, the then Secretary at War, pressed, in the strongest manner, that the Indian allowances should be granted to officers of the British Army in China, and on the 24th of March that request was granted. On the 12th of April, 1861, Mr. Herbert expressed his opinion that the Indian allowances to those troops should be continued, and on the 7th of May that proposal was approved by the Treasury, who, however, suggested that the Indian troops should be removed from Hong Kong at the earliest opportunity. Sir George Lewis also pressed the Treasury to continue the Indian allowance, but at length the pressure from the Treasury was so great that the Indian troops were withdrawn, and with them the Indian allowances were discontinued to the Queen's troops. The result of the removal of the Indian troops from that station had been most disastrous to the European troops, who had then to perform escort and night duties themselves, hundreds of men in each battalion dying or being rendered incapable of performing their duty in consequence. On the 7th of March, 1862, the War Office forwarded the commuted allowance recommended by a Committee, of which the Treasury expressed their approval in April of that year, but was again revised. On the 4th of September, 1862, Sir George Lewis proposed that the Indian rate then in force should be continued as long as the exceptional high prices of provisions and lodging should continue, and on the 17th of September it was decided that the Indian allowances should be continued to the end of the financial year. In December, 1862, the Secretary for War stated that he was unable to recommend any reduction in the allowances of the British troops serving in China. On the 12th of July, 1863, the Treasury announced that they did not object to continuing those allowances for another year. A number of extracts from letters from Hong Kong and Yokohama shewed the inconvenience and expense to which officers and men stationed at the latter place were put. He merely asked that the regiment stationed at Yokohama should receive the same rate of pay as that stationed at Hong Kong. The necessaries of life at the former place were at a most exorbitant price, and the troops stationed there merely asked to be placed on the same footing on which they stood before the 30th of June, 1866, when their pay was equal to that of the troops at Hong Kong, it being at present about one-fourth less.

MR. STANSFELD said, the speech of his hon. and gallant Friend was considerably wider than the terms of the Notice which he had placed upon the Paper, and it was to this only that he should attempt to offer a reply. The arrangement of which his hon. and gallant Friend complained was entered into between the War Office and the Treasury in the spring of 1866. By that arrangement the allowances on the China station, as fixed in 1865, were raised, and it formed part of the proposals which led to that arrangement that the increased allowance in China could be fairly met by allowing only three-fourths of such increased allowance to the officers stationed in Japan. His hon. and gallant Friend had spoken at considerable length, and with very natural feeling of the sufferings to which British regiments at Hong Kong were exposed by reason of the climate. [Colonel NORTH observed that it was partly owing to their having to perform the duty which was originally performed for them by the native troops.] But it was precisely because of the dangers arising from the climate in China that the pay and allowances had been fixed at the generous and liberal scale at which they now stood. It was almost entirely because the climate of Japan was temperate, and not specially dangerous to Europeans, that the authorities at the War Office in 1866 believed that the allowance in Japan might be commuted to three-fourths of that in China. His hon. and gallant Friend inquired why the Treasury, in 1868, had refused to sanction the proposal which then came from the War Office to assimilate the allowances in Japan to those which had been sanctioned in China. That decision, which was given by the late, not by the present Treasury Board, was given on the ground that the allowances both in China and Japan had been very recently settled, after considerable interdepartmental discussion and inquiry, both in the War Office and upon the stations, and that no sufficient cause had been shown or assigned in the communications from the War Office for assimilating the allowances in Japan to those sanctioned on the China station. His right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for War having enabled him to read, not only the interdepartmental correspondence, but all the minutes of the War Office itself, and the figures bearing upon the question, he thought it only candid and fair to say, as far as his own opinion was concerned, that upon the information communicated to the late Treasury Board, or now in the possession of the Secretary of State for War, no sufficient ground had been shown for assimilating these allowances. Bearing in mind the difference in point of climate between the two stations and all the other circumstances, he was very much disposed to think that if the allowances in Japan were raised, the next thing would be a demand for a further increase in China.

COLONEL NORTH reminded his hon. Friend that when the arrangement was in contemplation, in 1866, a rate of exchange existed in Japan which gave to the officers there an advantage equal to 25 per cent.

MAJOR GENERAL SIR PERCY HERBERT observed that an injustice done in one part of the globe was not remedied by an injustice done in another. A gross injustice had been done to English officers in China by calling upon them to serve at a lower rate than officers sent from India. The subject of the pay and allowances to troops in China had been considered by the Committee of which he was a member, and of which Lord Salisbury was Chairman, and an Amendment which he (Sir Percy Herbert) moved to the Report, to the effect that the troops employed in China should be placed as nearly as might be upon the same footing as those employed in the East Indies, was only rejected by the casting vote of the Chairman. Under these circumstances, the recommendation now made by his hon. and gallant Friend was, he thought, worthy of attention. It was most undesirable that troops serving upon the same station should be in the receipt of different rates of pay and allowances, and the suggestion that Japan was not more uncomfortable than some of the stations in India was a very poor ground for refusing to do justice to officers on these Japanese stations. He begged to draw the attention of the Secretary of State for War to this fact. The number of troops quartered in Japan was very small, and he believed that discovering the exact time for which this 25 per cent was to be deducted in the case of troops sent from China to Japan, and restored in the case of troops sent from Japan to China, both being portions of the same command, caused as much trouble and clerical work at the War Office as would exhaust a considerable portion of the saving effected by this miserable economy.

COLONEL NORTH gave notice that when the House met again he should take the earliest opportunity of moving an Address to the Crown upon this subject

SIR JAMES ELPHINSTONE said, it would be well if the authorities who had to decide questions of this kind were themselves to visit the colonies. In this case, as he understood, in consequence of a dispute as to pay and allowances, some native Indian troops, who alone could do duty in a state of health in the Chinese climate, had been withdrawn from the station. The duty thus devolved upon the European troops, and entailed upon them such lamentable suffering that in eight and a-half months 193 died or were invalided in one battalion, and in four and a-half months 259 died or were invalided in another. The reason why all these men died or were invalided was simply that the Indian regiments, who could perform sentry and other duties in that climate without risk to health, had been withdrawn to save money to Her Majesty's Treasury. As to Japan, although it had a temperate climate, it must be remembered that there was a very long winter, and the officers were obliged to keep up expensive fires. Coals often cost as much as $22 a ton, and of wood there was almost none; officers, therefore, were obliged to clothe themselves much more warmly than they would otherwise do. The pay which they received was insufficient for these purposes. Besides, the cost of fuel and clothing, house rent, and all the necessaries of life, were extremely dear. The only advantage an officer had in going to Japan was that he went from an exceedingly bad climate to one somewhat better.

MR. CARDWELL said, he wished to point out the extreme importance in discussions of this kind of confining themselves as much as possible to the point really brought before the House. His hon. and gallant Friend (Colonel North) gave notice of a Motion, the object of which was to call attention to the inequality of the allowances in China and Japan, for the purpose of having them assimilated; but the larger portion of his speech turned upon the inadequacy of the allowances to troops in Hong Kong, as compared with those given in India. The inference which he drew from this was, that in dealing with the pay and allowances at any one station they were only dealing with one portion of a very large and complicated question, and the moment that the House of Commons decided to grant an increase at any one point they must expect a fresh proposal for increase elsewhere, based upon the success of the previous application. Dr. Murray's report pointed out that Hong Kong was a peculiar station, differing from all other stations, and requiring special allowances and indulgences not needed elsewhere. The moment therefore that an increase was granted at Japan a further application based upon Dr. Murray's report, might be expected from Hong Kong. The matter, however, was never officially dealt with by the present Government at all, but was decided before they came into Office. The Treasury had decided that the Indian allowance should continue so long as the Indian regiments remained; but they insisted that the Indian regiments should be withdrawn as speedily as possible, and they were withdrawn. It was afterwards determined to return a portion of the Indian force to Hong Kong, and an Indian regiment was sent there, but the Indian allowances were not re-established. The scales of allowance were the result of a correspondence that had taken place in 1866, between the War Office and the Treasury. In the more recent correspondence which had been laid before the House on the Motion of the hon. Member for Oxfordshire the War Office proposed to equalize the allowance to Japan with the allowance to China, but the Treasury, for the reasons which had been set forth, declined to do so. The ground on which a larger scale was allowed in Japan was not a difference of prices, but the existence of circumstances which were detailed by Dr. Murray. For instance, in Hong Kong the climate rendered it necessary that coolies should be employed to carry chairs for the use of the officers. The difference of climate caused a different rate of expenditure.

COLONEL NORTH said, it was proposed that a corps should be established for the Hong Kong service, the men to be enlisted in the Straits and officered by the Ceylon Rifle Corps.

PARLIAMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.—OBSERVATIONS.

MR. BRUCE appealed to the hon. Member for Dudley (Mr. H. B. Sheridan) and the hon. Member for Salford (Mr. Charley) to postpone the Motions of which they had given notice. He said the hon. Member for Dudley would have an opportunity to-morrow of bringing forward his Notice on the subject of the conduct of Assistant Judge Huggins of Sierra Leone, and the Question of the hon. Member for Salford, with reference to the Coronation Oath, had been answered already in a reply given by the Attorney General to the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. White). It was very important that the House should at once go into Supply, with a view to all the Votes being got through that evening.

MR. H. B. SHERIDAN expressed his readiness to yield to the request of the right hon. Gentleman, but hoped that the course he now took would be considered when the Question came before the House again.

MR. CHARLEY said, he did not think his Question had been answered by the Attorney General in his reply to the hon. Member for Brighton; he would not detain the House more than a few minutes with his Question.

CORONATION OATH.
QUESTION.—OBSERVATIONS.

MR. CHARLEY rose to call the attention of the House to the subject of the Coronation Oath; and to ask a Question in relation thereto, which the Attorney General had really not answered. The answer which the hon. and learned Gentleman had already given was only to the effect that it was not necessary to pass an Act of Parliament to alter the Coronation Oath, as that might be done by the Privy Council. What he (Mr. Charley) wanted to ask for was some authoritative declaration of the meaning of the Coronation Oath. The Legislature, in removing a sentimental grievance from the minds of the Roman Catholics of Ireland, had created another in the minds of the Protestants of Ireland. The Royal Assent to the Irish Church Bill had given a great shock to the consciences and loyalty of the Irish Protestants. They believed that the Coronation Oath would place an insuperable barrier in the way of the success of the Prime Minister's policy with regard to the Irish Church, and he was not ashamed to say that he himself had held that view, when he held it in common with such statesmen as Lord Derby and Lord Redesdale. The sanctions of the Coronation Oath were legal, moral, and religious. Parliament might relieve the Sovereign from the legal obligation, and public opinion from the moral obligation; but he had held that the religious obligation was still binding upon the conscience of the Sovereign; and that was certainly the view held by Lord Derby when he called upon the House of Lords to stand between the Sovereign and her conscience. Other views had been expressed to the effect that the Coronation Oath only bound the conscience of the Sovereign in her executive, and not in her legislative capacity, and that the Legislature could release Her Majesty's conscience from the obligation of the Oath with regard to such a measure as the Irish Church Bill. The question he wished to ask was, whether the Government were prepared to introduce a short Bill this Session, declaring the true meaning of the Coronation Oath? In the next Parliament, if not in this, there would no doubt be a fierce attack made upon the Church of England, and it was important that English Churchmen should know what they had to rely upon. They had relied upon the Coronation Oath and upon the House of Lords, but both had proved broken reeds, and had pierced the hands that had leant upon them. It was important that they should know what were and what were not the bulwarks of the Constitution.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said, he hoped the hon. Member would not suppose him guilty of any disrespect if he declined to enter into a discussion of the Coronation Oath. If there was any subject which had been thoroughly discussed and expounded in discussion it was the Coronation Oath. It had been discussed many times, both in that and the other House of Parliament. He believed that the result of the discussion to which he referred was to leave a very clear impression on the minds of most persons that the Coronation Oath bound the Sovereign in an executive and not in a legislative capacity. It bound the Sovereign to maintain the laws till they were altered by the three Estates of the Realm; but it did not bind her to withhold her Assent from Bills sent to her by the two other Estates of the Realm. There being no difficulty about the construction of the Coronation Oath, he answered the Question by saying simply that it was not the intention of the Government to introduce this Session any Bill for the purpose of explaining that Oath.

MR. CHARLEY: Is it their intention to introduce such a Bill next Session?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL: I cannot say what will be done next Session.

MR. KINNAIRD said, he thought the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Charley) had no reason to be alarmed about the position of the Church of England because an act of justice had been done to Ireland by the passing of the Irish Church Bill. The Church of England stood secure on its own basis, and he thought there was not the slightest ground for the apprehensions entertained by the hon. Gentleman.

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," put, and agreed to.

SUPPLY—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.

SUPPLY—considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

(1.) £27,835, to complete the sum for Law Charges.

(2.) £116,973, to complete the sum for Criminal Prosecutions, Sheriffs' Expenses, &c.

(3.) £45,242, to complete the sum for Common Law Courts.

(4.) £325,575, to complete the sum for County Courts.

MR. ALDERMAN LUSK complained of the large amount allowed to the County Court Judges for travelling expenses. The amount under this head was £14,600, which would give about £240 in the shape of travelling expenses to each of the sixty Judges.

MR. GOLDNEY said, he had heard it stated that this item would allow every Judge to travel 30,000 miles a year at first-class fares.

MR. AYRTON said, as hon. Members were aware, some of the Courts were held at some considerable distance from the houses of the Judges. Expenses, however, were only allowed to Judges for the travelling which was necessary within their own circuits. The amounts had been fixed after careful consideration, and showed no change upon those of last year.

MR. MUNTZ desired to know the reason why the item of £6,735 under the head of "incidental expenses" had increased? It was difficult to understand the increase, because it was impossible to tell what they would be beforehand.

Mr. AYRTON replied, that a rough estimate had been made of what the probable expense in the case of each court would be; but the Committee might rest satisfied that no demand would be paid until it had been narrowly scrutinized, and shown to be justifiable.

Vote agreed to.

(5.) £61,733, to complete the sum for Probate Courts.

Mr. MUNTZ again referred to the increase of the "incidental expenses" under this head.

Mr. GOLDNEY desired to know the meaning of the charge for "special allowances" in the case of the district registries?

Colonel FRENCH said, he believed that a good deal could be done in the way of reducing the expenses under this class; and he expressed a hope that Her Majesty's Government would see whether it might not be advisable to change the method under which officers of these courts were appointed—to throw them open by competition to men of ability, instead of allowing the appointments to remain in the hands of the Judges.

Mr. AYRTON said, that steps were being taken to enable Her Majesty's Government to review the salaries and emoluments of the officers of those courts as each of the appointments became vacant; but Parliament had always thought it desirable that the appointments themselves should be in the hands of the Judges. The "special allowances" referred to by the hon. Member for Chippenham (Mr. Goldney) were allowances that were made in consequence of the increase of district business, the salaries and emoluments originally fixed having remained unaltered.

Vote agreed to.

(6.) £8,870, to complete the sum for Admiralty Court Registry.

(7.) £3,490, to complete the sum for Land Registry Office.

Mr. MUNTZ drew attention to the sums paid to the assistant registrars, and expressed a hope that as the offices became vacant they would not be filled up.

Mr. Alderman LUSK asked what had become of the Middlesex Registry Court?

Mr. KINNAIRD said, he wished to know what progress had been made in the scheme of land registry?

Mr. AYRTON said, the progress was necessarily measured by the fees received, and these for the last year amounted to only £250. [An hon. Member: Paid by one company.] This land registry was originally intended to carry out a great design—namely, to give everybody an indefeasible title to his estate, but the public did not appear to appreciate the offer. It was necessary to have responsible and highly-paid officers, almost in the position of Judges, who would undertake the duty of declaring that a man had an indefeasible right to his estate. If the scheme had been generally acted upon of course the fees would have covered the expense. With regard to the Middlesex Registry Court, the hon. Member (Mr. Alderman Lusk) had better ask a Question in the proper form.

Mr. KINNAIRD asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whether it was not possible to find something for the Judge to do?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, that as one of the Royal Judicature Commissioners, he had been endeavouring to find occupation for this unfortunate gentleman. He might add that he believed the failure in that office had arisen from the fact that the principle recommended by the original Commissioners, and embodied in a Bill introduced by Lord Cairns, had not been adopted. If the House would give effect to the Report of the Royal Commission which had been recently sitting he hoped that the Judge of this Court would have employment.

Mr. GOLDNEY said, a promise was made on a former occasion, when a Resolution on the subject was withdrawn, that the office should be amalgamated with some other office, by which the salaries would be saved.

Vote agreed to.

(8.) £21,224, to complete the sum for Police Courts (London and Sheerness).

(9.) £141,449, to complete the sum for Metropolitan Police.

(10.) £235,000, to complete the sum for County and Borough Police, Great Britain.

(11.) £208,712, to complete the sum for Government Prisons, England, and Transportation.

(12.) £175,632, to complete the sum for County Prisons and Reformatories, Great Britain.

(13.) £21,910, to complete the sum for Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum.

(14.) £14,335, to complete the sum for Miscellaneous Legal Charges.

(15.) £50,198, to complete the sum for Criminal Proceedings in Scotland.

(16.) £36,764, to complete the sum for Courts of Law and Justice (Scotland).

(17.) £15,099, to complete the sum for Register House Departments (Scotland).

(18.) £16,949, to complete the sum for Prisons in Scotland.

(19.) £58,364, to complete the sum for Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions in Ireland.

(20.) £29,379, to complete the sum for Court of Chancery (Ireland).

(21.) £20,097, to complete the sum for Common Law Courts (Ireland).

(22.) £5,510, to complete the sum for Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency (Ireland).

(23.) £9,003, to complete the sum for Landed Estates Court (Ireland).

COLONEL FRENCH asked if there was any intention to reduce this Vote, seeing that there was very little business done in the court now?

MR. AYRTON said, he rather thought that a Bill they had just passed would find some further employment for this court; but if they should hear that the staff was more than necessary, of course they should reduce it.

Vote agreed to.

(24.) £7,380, to complete the sum for Probate Court (Ireland).

(25.) £1,130, to complete the sum for Admiralty Court Registry (Ireland).

MR. MUNTZ remarked that there was no necessity for a separate Court of Registry for Ireland.

MR. AYRTON said, this subject was reviewed last Session, and Parliament then thought fit to set up this court.

Vote agreed to.

(26.) £9,857, to complete the sum for Registry of Deeds in Ireland.

(27.) £2,262, to complete the sum for Registry of Judgments in Ireland.

(28.) 65,043, to complete the sum for Dublin Metropolitan Police.

MR. ALDERMAN LUSK observed that this Vote was increasing every year, and he did not see why a rich town like Dublin should ask to have such an enormous sum from the public funds for the protection of its own property. Dublin should pay for her police force like other large towns in England and Scotland. He also asked for some explanation with respect to the item of compensation for offices abolished.

MR. AYRTON said, that that item referred to appointments abolished some sixteen or seventeen years ago, with the exception of one which was abolished in 1860, when certain changes were made in the department. With regard to the item for the Dublin police, it seemed, as placed in the Estimates, to be a Vote from the general Exchequer for the whole of the expenses of that body of police. That was the result of an arrangement made some few years ago, according to which the whole of the charge was brought upon the Estimates. He said nothing of the wisdom of that proceeding. The City of Dublin, however, contributed £41,000 towards the expenses, which was a great improvement on the rest of Ireland.

COLONEL FRENCH said, it was a great pity the Secretary to the Treasury had not been longer in Office, or he would have known more of the reasons for these charges being included in the Estimates. The fact was, that when the Corn Laws were repealed it was thought Ireland would suffer, and these charges were undertaken by the Imperial Government as some compensation to Ireland. Moreover, the revenue officers had been discharged, and their duties thrown on the police.

Vote agreed to.

(29.) £603,544, to complete the sum for Constabulary (Ireland).

(30.) £14,193, to complete the sum for Government Prisons and Reformatories in Ireland.

(31.) £6,000, to complete the sum for County Prisons in Ireland.

(32.) £3,272, to complete the sum for Dundrum Criminal Lunatic Asylum.

COLONEL FRENCH observed that he should be sorry to disturb the general disposition of the House to vote anything asked for, and therefore he should make no objection to this Vote.

MR. MUNTZ said, that he should. There was a general increase in these Votes, and in order to test the feeling of the House he would move that the sum be reduced by £91 for incidental expenses.

MR. AYRTON said, these incidental expenses were all strictly audited before they were included in the Estimates.

MR. MUNTZ said, he would withdraw his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Vote agreed to.

(33.) £1,730, to complete the sum for Four Courts Marshalsea Prison.

In answer to Mr. GOURLEY,

MR. AYRTON said, that imprisonment for debt was not yet abolished in Dublin. But when they put an end to the system, prisons for debtors would no longer be required in Dublin.

Vote agreed to.

(34.) £5,820, to complete the sum for Miscellaneous Legal Charges in Ireland.

(35.) £85,452, to complete the sum for Convict Establishments in the Colonies.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

> "That a sum, not exceeding £155,667, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1870, for the Expenses of Her Majesty's Missions and Embassies Abroad."

MR. RYLANDS rose to call attention to the excessive expenditure for Diplomatic and Consular Services, and to move a reduction on heads 1 and 2. He congratulated the Committee upon the fact that the charge for the diplomatic service was now, for the first time, included in the Estimates. In former years it was paid out of the Consolidated Fund, and it was a singular instance of the mode in which all questions relating to the diplomatic service had been treated in Parliament, and of the secresy in which everything connected with diplomacy was shrouded, that so much opposition had been offered in former Sessions to the reasonable proposals which had been made to give the House an opportunity of voting upon this branch of the national expenditure. In 1858, Mr. Wise moved—

> "That it is the opinion of this House that the Diplomatic Salaries and Pensions now charged upon the Consolidated Fund should be brought under the more immediate view and control of Parliament, and be paid out of a Vote annually provided by the House of Commons for the purpose."—[3 Hansard, cxlix. 1508.]

Lord Palmerston strongly opposed this Resolution, and said that if it were adopted it would—

> "Give Parliament the opportunity of detailed and constant intervention in the transactions connected with our diplomatic relations, would lead to consequences which I think there might be great reason to regret—would tend to the disturbance of all order, and to the consequent disquietude of our foreign relations."—[Ibid. 1520.]

He therefore—

> "Entreated and conjured the House not to sanction a proposal which, he believed, would be attended with most serious and injurious consequences to the public interests as connected with our foreign relations."—[Ibid. 1522.]

Under the influence of that appeal the House, of course, rejected Mr. Wise's reasonable proposal by a considerable majority. In 1863, the present Chairman of Committees (Mr. Dodson) moved a similar Resolution, which was opposed by the then Government and rejected by a small majority; and it was only last year that the Motion of Mr. Labouchere to the same effect was carried by a majority of 4, notwithstanding the opposition of the front Benches on each side of the House. They had now, in consequence of that Resolution, the opportunity of dealing with a most important Vote, and he thought before granting £250,000 to this service there should be some consideration as to whether or not the country got an adequate return for so large an expenditure. His own opinion was that they did not get an adequate return, and he was supported in that belief by the opinions expressed by Mr. Cobden on one of the last occasions when he addressed the House. Mr. Cobden, in his speech in 1854, on the Foreign Office and Board of Trade, said—

> "We have a vast and expensive machinery engaged in our diplomacy, and our manufacturing and trading community expect that our diplomatists shall devote some attention to our commercial interests abroad. Will anybody say that the employment of that machinery during the last few years has been satisfactory to this House or to the country? We have little mountains of blue books on Schleswig-Holstein, and does not everybody agree that they are unsatisfactory? Diplomacy has broken down in its own vocation, and the dynastic arrangements of Europe and the balance of power are questions which have ceased to engage the sympathies of the British public."—[3 Hansard, clxxiv. 1118, 1119.]

He (Mr. Rylands) did not say that there should be an entire cessation of the diplomatic system, but he thought the expenses in connection with it should be reduced, and that a great change should be made in the number and character of the agencies in connection with the service. Formerly it was believed in this country that it was the duty of Great Britain to interfere in every complication that arose upon the Continent. There was a superstition that this nation had to act the part of a second Providence in guiding and over-ruling the affairs of mankind; but these ideas had now very much declined, and a meddling, or, as it had been properly styled, a "muddling" foreign policy was generally condemned. That change of policy must necessarily have restricted the operations of the diplomatic service, and the discoveries of modern times—railroads and telegraphs, with all other facilities for international communication—should also have lessened the expenditure, but it still went on increasing. He might have had some hesitation in calling attention to this excessive expenditure were he not fortified in his opinions by the Report of an important Committee which, in 1850, sat upon the subject of Official Salaries; and, as he should especially rely upon their conclusions, he wished to point out that the Committee was composed of men of the highest character, who not only commanded the confidence of the Parliament which appointed them, but whose opinions must still have great weight with the House. The Committee consisted of Colonel Wilson-Patten, Chairman; Lord John Russell, Mr. Bright, Sir John Yarde Buller, Mr. Cobden, Mr. Beckett, Mr. Napier, Mr. Home Drummond, Mr. W. Evans, Sir William Molesworth, Mr. Henley, Mr. Ellice, Mr. Ricardo, Mr. Walter, and Mr. Deedes. In their Report the Committee stated that they had given much patient consideration to the subject of our diplomatic expenditure, and had entertained a variety of opinions upon it; they had, however, decided to recommend a complete revision of the present system of our diplomatic establishments, and with that view they adopted five important Resolutions, to which he begged to call especial attention. The first was—

> "That it be recommended to the Government to propose to the Governments of France and Turkey to convert the Embassies now maintained between those countries and England into missions, and that our diplomatic establishments at Paris and Constantinople be put on the footing of first-class missions."

That recommendation, however, had not received the slightest attention from the Foreign Office. Lord John Russell, who was a member of the Committee, and joined in that recommendation, not only did not assist in carrying it out, but acted directly in its teeth by raising three missions into embassies. His belief was that the advantage derived from Lord Russell's management of our foreign relations did not compensate for the additional expense he had thrown on the Foreign Department. The three missions, which Lord Russell raised to the rank of embassies in 1862, were those of St. Petersburg, Berlin, and Vienna, and the effect of this change was that the salaries, including house rent, were increased as follows:—St. Petersburg, from £6,900 to £9,000; Berlin, from £5,164 to £8,000; and Vienna, from £6,900 to £9,200; and there was, in addition, the increased charge for outfits. This he considered a most unjustifiable step, as there was nothing either in our political or diplomatic relations with the countries in which these embassies were maintained to warrant such an expenditure. That was the way in which the first Resolution of the Committee was met. The second Resolution was—

> "That it be recommended to the serious attention of the Government that a single mission at some central point in Germany may be substituted for the several missions now existing at Hanover, Dresden, Stuttgard, Munich, and Frankfort, without detriment to the public service."

That Resolution had also been neglected, for, although the German War had caused some modification of our diplomatic relations with that country, we were still spending a sum of £11,565 per annum in supporting our various small German missions. The third Resolution recommended to the Government to make arrangements for uniting the mission at Florence with one of the Italian missions, and no doubt the Foreign Office would have treated that recommendation with the same indifference as the rest, but we had to thank Victor Emmanuel for having carried it out. The fourth recommendation was that no diplomatic salary should exceed £5,000 per annum, exclusive of an allowance for a residence. How that Resolution was treated may be seen from the fact that at present we had six diplomatic salaries which exceeded £5,000, and instead of a decrease, there was an increase. The total cost of the salaries exceeding £5,000 was £46,800, and if the recommendation of the Committee had been followed, that amount would have been reduced to £30,000. The Committee likewise recommended to the Government a revision of the whole of the diplomatic service, regard being had to the maximum suggested by the Commitee and to the relative importance of the various missions, and that in certain cases a union of missions might take place, or a consul or consular agent be substituted for a mission, whereby considerable saving might be effected without injury to the public service; but that particular recommendation had been treated with the same disregard as the rest during the last twenty years. The aggregate cost of the various small missions still maintained in Europe — including those in the Netherlands and Switzerland—amounted to £19,265 per annum. The work done at those missions was very trifling indeed, and the advantage derived from it by this country was also very trifling. Mr. Labouchere, in his speech last year, said—

> "He had been at a great many of those missions; he knew what was done in them; and he could assure the House it was absolutely nothing." —[3 Hansard, excii. 929.]

In Africa, and still more in South America, our diplomatic expenditure exhibited the same extravagance. The total cost of the South American missions alone, including those for the Argentine Republic, the Brazils, Monte Video, Peru, Venezuela, and other States, was £22,495 per annum. Those missions were exactly of the character that was contemplated in the fifth Resolution of the Official Salaries Committee; and he said again that the recommendations of that Committee had been totally neglected. The probable saving that would be effected if the Report of the Committee of 1850 had been carried out would be as follows: — On diplomatic salaries over £5,000, a sum of £16,800, with an additional £1,200, for outfits, &c.; on small German missions reduced or abolished, £8,000; on the missions in Belgium, the Netherlands, Portugal, Switzerland, Spain, Morocco, and Persia, if reduced, £8,000; and from the abolition of the South American missions and the substitution of consuls general, £14,000, with an additional £2,000 on outfits and other expenses. The total saving under those several different heads would have been £50,000 per annum, which in twenty years would have amounted to £1,000,000 sterling. Not only, however, had there been no attempt at reduction, but the whole tendency of diplomatic salaries had been towards an increase. The diplomatic salaries paid out of the Consolidated Fund in 1850 amounted to £140,000, and their estimated cost for the year 1869 was £155,538, showing an increase of £15,538. The charge for consular establishments abroad in 1850 was £148,690; whereas the estimate for 1869 for general services was £166,798, which, together with a sum of £94,653 for China, Japan, and Siam, made a total of £261,451, thus showing an increase of £112,761. Adding to that the increase of £15,538 on the diplomatic salaries, they had a total increase since 1850 of £128,299. He now came to the extraordinary expenses of Ministers at Foreign Courts, which in 1851 amounted to £16,000, and which gradually crept up to £40,000 in 1858, and in 1868 they remained at £40,000. It was time some effectual check was put by the Treasury and the Foreign Office upon those expenses, which had materially increased at all the large embassies. These incidental charges were of such a character as to give rise to the suspicion that they might furnish opportunities for peculation and fraud. The expenses in France had increased from £841 to £3,219; Russia, from £404 to £1,859; Turkey, from £5,270 to £9,263; Prussia, from £657 to £1,356; Portugal, from £476 to £1,221; and the United States, from £650 to £3,521. He would next make a comparison between the cases of Turkey and the United States of America. The total amount of our export and import trade with Turkey in 1867 was £10,769,087, whereas our export and import trade with the United States amounted in 1867 to £62,869,735. The shipping tonnage employed in our trade with Turkey in 1867 was 299,731 tons; and the tonnage employed in our trade with the United States was 2,033,105 tons. Let him next compare our diplomatic and consular expenses in the two cases. In Turkey we maintained an Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at £8,000 a year, and in addition to that there were charges for the Secretary to the Embassy, attachés, dragomans, and various kinds of servants. Altogether our diplomatic and consular expenses in Turkey reached nearly £50,000 a year. In the United States, with which we had six times the amount of trade and more than seven times the amount of tonnage, the salary of the Envoy Extraordinary was £5,000, of the Secretary of Legation £700, while the various diplomatic and consular charges made a total of £22,171, or less than one-half of our expenditure in connection with Turkey. There was an item of £1,000 for a house for an Ambassador to the United States. It was quite refreshing to see a sum of that amount for such a purpose. He believed there was no doubt that the interest of the original outlay and the cost of repairs on the Ambassador's house at Constantinople must have amounted to £10,000 or £12,000 a year for the last twenty years. Whenever we wanted to look for extravagant expenditure we had only to go to Turkey. The Committee would find that for the dragomans, clerks, and translators we paid £3,650 a year in Turkey, while in the United States, as the language was the same as our own, we paid nothing. Lord Palmerston, when giving evidence before the Committee of 1850, was asked how it was that we required such a large staff of paid attachés at Constantinople? His reply was—

> "It has long been thought that it was desirable the intercourse between our Embassy and the Turkish Government should be carried on by British subjects; it is obviously desirable for many reasons. . . . And therefore I established a system to provide for instructing a certain number of young Englishmen in the Turkish language sufficiently to qualify them hereafter for the duties of interpreters, and that accounts for the number of paid attachés there. Some of them are young men studying the Turkish language, for the purpose of becoming hereafter official interpreters between our Embassy and the Porte."

Lord Palmerston was also asked about the particular functions of the "Oriental Secretary." He replied that his duties were translating, interpreting, and instructing those young men. Lord Palmerston was further asked—

> "When those young men are competent from their knowledge of the Oriental languages to take the office of interpreter, what staff does your Lordship contemplate having?"

He replied—

> "I should think, probably, that two paid attachés might be sufficient, but of that I can hardly judge; it would be necessary to have the opinion of the Ambassador."

Of course the necessity for paying exorbitant salaries to dragomans was to be got rid of by this arrangement. It appeared that members of the same family were employed by Russians, French, and English, the office of dragoman being a sort of hereditary office. These men were paid as agents to transmit secret communications between the embassies and the Porte; but if there had been any object in keeping the secrets he ventured to say they never would have been kept. Well, notwithstanding the promise of Lord Palmerston, there was still a very large expenditure for dragomans, and we had in no way lessened our expenses for attachés. In 1850 our expenditure for the Secretaries of Legation amounted to £2,500; it was now £2,950, an increase of £450; while for dragomans it was £3,650 now, as against £3,300 in 1850, or an increase of £350. He would put it to the Committee whether it was reasonable to persist in such an expenditure? What had become of the four interesting young Englishmen who were learning the Turkish language in 1850? He believed they were alive, and that there was no difficulty in tracing them. As soon as they had got a certain knowledge of the Turkish language, and were able, perhaps, to speak a few common-place words of social intercourse, they were drafted off to other parts of the world, where their acquaintance with the Turkish language would not stand them in stead. He was very sorry the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Tamworth (Sir Henry Bulwer) was not in his place, for he had there a despatch written by Lord Russell when he was at the Foreign Office. That despatch was of a very extraordinary character, and was addressed to the right hon. Gentleman when Ambassador at Constantinople. It bore date the 20th of January, 1860. Lord Russell called attention to the fact that the charge for boats, boatmen, and horse-hire, which in 1853-4 amounted to £899 7*s.* 1*d.*, had increased year by year until in 1858-9 it reached the sum of £1,352 15*s.* 5*d.* Lord Russell said—"This enormous increase of expenditure under one particular head calls for strict inquiry." The case was really worse than Lord Russell stated, as in 1850-1 this charge for boats, boatmen, &c., was only £453 4*s.* 3*d.* He regretted very much that the right hon. Gentleman was not in his place to give some explanation, but he was making no charge against the right hon. Gentleman with respect to the matter. What he wished to call attention to was this —that almost immediately after the despatch of Lord Russell this expenditure for boats, boatmen, and horse-hire began to decline, and disappeared altogether in the course of three or four years. The probable explanation of the charge was that it was the cost of trips on the Bosphorus for the young attachés. But we had not got rid of excessive expenditure in connection with this embassy. There was another item, that of "miscellaneous expenses," which in 1860 was £520; but which in 1869 had jumped up to £2,006. The item for miscellaneous expenses amounted to only £57 in the United States; and fuel and light were put down at £220 for Turkey and nothing for the United States. He had found that under the head of illuminations and fêtes in 1862, the embassy at Turkey spent £236 18*s*. 2*d*., while in Spain, in the year 1863, the expenditure under the same head was only 15*s*. 7*d*. He scarcely knew how a fête and illumination could be got up for 15*s*. 7*d*.; but, at any rate, it showed that, like an elephant's trunk, our embassies could take up large or small things with equal ease. Lord Russell, in the same despatch, called Sir Henry Bulwer's attention to the fact that, from 1846 to 1853, the average expenditure at Constantinople for extraordinary expenses, exclusive of dragomans, was £2,700 a year, but that it had risen to an average of £5,000 from 1854 to 1857; and Lord Russell upon this stated to Sir Henry Bulwer that he must see how necessary it was for the Government to be able to give Parliament some explanation of so great an increase, and he urged him to bring the expenditure within the limits of former years. So far from that having been done, the expenditure increased since Lord Russell wrote that despatch. Again, he objected to the large sum paid for special missions, and wished to know why it was that, supposing a foreign potentate had to be invested with an English order of knighthood, it could not be done by the Ambassador at the Court in question, instead of the country having to pay large sums to Peers to proceed to Foreign Courts and perform the investiture. In the present Estimates there were charges for Earl Vane investing the Emperor of Russia with the Order of the Garter, and for a similar mission of Lord Bath to the Emperor of Austria. He hoped that items of this nature would disappear from the Estimates in future years. The question was —how was this expenditure to be reduced? It appeared to him, first, that the Government ought to look at the Report of the Committee of 1850 on Official Salaries, and see whether they could carry out the recommendations of the Committee. Another thing that should be done was that the service should cease to be a close preserve for the aristocracy, and that it should no longer be used for the purpose of display, of luxury, and of extravagance. He would be the last to join in any vulgar cry about the aristocracy; but he objected to the diplomatic service being monopolized by any one class to the exclusion of ability. He regretted the absence of the First Commissioner of Works (Mr. Layard), because, in 1855, he took the pains to go through the Foreign Office List, and the summary he gave to the House showed how largely it was composed of members of the aristocracy. He showed the House that there were acting as—

> "Heads of missions, seven Lords, nine honourables, two baronets, three members of noble families, and seven gentlemen—nearly all small missions—twenty-one against seven. Secretaries of Legation, two Lords, nine honourables, one baronet, five members of noble families, and seven gentlemen—seventeen against seven."—[3 Hansard, cxxxviii. 2062.]

The paid attachés and unpaid attachés were very much the same, and the total gave twelve Lords, thirty honourables, and twenty-five members of noble families, or sixty-seven out of 110. He (Mr. Rylands) had omitted the Baronets, because some of his hon. Friends objected to be classed among the aristocracy. Mr. Layard, remarking upon this summary, said—

> "What is the result of such a system as this? Why, honest, able, hard-working men give themselves up to despair, or get into a morbid state, and become unable to serve the public as they were wont to do. The system literally destroys them. There are a great many other cases, all of which are equally bad; and let the House take my word for it, for I have been engaged in diplomacy and in the Foreign Office—there is nothing but favouritism in diplomacy." — [Ibid, 2062-3.]

It had been remarked by a writer, who had experience in this part of the public service, that—

> "In France, in Prussia, in America, and in most of the other countries in the world, men rise in the diplomatic service by the mere force of great merit, of singular aptitude and ability. But in England high birth, considerable fortune, Parliamentary connections, or aristocratic influence, are the chief passports to the best employments in embassies and foreign missions."

He was afraid there was much truth in that; it was the natural result of the close system, which was aggravated by the practice of having unpaid attachés, who entered the service without pay, in the hope of becoming Ambassadors and Ministers of State, and whose sole idea was to keep up the honour of the country by mere expenditure. Sir Hamilton Seymour, a man of very great distinction, stated before the Select Committee of 1850—

> "I consider that giving dinners is an essential part of diplomacy; I have no hesitation in saying so. I have no idea of a man being a good diplomatist who does not give good dinners."

The ruling idea seemed to be that Ambassadors should have large salaries and live in state, but he did not believe that system would secure better things for the country than the quiet, inexpensive custom of the United States Ambassadors. No doubt in former times power was to be gained by magnificent displays upon the part of the Sovereign's representative; but in these days, when every State was accurately measured by its neighbours, such displays were useless for any purpose the nation had in view. The inaptness of the present system was shown by the regularity with which we sent special Ambassadors in all cases when we desired to negotiate a treaty. We sent Lord Ashburton to the United States, Lord Elgin to Canada, Mr. Elliot to Greece; and, perhaps, the best illustration of his point was Mr. Cobden's mission to negotiate the French Treaty. Notwithstanding all this expensive machinery in Paris, as soon as something important had to be done it must be supplemented by something else. So long as the present close system was maintained the inefficiency and expensiveness of our diplomacy could not be got rid of. Perhaps he could not do better than quote the noble Lord the Member for King's Lynn upon this subject. Lord Stanley, in 1853, after he had served in Lord Derby's first Administration as Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, spoke strongly against the close-service training system—

> "He believed the whole system by which diplomacy was made an exclusive service might safely be abolished, and that a system analogous to that adopted in the public offices at home might be established. His belief was that the knowledge which the training was supposed to confer on the superior diplomatic servants with regard to the details of diplomatic business might be easily supplied by attaching to the missions abroad persons who should act in the same capacity as the clerks of our public offices at home, who should be previously trained to the service, and whose duty it should be to furnish all the necessary professional knowledge which such superior diplomatic Ministers might require, and of which, coming new to the business, they must necessarily be deficient. By having such a body of men to render that assistance, the door of the diplomatic service might be thrown open, and they might then appoint any public officer to the higher ranks of diplomacy, whose merits and general acquirements in other respects might entitle him to the appointment."—[3 Hansard, cxxv. 882.]

The right hon. Member for Buckinghamshire fully supported Lord Stanley's views, and said that—

> "The present system was an imperfect training; it was merely a nominal and not a real training. . . . . It was his firm belief that, sooner or later, they would have a reform of the diplomatic service on the principle laid down by his noble Friend, and he believed that by carrying out that principle they would render the service much more efficient and much more economical." — [Ibid. cxxv. 886-7.]

The effect of this change in the diplomatic service would do away with the great disadvantage which now arose from the constant changes that were made in Secretaries of Legation, who were frequently removed from the posts they occupied. In fact, under the new regulations proclaimed by Lord Russell in 1862, second and third Secretaries and attachés were, as a general rule, not allowed to remain in any mission more than two years. The prejudicial effect of this system was shown by Lord Cowley who, in his evidence before the Select Committee, of 1861, said that in his experience at Paris—

> "He found that from the constant change of attachés and particularly of the upper attachés, by promotion, when a question presented itself suddenly there was often nobody there competent to give him any information on the subject."

The only other branch of expenditure in connection with the service to which he would allude was that of diplomatic pensions. The Committee of 1850 remarked how large a proportion the aggregate amount of pensions bore to the sum paid for actual service. Among diplomatic pensions charged on the Consolidated Fund there were five amounting to £4,700, which were received by gentlemen all willing and able to serve. These were Sir James Hudson, who was forced to retire from Turin under circumstances that were of a "fishy" character, Sir Alexander Malet, Mr. Percy Doyle, Mr. Scarlett, and Mr. Christie. He was aware that when a man got out of the service it was difficult to put him in again, because the pressure of new men seeking service and of those desiring promotion was so great that any re-appointment was unpopular. But if these gentlemen were employed their pensions would be saved to the public. On a recent occasion, when speaking about the expenses of the Embassy house at Constantinople, the Secretary to the Treasury said he had merely to deal with the state of things as he found them. That would hardly be considered a satisfactory reply on the part of the present Government when the question came to be discussed next year. The fact of their finding things was no reason for maintaining them, but rather a reason for doing away with them. While Members had been gratified at finding the Army and Navy Estimates reduced, they had been disappointed at finding no change in the Civil Service Estimates, in which it was difficult for a private Member to deal with extravagance. At the last General Election there were two great questions which interested electors —one was the Irish Church, and the other was the necessity of economy in the public expenditure. The Civil Service Estimates this year were either stationary or exhibited an increase; there were all sorts of objectionable items; and next year, if these Estimates did not exhibit an earnest desire to reduce expenditure, he hoped they would be returned to the Treasury for revision. He hoped, however, that an assurance would be given now that, during the Recess, a serious attempt would be made to check extravagance, and that the Government would pay some attention to the opinions of the Committee of 1850, the carrying out of which would conduce to economy and efficiency in the public service, and at the same time gratify the public. He concluded by moving that the Vote be reduced by £10,000.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a sum, not exceeding £145,667, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1870, for the Expenses of Her Majesty's Missions and Embassies Abroad." —(Mr. Rylands.)

MR. NEVILLE-GRENVILLE said, it was quite refreshing to have the voting of increase after increase checked by such a speech as they had just heard. Without agreeing in everything the hon. Member had said, he thanked the hon. Member for the great trouble he had taken, and for the great knowledge he had displayed with reference to the question before them. If hon. Members would only follow his example and pay as much attention to different portions of the Civil Service Estimates, we should not have the unsatisfactory reasons for increase after increase that had been given by the Secretary to the Treasury this Session. He never before heard so many unsatisfactory reasons for additions to the Estimates. During his canvass he was followed by those who charged him with belonging to the extravagant party, to the party that had increased the expenditure of the country and would take no pains to diminish it, and he began to think there must be some truth in what they said, and also to anticipate that considerable diminution in the expenditure would be made by the present Government; but he had been much disappointed. It had been asked, what were the remedies. They were to bring as much knowledge to bear on the subject as the hon. Member for Warrington had done; to propose, as he had done, the reduction of a Vote, to give reasons for doing so, and, above all things, to divide.

MR. KINNAIRD said, they were now experiencing the advantages of having these Estimates submitted to the House. He thanked the hon. Member for Warrington for the valuable contribution which he had made towards solving the question of the expenditure on the diplomatic service. The speech of the hon. Member would excite the greatest interest in the country; and it was much to be regretted that it had not been heard by the Prime Minister, than whom no one was more anxious to reduce unnecessary expenditure. There was one small item to which he desired to call attention, and this was the payment of £300 a year for a chaplain to the Embassy at Paris. The chapel in the Rue d'Auguesseau was originally designed as the Embassy chapel, and where Protestant services were illegal, it was necessary to resort to an embassy for accommodation for public worship; but in Paris no such necessity existed, and a salary of £300 a year for a chaplain could be saved without the slightest inconvenience. When the building grant was disallowed by the House, the chapel had to be sold, but at the sale the Government reserved a right to occupy the Embassy gallery should it be deemed desirable to do so. Consequently the gallery, which contained forty sittings, had never been let, but had been reserved for the use of the Ambassador. The only duties of the Embassy chaplain were the performance of morning service on Sundays, and the celebration of marriages; but the marriages could as well be solemnized by the incumbent of the Rue d'Auguesseau Church, who held a license from the late Bishop of London, the present Archbishop of Canterbury, and the marriage fees would serve as some compensation for the reservation of the gallery for the Ambassador and his suite.

Colonel SYKES said, that out of 142 votes in the Civil Service Estimates sixty-nine were this year increased in amount, the total increase being not less than £200,000, a lamentable contrast to the Army and Navy Estimates. That increase had been going on from year to year, and he wanted to know when it was to stop. There was a charge of £4,301 for couriers, being an increase of £1,517 over last year. Was there any necessity for this large outlay at the present time? There was also a large item for telegrams, to which he did not object; but, if the telegraph could be so much used, the services of couriers might be dispensed with, except in very rare cases. He saw an increase of £2,000 in special missions this year. What justification was there for that increase? Many of the items in this Vote might be reduced if the Secretary to the Treasury would turn his attention to them, and he hoped that next year the House would have an improved edition of the Civil Service Estimates.

Mr. MUNTZ said, he should not vote for this Motion if he could not make out a larger sum for reduction than that proposed by his hon. Friend. There were charges for houses and legations at capitals within the North German Confederation which had, by arrangement with the King of Prussia, given up all diplomatic business. For Dresden there was an item of £1,250, although it was well known that the King of Saxony had no power to enter into any treaty with us, diplomatic or commercial. There was a mission at Coburg, which was altogether about half the size of Brighton, and where there could be nothing for our representative to do. There was another at Darmstadt, one-half of which was in the North German Confederation. Würtemburg and Bavaria were in the Zollverein. If the Government abolished the Embassies at Bavaria, £4,500; Würtemberg, £2,800; Coburg, £850; Dresden, £950; and Darmstadt, £700, that would give them £9,800, and then if the £300 for the Embassy house at Paris were added it would give the Treasury £100 more than it wanted to enable it to make the reduction recommended by his hon. Friend. He could tell the Government that the House looked to them for economy, and if they did not give it they were not worth having. The cry at the last election was the enormous expenditure of the then Government, and if the Civil Estimates were to be increased £200,000 a year, the House and the country would not suffer it.

Sir HENRY BULWER: I regret not to have been present to hear the speech delivered by the hon. Member for Warrington (Mr. Rylands); first, because I hear it was a speech of much ability; and, secondly, because I am told that the hon. Member alluded to a despatch addressed to me by Lord Russell relative to the extraordinary expenses at Constantinople. Lord Russell, in that despatch, drew a comparison between the expenses of 1846 and those of 1860. I remember that despatch; but the increase which it pointed out commenced before I was Ambassador to the Porte, and is readily accounted for. Lord Russell forgot that telegrams were not charged in 1846, and were charged subsequently. Special messengers also having been diminished, postage had augmented. But the main reason for the great increase of extraordinary expenditure at Constantinople was the increase, to an almost inconceivable extent, which occurred in the rate of wages after the Crimean War. Boat-hire, which cost 1*s.* a day previous to that period, cost 4*s.* a day afterwards; and, in the same way, the hire of a horse became four times greater. This told the more, because, in Constantinople, it must be remembered there was no penny post; everything which had to be sent had to be sent by messenger, and very often upon horseback. Boatmen's wages, also, rose enormously at the same time. All these differences in prices had to be entered in the public accounts, and necessarily caused a great increase in the expenses defrayed by Government, as they did in the expenses which the members of the diplomatic body had to defray for themselves. In considering the Constantinople Embassy, moreover, we must remember that it is not merely an Embassy; the Ambassador is, practically, a Colonial Governor as well as an Ambassador; and much of the extra expenditure must be called colonial. I confess, indeed, that I was startled when the first statement of it was brought before me, and when I saw how little control I had over the items. There were the dragomans, the judicial and consular establishments, and a variety of other kinds of expenditure which might almost be called stereotyped, and which were altogether independent of me as Ambassador. Much of this was required; but I may frankly state that, in my opinion, reductions could be effected without loss of efficiency to the public service. I feel considerable repugnance to state in the House of Commons what these are, because I might seem to be taking advantage of my present position to insist upon observations and suggestions which I made formerly and fruitlessly. But I certainly will take an opportunity of communicating upon this subject with the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and shall reserve to myself full discretion as to what I may say on a future occasion touching this matter. In the meantime, let me assure the hon. Gentleman, whose Motion we are now discussing, that I am far from being an enemy to diplomatic reform. On the contrary, I might almost say I am the earliest diplomatic reformer in England, for I claim the credit of having effected, or, at least, of having been the earliest advocate of, two reforms. One of these, having reference to the expediency of submitting gentlemen who enter the diplomatic profession to examination; and the other to the furnishing by the secretaries of Legation, or Embassy, of the periodical reports which have tended very much to heighten the character and bring out the solid merits of gentlemen of the diplomatic profession. Still, I am bound to add that, although one or two of the reforms which, in former times, I advocated warmly, and not without making for myself many enemies, have been successful, there are other suggestions with which I then accompanied those proposals, respecting which I have been convinced, by time and experience, that I was in error. It is only fair that I should state this, as, perhaps, I am not as ardent in my notions of reform now as many Gentlemen around me are, or as I myself was at the time when I first had a seat in Parliament. Reform, at all events, in any important Department of the State, must be looked at in two ways—first, with regard to diminishing its faults, and next with regard to improving its efficiency. I object equally to economy which cripples efficiency, and to expenditure which does not add to it; and a careful and constant investigation of all the particulars of the service, in order to ascertain where parsimony is injurious and expenditure extravagant, should be constantly going on. But if asked if I believe that the appointment of a Committee with this object will be beneficial, I would venture to make the same reply that the eminent poet, Mr. Coleridge, made to the lady who asked him whether he believed in ghosts—"I have seen so many that I do not believe in them." I have, in fact, seen so many Committees, and there are so many Reports of Committees which hon. Members have the opportunity of studying in the Library, and which they seem to have studied with so small a result, that I cannot, I repeat, believe in their efficiency. If what is necessary to be done is not done by the responsible Officers of the Crown who preside over the Department, perhaps the best thing to do—because the most authoritative—will be to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into and report on the best means of diminishing official expenditure and establishing official improvements. My hon. Friend the Member for Warrington drew, as I understand, a comparison between the diplomacy of the United States and that of Great Britain; but my hon. Friend must go further, and draw a comparison between the institutions of the two countries. The First Magistrate of the United States receives a salary of £5,000; whereas, to retain the benefits of monarchy, we are content and happy to pay £300,000. There is no Archbishop of Canterbury in the United States, there is no Lord High Chancellor, no Duke of Devonshire, no Marquess of Salisbury—persons who, with great salaries or fortunes, perform great services to the State, but whose very titles testify to the existence of a different order of society from that of the United States. Having resided in those States for some time, it may be interesting to point out why there could be no satisfactory comparison instituted between the diplomatic service of the two countries. When the election of President is over, all former holders of places are discarded—high and low—and those who have been forward in securing the recent election put forward a certain number of candidates for home office, and a certain number of candidates for diplomatic situations. These are generally gentlemen prominent in the canvass, either connected with the Press or the legal profession—anxious, at any rate, to visit Europe, and satisfied, with a moderate allowance, to undertake an agreeable trip; the gentlemen to satisfy an intelligent curiosity, and the ladies to improve their daughters in the pianoforte. They are, no doubt, intelligent men, and those selected to come to England being always men of distinction, and finding a language and customs ready made for them, justify their position. In other countries they are not, perhaps, so successful; and, at all events, I remember when a Committee was sitting here to improve our diplomacy on the American model, a Committee was sitting in the United States to improve the American diplomacy after the model of ours. So little are we all satisfied with what belongs to us. If we desire to draw a fair comparison, we should look at the diplomacy of France, and in the French Estimates we shall find that some of the posts in the diplomatic service of that country are even more costly than those of England. The French Government are in the habit of paying their Ambassadors as large salaries, and in certain instances larger, salaries than ours receive, and therefore, in comparison, the salaries our Ambassadors receive are not extravagant. Moreover, when a distinguished diplomatic servant of the French Government returns to his country he is created a member of the Senate as a matter of course, with an endowment of so much a year in addition to his pension, and he is generally regarded as a candidate for the highest offices of State. Messrs. Thouvenel, Moustier, and Lavalette, who were my colleagues, have all become, in turn, Ministers of Foreign Affairs on their return to their own country. The hon. Member has commented upon the Committee of 1850. What did that Committee propose? It suggested that our Ambassadors should be turned into Ministers, and our Ministers into commercial and political agents; that no one should receive more than £5,000 a year; and that, where possible, Legations should be consolidated. I see no advantage in making Ambassadors Ministers, because I do not see any reason why a man should be paid more because he is an Ambassador than if he were Minister. Every gentleman who represents his country at an important place should have a salary suited to the requirements of the post, and no more. The title really makes no difference, except that the higher the title the greater the consideration; and I do not see why our representative should not have all the consideration we can give him when we do not pay additional for it.

As to making Ministers political agents, my experience tells me that small diplomatists make great difficulties. In fact, one of the most eminent of living Sovereigns, who takes a very active part in the affairs of his country, said to me one day—"My consular and political agents give more trouble than all my Ambassadors put together." There are some political agents at places where it would not be proper to send Ministers. Egypt and the Principalities, for instance. The gentlemen in these places are, in fact, diplomatists, and oftentimes, as now, useful and able within the sphere where they are employed. But when a man is a political agent as well as a commercial agent, he too often devotes his attention exclusively to his political duties, while his commercial duties are treated as though they were beneath his attention; and, whilst not having the opportunity of comparison, he believes that the place at which he is stationed is the most important in Europe—he believes himself the most important person in it—and that the fate of the world depends on the trifles which he is rarely thanked for having noticed. There are, no doubt, some clever and able men whom I highly esteem, who are commercial and political agents; but, as a rule, I should say, have diplomatists, diplomatists, and consuls, consuls—things made for two purposes are rarely good for either. With respect to the maximum salary of £5,000, this salary, with the addition of house rent, is a fair one; but there can be no universal rule. When I was at Constantinople I had to live in a large palace, which was more fitted for a Sovereign than for an Ambassador, and which would have required an expenditure of at least three times my salary to keep up properly. When we oblige an Ambassador to live in such a palace, we should, at all events, give him a salary that will enable him to light and warm it. I am myself an advocate for a system recommended by the Committee of 1860—that is, of a certain salary, and an additional allowance for hospitality and representation. As it is, more is frequently expected from Ambassadors and Ministers, in this way, than they can afford, or less is done than the public has a right to expect. As I am here noticing details, there is another detail I venture to notice. A British Minister has two months leave of absence in the year; but no allowance whatever is made for the place in which he resides. If a man is in Paris or Brussels he can come to London in twelve hours and spend the whole of his two months as a vacation; but if he is stationed in Constantinople, or Greece, or the United States, something like a month of the time granted to him must be consumed when he is coming home and returning. For any one at Pekin or in Persia, two months leave, indeed, is of no use at all. An allowance ought to be made for the time necessarily spent by the Ambassador or Minister in travelling from and to his post; and he should be allowed, as secretaries are allowed, to take two leaves together, if in one year no leave is taken. As to the consolidation of Legations, I believe that in the case of two States situate close to each other, whose interests are similar, a saving can be effected by making the one Minister serve for both States; because, if the Foreign policy of these two States is identical, and the policy we pursue towards them is identical, it is better to have one person accredited to them, who will naturally keep them together, than two who may possibly feel and encourage rivalry and tend to keep them apart. It has been complained that new men were promoted, when others, able and fit for service, were kept on pensions. I cannot disagree with the doctrine that it is advisable to employ experienced men when their services are available for important posts. I am personally acquainted with men of high ability, and of much experience, who are not employed; while men of less experience—and, as it seems to me, of less ability—have been appointed to posts which they might fill, and that thus there is an increase of expense to the State, a diminution of efficiency in the service, and a mere gain to the Minister of the day of patronage and preferment. A certain latitude should be allowed to a Government in this respect; but that latitude should have its limits. The great changes which have happened in Germany have put an end to the mission at Frankfort. It was through no fault of Sir Alexander Malet that his post at Frankfort was abolished. Sir Alexander is an accomplished gentleman, and a man of great experience. Why has he not been put into one of the missions that have become vacant since his own was annihilated, instead of gentlemen his inferiors in rank, in service, and talent? I repeat that experience is a very great thing in diplomacy. It is that which one learns in this profession day by day, almost without feeling that one learns it; it is the knowledge of men and of judging events — knowledge which no theory can furnish—that is really the most valuable, and which a statesman at the head of affairs should most prize. One word more. In looking to general reductions the House ought to look to general expenditure, and not fall on one service in particular because it has few defenders. The Department which has to preserve the maintenance of peace is as worthy of consideration as the Department which has to provide for the eventuality of war; but according to the proverb, Les absens ont toujours tort; and whilst the Army has many to stand up in its support, the diplomacy can only lift up one or two voices in its behalf. Yet let us look at the two Departments. In the year 1837 our Army cost little more than £4,000,000; it now costs nearly £17,000,000, so that the charge for it has quadrupled since 1837. If regard is had to new missions, and to the fact that gentlemen who were formerly styled attachés, and served without pay, now, as secretaries, receive salaries, it will be found that the cost of the diplomatic establishments has but slightly increased since 1837, whereas living abroad has almost doubled. In the consular department it is true there has been a very considerable increase. In 1837 the cost of the consular service was £80,000, now it is £260,000. I think a great reduction might be made in that service, if we discard prejudice and have the courage to make it. I confess myself opposed to the system which I have seen in operation, more especially in the East, which is dotted over with Englishmen acting as British Consuls. Of some of these gentlemen I can say that if they keep themselves clean they have not wherewithal to pay their washerwomen. There is a notion, and a very false one, that distant and obscure places must be cheap, and an English gentleman is given £150 to £200 a year to starve on discreditably in some of these places. Where Englishmen are employed as British Consuls I would have them paid well, and I would have none but efficient men appointed; but in cases in which the place is not of sufficient importance to justify the Government in paying properly an efficient Englishman as consul, I would appoint the most respectable foreigner that could be got to take the office, without pay. Foreigners attach much importance to the office of British Consul. It gives them a position, and, in other respects, is of advantage to them, and you might often get a better foreign agent without a salary than a British agent could be with an insufficient salary. It is difficult, in this incidental and rambling way, to run over the various improvements and reductions of which, I think, the diplomacy at present admits; but, in conclusion, I protest, whilst making such improvements and reductions, against lowering its character, and providing inadequately for its wants. We should remember the encouragement to talent in other paths of life:—in the Army, in the Church, and at the bar there are great dignities and large emoluments. In trade and commerce rank is more easily attained, and fortune is more often acquired, now than in former times. I do not think, therefore, that this is the moment at which we ought to lower the position or diminish the prizes of a profession, of which no one who is conversant with its duties can doubt the importance. Our representatives are obliged by their calling to mix with persons the highest in rank, in wealth, and political influence. They have to support the prestige and the dignity of the British Government and the British nation. On their sagacity, their judgment, and proper management of the affairs intrusted to them, depend, in no small degree, the maintenance of peace, the prospects of commerce, and the general harmony of our relations with foreign countries. I know that it is difficult for the public to appreciate the merits of the diplomatic service. The words of Lord Melbourne, as applied to a deceased statesman in the other House of Parliament, live in my memory—

> "My Lords," said he, "you can never fully appreciate the deserts of this great man. You can appreciate the acts which he publicly performed; but you cannot appreciate, because you cannot know, the mischiefs which he unostentatiously prevented."

That observation applies remarkably to the profession to which I am referring. There are rare opportunities of performing great and distinguished public services; but there are constant opportunities of preventing quietly great mischiefs. The career of a diplomatist has nearly always to be directed to averting some impending calamity from rising to the height at which it would attract attention, and to sowing the seeds of some future advantage, the fruits of which he can rarely expect himself to see. For him the trumpet of Fame never sounds; his reputation lies buried amidst the dusty archives of some out-of-the-way office, there to rust in obscurity until the curious historian may disinter the skeleton of an intellect which will not be known to the world until the generation which felt its influence has passed into the tomb. Still, it should not be imagined, because the career of a diplomatist is noiseless, it is therefore insignificant. It has been my fortune to know many of the eminent men of my time, eminent in the senate, at the forum, in the field: I have known, also, some of the most eminent diplomatists of England and of Europe, and I venture to say that these last have been in no way inferior to the first, either in the abilities they have exhibited, or the services they have performed. I trust, then, that the profession to which I have the humble merit to belong will not be degraded from the station it has hitherto occupied in the esteem of my countrymen; and I believe that I am doing that which is most likely to prevent this result, in advocating a diminution of all unnecessary expenditure and the promotion of all improvements that can be advantageously introduced. The right hon. Gentleman concluded by thanking the Committee for the attention with which they had listened to his remarks.

Mr. OTWAY said, he understood that the hon. Member for Warrington (Mr. Rylands) had purposed to allude to certain items of expenditure in the diplomatic service, and to reserve the general question of diplomacy to the Motion of which he had given notice in the ensuing Session of Parliament. He (Mr. Otway) did not, however, regret that the hon. Member had called attention to the entire subject, if for no other reason than that it had elicited so remarkable a speech from the right hon. Member for Tamworth (Sir Henry Bulwer), who had most nobly vindicated the profession of which he was an ornament. The question of diplomacy was one of efficiency or non-efficiency. If the service was not efficient, the whole sum voted was absolutely wasted. If, on the other hand, it were efficient, the sum voted was a very small sum to pay as an assurance against war and commercial disadvantages. Now he (Mr. Otway) thought that the diplomacy of this country might safely claim some credit for the successful result of recent negotiations. For example, a question had been recently agitated which might have set all Europe in a blaze. He alluded to the question of the war which threatened to take place between France and Prussia with respect to Luxemburg. Was not the diplomacy of the noble Lord the Member for King's Lynn (Lord Stanley)—who was then at the head of Foreign Affairs—efficient in preventing an outbreak? Last winter there was a revival of the Eastern question; and within the last few months a question had been agitated between France and Belgium, in which this country took a deep interest, and which at one time assumed a threatening aspect. It was not for him to refer particularly to this question; but he thought hon. Gentlemen would have confidence in his assurance that hereafter it would be seen that, in the opinion of those most concerned, the diplomacy of this country on both these occasions was most serviceable and friendly. Now, if our diplomacy had been efficient, and its success had been such as to prevent war and to secure commercial advantages for the country, the sum paid for it was by no means too large. He regretted very much that his hon. Friend the Member for Warrington (Mr. Rylands) should have spoken of diplomatists as men who passed a life of frivolity, and were maintained by the nation in luxury. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Tamworth (Sir Henry Bulwer) had shown that they were not frivolous; and surely those who passed their lives amid the swamps of South America and in China were not exactly in the midst of luxury. Again, his hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, in speaking of these diplomatic charges, said that the money had been fraudulently expended. To this statement he must give a complete denial.

Mr. RYLANDS explained, that what he had said was that the accounts were so kept that they gave opportunities for fraudulent expenditure.

Mr. OTWAY said, that even that qualification was objectionable, because every shilling spent in the diplomatic service—whether extravagantly or economically—was most accurately accounted for, and audited with the greatest strictness by public officers. His hon. Friend had done injustice to the occasion which gave him the opportunity of submitting his remarks to the House, for it was on this very occasion that, in conformity with a Resolution passed by the last House of Commons, the diplomatic expenditure was for the first time submitted to the criticisms of Parliament. His hon. Friend had accused not only the noble Lord opposite, but hon. Members on the Ministerial side of the House, of opposing that Resolution: but, so far from that being correct, the fact was that six Members of the present Government had voted in favour of the Motion. His hon. Friend had found fault with the great increase in the diplomatic expenditure; but the fact was that it had not increased at all. Certain items had increased; but the diplomatic expenditure, which was fixed at a certain rate when William IV. came to the Throne, remained exactly the same, though prices had increased. The demands upon those who filled diplomatic offices had increased, and the salaries of men filling corresponding positions in the diplomatic services of other countries had increased largely; and, moreover, the Committee should remember that one item had been created in the last few years—namely, that for the Consular establishments in China, Japan, and Siam, which was called for by the requirements of our trade in those countries. He did not say that in every case a consul had been appointed in China exactly where one was wanted, with such a salary as he ought to receive. During the present year one of the consulates in that country had been abolished, and he was not prepared to say that further reductions might not be effected, though they must, of course, depend to a great extent upon the state of trade. If we increased our trade, and opened new ports, it was necessary to establish consular officers of some kind to watch over our shipping interests. The idea of his hon. Friend (Mr. Rylands), that the business of diplomacy ought to terminate in the consular officers, was one which could never be carried out. Consular officers were required to look after the interests of trade in the ports; and, in the event of wrong being done, to communicate with the Minister resident in the capital, who would endeavour to obtain redress from the Government of the country for any wrong that might be committed. The greatest possible evils would arise from the mixing up of the two functions—and, indeed, his right hon. Friend (Sir Henry Bulwer) had stated the opinion on this subject of a potentate who was as able as anyone in the world to form a correct judgment respecting it—the present Emperor of the French. He concurred to a considerable extent in what had fallen from his hon. Friend (Mr. Rylands) concerning the large increase in the item for "extraordinary expenditure." This had not escaped the attention of the Foreign Office, and he sincerely trusted they would be more successful than they had hitherto been in checking expenditure under this head. As far back as 1860 Lord Russell issued a circular on this subject, not imputing blame, but calling attention to these extraordinary expenses, and requiring the Ministers to watch them with all possible diligence. This was the policy also of the present Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and he (Mr. Otway) trusted, when his hon. Friend brought on his Motion next year, to be able to announce a considerable diminution in this item. The expense of the house at Constantinople had been greatly overstated by his hon. Friend. It must be remembered that our Ambassador there stood in the position of a great Colonial Governor. The sum included the cost of maintaining a large establishment, a hospital, and a prison; but, putting all these items together, they fell considerably short of the amount mentioned by his hon. Friend. He (Mr. Otway) admitted that he was not prepared to defend the expenditure for special missions, as it had always been a puzzle to him why the Garter or other Order could not be conferred upon a Sovereign by the Minister of this country ordinarily resident at his Court. But some great State ceremonial appeared to be thought necessary on these occasions. His hon. Friend had based the whole of his argument upon the recommendations of the Committee of 1850; but he had studiously avoided all reference to the recommendations of that which sat in 1861, which arrived at conclusions opposite, in most respects, to those of the first Committee. The former Committee wanted Legations only to be maintained; whereas the latter were in favour of constituting several additional Embassies; and the Foreign Office, not being able to decide between these contrary opinions, had adopted neither, but had pursued the even tenour of its way. With regard to the remarks of his hon. and gallant Friend the Member for Aberdeen (Colonel Sykes), he could promise that there should be a considerable reduction in the expenses for messengers as opportunity occurred; but he was unable to hold out any hope that the item for telegrams would be reduced. The very essence of diplomacy was early information; and he did not think we paid too much under that head, considering the greatness of the country and our multifarious interests. He confessed he would rather see an increase than a decrease in this item. The hon. Member for Finsbury had mentioned the other night that a private mercantile firm expended no less than £5,000 a year for obtaining telegrams; and could we then grudge the expenditure necessary for obtaining early intelligence of matters of national importance? At the same time, he admitted there ought to be a diminution of the expense for conveying despatches to the country. His hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham (Mr. Muntz) had made several statements which were peculiarly inaccurate. He spoke of the resident at Coburg as a gentleman who passed his life at Baden-Baden. In point of fact, that gentleman had been at Coburg ever since the Battle of Waterloo, and he maintained those relations which were not at all unnatural, considering the connection of the Royal Family of this country with the Duchy of Coburg. The sum he received for his services was so small that the hon. Gentleman would be ashamed to pay it to a principal clerk in his establishment. The hon. Gentleman also objected to the maintenance of the Legation at Dresden, on the ground that Saxony herself sent no representatives abroad. Now, Saxony did not belong to the North German Confederation.

SIR HENRY BULWER: Do you say that Saxony does not belong to the North German Confederation?

MR. OTWAY said, it certainly did not for diplomatic purposes. On a point of this kind he must be presumed to be correctly informed, and he was bound to state his own opinion. Saxony had most jealously maintained her diplomatic representatives; the French kept a Minister Plenipotentiary at Dresden, and Saxony, in return, sent her Ministers abroad, distinct from those of the North German Confederation. He did not say that there were no blots in our diplomatic system; but, at all events, his hon. Friend (Mr. Rylands) had hit none of them to-night. His right hon. Friend the Member for Tamworth (Sir Henry Bulwer) had, in his very able speech, alluded to the leave of absence to be granted to diplomatists, and, in his opinion, had made out a case for the alteration of the rules on this subject. Lord Clarendon informed him some time ago that the matter was under his consideration, and he hoped some arrangement would be made to bring about the result which his right hon. Friend desired. He would not go into an explanation of all the other items, because the hon. Member had given notice of his intention to bring forward the whole question of our diplomacy next Session; and, considering the length of time the diplomatic profession had existed, he thought it was not too much to ask the Committee to defer until then their decision on so wide and important a subject. This country was wealthy and powerful, and it would not like to be inadequately represented abroad. How often did they hear discontented men say, "The Lord Chancellor gets so much and the Bishop of London gets so much; I know many of my friends who would be glad to take the place of either of them for one-tenth of the salary?" That kind of thing might sound very well with regard to diplomacy, and his hon. Friend might think that a consul at £600 or £800 a year would exercise the functions of an Ambassador satisfactorily. But he (Mr. Otway) did not believe that the people of this country would be of that opinion. They required efficient service, and if they obtained it they would not grudge its proper remuneration. Looking to the wealth and power of England, and to the diplomatic establishments which other countries maintained, he did not think, in regard to many of our Embassies and missions abroad, that the sum paid to our officials was at all an extravagant sum. He hoped his hon. Friend would not now press his Motion for the reduction of £10,000 from that Vote, especially as the whole subject was to be investigated by a Committee in the ensuing Session of Parliament; for he might as well at once inform his hon. Friend that it would not be his duty to oppose the appointment of a Committee next year. He thought his hon. Friend, by his speech of that night, had amply made out a case for inquiry; and therefore, as the entire subject would be investigated next Session, he appealed to his hon. Friend not at the end of July to divide the Committee on a Motion which was after all of no specific character, which struck at no particular or definite abuse, but which sought, by a sort of rule-of-thumb principle, to cut down that Vote by £10,000—a proceeding which would produce considerable confusion in the public service. Although it might be unwise to promise too much, he frankly admitted that there were items of expenditure in the diplomatic service which would bear reduction; and he could assure his hon. Friend that it was the earnest desire of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to reduce that branch of expenditure as far as he could do so without impairing the efficiency of the service.

Mr. BRISCOE said, the Motion of the hon. Member for Warrington (Mr. Rylands) did not appear to him to be intended in any sense as a party Motion, or as a censure upon Her Majesty's Government. The greater part of that hon. Member's speech referred to the Report made by a Committee of that House in 1850, and consisted of a complaint that the recommendations of that Committee had not been carried out, except, perhaps, in one single instance. Now, it had been his own lot for many months to be engaged in canvassing the large constituency of West Surrey, and during the whole of his canvass he was repeatedly asked, almost every day, whether he would support, by his vote and influence, a reduction in the public expenditure. He answered in the affirmative, and the elector who had interrogated him said—"Then, Sir, I will give you my vote." Other matters seemed to be put aside by the constituency, and all their interest to be centred in the reduction of expenditure and of taxation. He was sure that a very strong feeling on that subject prevailed among the new electors throughout the country, and there were few hon. Members who had not promised on the hustings to use their best endeavours to effect that retrenchment which the people had so much and so justly at heart. As to the general question of the necessity of our having efficient diplomatic representatives abroad, he thought that the late Foreign Secretary (Lord Stanley) had brought important negotiations to a successful issue by the wisdom, the temper, and the high personal character which he brought to bear upon them. On the other hand, the prospect of a settlement of the unhappy Alabama question had been injured by a want of similar wisdom and temper. So in regard to the dispute with Abyssinia, it was not the fault of a diplomatist, but of the individual having charge of the foreign affairs of this country when it first arose. In conclusion, he hoped the Motion of the hon. Member for Warrington would be allowed to pass; and he should feel it his duty to vote for it in redemption of the promise which he had given at the hustings.

Mr. WHITWELL said, he thought that after the speeches of the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs and the right hon. Baronet the Member for Tamworth (Sir Henry Bulwer), it was impossible for anyone to follow the hon. Member for Warrington (Mr. Rylands) into the Lobby without previously disclaiming any desire to seek by a reduction of that Vote to impair the efficiency of the representation of this country at foreign Courts. He did not believe that any injury to the public service would result even from a larger measure of economy than that shadowed forth by the hon. Member for Warrington. The right hon. Baronet (Sir Henry Bulwer) had told them that, although he was an Ambassador, he had no power to diminish the expenditure of his Embassy. This was surely a strong argument in favour of that House exercising some control over such matters. The influence of English diplomacy in several recent cases had been spoken of; but he asked whether that influence had not been brought to bear much more through the Foreign Office in London, aided by the electric telegraph, than by our representatives abroad? and he trusted that on all future occasions the telegraph wires would be found increasingly useful in the conduct of our foreign relations. He wished to draw the attention of the Under Secretary of State to a nest of extravagant expenditure not alluded to by the hon. Member for Warrington. The right hon. Baronet had advised us to maintain the influence of those of our Ambassadors who had the interests of peace and commerce in their hands. But in the case of Persia we could not look to the diplomatic action of our Ambassador as likely to benefit our commerce, and it was to be hoped that he would not interfere too much with the foreign affairs of the Eastern part of the world. The expenditure incurred in Persia amounted to a sum that would be perfectly incredible if we did not find it in the accounts. The Ambassador himself received £5,000 a year; the secretary who assisted him £750; an Oriental secretary, £600; a second secretary, £400; and a third secretary, £250. Then his dragoman had £490, and his physician, chaplain, and organist, £600. Then for servants' wages we paid £1,417, in addition to which there was for journeys on public service £1,689, and for couriers, £1,498. In short, the various miscellaneous items made up a total of £7,892, making, with the ordinary outlay upon the Ambassador and his attendants, the sum of £14,892. Last year we spent £8,000 in building him a house; this year there would be another Vote of £8,000, so that we should spend at Teheran in one year £22,892, and next year £4,000 more would be taken for the house. He admitted the necessity for efficiency in that branch of the public service; but he believed that object could be attained with a great diminution of expenditure. Hon. Gentlemen who had been present when the expenditure of an Ambassador at Constantinople was discussed would be interested to know that an account of that discussion had already been published in that city. He held in his hand a paper containing a leading article which stated that these discussions would > "Create no local surprise. The subject had been long a notorious one, and the fact that it had attracted attention only now was an illustration of the slowness with which abuses travel home."

The leading article to which he referred had given great credit to the right hon. Baronet (Sir Henry Bulwer). It went on to say that the expenditure might be easily diminished by £2,000, and suggested that the Queen's messengers between this country and Constantinople should be discontinued. He should divide with the hon. Member for Warrington on the Vote.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, he, for one, had listened to this debate with considerable satisfaction, because he held that the Committee was only discharging its duty in criticizing those Estimates when put before it. The object of putting these Estimates before the Committee was in order that they might stand the test of criticism. The Gentlemen who had taken part in the discussion had evidently paid great attention to the subject, and had exhibited great acuteness, as well as knowledge, of the various details, and he had no doubt that what they had said would be of great value when the Government came to frame the Estimates of next year. But he wished he could persuade hon. Gentlemen to do that which would really give the most efficient aid to the Department with which he was connected in pressing for all reasonable retrenchment in this matter. The House of Commons should by this time know its own strength, which consisted in giving very full, fair, and candid expression to the opinion of their constituents and their own, and that expression of opinion would never fail to receive due attention from Her Majesty's Government. But what he ventured to urge on the Committee, in the interest of retrenchment and reformation, was that they should be content with the excellent arguments they had used, without pressing the subject to a division. Supposing they were to carry the Amendment, what would they gain? Would they add anything to the force of the excellent reasons they had urged? Suppose they took off £10,000, what assistance would that give to the Foreign Office or the Treasury? They did not fix upon any particular item, but merely said that £10,000 should be struck off. That was not the way to add strength to the excellent debates that had occurred, by following them up, not by striking off any particular items, but by diminishing the whole Vote in a blind way. Supposing the Government were successful in resisting the Amendment, as they were bound to resist it, because it was not aimed at any particular abuse of expenditure, did they think that would add weight to the debate of that night or tend to keep down this expenditure? If they would only take his advice—and he had no other interest but to cut down the expenditure as far as possible—they would be content with the discussion and would not go to a division, which could add nothing to the strength of the arguments which had been used that night.

MR. CANDLISH said, the right hon. Gentleman had told them that they had not pointed out where any reduction could be effected; but what had the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs said? He said he knew there were blots in the Estimates. It was perfectly clear, therefore, that the hon. Gentleman himself was acquainted with the nature of those blots. But if that were so the most effectual means of inducing the hon. Gentleman to turn his knowledge to practical account and to correct the abuses of which he was aware would be to reduce the Vote. The right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer asked, what good would they do if they carried this reduction? In the first place, they would save the country £10,000, because he was quite sure that the right hon. Gentleman would not emulate his predecessors and spend money without Parliamentary sanction, but would limit his expenditure to what Parliament should grant. In the next place, they would show the Chancellor of the Exchequer that they were in close alliance with him in keeping down outlay, and he really expected that if they pressed the matter to a division the right hon. Gentleman would vote with his hon. Friend the Member for Warrington (Mr. Rylands). It was said that a Committee would be appointed next year; but the Estimates next year would be precisely the same as this year, unless some action was taken by the Executive Government. If they were to wait for the action of the Committee, it was perfectly clear they would have to wait for two years. His hon. Friend the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs had said that he would wait the decision of the Committee, and would be prepared to act on their recommendation. The best thing for them to do was to give up the Committee and take the matter into their own hands. They did not seek to embarrass the Government, which had obtained loyal support from that side of the House, but they had a duty to their constituents to perform, and he hoped they would not shrink from it.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, the hon. Member for Sunderland (Mr. Candlish) stated he was sure the Government would not spend money for which they had no Parliamentary sanction. Assuredly he would be no party to any such proceeding. That was precisely the fault the Government found with this Motion; they did not know which of those items it was from which Parliamentary sanction was withdrawn. If the Committee only fixed on any particular item, that would help the Government. All the Committee did was to say "We fix the estimate of this expenditure at £10,000 lower, and we leave it to you to manage it as you can." That was precisely the difficulty of the Government.

MR. SINCLAIR AYTOUN said, he hoped the hon. Member who had moved the reduction of the Vote (Mr. Rylands) would persevere. He had listened with great interest to a discussion which would enable the country to see who were for reform and who were not. He must protest against the speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who had told them that the best thing they could do was to leave their arguments to speak for themselves, but not to go to a division. He had not been long in the House; but he knew that speeches without votes were of very little value. Ministers had been in the habit of going about the country making speeches in favour of retrenchment, and had actually complained that the House would not support an economical Government. Now, Ministers asked them to talk and not to divide; but he hoped a division would be taken, so as to show the country that they entertained a disposition of reducing the expenditure of the country.

MR. FIELDEN observed, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had told them they were not entitled to strike off £10,000 without describing the items it was intended to reduce; but the gross sum only was before the Committee, and not the particular items. Chancellors of the Exchequer always professed to be in favour of retrenchment and economy, and the House of Commons ought to show that they were bent upon the reduction of the public expenditure. He hoped the Amendment would be pressed to a division.

MR. MUNTZ, in justice to our representative at Coburg, was bound to say he did not remember seeing him at Baden-Baden; he merely mentioned Baden-Baden as a place where those connected with our Continental Embassies resorted.

MR. OTWAY said, he wished to correct a misapprehension which had arisen. He had not said that he could put his finger upon blots, but that there were certain items that could be reduced, and that if the House would allow the Government to consider these matters some of them should be reduced. His promise was, that in consequence of the discussion which had taken place it would be his duty to represent to the Secretary of State what the opinion of the House was. The Government would carefully consider all the items of expenditure with a desire to promote economy. He asked his hon. Friend (Mr. Rylands) to have some consideration for the public service, and not roughly to strike off £10,000 from the expenditure of a year seven months of which had already passed. If, next year, in the face of the assurances he and his right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer had given, the same Estimate was offered to the House, he would be, indeed, open to the reproach his hon. Friend passed upon him.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, he did not agree with the conclusions of the hon. Member for Warrington (Mr. Rylands); but he felt considerable sympathy with him in his endeavour to effect some reduction in the cost of the public service. Undoubtedly the hon. Member had good reason for expecting some reduction in this and other Votes by the present Government, because hon. Members could not have forgotten the charges brought by Ministers, when in the country, against the late Government. The Prime Minister, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and others had spoken of extravagance in the Civil Service, and yet the Government had brought up Estimates which proposed an increase upon the charge for the Civil Service of last year. He believed the charge for the Civil Service would increase as it had increased, because, as he had the opportunity of showing last year, the requirements of the public increased. The present Ministers, when before the country, propounded the theory that increase in one Department should be met by more stringent economy in another, and, with a view to give them an opportunity of acting upon their theory, the late Government left the framing of the Civil Service Estimates entirely to them. He was not very sanguine on the subject; but, at the same time, hon. Members opposite were quite justified in holding the Government to their pledges, and he hoped they would do so.

MR. RYLANDS said, he did not press his Motion from any doubt as to the good intentions of the Government. He did not see that a division could affect the public service in any way, for he had pointed out that the amount by which he proposed to reduce the Estimates could be saved by a reduction in the charge for special services and general extraordinary expenses.

SIR HENRY BULWER said, he thought the charge for the Consular service might undergo a reduction, but that the reduction now proposed was an indefinite one, and it was not clear how that reduction was to be made. He wished to know whether it was not possible to propose an Amendment pledging the Government to make a reduction to the amount that had been named—to a declaration that reform and reduction were necessary in the diplomatic service? That would cover the object of the hon. Gentleman. If that could not be done, he did not see how he could vote against the proposed reduction.

MR. OTWAY, presuming from what the hon. Member for Warrington had said, that he desired to prevent confusion in the public service, but, at the same time, to establish that the House desired economy, would make a proposition to him. Meeting his hon. Friend in the spirit he professed, and without retracting anything he had said with respect to the preparation of the Estimates for next year, he would offer to consent to a reduction of £2,000 on account of the special missions for this year.

Question put.

The Committee divided:—Ayes 66; Noes 66.

MR. DODSON (Chairman of the Committee) said, the Committee having hesitated to affirm the proposed reduction of the Vote, as submitted to it on the responsibility of the Executive Government, and as, if the proposed reduction be negatived, the Committee would have an opportunity of voting upon any other reduction of the whole Vote which may be moved, he declared himself with the Noes.

Original Question again proposed.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, that if it were intended to discontinue the chaplain at Paris, the item of £300 ought to be struck out.

MR. OTWAY said, the noble Lord the Foreign Secretary had assured the hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Kinnaird) that the vacancy should not be filled up without communicating with him; but, as the item stood on the Estimates, it had been re-printed. There was not the slightest intention to make any appointment, and, of course, the money would be returned to the Treasury.

Mr. SCLATER-BOOTH again urged that the item ought to be omitted, and commented upon the extraordinary arrangement said to have been made between the Foreign Secretary and a private Member.

Mr. OTWAY, gratified by the exhibition of new-born zeal for economy, explained that the hon. Member for Perth was well known for his opposition to the appointment of a chaplain at Paris. When the vacancy occurred last his hon. Friend communicated with the Foreign Secretary, who said he would not make an appointment until the House of Commons had an opportunity of expressing an opinion on the subject. It was not intended to make any appointment; but, at the same time, he would not say that under no circumstances or conditions would it ever be necessary to appoint another chaplain. Therefore, the money stood in the Estimates as it always had done; but no appointment would be made without consulting the House, and, of course, the money would be returned to the Treasury.

Mr. SCLATER - BOOTH reminded the hon. Gentleman that if he had not voted with him in the division which had just been taken, he would have been in a minority. He must also remind him that the Estimate now under the consideration of the Committee had never been submitted to the late Board of Treasury, and that it had been stated in the most distinct manner by an hon. Gentleman opposite that he had been informed by the noble Lord the Secretary for Foreign Affairs that it was not his intention to fill up the appointment in question. That being so, the item itself ought, in accordance with the usual mode of proceeding, to have been struck out of the Estimate. He last year had done so on more than one occasion when he found that items were not required for the public service. It was said that the appointment of chaplain would not be made until the House of Commons had an opportunity of expressing an opinion with respect to it; but the Committee would be expressing an opinion upon the point if they were to agree that the item for the salary should stand part of the Vote.

Mr. KINNAIRD said, that when the noble Lord the Colleague of the hon. Gentleman was in Office he had represented to him all the facts of the case, and that he concurred with him in the opinion that the appointment ought to be done away with. The item had, nevertheless, been retained in the Estimates. He did not pretend, however, to have confidence in hon. Gentlemen opposite; but, having full confidence in the present Administration, he had no objection to leave the matter in the hands of the noble Lord the Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

Mr. NEVILLE-GRENVILLE said, he thought that, it being agreed on all hands that the chaplaincy at Paris should be disestablished and disendowed, the common sense mode of proceeding would be that the item for it should be withdrawn from the Estimates.

Mr. OTWAY agreed to allow the item to be struck out.

(36.) Motion made, and Question,

"That a sum, not exceeding £155,367, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1870, for the Expenses of Her Majesty's Missions and Embassies Abroad,"—(Mr. Otway,)

—put, and agreed to.

(37.) £174,451, to complete the sum for Consular Services.

Mr. BOWRING called attention to the Consulate of Chicago. He said that Chicago was the centre of a large and important district of the United States, embracing Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota, in which immense quantities of wheat, flour, and Indian corn were produced. So far from abolishing such an office as this at Chicago, the Government ought to take steps to make the trade of the district more important to British commercial interests. He ventured to suggest that Chicago should be made a Consulate General for all the great Western States.

Mr. OTWAY said, it was the intention of Government to abolish the Consulate at Chicago. The hon. Member wished the consulate to be retained; but a Committee of the House of Commons had decided to the contrary. The Committee of 1859 recommended that the consulates of Elsinore, Chicago, and Buffalo, should be abolished, and Government was now carrying out the recommendation in the case of Chicago.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH asked if it was intended to abolish the Consulate at Chicago at once, or wait until it was vacant? If the latter, he thought the announcement was premature.

MR. OTWAY said, there would be no re-appointment at the three places he had mentioned.

MR. MUNTZ, referring to the appointment of a Minister Plenipotentiary at Hamburg, maintained that there was no necessity for continuing it now that Hamburg had become part of the North German Confederation. That we should have a consul there was, in his opinion, all that was required.

MR. R. SHAW said, he must protest against the magnitude of the Vote. It was true that the Government had reduced it from the amount at which it stood last year by £13,342, and he thanked them for that reduction; but unless some more material reduction were made next year, they must be prepared to meet a determined opposition upon this branch of expenditure. The Vote had considerably and steadily increased of late years. In 1834-5 it was £95,486; in 1858-9, it reached £187,527; and now, in 1869-70, it was £261,451. The Select Committee of 1858 appeared to have acted solely in the interests of the consuls, and to have ignored the interests of the British taxpayer. The Committee made a great mistake in two respects. First, with regard to the classification of consuls, which meant £500 or £600 a year more to certain consulates for the same amount of work; and the second mistake was recommending the payment of consuls by salaries instead of by fees, which were now paid into the Exchequer. From 1858 to 1869 the excess of charge was £74,000 per annum, whilst the fees paid into the Exchequer since that time amounted only to the paltry and insignificant sum of £17,888. The consul of Buenos Ayres had a salary of £1,000 per annum, and £400 per annum for incidental expenses, and he (Mr. Shaw) wished to know why £100 a year more was to be given to the consul for incidental expenses? The consul there ought to give the country the whole of his services for the salary he received; but it was reported that that gentleman, in addition, had recently been appointed a post office agent and a managing director of a railway. He also wished to know why it was proposed to increase the consul's salary at Rosario £200 per annum?

MR. OTWAY said, that no doubt the whole of the service would be inquired into next Session. When Mr. Pariah, who was now at Buenos Ayres, was transferred there from China, his fees averaged £1,400 per annum. When he went to Buenos Ayres it was determined that the consul's salary should be £900 per annum, with £400 per annum for incidental expenses, and so Mr. Pariah would have lost £100 per annum, but it was proposed to give him this additional £100 per annum to make it up. The addition to the consul's salary at Rosario was rendered necessary owing to the high price of provisions and other circumstances.

MR. MONK wished to know who received the fees paid at Constantinople?

Vote agreed to.

(38.) £46,298, to complete the sum for Colonies, Grants in Aid.

SIR CHARLES ADDERLEY said, he wished to have some explanation on certain points in connection with these Estimates, which he believed would be useful and interesting to the Committee. He had no objection to make to them. The items were steadily diminishing, and he hoped soon they would cease to appear on the Estimates altogether. In fact, the greater part of these charges were expiring, merely retained during the lives of certain possessors—the clergy of North America, West India Justices, and Pensioners. The charges on this Treasury for salaries of three Colonial Governors were on the point of expiry. The Bahamas Legislature lately attempted to withhold their contribution of salary to their Governor, but they thought better of it, and had agreed to continue it. The colony of Prince Edward's Island were about to pay their own Governor, and West Australia a considerable portion of the salary of theirs. The net decrease in the Colonial Estimates of this year was about £6,000; and that decrease arose in this way. Labuan, for the first time, had ceased to be a charge upon the English Treasury. The Governor, lately a Member of that House, Mr. Pope Hennessy, had written to him expressing just pride in having, within so short a time as two years, taken off this charge. That colony had, since its first establishment, thrown an average charge of £4,800 a year on the Imperial Treasury, which the Governor had now succeeded in removing altogether. He (Sir Charles Adderley) confessed he had from the first doubted very much the use of establishing a government at all at Labuan; but he would not revert to the causes which had induced this country to assume that settlement. We had objects in view connected with humanity and missionary enterprise, but there was really no commercial value in the colony except from its coal mine, and upon this point he wished to know whether the coal company was more flourishing than it had been, and whether the Admiralty had found that they could use this coal for ships upon the Eastern stations, instead of having to send to Wales to bring coals to Labuan? The next principal item of decrease was no decrease of annual expenditure at all, the two sums which had disappeared this year being £3,000 given last year, as a present to St. Helena, and the same amount to the Virgin Islands, in consideration of the ravages committed, in the one case by white ants, and in the other by the dreadful hurricane which occurred there. The principal item of increase required some explanation—it was connected with West Africa. When it was understood that the Government no longer intended to blockade that coast against the slave trade, it became a question for the consideration of Parliament how long they should continue the expenditure in our four settlements on that coast. Lagos, which had been expensive, this year ceased to be a charge on the Treasury. Gambia was still a charge, and the Gold Coast was a still larger one. The whole expenditure on the West Coast had increased this year by the item of the cost of a steamer. That item had, however, been incurred with the view to a diminution of general expenditure by consolidating all these governorships and giving the one Governor of Sierra Leone a steamer to visit his three subalterns. In 1866, a sum was voted for this steamer, and they now found another Vote for the same purpose. This required explanation. For the Gold Coast there was still a charge of £2,000. The diminution from £4,500 to £2,000, he presumed they would be told, had been the result of an exchange of forts with the Dutch. If that was so, he hoped the right hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for the Colonies would be able to tell them that it had been successfully carried out. With regard also to Gambia, some explanation was required. Looking at the Estimates, it was found that the Committee were asked to Vote £1,500 in aid of the local Government of that country; but he found that whilst the local expenditure of Gambia was £18,664, the revenue was £21,642, and yet, in spite of the revenue being greater than the expenditure, they were asked to vote the sum in aid which he had mentioned. This should be explained. He might also ask whether negotiations were still going on with France for transferring the Gambia to them? France seemed anxious, by some exchange with us, to become possessed of the Gambia for the purpose of extending their western settlement of Africa. It appeared to him such an arrangement might be equally advantageous to this country. If our sole object in placing ourselves on the West Coast was to blockade it against the slave trade, and the slave trade had now ceased, he could conceive no objection to the French taking a station off our hands, which, if necessary, they could blockade again as well as ourselves; and as the trade of Gambia was now entirely French,. we should not suffer in any mercantile interest by the exchange. One other point upon which he wished for explanation. He was anxious to know whether the Government intended to carry out a plan which the late Government had in contemplation for the consolidation of the West Indian Governments? There was nothing more important in regard to the economical and efficient government of these colonies. At present every island had its own Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, Legislature, and civil, judicial, and ecclesiastical establishments. The salaries of all these officials, while they exhausted the revenues of the colonies, were often not sufficient to command the services of competent men. Many of those Islands were not as big as an ordinary English squire's estate, the revenues in some cases amounting to only £5,000 a year, The expenditure under different heads was ridiculous. In one island there was, he recollected, an expenditure of £32 10*s*. 1½*d*. for the year's public works. So small an expenditure, with such a Government staff to manage it, was of itself an absurdity and a source of inefficiency. As the first step towards this union the present Secretary at War (Mr. Cardwell) had united together the Islands of Nevis and St. Kitts, and had asked his successor why he had not annexed Montserrat to them. The late Government undertook to carry out the idea on a much larger scale, and had contemplated the union of the Leeward Islands and the Windward Islands under one Governor. Without any greater expenditure, a salary of the first class could be obtained for such a Governor, and the Chief Justice, and Judges of these islands, could be grouped in a consolidated circuit. Legislators of a higher class would also be elected, who would be better adapted to carry out representative institutions in the colonies. The noble Lord the Secretary for the Colonies might not have found it possible to carry out the full plan of the late Government; but he should like to know what he proposed to do with regard to the Executive and the Legislative consolidation of the West India Islands? Perhaps he would also state the intentions of the Government in regard to the small island of Heligoland. It was now a charge upon the Treasury, the island drawing from gambling-houses a small revenue, which, however, was in process of extinction. The late Secretary of State for the Colonies (the Duke of Buckingham), wishing to form his own opinion, paid a personal visit to the island—the first Secretary of State for the Colonies, perhaps, who was ever there. His noble Friend thought the island might be made of some use as an out coastguard station, and useful both for the protection and control of the English fishermen who resorted to it, while the presence even of one cutter would strengthen the hands of the Governor. It had since been made a coastguard station. He wanted to know whether that arrangement had proved successful and useful? He wished also to be informed whether, pari passu with the reduction of the civil expenditure, there had been a reduction of the military expenditure of the colonies? The late Government made attempts in several quarters to reduce this charge. They drew away a considerable number of troops from Canada, and would have withdrawn more, but for the threatening attitude of the Fenians in the United States. They also instituted a gradual process of withdrawing English troops from South Africa, and had reduced the garrisons of the West Indies, the West Coast of Africa, and elsewhere. He hoped that the right hon. Gentleman opposite would be able to inform them that these reductions were being carried out on a still larger scale.

COLONEL SYKES observed with pleasure that the naval force on the West Coast of Africa had been considerably reduced by the present First Lord, but seven vessels still remained there, and the saving seemed to have been swallowed up by an item of £10,000 for a steamer at Sierra Leone. He asked for an explanation in regard to the grant of £1,500 for Gambia, although it appeared that the revenue was £21,642, and the expenditure £18,664. On the Gold Coast he observed that the revenue was £8,146, and the expenditure £10,993.

MR. WINTERBOTHAM asked for information respecting the Bishops that were travelling over those islands at the public expense.

MR. MONSELL said, in reply to the last question, that he thought he could promise a considerable reduction of expenditure on that head. With regard to the steamer at Sierra Leone, when the whole of the coast of West Africa was placed under a governor in chief, it was thought necessary that he should have the means of rapid communication with all the British Settlements on the coast. There was a steamer which had been purchased at considerable expense; but it having been found to draw too much water, it was considered necessary either to alter her, or to place another steamer there in her stead. It would have cost £8,400 to alter her and adapt her to the station, and it was thought that as a new steamer could be purchased for £15,000, it would be better to spend £11,000 upon a new and good article, than £9,000 upon an old and inefficient one. If this expenditure were put aside, there was a considerable reduction in the Estimates for the West Coast. With regard to the military colonial expenditure, the reductions effected by the present Government amounted to £700,000 a year, and there would be a still further reduction in the next year from the steps which the Government were now taking. With respect to the naval expenditure, there had been a considerable reduction on the West Coast of Africa. He could corroborate what the right hon. Gentleman (Sir Charles Adderley) had stated in regard to the entire success of Mr. Pope Hennessy in the Government of Labuan. By his energy and good sense he had been able to develop those coal mines, which were so important for the future prosperity of Labuan. He had effected this through getting convicts from the Straits Settlements and employing them in the coal mines. The result had been that coal had been produced in considerable quantities; and, although it did not equal the coal of this country, it had been used in Her Majesty's ships, and had been found fitted for use in steamers. The Gambia Vote of £1,500 was owing to the failure of commerce during the last year and a fearful outbreak of cholera. It was feared that from these causes the revenue would fall off; but if it did not, the money would not be required, and, of course, would not be spent. The arrangement between the English and Dutch Governments had produced satisfactory commercial results. As regarded the political results, however, he could not speak so confidently, for the tribes that had always owed allegiance to England very much disliked the transfer to the Dutch Government. He had not understood that it was the object of the Duke of Buckingham merely to establish a coastguard station at Heligoland. He had been under the impression that the people of that island were rather backward in paying their taxes, and certainly the presence of five or six coastguard men had, in that respect, been attended with the happiest effect. The partial consolidation of the Windward and Leeward Islands had not been carried out according to the plan of the late Government. The course pursued had been to separate the Windward from the Leeward Islands, one class being exclusively colonies where the authority of the Crown was predominant, and therefore, more easily dealt with; and the Governor who had the most experience in these islands, Sir Benjamin Pine, was sent to Antigua with instructions to consolidate the five islands under his jurisdiction, and place them absolutely under one government. Among the advantages of this scheme would be the disappearance of a vast number of useless officers—treasurers, Judges, and magistrates—of whom there was a complete staff for each island, the endeavour being to make those islands one, in the same sense as Orkney and Shetland were one. They would have means of communication by steamers; the whole of these islands were, he believed, likely to be connected by electric telegraph, and the House would remember that four of these islands lay within an area not so large as the county of Norfolk.

An hon. MEMBER asked why the Australian Governors, whose salaries for the most part were paid by the colonies, had their passage money home allowed by the British Government, in some cases to the extent of £800, which must far exceed the cost?

MR. GOURLEY asked for some further explanation respecting the steamer which had been spoken of, and hoped that the sum paid on her account would not be in excess of her value, as in a former case.

MR. MONSELL said, he believed the steamer was purchased upon the opinion of the Constructor of the Navy. As to the passage money of the Colonial Governors, these were all regulated according to a fixed scale, which he believed was not too high.

SIR CHARLES ADDERLEY said, the purchase of the steamer to which the hon. Member for Sunderland (Mr. Gourley) had referred was not made by the late Government.

MR. CHILDERS said, it had not been made by the Admiralty at all.

Vote agreed to.

(39.) £3,134, to complete the sum for Orange River Territory and St. Helena.

(40.) £5,360, to complete the sum for Slave Trade, Commissions for Suppression of.

(41.) £23,343, to complete the sum for Tonnage Bounties, &c.

MR. MUNTZ said, it was a curious thing to vote away thousands in bounties for the capture of slaves, when the slave squadron had been withdrawn.

MR. MONSELL said, that no doubt by that time a reduction would have been made.

COLONEL SYKES said, that operations had now ceased on the West Coast of Africa, and therefore they were only dealing with the East. What really happened was something of this kind. An Arab dhow was seen in the distance by one of our cruizers, and was chased and run on shore. She was of course deserted; but whether there were slaves in her or not the bounty was equally claimed. There ought really to be a Return of the number of dhows captured in this way, and the circumstances relating to each.

MR. AYRTON observed that this information was contained on page 314 of the Estimates. Forty-six vessels were captured in 1868, of which thirty-one had slaves on board. In all, 742 slaves were liberated. The payment of these bounties was a matter regulated by Act of Parliament; and, as long as the Act remained, it would be necessary to vote the money requisite to comply with its provisions.

COLONEL SYKES observed that only £14,000 appeared to be applicable to tonnage bounties, whereas the Vote asked for £35,000.

MR. AYRTON said, the balance was for the support of the captured negroes and other charges.

MR. OTWAY said, the hon. and gallant Member would be glad to hear that the Vote was a diminishing one. The slave trade had been entirely suppressed on the West Coast of Africa, and only existed on the Eastern Coast of Africa, and the Government were in hopes that it would be suppressed there also. Great difficulty was experienced in adjudication on the slave dhows because of the defects in the papers of most Arab vessels.

Vote agreed to.

(42.) £9,500, to complete the sum for Emigration.

SIR CHARLES ADDERLEY said, that the Emigration officers, who were stationed at the various ports for the purpose of inspecting emigrant ships, were most useful public servants; but he thought that of the two Commissioners one might be taken into the new Colonial Office.

MR. ALDERMAN LUSK said, he thought the sum required for the purposes of the Emigration Board was a very large one, and that it might well be reduced. Their occupation, owing to the arrangements of the Colonial Governments, was now all but gone.

MR. MONSELL said, the reduction which would be made if the Emigration Board were abolished would be £2,000 per annum, making allowance for the expenses of superannuation. Arrangements had been made under which the staff of the Emigration Office would be received into the new Colonial Office, and thus the expenses of superannuation would be saved. More meritorious public officers than the two gentlemen now at the head of the Emigration department could not be found in the public service, and the best thing that could be done was to utilize their services by taking them into the Colonial Office instead of superannuating them.

Vote agreed to.

(43.) £500, to complete the sum for Coolie Emigration.

(44.) £9,047, to complete the sum for Treasury Chest.

(45.) £171,877, to complete the sum for Superannuation and Retired Allowances.

MR. BOWRING said, that by the Superannuation Act of 1859 the Treasury were given power to award special allowances under exceptional circumstances; but, in order to prevent those allowances from being improperly granted, it was enacted that they should be made by special Minute to be laid before Parliament. Those Minutes had never been printed for the use of hon. Members. He thought it very desirable that special Treasury Minutes under which pensions were granted should be brought under the notice of the House.

MR. AYRTON said, that necessarily this list had been made up some time ago. The names of pensioners should be put in the list annually until their death was certified to the Department in the usual way. Grants of new pensions were set out in such a way that hon. Members could satisfy themselves as to the transactions of the year. It had not been the custom to print and circulate Treasury Minutes; but they were placed in the Library, where Members could see them.

MR. WHITWELL said, he believed that some gentlemen who were receiving salaries were also in receipt of a pension of £1,000 a year. At the present moment superannuation allowances amounting in all to £2,100 a year were paid by the Science and Art Department, and he believed that some of the recipients were men of middle age or even younger. He hoped the time was coming when Government officers would receive such salaries as would enable them to provide their own superannuation allowances.

MR. AYRTON said, he could assure his hon. Friend that this list distressed the Government as much as it could distress him. Some gentlemen who retired from the Civil Service in consequence of ill health enjoyed remarkable longevity. The list contained a record of what had been going on for the last forty years. The subject had received, and was receiving, the attention of the Government, and he thought a plan would be matured which would give more satisfaction than the one which had hitherto prevailed.

Vote agreed to.

(46.) £31,600, to complete the sum for Merchant Seamen's Fund Pensions, &c.

(47.) £30,400, to complete the sum for Relief of Distressed British Seamen.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, it would be desirable to have a statement as to how the Vote was expended.

MR. GRAVES said, he had received numerous complaints on the subject of this Vote. In 1855 it was £8,000, in 1860 it was £19,000, in 1865 it was £30,000, and in the present year it was £45,000. With the increase of the Vote there was an increase of the evils which it covered. It was generally supposed that the money was for bringing home distressed British seamen. If it were confined to that object no one would object to it; but it was because much of it was applied to a very different purpose he felt it his duty to call attention to it. It was the habit of deserters to throw themselves on the fund provided by this Vote, and to get themselves brought home. When on board they were the worst of the ship's company. They came on board with an exhausted constitution, and on their arrival in this country they were generally afflicted with scurvy. The House had been told very often of the increase of scurvy on board ship. This was to be attributed very much to the operation of the Vote now under discussion. He had received several letters on the subject from sea captains. In one of those letters the writer stated that at Calcutta he was requested to bring home twelve distressed seamen, at 1*s.* a month each for their passage and 1*s.* a day each for their diet. He remonstrated, but ultimately he was compelled to take five, of whom three turned out to be foreigners. None of them were seamen, and but for the crew he would have had very great trouble with these men. Another captain wrote to say that he had been compelled to bring home a number of fellows who were called "distressed seamen," but among whom were two soldiers branded as deserters, a blacksmith, and persons of other callings than that of a seaman. The writer added that greater blackguards had never been aboard ship. Another captain wrote to say that of four distressed seamen whom he had been forced to carry home one was an American and another a Dutchman. One was by trade a saddler, and the other had been a stoker on a railway. This stoker confided £40 or £50 to the care of the captain, who was obliged to carry him home at 1*s.* a month and 1*s.* a day, this payment being made out of the Parliamentary Vote. He had received a memorial from a new steamship company which had a line of steamers from the West Coast of South America. The company objected to carrying those distressed seamen, who took up the room of passengers who would pay £30 or £40. He thought that the Committee would see that this Vote led to gross abuses. A clause in the memorial he had presented stated that the remuneration allowed to the company for this service was quite inadequate; that the number of seamen conveyed was rapidly increasing; and that the conveyance of such persons was a great embarrassment to the proper conduct of the service, and demoralizing to the company's carefully selected crew. It was added that such a state of things was never contemplated by the Legislature, and the memorialists asked that measures might be adopted to relieve them. He called attention to the matter, not with the view of moving the reduction of the Vote, but to suggest that some remedy should be provided in the Merchant Shipping Consolidation Bill, brought in at the close of the Session.

MR. SHAW-LEFEVRE said, this charge arose entirely under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, and the Board of Trade had little or no control over it. The men were sent home by the consuls abroad, who paid their fares, and sent their accounts to the Board of Trade. The Merchant Shipping Act provided that when men were left behind at foreign seaports, from any cause, even though it were their own fault, and were found destitute there, the consuls were to relieve them and pay their expenses home. He dared say that some abuses had occurred and in some cases men had been sent home improperly; but carefully drawn instructions had been sent to the consuls, who were requested not to send home any but those who were strictly provided for by the Act. As a general rule the consuls were very careful; but, as the hon. Member had pointed out, the Vote had been growing. The Vote, however, was rather in excess of the expenditure, which in 1866 was £49,000; in 1867, £38,000; and in 1868, £34,000. Therefore, the Committee would see that some vigilance had been exercised of late, and the actual expenditure was on the decrease. Since he had been at the Board of Trade he had endeavoured to curtail the expenditure by intimating through the Colonial Office to the colonies that they would have to bear the charges made on account of colonial sailors, which formed a not inconsiderable portion of the whole expenditure. The matter was a fit one for discussion on the Merchant Shipping Bill, which he should have to lay on the table in a day or two.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, he thought the explanation showed that the Estimate was rather of a loose character, for it appeared that the expenditure, which was being diminished, was much less than than the Estimate; and he should have thought that the best means of controlling the expenditure would have been to have reduced the Estimate.

MR. AYRTON said, the hon. Gentleman was under a mistake. The Estimate of 1868 was exceeded by the expenditure, and the Estimate for this year was the same as that of last year.

Vote agreed to.

(48.) £27,320, to complete the sum for Non-conforming Clergy.

MR. MONK assumed that this Vote would cease after the present year; but he saw an item of £280 put down for a new congregation, and he thought that ought to be explained.

MR. AYRTON said, he hoped the Committee was not about to enter into a discussion of this Vote, as this was the last time it would appear on the Estimates. He could assure his hon. Friend that all the payments would be made in strict accordance with the law.

Vote agreed to.

(49.) £13,045, to complete the sum for Hospitals and Infirmaries, Ireland.

(50.) £4,825, to complete the sum for Miscellaneous Charitable Allowances, &c. Great Britain.

(51.) £4,834, to complete the sum for Miscellaneous Charitable Allowances, &c. Ireland.

(52.) £31,000, to complete the sum for Temporary Commissions.

MR. WHITWELL asked whether the Coal Commission had closed its inquiry?

MR. AYRTON said, it had not; and that payments on account of it would continue during the current year.

Vote agreed to.

(53.) £31,147, to complete the sum for Local Dues on Shipping.

(54.) £380, to complete the sum for Malta and Alexandria Telegraph, &c.

(55.) £2,000, to complete the sum for Flax Cultivation (Ireland).

MR. CAMPBELL said, that the Vote was a mistake in itself, and did more harm than good. There was prosperity in the North of Ireland, where it was notorious that the flax trade flourished more than it did in almost any other portion of the kingdom. In 1865, an assurance was given that that would be the last Vote taken; but, nevertheless, it was continued, and he thought that now it should come to an end.

MR. AYRTON said, that Votes of this kind were given very much on the principle of compensation—one for England, another for Scotland, a third for Ireland; and it was not possible to abolish such a Vote suddenly. Last year £4,000 was granted, and it was now reduced to £3,000, with a view to the gradual suppression of the grant.

MR. NEVILLE-GRENVILLE said, the Vote seemed to be quite contrary to the principle of Free Trade, and wished to know whether there was any similar Vote in England or in Scotland?

Mr. AYRTON referred to the Vote for Schools of Naval Architecture in England as one of a similar kind to that in Ireland for architectural instruction.

Mr. COLLINS said, he thought the Vote should be disallowed. He believed that the people of Ireland did not require to be taught to grow flax any more than the people of England required to be taught to grow wheat.

Mr. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE said, whatever the Committee might think of the Vote in the abstract, and for the future, he trusted they would not throw it over for the present year. A number of flax instructors were engaged in various parts of Ireland in instructing the small farmers in the cultivation of flax; and as the object had been considered one of great utility, he trusted that it would not be so suddenly put an end to.

Mr. ACLAND reminded hon. Members who represented large towns in England that a great deal of public money was spent in technical education—that was to say, in teaching persons how to manufacture in the most economical and efficient manner, and this Vote belonged to the same class.

Mr. MONK said, that £1,000 had been voted on account, and that was enough, because attempts had been made for some years past to abolish the Vote altogether.

Mr. SHERLOCK said, that Irish Members had not complained of the expenditure on the London parks, or for technical instruction; and it was not right, therefore, to object to a Vote which was for the promotion of flax cultivation chiefly in the South and West of Ireland—an object of immense national importance.

Mr. Alderman W. LAWRENCE said, he hoped that no reduction would be made in the Vote, the object of which was to promote the production of the raw material of manufacture, and thus benefit farmers, manufacturers, and the whole community. The Government had been reducing the Vote gradually, and he had no doubt that it would very soon cease.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, he would not enter into the question whether it was the business of the Government to teach every man his trade; but he would undertake, on the part of the Government, to put an end to the Vote as soon as they could do so, consistently with good faith towards those employed.

Vote agreed to.

(56.) Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a sum, not exceeding £23,247, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1870, for certain Miscellaneous Expenses.

Mr. FAWCETT said, he intended to move the reduction of the Vote by the sum of £3,374 14*s*., put down for the cost of presents and gratuities given away by his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh at the Cape and Australia, and during his present voyage in Her Majesty's ship Galatea. He should ask the Government, firstly, on what authority the Duke spent this money; secondly, whether any limit to the expenditure was laid down; and, thirdly, whether there was not a custom that if a Prince gave presents which the country paid for he should hand over to the country the presents he received in return? He objected not so much to the amount of this Vote as to the principle it involved. To those who might urge the smallness of the amount, he would remark that sometimes the smallness of the sum only showed the melancholy value of a transaction. It was hoped that a great effect would be produced in Australia by the visit of the Duke of Edinburgh; that the loyalty of that colony would be developed; and that it would be united in closer bonds with this country. The colony came forward with magnificent generosity to entertain the Duke, and received those presents from him. But what was the news which had lately been received from Australia? Directly it was known that the English tax-payers would have to pay this sum of money all the good which had been produced by the Duke's visit was undone. According to a telegram which appeared in every public journal in London last Monday week—

"Intense indignation prevails throughout the colony at the prospect of English tax-payers being called upon to pay for the presents which the colonists thought were private gifts from the Duke of Edinburgh."

There was another item in this Vote to which he particularly objected—that of £68 for the conveyance of Prince Christian and the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz between Dover and Calais. But however small the amount is itself, it involved a principle by no means so insignificant. Who, he would ask, authorized Prince Christian and the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz to entail this outlay upon the country? Then, contrast these sums with some of the miserable, paltry, and undignified items in the Estimate. There was, for example, the cost of a present to a King, who bore the honoured name of Peter, for doing an act of Christian charity by taking care of the European cemetery at River Congo. The cost of this gift was 12*s.* 8*d.* What present befitting a King could the Government have procured for 12*s.* 8*d.*? Was it an old dress coat, or a cast-off theatrical suit? Then there was the sum of £13 charged for a lunch to Prince William of Hesse. Such items as these ought never, in his opinion, to be put in the Estimates. In close contiguity to this last-named sum there was an item for providing food for the inhabitants of Cephalonia at a time when that island had been sadly injured by an earthquake. The magnificent sum devoted by the nation to this subject was £10, or £3 less than was thought necessary to provide Prince William of Hesse with a lunch. The Estimates were full of paltry and ridiculous items of this kind. For instance, there was one of £2 1*s.* for rigging out a pier at Antwerp for the reception of the Prince of Wales. He thought that the sooner items of this kind were omitted from the Vote the better. By moving the reduction of the Vote he should give the Committee an opportunity of expressing their opinion that this money ought not to have been spent without authority from the Government; and, as far as the presents of the Duke of Edinburgh were concerned, he desired to let our Australian colonists know that there were some Members in that House who shared in the indignation they justly felt. In conclusion the hon. Gentleman moved that the Vote be reduced by the sum of £3,442 14*s.*

Motion made, and Question,

"That a sum, not exceeding £19,804 6*s.*, be granted to Her Majesty, to complete the sum necessary to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1870, for certain Miscellaneous Expenses,"—(Mr. Fawcett,)

MR. AYRTON said, it would be his duty to explain to the Committee the exact nature of this transaction, which he thought had not been very clearly understood by his hon. Friend the Member for Brighton. The Committee was doubtless aware that a certain sum was placed at the disposal of Her Majesty's Government for the purpose of meeting the small payments which it was necessary to make in administering the affairs of so great a nation as ours, and which were not provided for in the Estimates voted for the year. Out of that sum it was the duty of Her Majesty's Government to make such disbursements as they might find absolutely necessary, and the practice had been to bring those disbursements under the notice of the Committee of Supply in the form of a Vote, as they were here stated, in re-payment of the Civil Contingencies Fund. That was to say, Her Majesty's Government had authority to spend the money within the year, and then in the ensuing year they brought forward an account of the expenditure. A sum was voted to replace the money so spent, and the fund again remained at their disposal. Hon. Members would perceive that it was the duty of Her Majesty's Government, in accordance with the wishes expressed in former Committees of Supply, to render a minute account of the expenditure of this money, in order that the Government might be prevented from using the Civil Contingencies Fund for purposes which would not bear discussion. It was no fault of theirs that these items were very small. However provident any Minister might be, it was impossible that they could foresee every item of expenditure that would have to be incurred during the year in carrying on the affairs of the nation. When the Duke of Edinburgh was about to start upon the journey referred to in the Vote, there was a communication between His Royal Highness and the Government of the day, and it was with the deliberate judgment of the late Administration, having regard to the definite allowance made to him by Parliament, and also to the fact that he was going abroad, not for his private amusement merely, but invested with a public character to fulfil a public mission, that he should be provided with the means to carry out the objects for which it might almost be said he was dispatched by Her Majesty's Government on his journey. Her Majesty's Government, taking all the circumstances into consideration, came to the conclusion that £3,000 should be added to his allowance for the year. That sum was accordingly placed at his disposal, and it was explained to him how it was expected the money should be spent in what might be termed the purposes of his mission, and in discharge of the collateral expenses which he would have to incur. When his Royal Highness returned home an account was rendered by him of his expenditure, and the sum of £3,374 14*s*., as stated in the Vote, was ordered by the Government to be paid to him, because they thought it a reasonable expenditure with reference to the duties he had been called upon to perform. He saw nothing very striking in this transaction. Under a Government like ours, which undertook to regulate minutely the expenditure of the Royal Family, it necessarily followed that the Royal Family must occupy a different position from that of other Royal Families, which had large revenues placed at their disposal, without it being necessary for them to render any account of their expenditure. It seemed to him that that mode of giving those small sums of money was the necessary result of the strict supervision which Parliament thought fit to exercise over the expenditure of the Sovereign and the Royal Family; and he thought there was nothing very remarkable in the fact that if the Prince had to represent the Majesty of England in that visit to the colonies, he should have expended such a sum as they found in the Votes in donations and gifts, which were always expected at the hands of Members of the Royal Family. That was the explanation of the Vote. It was not a matter with which Her Majesty's present Advisers had anything to do; but he had felt it his duty to state the facts of the case as far as he understood it, and he had no doubt that if the late Chancellor of the Exchequer had been in his place he would have been able to give a fuller and more complete account of the transaction than he had done.

Mr. SCLATER-BOOTH said, he thought the Secretary to the Treasury had so completely identified himself with the policy of that Vote, and had so fully explained it, that it was hardly necessary for him to add anything in its justification. However, he might observe that, as far as he remembered, when the Estimate for that Vote was submitted to the late Government the principal ground on which it rested was stated to be that it was for the intended visit of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh to China, Japan, and India, where a very heavy expenditure of that kind might be expected to arise, whereas the Vote was described in the present Estimates as merely being for—

> "Presents and gratuities by his Royal Highness at the Cape and Australia, and during his present voyage in Her Majesty's ship Galatea."

Mr. AYRTON: That is a mistake.

Mr. SCLATER-BOOTH: Then it ought to be corrected.

Mr. MONK asked for an explanation of an item of £2,150 to Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton, for services in connection with the Reform Bill of 1867. He rather thought there was a similar item in the Estimates for last year; and he wished to know whether that £2,150 was in addition to the sum already paid.

Mr. FAWCETT said, the reply of the Secretary to the Treasury, as was always the case with his replies, was extremely ingenious, but, to his mind, unsatisfactory. The Secretary to the Treasury said that sum was to be voted to his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh for his expenses, whereas, in the Estimates it was stated that the sum they were called on to vote was not for expenses, but for presents; and that was what had caused such discontent in the colonies. The Secretary to the Treasury said that was a mistake in the Estimate; but why had the mistake not been rectified before? His Notice on that subject had been given some time ago, and the Secretary of the Treasury must have known of the dissatisfaction existing in the colonies on the matter. It was most unsatisfactory that a Minister should come down at the last moment and tell them that the Estimate furnished by the Government was altogether wrong, and that they were not called on to vote that money for presents, but for expenses. The hon. Gentleman had omitted to explain the item of £68 for conveying Prince Christian and the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz from Dover to Calais.

MR. W. FOWLER called attention to an item of £1,000 for robes, collars, badges, &c., of Knights who had received certain orders, and asked why the expense of those things should not be defrayed by the Knights themselves. He also sought an explanation of an item of £38 3*s*. for "the maintenance of a Congo pirate chief at Ascension."

MR. COLLINS said, he thought it was only reasonable to pay for the gifts of the Duke of Edinburgh in the colonies, as his journey was not in the nature of a private journey; but he thought information was necessary as to the £68 charged for conveying Prince Christian and the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz from Dover to Calais. Surely that was money not paid with a view to cement the union between England and the Continent.

MR. AYRTON said, it had always been the practice, on certain Royal personages coming on a visit to this country or proceeding thence to the Continent, to provide them with passages, and if we had not a steamer available for the purpose, then to pay for the vessel employed in their conveyance. The expense of these small courtesies was charged to that particular account, and there was no other account in which it could well be placed. It was the custom of this country to treat persons of a certain position in the same way as foreign countries treated members of our Royal Family when they made visits abroad. That accounted for that item of £68. The item of £38 3*s*. for a Congo pirate chief was for his maintenance, not as a pirate, but while in custody, his keep, like that of other delinquents when in custody, falling on the public. As to the charge of £2,150 for Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton, it was incurred by the late Government in preparing their measure of Parliamentary Reform; and, as the House had passed their Reform Bill, it could hardly now refuse their bill of costs. As to the £1,000 for the badges and collars of Knights, it was the practice for the Sovereign who gave the orders to give also the collars and badges, without which the ceremony of conferring knighthood would not be complete; and as long as the badges and collars were so given, they must, of course, be paid for.

MR. WHITWELL, reverting to the item of £68 for conveying Prince Christian and the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz from Dover to Calais, hoped the Secretary to the Treasury did not regard Prince Christian as a distinguished foreign visitor, but as a distinguished resident in this country. He trusted that would not be taken as a precedent.

MR. P. WYKEHAM-MARTIN asked for some information as to an item of upwards of £2,000 for a proposed review in Hyde Park which never came off. He supposed that was some mistake.

MR. AYRTON said, the review did not come off, but considerable expense was incurred in making provision for it.

Question put, and negatived.

Original Question put, and agreed to.

House resumed.

Resolutions to be reported To-morrow, at Two of the clock;

Committee to sit again To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

TELEGRAPH BILL.—[BILL 233.]

(Mr. Dodson, The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr, Ayrton,)

CONSIDERATION.

Bill, as amended, considered.

MR. W. M. TORRENS rose to move, after Clause 24, the insertion of a new clause, the object of which was to provide for the destruction of any record of a message which might remain in the Post Office after the message itself had been delivered. The hon. Gentleman said, from what had occurred in other countries, a feeling of popular distrust had been excited which he should be sorry to see incurred by the Government of this country. In his view the telegraphic system monopolized by the Government, whether for purposes of economy, efficiency, or both, would not stand in the same position as the competition of companies working against each other, and dependent for popularity on their success. According to the Bill as it was framed, they were told to regard every telegraphic message in the light legally of a postal letter. He accepted that definition, and only asked that it should be rigorously adhered to. An open letter was the true definition of a telegraphic message. As long as a letter was in the hands of the officers of the telegraph office it was in the custody of the Postmaster General; but the moment it was out of his possession he had no right to remember its contents, far less to make himself the depository of evidence to be used either in a civil or criminal suit, or to make the Post Office the medium of every scandal or extortion which the wit of man could devise. What was wanted was to give the public confidence. He would not have the thoughtless told that they were liable to have their chance, impulsive thoughts recorded and chronicled, to be dug up by some mischievous person at the end of many months, and used to their prejudice. In the case of a telegram it was impossible for the receiver to know whether it came from the person who appeared to send it; yet that telegram might deal with the honour of a man, the fame of a woman, or, perhaps, decide a contested election. Telegrams were altogether different from letters, and it was not right to enable the Postmaster General to pile up messages to the possible injury of private persons. [Mr. ACLAND was understood to say people should bear this in mind.] That might be the opinion of the hon. Member for North Devon; but the House had to make laws for persons not so well informed as the hon. Member, and they had no right to set a trap for them. The object might be to store up evidence for criminal cases; but that evidence would be forthcoming for civil cases as well, and would even enable the crafty to extort money from the weak. The Post Office would become a confessional, without the sanctity of even morals or religion. ["Oh!"] Those who cried "Oh!" might object to the confessional, as he did on religious grounds; but the Romish confessional was better than this would be, because the priest kept the confession in his breast, while the message intrusted to the Postmaster General would be known to a whole army of clerks, who would not be overpaid, and who should not have unnecessary temptation put in their way. With a view to bring the question to an issue, he had put a clause on the Paper providing for the immediate destruction of messages; but as he had been informed that it was sometimes found convenient to verify a message by letter, he was willing to modify his clause to the extent of delaying the destruction by twenty-four hours. He concluded by moving the insertion of the following clause, after Clause 24:—

(Destruction of transcripts of messages.)

"That so soon as any message conveyed by postal telegraph shall have been duly delivered to the person to whom the same shall have been addressed, or an acknowledgment received for the same, the original and transcript thereof, if any, which may have been made in the Post Office shall be destroyed, and no record thereof, in part or in whole, shall be preserved in the Post Office, or by any person in the employment of the Postmaster General."—(Mr. Torrens.)

Clause brought up, and read the first time.

SIR ROUNDELL PALMER observed that the whole cause of this Bill having come before Parliament was to facilitate the communication on matters of business by telegraph; and not to accelerate the transmission of messages relating to all sorts of painful secrets. And the question at issue was whether or not it was desirable to have at command evidence to decide an issue between two persons, as, for instance, whether A had bought what B directed him to buy by telegraph. Thinking it better this evidence should not be willfully destroyed he could not vote for the Motion of his hon. Friend.

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, he thought the legal question had been disposed of by the remarks of his hon. and learned Friend, and dealt with the practical difficulties in the way of adopting the clause. At present telegraph companies retained the original message and transcript for three months for the purposes of checking the receipts at the various offices, to meet complaints of wrong transmission, and other practical reasons. The experience of the Electric and International Company showed that complaints of erroneous transmission were made generally within twenty-five or thirty days after receipt. Then it was necessary to retain those telegrams for a time in order to serve as evidence in a court of law, and although it was quite true that telegrams could not be considered as authentic documents as letters, the House could well afford to leave it to the courts to decide what weight should be attached to them. The discussion the other night led him to infer that some supposed the Government might make use of information obtained through the telegraph for political purposes; but it was clear that if this suspicion had any ground at all the adoption of the clause would make it much easier for the Government to abuse the confidence reposed in it. If the Government could be capable of using the information for political purposes, it must also be assumed the Government would be capable of delaying or even mutilating the messages of its opponents, and the hon. Member's clause would permit of this, because he invites the destruction of all evidence upon the subject within twenty-four hours.

Motion made, and Question, "That the said Clause be now read a second time," put, and negatived.

Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY moved, the addition of the following proviso to Clause 24, thus placing the Government in the same position as telegraph companies were in at present:—

"Clause 24, at end, add 'Provided always, That nothing in this Act contained shall have the effect of relieving any officer of the Post Office from any liability which would but for the passing of this Act have attached to a Telegraph Company, or to any other Company or person, to produce in any court of law, when duly required so to do, any such written or printed message or communication.'"

Mr. COLLINS asked whether the telegraphs would be liable to the payment of rates?

The Marquess of HARTINGTON replied that that point was provided for in the Bill of last year.

Proviso agreed to.

The Marquess of HARTINGTON said, that as it was very important that the Bill should proceed to the House of Lords as soon as possible, it would be very convenient, if the House did not object, that the third reading should be at once taken.

Mr. W. FOWLER desired to know what provision had been made against exorbitant demands being made by some of the railway companies on the Government? In the case of the Midland Railway, for instance, the existing lease expired in six or seven years' time; and, although the Bill provided that no other telegraph company could lay wires over the railways, it would be in the power of companies so situated to make large demands upon the Government, unless such a contingency had been provided against.

The Marquess of HARTINGTON replied that with most of the companies settlements had already been made, and there was no reason, as far as he believed, to presume that there would be any difficulty in settling with the Midland Company or any company so situated, or that better terms than those already accepted by other companies would be awarded upon an arbitration.

Bill read the third time and passed.

EXPIRING LAWS CONTINUANCE BILL.

On Motion of Mr. Ayrton, Bill to continue various Expiring Laws, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Ayrton and Mr. Secretary Bruce.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 245.]

OFFICES ABOLITION BILL.

On Motion of Mr. Stansfeld, Bill for regulating the Compensation to be paid on the abolition of Public Offices, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Stansfeld and Mr. Ayrton.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 246.]

DIVIDENDS ON PUBLIC STOCKS BILL.

On Motion of Mr. Stansfeld, Bill for facilitating the payment of Dividends on the Public Stocks, and for making regulations with respect thereto, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Stansfeld and Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 247.]

House adjourned at half after Three o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Friday, 30*th July,* 1869.

MINUTES.]—Public Bills—First Reading—Seeds Adulteration * (242); Telegraph * (243).

Second Reading—Civil Offices (Pensions) * (157); Married Women's Property (212); Millbank Prison * (234); Fisheries (Ireland) * (236); Trades Unions (Protection of Funds) (226); Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. * (230); Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland Supplemental (No. 2) * (136); Straits Settlements * (231).

Committee—Evidence Amendment (110-239); Contagious Diseases (Animals) (217-240); Jamaica Loans * (204); Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal * (195-241).

Committee—Report—Savings Banks and Post Office Savings Banks * (211); Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c. * (209); Valuation of Property (Metropolis) * (229); Public Schools Act (1868) Amendment * (232); Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment * (235).

Report—Contagious Diseases* (221); Pharmacy Act (1868) Amendment* (238).

Third Reading—Imprisonment for Debt* (224); County Courts (Admiralty Jurisdiction) Act (1868) Amendment* (173); Shipping Dues Exemption Act (1867) Amendment* (178); Cinque Ports Act Amendment* (216), and passed.

MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY BILL.

(The Lord Penzance.)

(NO. 212.) SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

LORD PENZANCE, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, that the Bill had been maturely considered by a Select Committee of the House of Commons. Its object was to redress grievances arising out of the present law as regarded the property of married women, which were keenly felt by a considerable portion of the population. The theory of the common law was that all property possessed by a woman at the time of the marriage, or acquired subsequently, passed absolutely to her husband, who in return was bound to maintain and protect her. Her identity merged as it were in his, and she could neither sue nor be sued—she being unable to enter into any contract, and the husband being civilly responsible for her actions. The upper classes, however, had found means to escape from the severity of this system by means of marriage settlements, and the courts of equity had gradually, and step by step, secured the property of the wives of the well-to-do classes from the carelessness or prodigality of their husbands. Among the poorer classes, however, all the harshness of the law made itself felt. Under the common law a man was bound to support his wife, but she had no direct means of obliging him to do so—she could only throw herself on the parish; and if she became chargeable to the public the parish officers had a right of recovering from the husband what was necessary for her bare support. If he squandered the property possessed by her on her marriage she had no redress; and if, during her married life, she earned anything by her industry or talents those earnings became his absolute property. Such a law, regarded in the abstract, could not be deemed satisfactory. According to the last Census there were 3,000,000 of married women in the kingdom, of whom about 800,000 were persons working for wages or earning money in some other way. Now, in a certain percentage of cases, the husband became a spendthrift or a drunkard, and preyed upon her earnings, sometimes seizing and pawning her goods or breaking up her home. The law stood by, leaving him entirely master of the situation, and the more determined a wife was to preserve herself and her children from poverty, the more certain he was to come down and seize upon the pittance she had secured. Magistrates, clergymen, district visitors, and all acquainted with the poor, were aware that this grievance was widely felt, especially in the North, where it was commoner than elsewhere for women to be largely employed for wages. By a recent provision the earnings of a married woman were protected, in certain cases, against her husband—but these protection orders could only be granted where the husband had deserted the wife, and not otherwise. The Select Committee of the House of Commons took last year much evidence as to the frequency of cases of hardship, and they reported that an extension of the system of protection orders, which at present applied only to cases of desertion, to reckless, cruel, and dissipated husbands, would be a very inefficient remedy, since few women, while continuing to live with their husbands, would come forward and expose their domestic trials by making applications to adverse to them. These protection orders, granted under a clause in the Divorce Act to wives deserted by their husbands, had done a large amount of good; but it was obvious that if a worthless husband had a mind to prey on his wife's earnings he would not leave her sufficiently long to enable her to claim the protection of these orders. And, as a rule, such men took care not to desert, in a legal sense, their wives while they could live upon their earnings in idleness and dissipation. The law in this respect was peculiar to England—in no other country, he believed, did the entire property of a wife become the absolute property of her husband. The Select Committee had turned their attention to the state of the law elsewhere. In America, great changes had been made during the last ten or fifteen years, the common law which they inherited from us having been abrogated, and, according to the evidence offered to the Committee, this had not caused disunion in families, or weakened the proper authority of the husband, nor had it put an end to marriage settlements, though it had diminished the number of them. The Bill, which was founded on the recommendations of the Select Committee, proposed that a wife should be capable of retaining the property she possessed at her marriage and afterwards of disposing of it; that as to marriages now in existence the wife should have all property accruing to her after the passing of the Act; that she might sue and be sued as if unmarried; and that her estate should at death be distributed in the same way as her husband's would be. As to subsequent marriages, women were to hold property belonging to them at the time or acquired afterwards. There were subsidiary clauses making the wife liable to the Poor Law for the support of her husband and children. He did not conceal from himself that the Bill proposed to make a fundamental change in the law which had hitherto regulated the relation of husband and wife—that it revolutionized that law. He could quite understand the alarm which some persons might feel at the notion that the wife could bring an action against the husband, and could deal with her own property — such a proposition was so utterly at variance with the principle of the common law that alarm and doubt might reasonably be generated. It might be urged that the indirect effect would be to set up two independent authorities in one household; that the proper authority of the husband in his own house would be weakened, and that disunion would be promoted. But notwithstanding that those feelings were natural in the mind of anyone who contemplated those changes for the first time they would not, he trusted, induce their Lordships to refuse to read the Bill a second time. On the other hand, the common error of reformers was to fix their eyes upon a particular grievance, and to propose a sweeping change, without reflecting that the law with which they were dealing provided for cases in which there was no evil as well as for those in which there was an evil. We might flatter ourselves that the large majority of marriages were not unhappy, and that there would generally be no desire on the part of married people to squander the property of each other; while it was possible that unions which had hitherto been harmonious would be seriously interfered with by the tendency to set up two independent authorities. Where the marriage was a success, and where the harmony of the home was maintained there was clearly no necessity for a change of this kind; and he supposed it was hardly necessary to say that by the very terms of marriage the husband ought to be the paramount authority in his own home. He understood that there had been a recent discovery by profound thinkers that there was no moral or intellectual difference between the sexes such as lead to the subordination of the one to the other. Truth, however, in the common affairs of life, lay very near the surface, and those who dug and delved into the lower strata of thought sometimes brought up ingenious theories, but rarely practical truth. His own belief was, that the relations of husband and wife were founded upon a condition of things which had existed without exception in all times and in all parts of the earth—the husband being the protector and support of the wife, and the latter subordinate to and reliant upon him; nor did he think that the women of this country would desire a change in an order of Providence which was the source of the highest pleasures which either men or women could enjoy. Unless the old idea of the husband being paramount and the wife subordinate was an effete and worn-out theory, the law obviously ought to follow in the same track, and hence the actual state of the common law. But it did not follow that grievances should be tolerated, and the practical question with which they had to grapple was, how far the paramount authority of the husband could be reconciled with a reasonable protection to women who are tyrannized over and down-trodden by those who disregarded their marriage obligations. If it was right that in an harmonious home the husband should support and protect the wife, there was no reason why, where harmony ceased and the home was broken up, the law should not step in and strip him of rights which had become a tyranny. It would not be difficult, he thought, to provide that the authority of the husband and the ordinary comity of goods should remain so long as the parties lived together; but that when the home was broken up, or the husband did not perform his duties, the wife should be protected by the law. It had been suggested that an extension of protection orders might meet the difficulty; but to this it had been objected that the extreme unwillingness of the wife to go before a magistrate would, except in very aggravated cases, render this a dead letter. It had also been felt that to give the husband a right to his wife's property, barred only upon application to a magistrate, was to put matters on a wrong foundation, and that if, on the other hand, the law recognized the wife as owner of her earnings, she would be elevated in the eyes of her husband and likely to be better treated. These considerations, which had weighed with the Select Committee, were well worthy of their Lordships' attention. He regretted that the Bill had only come up to this House within a fortnight of the close of the Session, and he feared that by no amount of diligence on the part of their Lordships could it be sent back to the other House with any necessary Amendments in time to become law this year. He was anxious, however, that their Lordships should show their sympathy for the suffering class and their readiness to consider the question by reading the Bill a second time. The Preamble simply affirmed the desirability of amending the law of contract and property as to married women, and the principle of the measure was that the evils to which he had referred should be remedied, so that their Lordships would not be committed to anything further. This would facilitate the re-introduction of the measure next Session, in order that at no distant date a remedy for the existing evils of our marriage law might be provided. The promoters of the Bill ought not to feel surprise if persons did not in hot haste abandon settled opinions, which probably resulted from their familiarity with the present law, and if the measure did not find immediate acceptance. It had made its way — he was going to say slowly, but certainly progressively — in the House of Commons, the majority last year being only 1, whereas this year it was considerable— not 1 lawyer out of 33, as he was informed, voting against it. People would doubtless become educated into regarding the Bill more favourably than at first sight; but it would not be surprising if it at first underwent severe scrutiny. On the other hand, he would remind the opponents of the measure that the existing grievance was neither a temporary nor a trivial one, it being widespread and fruitful in misery.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª." (The Lord Penzance.)

THE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND, who had given notice of an Amendment that the Bill should be read a second time this day three months, said, he did not intend, after the noble and learned Lord's speech, to press that Motion. That speech admitted that it revolutionized the present relations of married life—which was of itself a sufficient reason why the House should pause before making so enormous a change. He admitted at the same time, that the existing evil was of the greatest weight, and called for prompt legislation. Other evils, however, might be created by the present Bill, which would enable a wife to dispose of her property, and leave her husband without subsistence. The noble and learned Lord had rightly remarked that reformers were too apt to sweep away authority instead of restraining; whereas, care should be taken to separate the use from the abuse. He was glad that the question had been taken up by such a high authority as the noble and learned Lord, and thought that ultimately some remedy might be found for admitted evils, without revolutionizing a law which had existed time out of mind; but he could not support the Bill in its present shape.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR desired to express his general approval of the principle of the Bill; but, at the same time, he thought the details of the measure required very careful consideration. But it was evidently impossible that any Bill on the subject could pass during the present Session. The experience of the last few years, and the facts stated by his noble and learned Friend, left little doubt of the necessity of protecting women of the humbler class who acquired property by their labour. As regarded those in a better position, he would remind the House that from a very early period the Court of Chancery, feeling the necessity of affording married women protection, had taken care that when any fund exceeding £200 came before them to which a married woman was entitled, they would not part from it until she had had ample opportunity of securing it, or a portion of it, to herself and her children. This attempt to mitigate the severity of the common law showed that the grievance had been long felt; and, though the upper classes were to a great extent protected, it was but right that as regarded women of the poorer classes a remedy should be provided. Having been so long acquainted with the great value of that protection to married women, he could not but express his assent to the principle of the Bill.

LORD CAIRNS acknowledged the fairness with which the noble and learned Lord (Lord Penzance) had stated both the arguments against the Bill and the objections which might be preferred to its particular form, and believed that by not carrying the measure any further this Session the end in view would be furthered. He was himself a supporter of the principle of the Bill; but he wished to explain what he regarded as its principle. There were two kinds of protection provided by the Bill. One regarded protection to the earnings of married women. It had always appeared to him impossible to defend the existing law as regarded the earnings acquired by married women through their industry and talents. It was inconsistent with justice that she should have no voice in the disposition of those earnings. The other protection related to the law which transferred to the husband absolutely all property belonging to the woman at the time of the marriage. In regard to this, it must be remembered that while the common law gave all present or future property to the husband, there was during a very long period, and increasingly in modern times, a standing protest against it in the circumstance that, with the rarest exceptions, a settlement was agreed to when the families were able to afford it, putting the property of the wife on a footing directly at variance with the common law. This being the usual practice among the upper classes, the law ought to provide for those who could not afford the expensive luxury of a settlement, and in some way give like protection to women with a small property. These two points he regarded as the principle of the Bill. But a number of its clauses went further, and others would require a careful consideration by a Select Committee, for they raised a host of difficulties, and were the Bill to pass in its present form the whole law relating to husband and wife would be thrown into confusion; the result of which would be a much greater change than would accomplish the object in view. At this period of the year careful examination by a Select Committee was out of the question; but he would not oppose the Motion to read the Bill the second time.

LORD DUFFERIN said, there was a strong feeling in Ireland in favour of legislation in this direction, a number of Petitions numerously signed having been intrusted to him for presentation.

LORD ROMILLY desired to express approval of the principle of the Bill. No doubt, it would revolutionize the common law, but not the existing law, for the former practically applied only to the poor, the other classes almost universally excluding its operation by marriage settlements. The humbler classes, not being able to afford settlements, experienced much suffering and hardship. Among the upper classes a woman's portion was usually well ascertained at the time of the marriage, and it was rare for a lady of the higher ranks to acquire any money afterwards by her industry, this being almost invariably confined to literary qualifications; but among the lower classes it was common for a married woman to earn considerable sums by her own industry or the exercise of her talents, and all this is taken by the husband. He should have been glad if one or two clauses in the Bill could have been passed this year; but he admitted that the Bill, taken in its entirety, required more careful consideration than could at present be given to it. He earnestly hoped, however, that next Session their Lordships, who did such good service in Select Committees in questions of this kind, would alter the present law, which practically made the women of the lower classes the slaves of their husbands.

THE EARL OF HARROWBY said, that a Bill of this kind, dealing universally with all marriages, was not analogous to settlements, which were formed to meet the peculiar circumstances of each case. Unless settlements were brought within the reach of the poorer classes, they would not enjoy the same advantages as the rich.

THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY admitted the necessity of proceeding cautiously in this matter, the tendency of the Bill being materially to alter all the relations of husband and wife. To appreciate the necessity of legislation one must go to the manufacturing districts, where many married women earned large wages and carried on distinct employments. Their earnings were a great temptation to idle and profligate husbands, and the most heartrending things occurred, homes in many instances being broken up and the wife and children sent to the workhouse. This was a wide-spread and increasing evil, and he trusted that earnest attention would be given to it next Session.

Motion agreed to: Bill read 2ª accordingly.

EVIDENCE AMENDMENT BILL—(No. 110.)

(The Lord Penzance.)

COMMITTEE.

House in Committee (according to Order).

Clause 1 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99. s. 4., part of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 85. s. 2., and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. s. 20. repealed).

LORD DENMAN objected to witnesses being allowed, as a mere matter of caprice or convenience, to substitute an affirmation for an oath.

LORD CAIRNS took the same view, and said that he had already pointed out on the second reading of the Bill that the 1st and 4th clauses in their present form would have the effect of doing away with judicial oaths altogether. They proposed that if witnesses simply disliked to take an oath they should be allowed to affirm that what they were going to say was the truth. He thought it would be quite sufficient to provide for the case of those who had conscientious scruples against taking oaths, and for the case of those who declared they were so unfortunate as to have no religious belief whatever. The noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack was anxious to encourage a state of feeling which would lead persons to regard a solemn statement as equally obligatory with an oath — and this, no doubt, was desirable; but if the country were to be educated up to that point oaths should be abolished altogether. Now, however much it might be regretted, large numbers of people regarded statements made under the sanction of an oath as much more solemn and requiring much greater accuracy than others. This was shown by the frequent appeals to witnesses by Judges and counsel to remember that they were on their oath, and it was notorious that truth was thus elicited in many cases where it would not otherwise be extracted. If it were left to individual discretion, the witness who at present would not tell the truth unless he was sworn would decline to take the oath; while it would be taken by the witness who in any case would tell the truth—so that those who most required the obligation would escape it. Sometimes the only witness to a particular transaction was a person with no religious belief, upon whom the sanctity of an oath had no binding effect, and some provision should be made for such persons as well as for those who had religious scruples. The noble and learned Lord (Lord Penzance), who was not responsible for the present form of the Bill, might bring up Amendments on the Report limiting the operation of the Bill to those two classes.

LORD PENZANCE admitted that the effect of the clause would be wider than was intended. He had considered the noble and learned Lord's objections, and as he thought they were well founded he had no objection to introduce such alterations in the clause on the Report as would meet his noble and learned Friend's view.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 (Parties in actions for breach of promise of marriage).

LORD CAIRNS moved the addition of a proviso, to the effect that the plaintiff in any action for breach of promise of marriage should not be entitled to a verdict unless his or her testimony was corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise.

LORD PENZANCE said, he had not the least objection to the Amendment.

Amendment made.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

The Report of the Amendments to be received on Monday next; and Bill to be printed as amended. (No. 239.)

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) BILL.

(The Lord President.)

(NO. 217.) COMMITTEE.

House in Committee (according to Order).

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 (Extent of Bill).

THE EARL OF FEVERSHAM said, that although the Bill so far as it went gave, no doubt, considerable satisfaction to many persons, the impression, at the same time, prevailed among the agricultural classes that it did not go far enough in the direction of imposing restrictions on the importation of foreign cattle. He should, therefore, move that the following new clause be inserted after clause 20:—

> "Notwithstanding anything herein-before contained, no foreign animals shall be landed at any other than the ports or parts of ports so defined by the Privy Council, and such animals shall not be moved alive therefrom, except for slaughter to slaughter-houses adjacent thereto, licensed by the Privy Council, or except after undergoing a quarantine of not less than fourteen days, and being pronounced free from disease: Provided always, that such regulation shall not apply to the following animals if conveyed in vessels which shall not have touched during a period of three months preceding at any port of any country which may have been affected with cattle plague or sheep-pox—namely, animals imported from any country in which during the previous twelve months cattle plague or sheep pox shall not have existed, and through which animals shall not have passed from countries so affected."

EARL DE GREY AND RIPON said, it was quite impossible for him to agree to the clause of his noble Friend, which differed very little from one which, when moved in the House of Commons, was rejected by a large majority. He could understand, although he entirely disapproved, the adoption of a system under which every foreign animal brought into this country should be slaughtered at the port of landing; and he could also understand the principle on which this Bill was based—namely, that of intrusting large powers to a Department to be exercised under the authority of Parliament. He was unable, however, to comprehend how such a principle as was embodied in the noble Earl's clause could be adopted. If there were a "hard and fast" line drawn by Act of Parliament, the inevitable result would be that the parties with whom that Department of the Government had to deal would take their stand on the enactment and insist that the Department should be guided by it and by it alone. The result of the clause, if carried, would be to prevent healthy cattle from coming into the country whenever it could be shown that there had been a single case of disease in any part of any country through which the healthy cattle had passed. Such a provision would be totally inconsistent with the principle of the Bill, and he trusted therefore their Lordships would not agree to it.

On Question ? their Lordships divided—Contents 11 ; Not-contents 56 : Majority 45.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 63, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 64 (Water and food on railways).

EARL DE GREY AND RIPON said, some people thought that under the clause as it stood the railway companies would only be obliged to fill their troughs on a demand being made to that effect. To remove all doubt, he moved the insertion of words providing that every railway company should have a supply, to the satisfaction of the Privy Council, of water and food for animals at such stations as the Privy Council should from time to time by order direct; and that animals travelling along the line should be supplied therewith on the request in writing of the owner of such animals or of any persons in charge of them.

Amendment agreed to.

THE BISHOP OF GLOUCESTER AND BRISTOL said, that in his remarks last night he had ventured to suggest that twelve hours, rather than the thirty hours mentioned in the Bill, should be the maximum length of time during which these poor suffering animals should remain without a supply of food and water. He found that in 12 & 13 Vic., c. 92, there was a power to supply food and water to animals which might be impounded after twelve hours, and the owner who neglected to provide food and water was made liable to the charges incurred by the person who did so provide them, and for this reason he had thought that twelve hours should be the limit in this case. Questions had been addressed by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to the most eminent veterinary surgeons in the kingdom as to whether, considering the natural requirements of these animals and their increased thirst when crowded together in railway trucks and steam-boats, they ought to remain longer than twelve hours without food and water. The whole of the answers sent in were decidedly in the negative, and some of the writers said that the time ought to be much less than twelve hours. He might state that those answers were all given without fee or remuneration of any kind. However, he had the opportunity last night of conferring with benevolent persons who were deeply interested in that subject, and in consequence of certain difficulties which had been pointed out to him in connection with the "untrucking" of those poor animals, he thought he would, perhaps, be doing the best he could do for their interest in adopting the suggestion made to him out of pure kindness towards those suffering creatures, that he should fix the limit at twenty hours instead of twelve by his Amendment. He therefore proposed to insert twenty hours for the thirty hours named in the clause. By that Amendment he must abide, and he trusted their Lordships would be pleased to spare those dumb creatures those last ten hours of suffering—the worst in their whole journey.

An Amendment moved, in line 42, to leave out ("thirty") and insert ("twenty.")—(The Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol).

THE EARL OF ROMNEY said, he was sorry the right rev. Prelate had not insisted on twelve hours. Twenty hours he thought excessive. In the United States of America the different States had their own laws on this point, and some States had fixed eight hours and others ten hours as the utmost limits.

EARL DE GREY AND RIPON said, he entirely sympathized with the object which the right rev. Prelate and the noble Earl who had spoken last had at heart, and he had a suggestion to make which he trusted would meet their views. There was no doubt considerable difficulty connected with "untrucking"—a process from which the animals suffered very much; and to enact off hand by a provision which was to take effect immediately that water was to be supplied every twelve hours to cattle travelling by railway would, he thought, be a somewhat hasty and ill-advised proceeding. He would therefore suggest that the clause should be left as it stood, but that words should be inserted requiring water to be supplied to cattle after they had travelled thirty consecutive hours, or such other period, not less than twelve hours, as the Privy Council might by Order in Council from time to time direct—making thirty hours the maximum. That would leave it open for the Privy Council to consider what arrangements might be fairly and judiciously made with the railway companies in the matter.

THE BISHOP OF GLOUCESTER AND BRISTOL was grateful to the noble Earl for the suggestion he had just made, but felt it to be his duty to stand out for a maximum not exceeding twenty hours, as the period within which food and water should be supplied.

EARL DE GREY AND RIPON said, there was no doubt that many cattle now came from Scotland in very good condition, and he could not advise their Lordships at once and without due consideration to substitute twenty hours for thirty.

On Question, That the word proposed to be left out stand part of the Clause? Their Lordships divided:—Contents 40; Not-Contents 29: Majority 11.

Amendment made by inserting "or such other period not being less than twelve hours as the Privy Council may from time to time direct."

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Further Amendments made; the Report thereof to be received on Monday next; and Bill to be printed as amended. (No. 240).

TRADES UNIONS (PROTECTION OF FUNDS) BILL—(No. 126.)

(The Earl of Morley.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

THE EARL OF MORLEY, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, that its object was temporary, being to protect the funds of trades unions until another Bill was introduced next Session on the subject. At present these trades unions were regarded as private societies, and were prevented from taking advantage of the Friendly Societies Act of 1865. By this Bill they could, by depositing a copy of their rules, as provided by the 44th section of the Friendly Societies Act, be brought within its scope, and a remedy given in cases of misappropriation, where at present there was no remedy at common law. The simple object of the Bill was to prevent the misappropriation of the funds of trades unions, and the Bill would remain in force for one year only.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(The Earl of Morley).

LORD CAIRNS said, the Bill was anomalous and premature, inasmuch as a Royal Commission had sat on the subject, and the Bill was not framed in accordance with any of that Commission's recommendations. The Government evidently hoped by this Bill to get trades unions recognized in some way or other as friendly societies; for the measure recited that although the object of the society might be illegal, inasmuch as it tended to restraint of trade, yet it should rank as a friendly society for the purpose of protecting its funds. If the measure were necessary, there would be some shadow of excuse for accepting it; but it was not—as the Act initiated by Mr. Russell Gurney protected the funds of legitimate friendly societies — and he objected to giving trades unions, illegal in their object, the protection of the law.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, the measure was necessary, and had resulted from a somewhat strict construction having been put on the word "illegal" as applied to trade societies by the Court of Queen's Bench, which had declared that persons joined together as a trade union, not for the purpose of restricting trade by intimidation, but simply resolving among themselves not to engage in their trade except under certain conditions, were illegal. This decision prevented the societies from recovering money due to them, or punishing those who embezzled their funds. This decision had created great alarm among the trades unions, and, in consequence, a Bill had been introduced in "another place," giving to trades unions all the benefits enjoyed by friendly societies; but, thinking this was out of the question, the Government had resolved to introduce this temporary measure, in order to protect these societies from robbery, until the whole matter could be dealt with in a comprehensive manner.

In reply to Lord CAIRNS,

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, the decisions of the courts were that, if a society had anything in its rules which operated in restraint of trade, then it was an illegal society.

LORD CAIRNS: The result is, we are now to declare that, although its regulations may operate in restraint of trade, they are, notwithstanding, to make a society a legal society.

On Question, Motion agreed to; Bill read 2ª accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Monday next.

House adjourned at half past Seven o'clock, to Monday next, Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Friday, 30*th July*, 1869.

MINUTES.] — NEW WRIT ISSUED—For New Sarum, v. Edward William Terrick Hamilton, esquire, Chiltern Hundreds.

SELECT COMMITTEE — Plans for New Dining Rooms, &c., nominated.

Report—Abyssinian War [No. 380]; New Law Courts [No. 381].

SUPPLY—considered in Committee — CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.

Resolutions [July 29] reported.

WAYS AND MEANS—considered in Committee.

PUBLIC BILLS—Resolutions reported—Ordered—First Reading — Harbour of Galle Loan* [250]; East India Loan* [251].

Second Reading—Expiring Laws Continuance* [245]; Dividends on Public Stock* [247].

Committee—Report—Fortifications (Provision for Expenses) [223]; Inclosure of Lands (re-comm.)* [31]; Militia Pay*; Basses Lights (Ceylon)* [224]; Accounts, &c. Presentation* (240).

Considered as amended—Militia (Ireland)* [222]; Public Works (Ireland)* [202]; Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act (1863) Amendment* [208]; Nitro Glycerine* [235]; Volunteer Act (1863) Amendment* [236]; Criminal Lunatics* [172]; New Parishes and Church Building Acts Amendment* [225].

Third Reading—Seamen's Clothing* [242]; Nitro Glycerine* [235]; Volunteer Act (1863) Amendment* [236]; Zanzibar (Jurisdiction of Consul)* [237]; Criminal Lunatics* [172];

Clerk of Assize* [203]; Railways Abandonment* [219]; New Parishes and Church Building Acts Amendment* [225]; Local Officers Superannuation (Ireland)* [87], and passed.

Withdrawn—Public Offices Concentration (recomm.)* [196].

The House met at Two of the clock.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.—QUESTION.

SIR GEORGE JENKINSON said, he rose to give notice that, unless the Government undertook to deal with the subject of Capital Punishment, he would ask leave, early next Session, to introduce a Bill to alter and amend the existing law in regard to the present system of the revision and commutation of Capital Sentences; and he would now beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to grant a Return of all Convicts, male and female, who have been reprieved from the execution of Capital Sentences passed upon them during the last ten years.

MR. BRUCE said, that if the hon. Baronet would give notice of the information he wanted, it should be granted as an unopposed Return.

ARMY—PROMOTION IN THE NON-PURCHASE CORPS.—QUESTION.

MR. EYKYN said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for War, Whether, in view of the existing and almost total stagnation in promotion in the non-purchase corps, as evidenced by the fact that in the (Old) Royal Artillery, numbering over one thousand officers, there has been only one step of promotion over a period of seven months, it is the intention during the present Session to act upon the scheme for promotion in those corps by adopting the recommendations of the Select Committee of 1867, or by any other plan of which the Bill for the Commutation of Pensions might or might not form a part; or when they intend applying any remedy for the dead lock in promotion now existing?

MR. CARDWELL said, in reply, that the Committee to which his hon. Friend referred had made two recommendations, one of which was that the Government should have the power of purchasing retiring allowances for a capital sum; and the other was an alteration, specified in the Report, of the scale of retirement. The first of these recommendations had been carried into effect by a Bill which, within the last few days, had received the Royal Assent and become law; but there would not be time, during the present Session, to deal with the remaining part of the plan.

SUPPLY.

Order for Committee read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY—HOGARTH'S PORTRAIT.—OBSERVATIONS.

MR. DISRAELI said, that perhaps the House would allow him to make one remark with respect to a Vote which passed the Committee of Supply the other night. The House would remember that it had been his duty to vindicate the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery from the charge that at the sale of the portrait of Hogarth at his easel, painted by Hogarth himself, the Trustees did not fulfil their duty, and that in consequence of the want of funds, a precious picture was lost to the country. On that occasion he vindicated the conduct of the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, and stated that they had offered 350 guineas for the picture, but that a gentleman from Manchester bade a greater sum. In consequence of the debate which then arose, the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery had received a communication from which it appeared that the picture was purchased, not by a private gentleman, but by the well-known firm of Messrs. Agnew and Sons, picture dealers, of Manchester. In their letter, the Messrs. Agnew stated that they bought the picture for their own collection, giving a large sum for it, but not a price exceeding its value; that they were perfectly unaware at the time that they were bidding against the country; and that, therefore, they would have the greatest pleasure in waiving their claim to the painting, and in allowing the National Portrait Gallery to have it. It was so rare a thing for dealers in pictures to waive their right to valuable works of art, that he thought it due to Messrs. Agnew and Sons that the fact of their readiness to give up the picture to the nation should be known. He would read one or two paragraphs from the letter of Messrs. Agnew and Sons to the Trustees of the National Gallery. They said—

> "We bought the picture for our stock, and without reference to any particular purchaser, and at a sum we consider much below the value of a work by Hogarth of unsurpassed interest. . . . . We shall not stand in the way of the country acquiring this important picture, which every lover of art must desire it should possess. From the debate in the House we received the first intimation that it was sought to purchase the picture for the national collection. We consider it to be our duty, as it is no less our pleasure, to offer the picture to the Trustees for the sum bidden by their agent.

That was conduct on the part of Messrs. Agnew exhibiting great public spirit; and it gave him pleasure to call attention to it; and he might add that this was not the first time he had to notice the public spirit of Manchester.

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," put, and agreed to.

SUPPLY—CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.

SUPPLY considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

(1.) £1,008,343, Customs.

(2.) £1,604,616, Inland Revenue.

(3.) £2,362,841, Post Office.

MR. BENTINCK said, he rose to call attention to the postal arrangements between England and Italy. The first point was that no morning mails were despatched from Paris to Italy; so that it made no difference whether letters to Italy were despatched to Paris by the night or morning mails. This was a matter of the greatest possible inconvenience to those engaged in commercial pursuits. He had never seen any good reason why the French did not despatch a morning mail. A morning mail was despatched to Italy by way of Marseilles, but not by way of Toulon or the Mont Cenis route. Then there was the delay which seemed to be imposed in mere wantonness by the French Government on the mails to Italy. The route from Paris to Italy, whether by Marseilles or Savoy, was the same till they arrived at Macon, but the mail from Paris to Marseilles ran the distance to Macon in eight hours, while the mails to Toulon and to Mont Cenis took nine hours and twenty minutes. On leaving Macon matters became materially worse. Before the Victor Emmanuel Railway fell into the hands of the Paris, Lyons, and Mediterranean Company, express trains ran between Culoz and St. Michel, but now the Italian mails and passengers were carried by slow trains—by very slow ones, indeed, as anyone would testify who had travelled by that line of late years. So that between Paris and St. Michel there was a completely unnecessary loss of two hours and thirty minutes, of which the only conceivable object was to discourage travelling by the Mont Cenis route and to induce as many travellers as possible to prefer that by Marseilles and Nice. As he said before, the Marseilles trains run from Paris to Macon in eight hours, while the trains carrying the mails for Italy took nine hours and twenty minutes. From Macon to St. Michel they took seven hours and twenty minutes, whereas at so low a speed as twenty-five miles an hour, including stoppages, the journey would be performed in six hours. Thus, one hour and twenty minutes was lost between Paris and Macon, and one hour and ten minutes between Macon and St. Michel, making two hours and thirty minutes at least wasted between Paris and St. Michel. The Italian mail train now left Paris at 8.40 p.m. There was probably no reason why it should not leave at 8 p.m. as it formerly did. If the Mediterranean Company could be induced to put on a fair rate of speed, which it would be perfectly easy for them to do, the mail might perform the journey from Paris to Turin in twenty-two hours, and from Paris to Florence in 34½ hours. It seemed impossible to imagine a valid reason why this service between Paris and Florence should not at the present time be thus performed, were that the good pleasure of the French Government and of the Mediterranean Company. To assist comparison and appreciation he would give the different speeds at which the mail from London to Florence travelled over the different sections of the journey. London to Dover 88 miles, at 44 miles an hour; Dover to Calais, steamer, 21 miles, at 12 miles an hour; Calais to Paris, 184 miles, at 33½ miles an hour; Paris to Macon, 273 miles, at 29¼ miles an hour; Macon to St. Michel, 147 miles at 20 miles an hour; St. Michel to Susa, 50 miles, at 9½ miles an hour; Susa to Florence, 323 miles, at 23½ miles an hour. The Italian service, notoriously, as a rule, less expeditious than the French, maintained a speed of 23½ miles an hour, including the passage of the Appenines, while the French mail service from Macon to St. Michel reached only twenty miles. Better proof could hardly be required that the loss of two and a-half hours by the French trains was intentional; and it was no invidious inference, but an inevitable one, that things were so arranged for the benefit and gain of the Marseilles and the Mediterranean line. As regarded the journey homewards there was constant complaint. The mail from Marseilles left at 8.34 p.m. and arrived at Paris at 5.10 a.m., which gave plenty of time to catch the morning mail to England at 7.40 a.m., and allowed the passengers to arrive in London the same evening. But the postal train from Italy was due at Macon at 8.10 p.m., yet the Italian mails and passengers were obliged to wait at Macon till 9.24 p.m., arriving in Paris at 6.55 a.m., too late, under ordinary circumstances, to catch the morning mail to London. He had received about three weeks ago a letter from the Minister of Public Works at Florence, which stated the case precisely to the same effect. He would not trouble the Committee with an acccount of the difficulties that had been thrown in the way of the Fell Railway. Every difficulty had been thrown in the way of that system by the French Government, and by the spirit of protection which animated the inhabitants; but he was glad to find that the energy of the company was in the way of surmounting them. He could assure his noble Friend the Postmaster General that he had not brought forward this subject with any desire to embarrass the Government, or the Post Office; but as the complaint he made was not without reason, and as he found that such a statement made in the House of Commons, if not disapproved by the Minister, when noticed in the newspapers abroad often had considerable effect in inducing a foreign Government to give way on points which ought never to have been disputed at all, he hoped his noble Friend would give a favourable consideration to the facts of this case. He also wished to ask, referring to quite another subject, Whether there is any objection to affix Letter Boxes for posting Letters to the Mail Railway Vans according to the system adopted in France? He thought that would be a great convenience, and any difficulty might be obviated by increasing the postage stamp to 4*d.* or 6*d.*

The Marquess of HARTINGTON said, he would be very glad if the result of public attention being called by his hon. Friend to the question of our communications with Italy should be to produce some improvement. He was quite aware that the inconvenience and delay stated by his hon. Friend did exist; and it was true that up to the present time no attempt had been made by the British Post Office to obtain a remedy. Of course his hon. Friend must be aware that they had no control whatever over the trains which conveyed the mails through France. The only train in France over which the English Post Office had any control was that which conveyed the Overland Mail to India. No doubt the inconvenience of there being virtually no evening mail to Italy was much felt by the commercial community, and it was extremely probable that an opportunity would shortly arise for bringing this matter before the French Government. The Committee were aware that the route to Italy by Brindisi was in process of development, and it was possible that a considerable saving of time might be afforded by that route. When that was done it would be the duty of the English Post Office to enter into communication with the French Government upon the subject of forwarding the English mail bags as quickly as possible through France, and also to request them to accelerate the ordinary mails to Italy. He had no official knowledge of the fact, but he had heard that the French Post Office did not, like that of England, expend large sums in order to obtain the entire control of particular trains. The French Post Office, he was told, paid the railways a comparatively small sum for the use of the ordinary trains, and they did not therefore possess the power which the English Post Office claimed to compel railway companies to run trains at hours not the most convenient to themselves. Considering, however, the large sums paid by the English Post Office to the French Government for postal facilities, he would avail himself of the first convenient opportunity he could find to address them on the subject. With respect to the question of affixing letter boxes to the ordinary mail trains, as in France, he had considered the subject, and found that the consequence would frequently be that through misapprehension on the part of the public the letters, instead of being accelerated, would be taken out of the way. He had, however, made an arrangement equally convenient to the public, by which a letter with an additional fee of 2*d.* might be received in the railway Post Office van by the mail guard and the sorter, and if its delivery would be accelerated by being taken by that van it would be forwarded.

MR. BENTINCK said, the explanation of the noble Marquess had been quite satisfactory.

Vote agreed to.

(4.) £709,780, to complete the sum for Post Office Packet Service; no part of which sum is to be applicable or applied in or towards making any payment in respect of any period subsequent to the 20th day of June 1863 to Mr. Joseph George Churchward, or to any person claiming through or under him by virtue of a certain Contract, bearing date the 26th day of April 1859, made between the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Admiralty (for and on behalf of Her Majesty) of the first part, and the said Joseph George Churchward of the second part, or in or towards the satisfaction of any claim whatsoever of the said Joseph George Churchward, by virtue of that Contract, so far as relates to any period subsequent to the 20th day of June 1863.

MR. BAZLEY asked whether the noble Marquess had entered into any negotiations with the United States with regard to cheap oceanic postage between the two countries?

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON said, that no negotiations had been entered into with the United States; but since the Resolution come to by the House he had given the most careful consideration to the subject, and as soon as the state of Public Business would permit he would bring the matter under the consideration of the Government. It was a very large and important question, because a reduction of the postage to 3*d.* would entail a loss to the revenue of between £40,000 and £45,000 a year. The object to be attained might be desirable, but such a loss ought not lightly to be incurred. Nor would this be the whole extent of the loss, because some modification of our postal system with Canada would be required, and it was probable we might be called upon by the Canadian Government to pay a considerable sum towards the loss inflicted upon the Canadian revenue by these arrangements. The demand would not stop there, because similar claims to reduction might be expected to be made by Australia and India. Before this reduction was sanctioned by the Government, and before negotiations were entered into with the United States, the whole subject must be looked at, and the Government would have to face a very considerable sacrifice of revenue. It would not, however, be necessary to enter into negotiations until a period had arrived more nearly approaching to the beginning of next year.

Vote agreed to.

(5.) £90,000, Telegraph Service.

(6.) £5,000, to complete the sum for Common Law Courts.

COLONEL SYKES said, the House had a just cause of complaint that Supplementary Estimates of £200,000 had been issued for fixed and permanent charges, which must have been foreseen, and ought to have been included in the regular Estimates. There was an item of £88,000 for the Court of Chancery, £26,000 for the Chief Court of Bankruptcy, and £18,500 for the salaries of the District Court of Bankruptcy. He also complained that this Supplementary Estimate was only delivered that morning, and probably had not been seen by half the Members who were thus called upon to vote away money in ignorance.

MR. AYRTON said, that the Vote before the House was a re-Vote, in consequence of the expenditure incurred in the previous year not having been paid. According to the more exact system now adopted, the sum had become an additional charge nominally, but not substantially. The Votes for the Court of Chancery, the Chief Court of Bankruptcy, the District Court of Bankruptcy, and the Vote for Superannuations and Retired Allowances, were all Votes that were necessary in consequence of the Bill passed by that House to reform the Bankruptcy Law, and the necessity of paying the salaries of the officers of the Courts of Chancery and Bankruptcy, which were now all to be paid out of Votes in Supply. A Bill had been passed this Session by which in future these different items would be paid for by Votes in Parliament, instead of out of special funds paid into the Exchequer, and not under the control of Parliament. As, however, the Royal Assent had not yet been given to the Bill, it became ncessary to take a sum in gross to meet the charges thus created. But a few days, comparatively speaking, had elapsed since the Bill went up to the House of Lords, so that it was absolutely necessary to include these items in a Supplemental Estimate. The Vote for Science and Art was, in fact, a re-Vote of money granted by Parliament as far back as 1865. A foot-note to that item explained that £3,000 was voted in 1865, but only £1,200 was spent, and the balance still remained to be paid to complete the transaction.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, the very object of a Supplementary Estimate was to cover charges rendered necessary by the legislation of the Session. Admitting, however, the perfect accuracy of the explanation given by the Secretary to the Treasury, he thought that, as regarded the purchase of land in Dublin, in connection with Science and Art, the necessity of it might have been foreseen in time for the sum to be included in the original Estimates.

Vote agreed to.

(7.) £5,000, to complete the sum for Military Prisoners.

(8.) £88,500, Court of Chancery.

(9.) £49,500, Court of Bankruptcy.

(10.) £1,200, to complete the sum for Science and Art Department.

(11.) £8,000, Endowed Schools, England, Commission.

(12.) £30,000, to complete the sum for Superannuations and Retired Allowances.

(13.) £4,500, to complete the sum for Miscellaneous Expenses.

(14.) £68,118, Greenwich Hospital and Schools.

House resumed.

Resolutions to be reported To-morrow.

FORTIFICATIONS (PROVISION FOR EXPENSES) BILL—[BILL 223.]

(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Captain Vivian.)

COMMITTEE.

Order for Committee read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

Mr. Ayrton

MR. P. A. TAYLOR said, there were some parts of this Bill which had taken him by surprise, as he believed they would also surprise the House. It certainly was remarkable that a Government, which from its highest to its lowest Members was pledged to strict economy, should propose to throw away £1,500,000 On the previous day a hard struggle was made to effect a saving of £10,000, which failed because there were a great many Members who did not understand the details of ambassadorial expenditure. But there was no Member of the House, whether his seat were on the Treasury or Opposition Benches, or whether he sat below the Gangway at either side, who did not know and recognize the fact that this was simply a waste of money. In a country with so many hundred miles of frontier the attempt to render impregnable any one spot was a very doubtful undertaking, even if the progress of artillery science did not threaten to render impracticable this idea of impregnability. Mr. Whitworth had stated several years ago that he would undertake to throw 70-lb. shells, filled with molten iron, a distance of six miles. And his right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Bright) — he wished he were now in his place—had spoken strongly on this very question of fortifications. Of the military authorities, the right hon. Gentleman had stated that "they would walk blindly into any expenditure;" and that on looking into the recommendations which had been made as to fortifications he was "amazed at the absolute stupidity—or, if a milder word were wanted, he would say the absolute lunacy—of the military authorities on this subject." The right hon. Gentleman also urged on the House upon the same occasion that public opinion was misled and apprehensions unnecessarily excited by the language of Cabinet Ministers. It was not a wise commercial practice to throw good money after bad, and therefore he moved that the House do go into Committee that day month.

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "this House will, upon this day month, resolve itself into the said Committee,"—(Mr. Taylor,)

—instead thereof.

MR. CARDWELL said, that if the question were now whether fortifications should be built or not, the opportunity would be a suitable one for the objections of his hon. Friend. But the question was not whether they should begin to build fortifications by means of loans or not; the question was whether, having completed four-fifths of those fortifications, they should, or should not, complete the remainder, or should be like the man in Scripture who began to build a tower without counting the cost of finishing it? The Bill was founded on these principles—That the loan works should be brought to a final close; that they should not exceed the estimate contained in the last Act of Parliament; that all works not already commenced, so far as the loan was concerned, should be abandoned; and that the works which had been begun should be utilized as much as possible, and completed as economically as possible. He would not enter into any controversy upen the general question of fortifications; but thought that by going into Committee a most useful solution of the question would be arrived at.

COLONEL SYKES said, that nine years ago, when this matter first came before the House, he resisted the proposed fortification scheme, and pointed out the absurdity of the panic on which the proposal was founded, and which arose from certain colonels in the French army telling the Emperor that they were ready to invade England. As soon as the story reached this country a panic was created in this House, emanating from the Treasury Bench; and it was stated that we were to be invaded and defeated by the French, and that it was necessary to defend ourselves with brick and mortar fortifications. He then declared that we could best resist invasion by the strong arms and bold hearts of our population without the help of brick and mortar. He was ridiculed for that opinion, but the result had shown that the fortifications were unnecessary, and he had annually protested against the waste of the public money upon them. In a Return which he had moved for in 1867, a list was given of no less than seventy-two fortifications in progress in different parts of England, some of them of very considerable size, and others mere batteries. The estimate for the fortifications was £6,905,000; but then those fortifications would require 1,104 guns to arm them, 9,841 artillerymen to work the guns, and 22,441 infantry to support the artillerymen, and that would involve a cost of £2,000,000 more, making the total cost more than £9,000,000. The right hon. Gentleman said that some of the proposed fortifications were to be abandoned; but he would like to know how many of the seventy-two were to be abandoned, and whether the sum now asked for would suffice for the entire completion of those works which were unfinished? It was the old unjustifiable story to say that because so much had already been laid out unprofitably, the works must be finished; but, unhappily, it seemed as though John Bull's purse was regarded as inexhaustible. Under the circumstances he should second the Motion of the hon. Member for Leicester (Mr. P. A. Taylor).

MR. NEVILLE-GRENVILLE said, that some of the works had been built by contract, and they were already beginning to crumble to pieces. The fortifications at Dover were in a disgraceful condition. The stones did not join, and the works were beginning already to fall out of repair. He hoped that in the case of those fortifications which had to be finished the work would be done by the engineers in the army, or at all events under their immediate supervision. He hoped that the £1,500,000 now asked for would be all that would be spent; but he feared that as it was, it would take a considerable annual sum to keep the fortifications in anything like proper repair.

CAPTAIN VIVIAN said, he would refer the hon. and gallant Member (Colonel Sykes) to a Return presented during the present Session, showing the whole of the forts which were to be finished, together with those which were to be abandoned.

MR. MUNTZ said, that however absurd the original Vote was, he thought it would be better now to go into Committee on the Bill and see if any reduction could be made in the amount. Under the influence of panics we were apt to rush into every sort of expenditure, and generally into the wrong expenditure. If, when this particular panic arose, we had organized an effective militia—which at present we did not possess—we might have saved this nonsensical expenditure on bricks and mortar. As though, forsooth, an enemy would choose to land just opposite a large fortification when he had the choice of going thirty or forty miles off.

CAPTAIN BEAUMONT said, he hoped to be able, in making the Motion that stood in his name in Committee, to give a satisfactory answer as to the utility of these fortifications. It would be most injudicious for the House to offer any obstruction to the completion of the fortification scheme indicated by the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for War, which would give us the greatest amount of efficiency at the minimum of expense.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON said, he would support the Motion of the hon. Member for Leicester. He regretted that the Government should not introduce Bills of this character at an earlier period of the Session. In 1860, the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade had delivered a powerful speech condemning the whole of this fortification scheme, and since that period events abroad had shown that fortifications were more useless than ever.

MR. COLLINS said, he had originally opposed the fortification scheme; but as we had spent so much money in carrying it out he thought we had better not grudge the small sum necessary to complete the works which had been begun. We had already spent 17*s.* or 18*s.* in the pound.

MR. BAZLEY observed that when the fortifications were completed, the country would have to bear the cost of keeping them in repair.

COLONEL STEPNEY said, he thought that the country need not fear being led into undue extravagance under the present Administration.

MR. WHITE said, he must protest against the enormous and useless outlay which it was proposed to make upon these fortifications.

Question put, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

The House divided:—Ayes 100; Noes 32: Majority 68.

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," put, and agreed to.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 1 (The sum of 1,510,000*l.* to be issued out of the Consolidated Fund towards expenses after mentioned).

CAPTAIN BEAUMONT said, he rose to move a reduction in the amount asked for on account of the fortifications. Being an Engineer officer standing in the somewhat anomalous position of moving the reduction of a Vote for fortifications, in the construction of which he had himself been engaged, he wished briefly to explain his view. The object to be attained by fortifications was two-fold—first, strategical positions for the defence of the country; and, secondly, the protection of our dockyards from bombardment or attack by sea. It had been said that forts were useless unless they were continuous; but that was not the case, because no general dared to leave a fort in his rear without detaching a force to watch it; but the question of the Spithead Forts had always been considered as distinct from the general question of fortifications; first, on account of the enormous cost of mounting guns in such a position; and next, on account of their not being absolutely necessary to the vitality of the dockyard, but only tending to prevent the possibility of a bombardment. Sir John Burgoyne stated that an important distinction was to be drawn between protecting the Portsmouth Dockyard from bombardment, and protecting it against occupation by an enemy. By bombardment the dockyard would suffer injury which might be repaired; whereas its occupation by an enemy would involve total destruction. He (Captain Beaumont) admitted that the anchorage might be made more secure; but he thought that the vessels of the fleet ought to be able to take care of themselves. The position he wanted to make out was this—that the utility of these forts, although considerable, would still be incommensurate with the amount of money proposed to be spent on them. The whole question of fortifications was essentially a matter of economy. The duty of the Engineer officer was to give the greatest amount of defence for the lowest amount of money. With respect to the expense of the fortifications, the original estimate was £8,000,000. The Government proposed a reduction of £500,000. This left £7,500,000;

£6,000,000 had been voted, and they were now asked for £1,500,000. What he proposed was that the two Spithead Forts should be constructed with one tier of guns instead of two. That would effect a reduction of £114,000 on each, or on the two forts in round numbers of £225,000. The circumstances in which those two forts would be completed were somewhat different from what they were when they were designed. The use of torpedoes or marine mines could not be neglected. This made the necessity for establishing the two tiers of guns on the Spithead Forts less apparent than formerly. Supposing they could retrace their steps he doubted whether these forts would be constructed as they had been. He certainly should have voted against them. The wisest course would be to complete them in as economical a way as possible; and if circumstances should arise to make it desirable to complete the forts according to the original design, it would be quite competent hereafter to furnish them with two tiers of guns. His own impression was that the work when completed would be creditable to the War Office; but if the Spithead Forts were now completed as designed, he felt confident in ten years they would be in a somewhat similar position to that in which they now stood. He moved that the sum of £1,510,000 be reduced by £225,000, representing the saving which would be effected by completing the Horse Sand and Noman's Land Forts at Spithead with one tier of guns in place of two.

Amendment proposed, in page 2, line 11, to leave out the words "one million five hundred and ten thousand," in order to insert the words "one million two hundred and eighty-five thousand,"—(Captain Beaumont,)—instead thereof.

MR. CARDWELL said, that the question which the Committee had to consider was which was the wisest and most economical arrangement to make with regard to the forts. He had carefully avoided all controversy upon the general question of fortifications. He had been anxious to prepare a Bill which those who were favourable to fortifications would approve, and which need not be objected to by those who were opposed to fortifications. It was to be borne in mind with regard to these fortifications that four-fifths of the whole expenditure had already been incurred, and that the Committee had determined by a large division to complete the work as economically as possible. If economy consisted in avoiding all expenditure of money, there would be no doubt as to the course to be pursued; but the real question was how to get the largest amount of money's worth for their money. Was it wiser to complete the Spithead Forts according to the original design with two tiers of guns, or to save £225,000 by substituting one for two tiers of guns? He had been desirous in this Bill of saving money wherever he could, and he should not differ from his hon. Friend in attaching great importance to the saving of £225,000. He was, nevertheless, strongly in favour of completing the forts according to the original design. It was natural to attach some weight to authority, and, in the first place, he might appeal to the name of Sir John Burgoyne, not as an individual, but as a member of the Defence Committee. He could appeal also to the Fortifications Committee, presided over by a distinguished sailor, Sir Frederick Grey. In 1867, when the late Government were in Office, the Fortifications Committee considered the question whether the plan of giving the Portsmouth forts two tiers of guns should be abandoned and one tier substituted. They came to the conclusion that in the case of three of the forts one tier should be substituted for two; but in the case of the two principal forts, to which the Motion had reference, they said that, having in view the great importance of the position as commanding the entrance to the Channel, they were unable to agree to this change in the original design. The inquiry did not end there. The late Government thought it right to consider whether it was not desirable to retain two tiers on the deep-sea side, and to have only one on the shoal side. The combined Committees examined this proposal also. Still, looking to the great importance of the position, they determined that it was not desirable to effect that reduction, and they gave what appeared to him to be strong and adequate reasons why it was desirable to retain two tiers all round—both on the shoal side and the deep-sea side. His hon. Friend had himself pointed out that, if these forts were made as they were designed, they would not only deny the entrance to an assailing force, but would prevent the bombardment of the great naval arsenal, secure an anchorage for the Navy, and a refuge for merchant shipping. These were very great advantages. His hon. Friend said they might leave the Navy to take care of itself. He had no doubt it would take care of itself, but they wanted to take care not of the Navy, but of that great arsenal, the mother of the Navy. It had been truly said that the place of our naval force in time of war was not on our own coast, but off the enemy's coast, and no one would expect the British Navy to be lying at Spithead in the time of the country's greatest need. But after a gallant and even a victorious encounter in the Channel some vessels might be disabled, and obliged to go back to Portsmouth to re-fit, and a safe anchorage would be invaluable to them. His hon. and gallant Friend had spoken of two or three shells being thrown on Portsmouth Dockyard. But did any one suppose that all this expense had been incurred to prevent the throwing of two or three shells? Portsmouth was our principal dockyard, now in course of being very greatly extended, and the object of this expenditure was to deny an entrance to a hostile fleet. It was proposed to authorize an expenditure of £648,000, which would bring up the total amount to £1,056,000. From this his hon. Friend proposed to deduct £225,000. But for this reduction of one-fifth of the whole expense of defending Spithead they would lose one-half of the total power of preventing an enemy from bringing his force to bear in a hostile attack. The question did not end there. The anchorage at Portsmouth had not one, but two entrances. They had incurred a large expenditure in arming the entrance at the Needles, and this sum of £225,000 would be very little more than one-tenth of the whole expenditure at Portsmouth, which was between £1,800,000 and £1,900,000. The entrance by the Needles had been effectually barred, and if the anchorage of Spithead were also made safe they would practically render an attack impossible. He would ask, then, whether it was economical after having spent nine-tenths of the sums required, for the sake of saving one-tenth, to leave one entrance still open to a gallant enemy? To illustrate it in another way. With two tiers of guns on these forts there would be ten guns bearing on each hostile ship as it approached, and the shot of the higher tier descending on the deck would be more destructive than the guns of the lower tier, seeing that the deck of a vessel was not plated with iron of the same thickness as the sides. For each of the guns of the two tiers they would have to pay £8,663 at one of the forts, and £9,438 at the other, whereas if they had only one tier, and if they divided the cost of the foundation and the construction of the fort among the smaller number of guns, they would have to pay £12,500 in one case and £14,062 in the other. True economy then would direct that the forts should be finished upon the plan originally contemplated. The hon. and gallant Gentleman had stated that these forts were to be assisted by torpedoes. The hon. and gallant Member could not attach more importance than he did to those wonderful inventions, which, he agreed, would play a very important part in the future defence of our harbours. There were, however, two classes of torpedoes—the first were mechanical and denied the channel not only to our enemies but to ourselves also; while the second were electric, and denied the channel to our enemies alone, leaving free access to ourselves. It was necessary, however, in using the latter that they should be protected by forts. The hon. and gallant Member further said that if we were to build the forts with only one tier of guns at first, we could add the second tier, if necessary, at any future time; but when the Committee were recommended to adopt that course on the ground of economy, they would first have to calculate the difference between the cost of completing the forts at once and re-commencing the works at some future time, and judge whether it would be worth while for the sake of a small temporary saving to connect ourselves to a greatly increased expenditure at some future time. He did not intend to enter into the controversy with reference to the necessity of the fortifications at all, but would content himself with referring the Committee to the report of the distinguished engineer Colonel Brialmont of the Belgian Army, speaking in the highest terms of the professional ability which had been displayed in the construction of these forts, and to the Report of the Committee recently laid before the House. Under these circumstances, he trusted the Committee would support the Bill as it stood, and would reject the Amendment of the hon. and gallant Member.

MR. MUNTZ said, the right hon. Gentleman had failed to convince him of the utility of completing these forts on the original model. Sometime after the fortifications were commenced, and the necessity arose for more money, the ad misericordiam plea was advanced that as so great an undertaking had been commenced it ought to be finished. Believing there was some justice in the plea he voted for going on with the works; but as there was now a definite proposal to reduce the outlay by £225,000, merely by substituting one tier for two tiers, he thought it should be taken advantage of, as it was both wise and economical. He contended that to expend such a vast sum of money as was intended upon these forts was very impolitic, and that for a very simple reason. He quite admitted the value of the forts as a protection for our arsenals, but the science of artillery was in a state of rapid transition. Year after year important improvements were being effected in the manufacture of guns; and those which were last produced entirely superseded those which were made immediately before. It was, therefore, not a very outrageous thing to believe that in the course even of a short time such further improvements would be effected as would render these forts altogether useless. This reason alone was sufficient to make him support the Amendment.

Question put, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes 82; Noes 73: Majority 9.

Clause agreed to.

Remaining clauses agreed to.

On Question, "That this be the Schedule to the Bill,"

SIR DAVID WEDDERBURN asked whether the iron shields, for fixing which a sum of £190,000 was proposed to be taken, were to be employed solely for sea defence or partly for land defence; and whether any of them were to be used in connection with the Moncrieff gun?

MR. CARDWELL said, that in the statement which he had caused to be circulated it was set forth that for the purposes of retrenchment the shields would be confined to the outer sea defences. Where the Moncrieff gun was used there was no necessity for shields at all.

House resumed.

Bill reported, without Amendment; to be read the third time To-morrow.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Order for Committee read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHARITIES.

MOTION FOR RETURNS.

MR. NEWDEGATE:* Mr. Speaker, I wish at the onset, in reference to the Notice which stands in my name on the Paper, to call your attention to the fact that I propose to limit the term over which the Return I ask for should extend, in such a manner as I hope will facilitate the production of part, at all events, of the information of which I think it desirable that the House should be in possession. The Motion in its present shape is for—

> "An Address for Return showing the number of Deeds or Instruments enrolled in the High Court of Chancery under the Act 23 & 24 Vic. c. 134, being an Act to amend the Law regarding the Roman Catholic Charities, and under any subsequent Act relating to or enlarging or extending the said Act, giving the names of the Trustees; the date of their execution of such deeds or instruments; and a summary or short description, together with the number of acres, of the property to which such deeds or instruments relate."

And I desire, Sir, to alter this Notice by inserting the words "during the last three years" after the word "enrolled," in the second line, and trust that you will make this insertion before you propose the Notice from the Chair. The House will be glad to know whether the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary will consent to the production of this information, since I have not received any answer to a communication which I have addressed to him? In anticipation, however, of the right hon. Gentleman's reply, I beg to explain to the House that early in the present Session, on the 26th of February last, I moved for a Committee of this House to inquire into the operation of the Roman Catholic Charities Act of 1860, and also into the Burials Registration Act of 1864. I acted, Sir, in conjunction with Sir Charles Selwyn and Sir William Bovill, when Members of this House, in their support of the late Sir George Cornewall Lewis, who promoted the passing of the former of these statutes in 1860, and on the 26th of February last I made a statement with regard to the Roman Catholic Charities Act. The purport of that statement I will repeat as briefly as possible. In the year 1853, after an inquiry as to the Roman Catholic charitable property had been instituted by a Committee of this House, which extended through the Sessions of 1851 and 1852, the Government of that day determined upon introducing a Bill for the better regulation of charities generally by providing for their proper registration, with a view to prevent those great abuses the existence of which had been known to Parliament ever since the year 1818, when the late Lord Brougham moved for a Committee, which still bears his name, and thus broke the ice for future legislation on the subject. Notwithstanding Lord Brougham's exertions, however, it was not until the year 1835 that there was any serious prospect of legislation; and then an Act was contemplated to empower Commissioners to inquire concerning the state of charities generally. The difficulty which the Act of 1860 was intended to remove then first appeared. In the year 1835 the Roman Catholic Members of this House objected to the inquiry proposed to be made by the Commissioners then to be appointed by statute, because they feared the discovery of certain violations of the Act against superstitious uses in the conditions upon which part of the property connected with their religion was held; and in consequence of their remonstances no powers of inquiry with respect to Roman Catholic charity property were intrusted to the Commissioners who were appointed in the year 1835. I think I cannot do better, Sir, than quote a few words from the speech of Lord Chelmsford, then Sir Frederick Thesiger, in the year 1853, in order to show to the House in the tersest manner possible how the Legislature arrived at a similar determination with respect to the statute of that year. On the 4th of August Sir Frederick Thesiger said—

> "He wished to remind the noble Lord of the Bills which had been introduced from 1844 downward, for the purpose of establishing a Board for the administration of charitable trusts. In 1844, 1845, 1846, Bills were introduced in the House of Lords by Lord Lyndhurst. In 1847, 1848, 1849, and 1850, Bills were introduced under the Government of the noble Lord by the late Lord Cottenham. In 1852 another Bill was introduced by the noble Lord and his Government, which Bill was taken up by Lord Derby's Government, who endeavoured to pass it into a law. Now, he would ask the noble Lord if any of these Bills contained any exemptions respecting Roman Catholic trusts? If these Bills never contemplated such exemptions, surely that was an argument more forcible than any which the noble Lord had drawn from the exemptions in the Acts passed, not for the purposes of legislation, but merely for the establishment of preliminary inquiries."—[3 Hansard, cxxix. 1256.]

That, Sir, was said by Sir Frederick Thesiger, in remonstrance against the exemption of the Roman Catholic charity property from the general Act of 1853, proposed by Lord John Russell. Whilst speaking on that occasion, Sir Frederick Thesiger adverted to this circumstance—

> "An hon. and learned Gentleman (Mr. Chisholm Anstey), formerly a Member of that House, who, in 1847, proposed to introduce a Bill for the regulation of Roman Catholic Trusts—on that occasion the hon. and learned Member said—'The trustees of the Roman Catholic charities may be guilty of any amount of maladministration without the Roman Catholics—for whose benefit the trust was created—daring to ask relief, because the issue of an application with that object may be a declaration that the charity was ab initio illegal, and continued illegal." '—[Ibid. 1258.]

These were the words of Mr. Chisholm Anstey, who in 1847 introduced a Bill intended to obviate this difficulty. Lord Russell stated, in answer to Sir Frederick Thesiger, as his apology for excluding Roman Catholic charity property from the general Act of 1853, that, after the Bill had been read a second time, Roman Catholic Members came to him and urged that it was positively necessary that their charities should be exempted, on the same ground that their exemption was claimed in 1835. Thus, in 1853, the Roman Catholic Members distinctly claimed separate legislation with respect to their charitable trusts, and although the House showed great unwillingness to comply with their wishes, and the granting of the proposal was carried by a majority of 11 only, still, for seven years after that date, nothing was done with respect to the Roman Catholic charities, notwithstanding that we had it upon the authority of a Roman Catholic lawyer in this House that very gross abuses existed in the administration of these charities; that fact, Sir, was proved before the Select Committee of 1851 and 1852 on evidence which was perfectly unimpeachable, the evidence of Roman Catholic priests and others, who complained that they had been deprived of their interest in, had been defeated in objects for which they had acquired property, and devoted it to Roman Catholic charitable uses, by the authority from Rome, by the exercise of influences which they deprecated, and by means which the law ought to have stayed, but which it could not reach, for the simple reason that there was no statute applying to the peculiar circumstances of Roman Catholic charity property in this country. Well, in the year 1860, as I have already stated, the two learned Members of this House whose names I have mentioned, with myself, agreed to tender our support for this purpose to Sir George Lewis, and the Act passed, with the high approval of Lord Campbell, which he expressed first to myself and afterwards in the House of Lords. Unfortunately, the then Attorney General, Sir Richard Bethell—since Lord Westbury—had introduced a clause into that Bill which, from the first, Sir Charles Selwyn warned the House would have the effect of defeating the whole object of the enactment, which was valid enrolment. I allude to the 5th clause. I will not go into its details further than to say that I am a competent witness to the fact, that the liberal intention of the House was to validate all trusts for Roman Catholic uses, which had been held for that purpose for twenty years, without inquiring at all as to whether the titles were invalidated under Lord Hardwicke's Act by any malpractices or by any circumstances whatever; but there was no intention on the part of the House to give that which was intended to be a retrospective provision a prospective effect. I understand, however, that this clause has been so construed that if any person chooses to place in the hands of any Roman Catholic trustees property for charitable uses, and that arrangement remains unquestioned for twenty years from the time of the gift; that after the expiration of the twenty years, according to this statute, there is no need for the enrolment of the uses of the property. It is only natural, therefore, to suppose that, through such a loop-hole as this, evasions of the necessity to specify the uses of the property are perpetually taking place. I am not, Sir, speaking on merely speculative grounds as to the difficulties which these ineffective non-enrolments produce among various classes of the community. One of the difficulties which have come to my knowledge concerns the tenant of a farm. He could not ascertain who the owners—that is, the trustees—really were. He had always paid his rent to an agent, but when he sought to discover the real owners, the trustee, or trustees, he found that he had no means whatever of doing so. Sir, the whole purport of this statute of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 134, is to provide facilities for enrolment, and that a correct description of the property and the uses, with the names of the trustees who really hold it, shall be entered in the Rolls Court — that is, the Court of Chancery. Well, what happened? This happened. This Act, I am sorry to say, is so defective — and the ingenuity of some lawyer, I suppose, has discovered its defects—that it does not provide for the registration of the names of any but the first trustees. These may resign the very next week after they are appointed, appointing new trustees, and the new trustees need not be registered. The original trustees may all resign but one, and he may be a Roman Catholic ecclesiastic. And what chance of recovery would there be in an action on behalf of the unhappy tenant of some farm or an heir-at-law against a Roman Catholic ecclesiastic, who is sworn to poverty? Why, none at all. I would not have intruded upon the House had I not the support of the opinion of persons most competent to give information upon the subject; and, even at the risk of wearying the House, perhaps I may be allowed to read an extract from a letter which was intended for my instruction, and which is written by an eminent lawyer, now practising in London. I wish I had time to obtain his leave to give his name; but as I have not the House will forgive me if I read his letter to the House without mentioning the name of the writer. He writes in these terms—

> "The law of England leans very strongly against dispositions by which land is tied up so as to be rendered inalienable. Hence the rule against perpetuities, which prohibits the settlement of real estates for any greater period than a life, or lives in being, and twenty-one years afterwards.

Thus, a gift to A for life, and after his death to his unborn son for life, and after the death of such son to his eldest son—the latter limitation is void. The Legislature has, at all periods since the Reformation, set its face against alienations in mortmain, and whenever a corporate body has been authorized to purchase or take land the quantity has been restricted. Thus, to pass over numerous other instances — By the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 38, being 'An Act for further Facilitating the Acquisition of Sites for Schools,' no more than one acre could be acquired for that purpose, though this was afterwards extended by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 24, and the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 50, by the powers of which a gift might be made of one acre to each ecclesiastical district of one parish, and by the latter of which the quantity was enlarged from one to two acres. By the Literary and Scientific Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 112) one acre of land only can be acquired by gift or purchase for sites. And by the Companies' Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), no company formed for the purpose of promoting art, science, religion, charity, or any other like object, not involving the acquisition of gain, is allowed to hold more than two acres of land without the sanction of the Board of Trade. The Roman Catholic Charities Act, 1860, loses sight of these principles of our law and legislation, and without inquiry, has made valid large and unascertained dispositions of land in mortmain, much of which was vested in unknown persons upon secret trusts created by parole, and has even given effect to dispositions of land actually void in law (being given for superstitious uses), by declaring that such dispositions shall be held upon such of the trusts of the charity as are valid in law. The quantity of land now held in mortmain by the Roman Catholic Church can only be known by a searching inquiry into the number of deeds enrolled under the Act of 1860, which there is every reason to believe, from the enrolments which have taken place, and particularly during the first year after the passing of the Act, is of considerable amount. It is true that enrolment is necessary to give validity to deeds of trust; but this affords no security against the acquisition of land by Roman Catholic institutions, through the medium of trustees, for the benefit of monasteries, convents, &c., the deeds relating to which are never registered, the trusts upon which they are held being secret. The trustees, it is true, may die, but upon the death of each of these another person is chosen in his place, so that ultimately the property is dealt with and governed by persons who have not, and care not to have, the legal estate vested in them.'"

Then comes the point to which I have also adverted—

"They can lease and let, as owners, and there is no one to dispute their title; but even if upon the death of the trustees, or any of them, a conveyance were made to any new and surviving trustees, or to the new trustees only, as the case might be, no enrolment of any such deed is necessary, as has been decided in the case of 'Ashton v. Jones,' 28 Beaver's Reports, 460, nor would any lease to be granted by the trustees for the time being require enrolment."

It is singular that such was the laxity of the law far back in mediæval times, and that it should have occurred again in our days.

"'—— v. Glyn,' 12 Simon's Rep., 84 (a case in equity), and 'Walker v. Richardson,' 2 Meeson and Wilsby, 882 (a case at law). The fiscal aspect of the subject is of no little importance as regards the welfare of the country. Lands acquired in mortmain, whether under deeds enrolled or by secret means, are taken out of the market for ever; they cease to be the subject of conveyance, mortgage, settlement, and testamentary disposition, and thus the revenues of the country are and will be continually lessened. Moreover, it must be borne in mind that after the first payment of £10 per cent under the Succession Duty Act, in the case of gifts to charitable uses, there will be no further duty payable; so that, in respect of the several duties before referred to, the land may be said to be abstracted from the country."

Now, Sir, I can vouch for that being the opinion of about as competent a lawyer as could be consulted on the subject; and I am prepared to show, from circumstances that are daily occurring, that the law of mortmain, which is held in force against all other denominations, and against scientific and other societies, is almost totally evaded through the defects in the provisions of this Statute, defects which have been remedied in the Bequests Act applying to Ireland, under which Roman Catholic charity property is held in that part of the United Kingdom; and in this statute defects somewhat similar to those I am describing have been provided against by a subsequent enactment for the improvement of that statute. One object, then, which I have in view, by moving for this Return is to show that we have this Act of 1860 nominally applicable to the whole of the Roman Catholic charity property in this country; but that the provisions of that Act are so defective that there is not sufficient enrolment to enable a tenant who has held a farm on lease, when he comes to the end of the term, and has a claim against the owner to discover an owner, a trustee, against and from whom he would have a fair chance of recovering—the fact being that he has only known the agent. That is a case in point; and, with the permission of the House, I will now proceed to show that there are very large masses of property annually devoted to these purposes. When I had the honour of addressing the House on the 26th of February last, I called to the recollection of hon. Members the case of Mr. Hutchinson, who died at the Oratory at Brompton, and at whose death a sum of £40,000 passed to

Father Faber, the head of that establishment. That was proved before the courts of law, and it was held that Father Faber was personally as an individual entitled to the money; but it was mistakenly held that he did not take the benefaction or bequest on the part of the community. It is a very singular circumstance that the Oratorians declared that they did not hold their property in common; and that declaration has been accepted by the courts in England. A similar declaration was also tendered to the Italian courts, and at first accepted by those courts; but the Italian courts have finally decided that the plea of non-community of property is invalid in the case of this very Order, on account of the discipline and arrangements of the Order, although no actual vow of community is exacted from the members of the Order; but that such is the discipline that their property is practically held in common. In the sense, then, of the decision of the Italian courts, therefore, £40,000 went in that case to the Order of the Oratorians. I also recited to the House the case of Miss Thompson, who, after she had become a nun, left property to two learned gentlemen, who are well known in our courts, for Roman Catholic uses. In that case the learned Master of the Rolls decided that the bequest was made under duresse and was, therefore, invalid, and so £40,000 escaped from being devoted to Roman Catholic uses on account of the discovery being made that duresse had been exercised on the testatrix. I have also here the particulars of a case which has recently occurred, and for the accuracy of which I can vouch. This letter has been addressed to me. I know the writer of it well, and I can vouch for his accuracy. He says—

> "Allow me to give you one single case which has come within my own personal knowledge. A friend of mine one day lately said to an old man who had become a pervert—'Surely you are to leave your property to some national object. I know you have no near relatives, and I know your peculiar religious views; but surely you might find some national object which your wealth would advance—our country needs it. For example, the endowment of some chair in our University.'" (He was a Scotchman.) "'No, no!' was the answer, 'I find that my property at one time belonged to the Church of Rome; my priest tells me it is only right I should be an honest man and return all the property to the Church; hence, after my death, it shall go to the Church.' I was curious to know how the property had been disposed of. The old gentleman died, and I am told the property was sold on behalf of the Church of Rome, and was purchased for £200,000. This is in poor Scotland. What, therefore, must be the amount of property fast accumulating in wealthy England?"

As I can vouch for the accuracy of this statement, I think it would be needless to read long calculations—as I did in my speech of the 26th of February—in order to show, from the vast increase which has taken place in Roman Catholic institutions, particularly convents and monasteries, that large masses of property have been accumulated, and are accumulating for their support. Lest, however, it should be said that I have slurred over this part of my case, I will adduce the authority of the late Cardinal Wiseman, and no one will dispute the account which he gave at Malines as probably containing something like the truth with respect to the increase of these Roman Catholic institutions. The Cardinal said—

> "Allow me now to present to you, by means of statistics, a rapid view of the effect produced by these different measures. The Census gives the population in England — for the year 1831, 13,896,797; for 1841, 15,914,178; for 1851, 17,927,609; for 1861, 20,906,224; an increase of about 2,000,000 in each decennial period. From 1831 to 1841, the population, therefore, increased 14 per cent. In the same period the number of priests increased about 25 per cent, or nearly double. During the following ten years the population increased 13 per cent, the number of priests 45 per cent. Lastly, from 1851 to 1861, while the population increased 12 per cent, the number of priests increased about 37 per cent. Here, again, are the precise statistics which will allow you to judge of the continued increase of the Roman Catholic Church in England. In 1830 we numbered but 434 priests for the whole of England. At present we have 1,242, that is to say, three times as many. The number of our churches, which was 410, has now increased to 872; from 16 convents which we possessed in 1830 in the United Kingdom, we have now, in 1863, 162. Lastly, in 1830, we had not a single religious house of men, in 1850 there were 11, and to day their number is 55."

Such is the account which was given by Cardinal Wiseman in 1864, and he, I suppose, must be held an unimpeachable authority; but I have some other statistics here, which are taken from Roman Catholic sources, the accuracy of which I have no reason to doubt. These represent that—

> "The increase of Roman Catholic institutions has recently been very great. In 1829 there were no monasteries nor convents publicly announced, and there were but 447 priests, and 449 chapels and stations. In 1841 there were 1 monastery, 16 convents, and 9 colleges. In 1851 there were 17 monasteries and 53 convents. In the present year there are in England and Wales, 1,122 churches, chapels, and stations, 18 convents, and 67 communities of men, altogether illegal, with inmates probably amounting to 3,000 males and 13,000 females. In connection with such institutions, real or personal property to a very large amount is, no doubt, fast accumulating, as well as for masses for the dead and other superstitious uses of the Romish religion. If each inmate of a convent bring a dowry of, say, £250, this would amount above to upwards of £3,000,000."

I cannot give the exact amount of this property; but this we know, that it is accumulating very rapidly; that it is, moreover, accumulating in mortmain; and under circumstances as regards the law of mortmain, different from the circumstances which are allowed by the law with respect to the religious or charitable property of any other community. The history of this country, as well as of others, tells us of the dangers which arise to the national welfare from allowing this property to increase to such an extent as this without restriction of any kind—such restrictions as are in force with respect to the property of every other denomination against its increase in mortmain—that, as this description of property is not subject to the same laws as similar property, affords, at least, an argument that exceptional facilities ought not to be afforded to one particular communion such as are granted to no others. Because the history of this country proves—the history of almost every country in Europe proves, that it is the policy of the Church of Rome to acquire an amount of property altogether inconsistent with the welfare of the States in which it obtains influence. I can assure the House that the opinion I have read to it is one among many which I could produce if necessary in order to show that the operation of the Act of 1860, instead of tending to ensure due enrolment and publicity—instead of giving the same securities to those who may deem themselves interested in or entitled to property left for religious uses, whether as heirs, tenants, or otherwise, for the discovery of the real owner, as are afforded by the statutes which are in force in Ireland. Under the Bequests Act and the Act amending the Bequests Act, the enrolment is complete and effective; but under the statute of 1860 it is so imperfect that, to my certain knowledge, without great expense, no one can obtain the information which is often necessary for the regulation of property. I almost fear that I shall be told by the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary that the objection to the Return for which I shall move is that the register of the Rolls Court is in such a state that it would take years to separate the property held under this Act of 1860—an Act distinct and separate, made to differ from the general law at the desire and by the will of the representatives of the Roman Catholics in this House, who insisted upon this separate and exceptional legislation. All that I want to obtain by means of this Motion, is, that the same information as regards the three last years should be afforded as to the accumulation, disposition, and ownership of this Roman Catholic Trust property in England as is furnished in Ireland through the medium of the Commissioners appointed under the Bequests Act. I can assure the House that I am not the author or originator of this request. I have the highest legal authority for assuring the House that this information would be most valuable for the purpose of securing many families and many persons from the effects of maladministration and of uncertainty of ownership with regard to this property. It was, in fact, admitted when the Act passed, that there was a necessity for legislation, which arose from want of adequate information as to the actual ownership by trustees. It was in consequence of this belief that the Legislature passed the statute of 1860. The information for which I now apply will, if produced, test my accuracy and that of my informants when I declare my belief that the object of that measure—the due enrolment of trustees and easy discovery of the property held in trust—has been defeated, and in a great degree through the defects in the statute itself, some of which I well remember hearing Sir Charles Selwyn from that Bench in 1860 describe by anticipation and strongly deprecate whilst the Bill was being debated in this House. I beg, therefore, Sir, to propose the Motion which is now in your hands, with the insertion in the second line, after the word "enrolled," of the words "during the last three years."

Mr. DIMSDALE seconded the Motion.

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "there be laid before this House, a Return showing the number of Deeds or Instruments enrolled during the last three years in the High Court of Chancery under the Act 23 and 24 Vic. c. 134, being an Act to amend the Law regarding the Roman Catholic Charities, and under any subsequent Act relating to or enlarging or extending the said Act, giving the names of the Trustees; the date of their execution of such deeds or instruments; and a summary or short description, together with the number of acres, of the property to which such deeds or instruments relate,"—(Mr. Newdegate,)

—instead thereof.

MR. BRUCE said, the hon. Gentleman had correctly supposed that he intended to oppose the Motion, on the ground that the time which it would take to prepare the Return for which he asked was incommensurate with the value of the Return. He held in his hands a letter from the Secretary to the Master of the Rolls, who informed him that the Return could not be made out without great inconvenience and delay to the Public Business, and that it would occupy the clerks in the Public Record Office two years to get it ready, or, as the Motion was now limited to three years, he might perhaps put it at eight months, or one-third of that period. But, apart from that, he objected altogether to the Motion, because there was, in his opinion, no sufficient ground for making the bequests of Roman Catholics the subjects of special inquiry. The law of England, however different it might be from the law in Ireland, was the same with respect to devises in mortmain made by Protestants and Roman Catholics. His hon. Friend had mixed up with the question a great many others in a most invidious manner. He had cited the cases of bequests to which the Return for which he moved did not at all apply—bequests of money, such, for instance, as that of Mr. Hutchinson, of which no enrolment was required by law. The hon. Gentleman must be well aware that all devises made secretly were not enrolled at all, and that the inquiry would throw no light on such bequests, which might be set aside at any time. The House had here to deal with deeds enrolled under the sanction of the Act of Parliament. For upwards of three centuries the Roman Catholics had been exposed to disadvantages far greater than those which attended the operations of any other religious sect. Their funds were not protected by the law, and every obstacle was placed in the way of their promoting and maintaining their religion. Of late years, however, they had been put on a footing of equality with other sects, and the complaint of his hon. Friend was that they had availed themselves of the liberty which had been accorded to them. Being a good Protestant himself, and believing that his religion was the best, he (Mr. Bruce), of course, wished that all persons were of his way of thinking; but people would hold their own theological opinions, and every good citizen must wish that every religion should experience just and equal treatment, and develop itself in its own natural course. The Roman Catholics had, it was true, made great efforts of late years. No part of the population was formerly so neglected as the Roman Catholics. While in Ireland crime was not more prevalent, but rather less so than in England, the proportion of crime committed by the Irish in this country was four or five times as great as that committed by the English population. This was owing to the circumstance of the Irish population being more exposed to temptation and less carefully looked after than the English were. The efforts of the Roman Catholic gentry and priesthood had for many years past, and especially of late years, been directed to the removal of this evil, and he had no doubt that considerable endowments had been made by them, some legally and some perhaps illegally, for the purpose of improving the religious and moral condition of their poor Roman Catholic brethren. Those efforts, so far as they were legal, all liberal-minded men ought to applaud, and what ground had the hon. Gentleman for endeavouring to cast this slur on the Roman Catholics? His hon. Friend had shown, or, at least, attempted to show, that our legislation in respect of enrolments of deeds in England was less perfect than that in regard to Ireland. Possibly this might be the case; but, if so, the way to remedy the evil was to introduce a Bill to assimilate the English law on the subject with that of Ireland. He hoped, however, that the House would never consent to put the Roman Catholic and Protestant endowments on a different footing. Good reasons might perhaps be adduced in favour of assimilating the laws of the two countries; but, in the meantime, he objected to the Motion of his hon. Friend, on account, not only of the vast amount of unnecessary labour which it would entail, but also, and chiefly, on account of the injustice it would inflict on our Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen.

MR. HENLEY said, that the right hon. Gentleman had said, with considerable truth, that there was no reason for dealing specially with any particular class of persons, but he would ask whether, by refusing his assent to this Motion, the right hon. Gentleman was not dealing specially with one particular class of persons? Almost weekly there was now placed in the hands of hon. Members a thick book which dealt with all the charities in England county by county. This was done in pursuance of a recent statute, which conferred the power of dealing with those charities. He thought it was therefore only a fair question to ask why the charities of one particular class of persons were to be exempted from the scrutiny required by the Act? The right hon. Gentleman had stated no reason for that exemption. He did not know what was going to be done with these charities. Large powers had been taken under the Act of this Session, and, in his opinion, we ought to have the means of seeing at a glance an account of all the charities in the kingdom, whether they belonged to the Established Church or other denominations. To this proposition, it appeared to him, the right hon. Gentleman had not addressed himself. Speaking from information given by the Master of the Rolls, the right hon. Gentleman said there were difficulties in the way of making out the Return asked for by his hon. Friend. But, admitting this, it was, in his opinion, the duty of the Government to overcome these difficulties. It was neither fair nor just that the charities connected with one particular form of religion should be exempted from the scrutiny to which all other charities were submitted. If the enrolment under the Act of 1860 were so defective that the required Return could not be made, the Government ought to have the matter looked into and set right.

MR. SHERLOCK said, the right hon. Gentleman who last addressed the House had argued the question on very different grounds from the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. Newdegate). The hon. Member had urged that this Return was necessary, because certain tenants did not know who their landlords were. Now, it appeared to him that the enrolment of these deeds under which the property was conveyed to trustees afforded to the world at large, and to the tenantry in particular, rather more information than was ordinarily imparted when property was privately conveyed from one party to another by deeds which were not registered. The Return asked for by the hon. Member would not give the tenants one particle more of information than they might obtain by looking at the enrolments. It might be right that a Return should be made of all Roman Catholic charities, with their amount and application, but this Return would give no such information, although it would involve an immense deal of trouble in its preparation.

MR. G. GREGORY said, he hoped the speech of the hon. Member who had just resumed his seat might be taken as an admission that the charities of the Roman Catholics ought not to be made the subject of exceptional legislation, but ought to be subjected to the same publicity and inquiry as those of other denominations. It could not be said that the Roman Catholics laboured under any disabilities now, as they were in all respects on the same footing as other denominations, and all their endowments, gifts, and donations were under the same laws. He had been surprised to hear the Secretary of State for the Home Department say that large endowments had been made by the Roman Catholics for the maintenance and propagation of their religion, and that, though some were legal and some illegal, still all liberal-minded men should be disposed to protect them.

MR. BRUCE explained that he had made that statement on the authority of the hon. Gentleman who brought forward the Motion. He knew nothing of it himself. His statement had entire reference to the present Motion, which dealt with nothing except deeds regularly and legally enrolled. He had charged the hon. Gentleman with mixing up with this subject other matters which had no reference to it.

MR. G. GREGORY, in conclusion said, he rejoiced to hear from the hon. Member for King's County (Mr. Sherlock) an admission that the charities of all religious faiths ought in that matter to be put on the same footing.

MR. SINCLAIR AYTOUN said, he thought the grounds alleged by the Secretary of State for the Home Department for declining to accede to that Motion were calculated to induce the House to vote for it. That right hon. Gentleman refused them information on a very important point, although, as far as he had observed, it was a most unusual thing for the Government to refuse the House and the country the means of acquiring information through a Return on any matter which was of national importance. The hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. Newdegate) had shown very conclusively that it was very desirable that the Return now in question should be produced. And what were the Home Secretary's reasons for withholding it? The right hon. Gentleman had accused the hon. Member for North Warwickshire, in asking for that statistical information, of casting a slur on the Roman Catholics. If to move for Returns was held to be casting a slur on the body of persons to whom those Returns referred, there would be an end to all inquiry on public matters. Then the right hon. Gentleman said the Irish Roman Catholics who came to this country committed four times as much crime as the same number of persons not belonging to that nationality; but that was a most extraordinary argument for opposing the Motion. The Home Secretary also stated that there was great need for improving the lower order of Roman Catholics in this country, and that gentlemen holding that religious belief had very naturally and commendably devoted a portion of their property to that purpose. No Protestant denied their right to do so, nor by asking for information on that subject did any man throw any imputation on the members of that communion. The right hon. Gentleman further urged that the Return could not be given because the Secretary to the Rolls Office told him it would take a long time to give it. Were they never, then, to get any information when its production would cause trouble to officials? In reading the Guide to the Civil Service he was astonished to find how little time the members of that service devoted to the public advantage. He did not know whether it was so in the Rolls Office, but those gentlemen, it seemed, went to work about ten o'clock and left at four, and between those hours they generally spent an hour at lunch, and another hour in reading The Times. Again, if the right hon. Gentleman was correct in saying that it would require two years to make out this Return, what an enormous amount of property of that description there must be. The documents relating to that property ought to be so arranged in the Rolls Office that information respecting it could be readily furnished whenever it was called for. If the hon. Member for North Warwickshire divided the House, he would certainly go into the same Lobby with him.

LORD JOHN MANNERS said, he could not quite agree with his hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. Newdegate) as to the value of the Mortmain Act. But that was not the question they had then to consider. The speeches which had been delivered against the Motion presented to his mind no good reason why it should not be adopted. The hon. Member for King's County (Mr. Sherlock) objected to the Motion because it did not go far enough, and would not give them all the information that was desired; but there was no reason why, after having got that Return, they should not move for further details in reference to the same subject. The right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for the Home Department told them that within the last few years the Roman Catholic gentry of this country had devoted much of their time and wealth to the promotion of the moral and religious welfare of the poorer members of their Church. Now, that was an excellent and admirable work, and those gentlemen deserved the greatest credit for having engaged in it. But then the right hon. Gentleman said that to institute an inquiry into what had thus been done would be casting a slur upon those labours. That was one of the most extraordinary arguments he (Lord John Manners) had ever heard. He could easily understood that those gentlemen should be unwilling to publish their good deeds, but he was at a loss to imagine how they could be injured or insulted if a public investigation were to be instituted into the subject. He had to state, therefore, that unless he should hear some better arguments against the Motion than those advanced by the right hon. Gentleman, he should feel bound to vote in its favour.

Mr. HINDE PALMER said, the House ought not to assume, from the fact that the making out of that Return would involve great labour, that therefore there was a very large amount of property dedicated to Roman Catholic charities. The difficulty in making out the Return arose from the circumstance that these enrolments were enrolments made indiscriminately in regard to all charities, Protestant as well as Roman Catholic, and not merely in regard to all kinds of charities, but also all enrolled patents and enrolled deeds. Therefore, when a Return as to Roman Catholic charities was asked for, of course there was the difficulty to be encountered of selecting the information required from the vast mass of other enrolments which had nothing to do with Roman Catholic charities, or even with any charities whatever. Moreover, what the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Newdegate) wanted to arrive at would not be obtained by any Return of that description, because the hon. Member himself alleged—and no doubt with truth—that there was a large amount of property in this country given to persons under secret trusts for Roman Catholic purposes. There was in this country no record or enrolment of those secret trusts which would afford the hon. Member the information he required. If, therefore, the Government were to grant the Return as moved for, the hon. Member would find it comparatively useless.

Mr. M'LAREN said, it occurred to him that a good deal of explanation was still needed. If Parliament wished to have a Return of all the charities of England and Wales he could not, for the life of him, see why those of one particular sect should be exempted. A short time ago a Bill had been before the House for improving endowed schools, and it was proposed that certain charities should be applied to the purposes of the Bill, many persons believing that those charities were not only useless but pernicious. If that were the fact it was a good reason for ascertaining the amount and particular purposes of those charities, and that had been ascertained; but the Return did not include the charities of a particular body of Christians. If a Return was wanted it should be a Return of the charities belonging to all Her Majesty's subjects, not the charities of Protestants or Catholics, Jews or Gentiles. The hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. Newdegate) now proposed a mode of supplementing the Return, and all that was said against the Motion was that what he wanted would be difficult to get. But that could be said of many other Returns. There were many Returns ordered by the House which were not produced for one or two years, because information was to be obtained, perhaps, from India, the colonies, or other distant places. Suppose this Return were to take two years, that would be no great matter, because there was no measure of legislation waiting for it. It was merely a piece of statistical information required to show the aggregate amount of all the charities of this country. And although the present Motion might not bring out the whole, some other hon. Member might discover a mode of getting at another part of the remainder. He had not a particle of feeling against his Roman Catholic fellow-subjects in this matter, but he thought it desirable that the State should have information of all the charities in the kingdom. Suppose the Prussian Government were to call for a similar Return, would it be thought a good answer from one province that the people there were nearly all Jews, or from another, that they were nearly all Catholics, and so on? The Government would say—"We don't want to know anything about your religion; what we want to know is about your charities." In his opinion the desire of the hon. Gentleman was a reasonable one.

Question put, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

The House divided:—Ayes 58; Noes 50: Majority 8.

COMMUNICATION WITH CHINA.

OBSERVATIONS. QUESTION.

Mr. BAINES said, he rose to draw the attention of the House to Memorials presented from several Chambers of Commerce, recommending the construction of a Railway from Rangoon through British Burmah to Western China. The question might not have attracted a very large amount of public attention, but the interests involved were of vast importance. The object in view was the construction of a cheap route, chiefly through our own territory, from Rangoon, the commercial capital of British Burmah, to the western provinces of China, and thus bringing our manufactures within comparatively easy reach of the 300,000,000 or 400,000,000 of people inhabiting the Chinese Empire. It was superfluous to speak of the civilization, industry, and fertility of China. Suffice it to say that the actual exports and imports of the five treaty ports of China in 1868 was £38,564,880, of which six-sevenths came from England and India and other English possessions; but the whole of this commerce was with the south and eastern seaboard of China; very little went into the interior, and scarcely any part of it reached the remote western provinces, which vied with the eastern in fertility and manufacturing importance. It was true the western provinces of China were mountainous, but they were rich in minerals, besides being extremely fertile, and inhabited by an industrious population. Lord Elgin estimated the population of the six western provinces at something under 100,000,000, and nothing but their geographical position prevented them being our customers to an unlimited amount. In exchange they had to offer us tea, silk, wool, dye wares, and drugs, cereals of all kinds, cattle, and precious metals, all of the utmost value to us either as raw material or manufactures. But the whole country was practically cut off from England from want of easy communication, although it was only some 500 or 600 miles from Rangoon—the distance from London to Inverness, and 300 from the frontier of British Burmah. British territory, indeed, was only 250 miles from Western China, and it was across this narrow strip of land that the Government was asked to facilitate the construction of a railway, so as to bring the two points within a few hours of each other; whilst the sea voyage from Rangoon to Shanghai, round the Malayan peninsula, was 3,000 miles, and could not be traversed by the fastest steamer in less than from two to three weeks. It would be his duty to prove, by good authorities, first that this object was desirable, and second, that it was practicable. Sir Stamford Raffles, who had gained large experience on this subject as Governor of Singapore, said—

> "It is idle to talk of the cheapness and extent of our manufactures unless we carry them into fair competition. There is no reason why all China should not be in a great measure clothed from England, the cold parts as well as the warm."

Colonel M'Leod, who visited Western China and the Burman Shan States, in 1837, with Dr. Richardson, under orders of Governor General of India, said—

> "Many Chinese merchants with caravans continuously pass to and fro through Esmok, trading between China and the Laos country, and the Siamese and Burman Shan States."

The Chinese authorities on the frontier had offered to Colonel M'Leod every facility and encouragement for trade; and the chiefs of the Shan States expressed an ardent desire to cultivate trade and friendly relations with England. Captain Sherard Osborne, another high authority, when writing, in 1860, pointed out the dangers of navigating the Chinese seas, especially in time of war, and strongly recommended opening the land route to Western China. Now that the French had the coast of Cochin China, the injury to our commerce in those seas in times of war would be most disastrous, but with the land route we should have nothing to fear. But the route was shown to be as practicable as desirable. Captain Williams, Engineer and Inspector of Public Works in Burmah, and resident there during ten years, reported, in 1865, as follows:—

> "Of the three routes the direct land route from Rangoon to Kiang Hung is the one which, if feasible, must, owing to its directness, be the best; and there is no doubt, from the same cause, it would be the cheapest to construct."

The Report of Captain Williams, who was afterwards appointed to survey this route, was conclusive in its favour. He said that upwards of 250 miles, a full moiety of the entire line, would be within British territory, and the remaining portion would pass through country occupied by people who were, with their chiefs, well affected towards the British Government, though tributary to the King of Burmah. Captain Watson, another English officer, from personal examination, recommended the same line. From some inexplicable cause, the Indian Government set its face against even a survey of this route. The memorials presented to the Government simply asked for a survey of the country. They did not ask for the construction of a railway, or that any vast expenditure should be incurred, but the memorialists would have been satisfied with a single tramway. At length a man of force of character came to be Secretary of State for India, and the good bold sense of Lord Salisbury decided that a case had been made out for a survey, ordered one, and persisted in his order, notwithstanding the opposition of the Indian Government. Accordingly, in 1867, Captains Williams and Luard made a survey of 245 miles of the route up to the British frontier. Of this they found that 200 miles were good country and 45 miles would be difficult, though not to compare in difficulty with other Indian routes. In the whole 245 miles it was probable that not more than one tunnel would be required. Beyond this there remained only 250 miles to be surveyed, but the Indian Government stopped the survey. The Report of Captains Williams and Luard encouraged the belief that a railway could be made at a small cost compared with the enormous magnitude of the object to be attained, and a cost which the revenue of British Burmah would enable it easily to bear. The work would be beneficial, not only to the manufacturers and merchants of England, but to the merchants of Rangoon and the whole native population. Two towns alone, Rangoon and Moulmein contained populations, the one exceeding and the other approaching 100,000, and each had a splendid commerce. The population of British Burmah had nearly doubled within the last ten years, its revenue had doubled, and its imports and exports had increased from £5,000,000 to £10,000,000. In July, 1868, Colonel, now General, Fytche, Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, who was formerly opposed to the making of the proposed railway, but had since changed his views, wrote a despatch in which he recommended that the survey should be resumed on commercial, political, and scientific grounds, and in deference to the Chambers of Commerce. He further recommended the adoption of the line to Kiang Hung as the shortest and best line of communication with Western China. In competition with this was the Bhamo route, the one on which Captain Sladen had been directed to report. One objection to it was that it was the longer route. While the length of the lower route was only 500 miles, the Bhamo route included a distance of nearly 1,100 miles up the valley of the Irrawaddy, and then a journey across a mountainous country before China was reached. He believed the engineering difficulties of the Bhamo route would be found much greater than those of the lower route, and the political difficulties were immensely greater, obliging Captain Williams to leave Captain Sladen's party and to return. While the lower route was through British territory, the Bhamo route was through Burmah and Chinese territory; and, as far as he could judge, the advantages of the lower route were immense. At length the India Office again changed its policy for the better, and on the 29th April, this year, the Duke of Argyll, in a despatch to the Governor General of India, said—

> "Her Majesty's Government are desirous of promoting any measure which may have the ultimate effect of facilitating intercourse between India and China, with a view to the interchange of mercantile commodities and the development of the resources of the two countries. . . . . The settlement of the present question is regarded with considerable interest by large and important mercantile communities in this country, and I should be glad, therefore, if the proposal now before me, which has the support of Colonel Fytche, Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, could be carried into effect; provided that the necessary operations of the survey can be undertaken without entailing upon your Government any embarrassment or inconvenience in the shape of political complications, and if they should not involve any undue expenditure of the public money."

On behalf of the Chambers of Commerce he would say it was their wish that these conditions should be observed. They did not wish for any extravagant expenditure of public money, nor for foreign annexation, of which there were too many advocates. They wished for peace and friendly commerce; they detested war and annexation, and they recommended the adoption of prudent measures, such as the sending of an embassy to the Court of Burmah. The people of this country had so much need of fresh markets that they had a right to claim that these routes should be surveyed. They were not opposed to the Bhamo route, or any other; but they pressed for a survey of the cheapest and best route. He had simply to impress, in conclusion, upon the Government the importance of not allowing a matter of such great consequence to be any longer delayed. Since this project had first been proposed, we had seen two lines of railway thrown across the Alps,—two lines of submarine telegraph sunk across the bed of the Atlantic,—a railway constructed across the breadth of North America, ascending and descending the Rocky Mountains,—£70,000,000 spent on the railways of India,—the Isthmus of Suez pierced by a ship canal,—and the greatest geographical problem of history solved by the discovery of the sources of the Nile; and yet, whilst these wonderful enterprizes had been effected by ourselves and other nations, our Indian Government refused even to survey a short route on our own frontier, although its accomplishment would be the means of bringing us into communication with a population who would be customers to an incredible extent for the produce of the industry of England. The hon. Gentleman concluded by asking the Under Secretary of State for India, Whether the Survey authorized by the Secretary of State for India, and commenced in 1867, is ordered to be completed, or what is being done for the construction of a Railway or Telegraph through British Burmah to the Western Provinces of China?

MR. SERJEANT SIMON said, he wished strongly to urge on the Government the expediency of constructing the proposed route, which would in all not exceed in length 500 miles, and would in the main lie through our own territory. As things at present stood, we had no other inlets for our commerce with China except the three seaports included in our treaties, and in order to penetrate into the interior of the country we had to travel over thousands of miles through districts presenting considerable difficulties. There was a vast commercial population in the western and south-western provinces of China, which now carried on a large trade with Burmah, and that was the field which he desired to see opened up to English commerce. And what, he would ask, were the objections to the opening of the route? During the Government of Lord Derby Lord Cranborne stated in a letter, which he wrote on the subject, that he considered the case to have been made out for making a survey on behalf of the commerce of this country. On the 8th of December, 1866, however, the Governor General of India wrote a letter, in which he deprecated the expenditure which even a preliminary investigation would involve, stating that he believed it would lead to no satisfactory result. Yielding to the remonstrances of the Governor General of India, the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the India Office (Sir Stafford Northcote) consented to have the survey stopped. The Governor General of India had objected to it on the ground of the financial position of India, and because, in his opinion, it had no object but that of showing what the features of the country were. Now, he ventured to think that was a very important object. All the Chambers of Commerce asked was, that the Government should use the means in its power to afford them information on which they might act hereafter. For some reason or other another survey had been commenced of a line which, instead of being 500 miles, would be 1,250 miles in length, and which for a very great distance would run through the territory of the Sovereign of Burmah. The report of this route, as far as it had been surveyed, was very unfavourable. There was a third route in contemplation, which would describe two sides of a triangle, of which the base was part of the route of 500 miles which the British merchants advocated. This third line also ran through the Burman Empire. He could understand either of the longer routes—the one forming a semicircle and the other two sides of a triangle—if intended for strategic purposes, or with a view to a policy of annexation; but if a line was wanted for commercial purposes, he could not see why either one or the other of them should be countenanced by the Government. He hoped the Government would do what was asked by the Chambers of Commerce on a question so important to the commercial interests of this country.

SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE said, he felt that he stood before the House in this matter rather in the capacity of a culprit, because from the speeches just delivered it was obvious that the two hon. Members charged him with having taken a retrograde step, when he filled the Office of Secretary for India, in stopping the survey directed by his noble Friend the Marquess of Salisbury. He did not think any apology was needed by hon. Members representing great mercantile constituencies for having brought the subject forward. No doubt, for the commerce of this country, the matter was one of considerable importance; and no one would be better pleased than he to see a good inland communication established between British India and China. He was anxious to say a few words in justification of the course he had adopted. In the first place, he would wish to put this before the House—that, in the consideration of this question, they should bear in mind it was one which was not only interesting to the commercial world, but was also of great interest for our Indian Empire. The Chambers of Commerce had been for a long time asking the Indian Government to undertake a survey through a country which did not belong to us, with a view to the construction of a railway. His hon. Friend the Member for Leeds (Mr. Baines) now spoke of a tramway, but he believed that a railway was what the Chambers of Commerce had been asking for. The survey commenced was one of a line from Rangoon through British Burmah and the Shan States to the western frontier of China. Was it a prudent thing to have undertaken that survey? He put aside the small matter whether the finances of India could afford the survey. He thought Lord Salisbury rightly put aside that matter by saying that the revenue of British Burmah could bear the expenditure. But were hon. Members to put this before them as if the survey were one in Yorkshire, or as if it was one through any thoroughly civilized country. The Shan States had been spoken of as if there was no difficulty in carrying a railway through them; but the Shan States, though nominally under the government of the King of Burmah, were in a continual state of rebellion against that Sovereign. No doubt the King of Burmah would have been glad to promote any enterprize which might have brought him British support in his quarrel with the Shan States; and, on the other hand, the Shans would also have been very glad if any proceeding on the part of the British Government in making a railway would have given them a title to claim assistance in enabling them to hold their own against their legitimate suzerain, the King of Burmah. The Government of India thought it was not desirable that anything of the kind should occur, and it would certainly have been a strong measure on the part of the Secretary of State for India if he had attempted in that state of things to overrule the Government of India, and had compelled them, against their own judgment, to carry on a survey which might have produced such complications. At that time there was a very considerable amount of opinion in India in favour of annexing Burmah to the British Empire, and naturally the carrying on a survey would have been exactly the sort of step which would have given countenance to the idea that the Indian Government contemplated annexation; but nothing could have been more undesirable than that such an idea should be created. All that was asked was that a survey should be carried through the country for the purpose of seeing whether it was practicable to make a railway there; but what was the use of such a proceeding, unless the Indian Government saw their way to construct a railway? Supposing the survey had been made, and that the country was found practicable for a railway, the next request would naturally have been that Government assistance should be given for the construction of one. Was it possible for any company to be formed in this country for that purpose without some assistance or guarantee from the Government, and was it likely that the British House of Commons would have sanctioned a guarantee? He put out of the question the idea that anything like an Imperial guarantee or Imperial assistance would have been given for such a railway; and, therefore, the Indian Goverment must have been applied to. Now, the back of the Indian Government was a very broad one, and he had no doubt that great pressure would have been brought to bear upon that Government to induce them to afford the required aid, but was it possible to suppose that the Government of India would have been able to give a guarantee for the suggested railway, seeing the claims which existed for railways in India and the great expense which the finances of India had to bear to give effect to the most necessary lines within the Indian territory? Lord Cranborne, when he authorized the survey, observed that he was not prepared to commit the finances of India for any railway of the kind. Such being the state of circumstances when the matter came before the Indian Council and himself, he, though aware that he might subject himself to great obloquy on the part of the commercial interests of this country if he acted on the recommendation of the Governor General of India that the survey should be stopped, yet, looking at the matter as dispassionately as he could, and having every desire to promote railway communication as far as possible between India and China, thought it right to follow the advice of the Governor General, who was responsible for the peace and prosperity of India, and to stop the survey. Nothing would give him greater pleasure than to learn that the state of circumstances had altered, and that the Secretary for India was able to undertake this work; but he pressed on the attention of the Government that it was not their duty to listen, in the first instance, to the representations of commercial bodies in this country, but it behoved them to consider the political aspect of the question, and to keep the country from entangling itself in foreign complications which might lead to difficulties and to, perhaps, war. They ought to be particularly anxious to avoid anything which would give umbrage to the neighbouring Powers of India, and anything pointing to annexation. But supposing all difficulty got over with respect to the construction of the railway, and supposing the railway made, how was it, passing through disturbed districts, to be kept open? It would be necessary to have British soldiers stationed at particular points of the line or some other mode of protection. That would be quasi annexation of that part of the country through which the railway passed. Unless you could see your way to some protection of that line, he was afraid they would only be opening the door to difficulties of which it would be impossible to foresee the end. The hon. Member who last spoke made some remarks on the curious fact that immediately after the survey of the southern route was put a stop to another survey was commenced by a very different route. That measure was ordered by the Government of India on their own responsibility, without any communication with the Secretary of State. But it was a route of a very different character from the one of which they were speaking. No doubt it was a much more circuitous route; but there was no idea of making a railway or any communication at all, but merely of restoring an old caravan route that had fallen into disuse. It would have been easy to revive the use of that route, and one of its advantages was that there was a direct interest on the part of the King of Burmah to encourage that route. It was a matter rather for him than for us to consider how that communication could be restored, and no doubt it would have been an advantage to us to have it restored. But that was altogether different from what was pressed upon them before, of what was called Captain Sprye's route, which was to depend on the construction of a railway through a country entirely under the dominion of the King of Burmah. They had also heard of a third route, and he could tell of a fourth—a more northerly route, by way of the Bramahputra, and which would give a more direct communication between Calcutta and China than any other. He believed it was the interest of the British Government and of the Indian Government to encourage in every possible way the improvement of the land communications between India and China. All he would press on the House was to abstain from embarrassing the Government of India by any injunctions which it might be inconvenient for that Government to comply with. It was quite right that they should have all commercial considerations impressed on them. No doubt the Secretary of State paid great respect to all that was said in that House; but he earnestly hoped the House would be cautious in not pressing on the Government of India what might be seriously embarrassing to our relations. He hoped to hear from his hon. Friend that progress was being made; nobody would rejoice more than he should at the prospect of these communications being effected.

MR. GRANT DUFF said, he would be very glad to explain to his hon. Friend (Mr. Baines) as briefly and clearly as he could how this matter stood, for he well knew that it excited in some of the Lancashire and Yorkshire towns an interest altogether disproportionate to its real importance, and he had no doubt that a little less reticence a few years ago would have prevented the growth of many wild hopes. The attention of the present Secretary of State in Council was first called to this matter by a despatch from the Governor General of India, enclosing a correspondence between the Chief Commissioner of British Burmah and the Government of India. The Chief Commissioner of British Burmah had conceived a project for carrying the telegraph from Rangoon to Kiang Hung, a Shan city close to the frontier of China, with the view to its being extended right across China to the eastern seaboard. He need not say that this proposal met with favour neither at the hands of the Government of India, nor at the hands of the Secretary of State in Council; but the correspondence which had been lately laid on the table of the House raised other questions, and more especially whether it would or would not be desirable to continue the survey which, wisely begun under the orders of Lord Salisbury, was wisely stopped, after a change of circumstances, by the order of his right hon. Friend opposite (Sir Stafford Northcote), at the urgent entreaty of Sir John Lawrence and his Council. The result of long and very careful consideration was a despatch to India, from which he would read an extract—

> "Her Majesty's Government are desirous of promoting any measure which may have the ultimate effect of facilitating intercourse between India and China, with a view to the interchange of mercantile commodities and the development of the resources of the two countries, and they are anxious also to advance, by such explorations as are here suggested, the interests of geographical science. The settlement of the present question is regarded with considerable interest by large and important mercantile communities in this country, and I should be glad, therefore, if the proposal now before me, which has the support of Colonel Fytche, the Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, could be carried into effect, provided that the necessary operations of the survey can be undertaken without entailing upon your Government any embarrassment or inconvenience in the shape of political complications, and if they should not involve any undue expenditure of the public money. With respect to the latter point, I should wish to receive from you some estimate of the probable expense."

This question of communication between Rangoon and Kiang Hung divided itself into three parts—1. What is the character and what are the commercial capabilities of that part of our own Burmese territory through which the projected railway or telegraph is to be made? 2. What is the character of the country between our own frontier and the frontier of China? And, 3. What is the character and condition of that part of China which would be reached by the projected route? Only two plans had been suggested for taking the railway across our own territory which he need notice. The first of these was the line surveyed up to the frontier by Messrs. Williams and Luard. Their official Report had been laid before Parliament, and might be summed up by saying that the line taken as a whole would be a difficult but not an extraordinarily difficult one. The first part would be very easy, the second less so, the third very arduous. The general character of the country as described to him by Captain Luard, who was now in England, was a good deal like Wales, but with the hills higher in many places. The local traffic of this portion of the line would be absolutely trifling. A little rice might come down to the coast, but that would be all. From the point where the survey of Williams and Luard stopped to the Takau Ferry, on the Salween, the country had not been regularly surveyed, but we knew a good deal about it. There would be difficulties of various kinds — great difficulties, but difficulties in no way insuperable, if a great object were to be attained. The other plan for getting a communication across our own territory which he would mention was to go from Rangoon northward to Tounghoo, and from there to reach the Takau Ferry. There were a good many advantages about this line, and even if it never got further than Tounghoo it would be useful for local purposes; but it was far too early to decide between the two lines. It would be long before either of them would be proposed by anyone willing to find the money; and in the meantime they need not be jealous of each other. He now came to the second part of the journey —to the question how we were to get across the Eastern Shan States from the Takau Ferry to Kiang Hung. About the first portion of this line extremely little was known; indeed, hardly anything at all. At Kiang Hung the direct route from the Takau Ferry would fall in with the route followed a generation ago by Captain M'Leod on his journey from Moulmein to Kiang Hung. That officer kept a good deal to the southward of the route last proposed until he reached Kiang Hung. His experiences—and, as far as he (Mr. Grant Duff) knew, he was the only European who had reached Kiang Hung from British Burmah—were not very encouraging. They might be read at length in his diary which was about to be laid upon the table of the House; but he might perhaps be allowed to give a summary of them from his own lips, for he had been good enough to allow him to vouch, on the authority of his name, for the following statements made to him (Mr. Grant Duff) in conversation. First, then, the Shan States which he traversed were very thinly peopled. For days and days together he journeyed through a mere jungle without meeting a soul. The mountain ranges were numerous, high, and precipitous, and the only roads to be found were often the beds of dried-up torrents. The people were mere barbarians, anxious to trade, no doubt, in their own small way, but with very little to exchange, and the so-called caravans that came down from the frontiers of China were on a very small scale. General M'Leod had never countenanced the idea that a railway or telegraph could be made from Rangoon to Kiang Hung in our generation with the slightest advantage or profit, though of course, like all reasonable men, he was in favour of exploration, provided that exploration could be carried out without great expense, sacrifice of life, or political inconvenience. He (Mr. Grant Duff) did not himself believe that the expense need be great, and he did not believe that if the survey were to be carried out by our own officers there was much danger of any considerable sacrifice of life or of getting into difficulties either with the rulers of the petty Shan States themselves or with the King of Burmah. That, however, was a mere individual opinion formed after some study of the subject, which he offered for what it was worth. Well, but when we should have got to Kiang Hung and were looking across the Cambodia river to the Chinese post on the other side, we should be looking at a country about much of which we had just about as authentic information as we had about the country on the other side of the Styx. He could imagine that he saw some enthusiast for this scheme, on reading what he (Mr. Grant Duff) was now saying, rush to his shelves and indignantly opening a thick pamphlet by the prime mover in this project turn to the pages where information about the huge province of Yunan, as this part of China was called, had been industriously collected. Well, but what did it all amount to? That in this enormous region there was a certain amount of wealth and there were a certain number of valuable products. Who ever doubted it? But what did we know of the local distribution of that wealth and those products which could lead us to believe that they would find an outlet by Kiang Hung? Was not the natural outlet of that province the great valley of the Yangtze, or the Canton river? And why should its products come wandering over the high rough region which we knew lay to the north of Kiang Hung in order to seek an outlet towards the Bay of Bengal? The amount of recent information about the province of Yunan possessed by anyone in Western Europe, except the survivors of the French exploring expedition which lately ascended the Cambodia river, was small indeed. Of the information acquired by these gentlemen very little, mere fragments, he might say, had become publici juris, and he was afraid some time would pass before the work on which they were engaged would appear, for it was to be, he understood, on a very extensive scale. His belief about the Yunan of the present day, formed from such morsels of knowledge as he could obtain, was that it was a large, and in parts, prosperous province, but that even in the best times most of its south-western trade flowed down to Burmah by Bhamo and the Irrawaddy, not by Kiang Hung. That trade was respectable—say £500,000 a year—till in 1855 a great insurrection broke out against the Chinese authority among its Mahommedan population, since which time the through trade from Northern China was dead, and nothing survived but a local traffic of no importance. Further, he was assured by General M'Leod, who reached, as he had already mentioned, the Chinese border at Kiang Hung, that in that part of Yunan the population was extremely poor. No doubt it was a more civilized region altogether than the Shan States, but it was as far as possible from being a region which it was worth going through the Shan States to get at. If any member of any of the numerous Chambers of Commerce who had sent memorials to any of the Departments of Government about this matter could give one single scrap of first-hand information about South-western China or about any of the countries between British Burmah and South-western China, the Government would be most grateful for it; but if the Chambers of Commerce, into whose hands the Government was most anxious to play, made themselves mere speaking trumpets through which a projector shouted facts and views with which the Government was perfectly familiar, they could not be surprised if the Government merely acknowledged their letters, wondering that British merchants and manufacturers, with all the world before them, should have so little to do as to be able to find time for so dull an amusement or so vain a labour. He would be very sorry to be understood to discourage the idea that a profitable trade might one day be established with South-western China through our Indian dominions. He held the diametrically opposite opinion, and believed that the day would come when we should have first a small trade, then improved roads, and finally, for all he knew, even a railway from Rangoon to Kiang Hung, but that last only in the far future. He thought we should see a renewal and improvement of the trade down the Irrawaddy, which, as he had said, died out in 1855, and he had a very strong impression that it might be possible to have a trade from Calcutta through Munipore to Bhamo and Talifoo. Further, he believed the day would come when we might be able to communicate through the absolutely unknown country between Sudiya in Assam and Bathang, and that we might have consuls in at least four great towns of Western China. All that, however, was for our children and grandchildren to carry out. The duty of this generation was only to explore these outlying regions, and to make straight the paths for our successors. There were two kinds of projectors in the world—those who saw for what the times were ripe and led the way to it—and those who, neglecting the real work of their own age, kept querulously anticipating the work of the age that was to follow, being born, as Lammenais would have said—"with repeaters in their heads which were always striking the hour." Some friends in the North of England had in this matter of the route between Rangoon and Western China fallen, to their detriment and to the sorrow of the Government, into the hands of the latter kind of projector. In conclusion, he would once more specially direct the attention of the hon. Gentlemen who were interested in this matter to the words of the despatch from which he read an extract. The two motives of the Government in directing the survey to be continued were—first, to extend geographical science and our acquaintance with the frontier lands of our own territory; secondly, to oblige the many mercantile communities which had addressed the Government on the subject. He admitted that it was not satisfactory, after having held Pegu for some sixteen years, that we really knew as little of the countries beyond it as we did some sixteen years before we possessed it. The French, with a far inferior base of operations, and more than twice the distance to traverse, had passed through Yunan, visiting both its Chinese and its Mussulman capital. That was greatly to their credit, and he hoped, before long, we should, through an increase of friendly and confidential intercourse with our allies at Pekin, Bangkok, and Mandalay, know the Indo-Chinese peninsula much better than we did now; but this particular question of communication with China through Rangoon, which seemed, so to speak, a star of the first magnitude to many in the North of England, seemed to the Government, considered as a project for the immediate benefit of commerce, a star of the fifteenth magnitude—should he not rather say a mere will-o'-the-wisp?—which, if we were to follow it to the neglect of our own real business in India would lead us only into trouble and disgrace.

GAMBIA — PRISONERS IN BATHURST GAOL.—OBSERVATIONS.

MR. BUXTON, who had given notice to move an Address for Copy of a Petition and other Documents forwarded by the Merchants and other Inhabitants of Bathurst, Gambia, to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, relative to the treatment of Prisoners in the Gaol, said, he wished to call attention to the extraordinary proceedings of Admiral Patey, the Administrator of the Gambia, as regarded his treatment of the negro prisoners in the gaol, and he must observe that the statement he was about to make rested on unimpeachable authority. He should quote only from the evidence given by the gaoler himself, by the head turnkey, and Dr. Jeans, the surgeon of the gaol. A coroner's inquest was held upon one of the prisoners who had died, and the verdict of the jury was that his death had been caused by shot drill and treadmill labour. Upon this an inquiry was instituted, and the evidence he should quote was given by the persons he had referred to, but was entirely corroborated by that of the prisoners themselves, and he must say that the case against Admiral Patey appeared to be so strong that the Government was bound not to let the matter rest, but to consider whether he was not wholly unfit for his very responsible and important situation at the Gambia. The gaoler showed in the first place, that the Governor, Admiral Patey, had the entire control of the gaol. It was altogether his doing that the prisoners were subjected to the treatment which he (Mr. Buxton) was about to describe. Admiral Patey regulated the hard labour without reference to the sheriff or the visiting justices. The facts proved at the inquiry were these:—The prisoners had two meals in the day—namely, some boiled rice at ten o'clock, and a very small allowance of bread and meat at five o'clock. But the food was stated by the surgeons to be insufficient, and was far below that given to prisoners in any well-managed gaol. However, they had their second meal at five o'clock, and were then locked up in their cells. At about half-past five the next morning they were woke up, and went to work. They were at hard labour from that time until they came in at half-past nine, having then been 16½ hours without food, and even then they were not allowed to go to their breakfast, but were put to shot drill for half-an-hour. The shot drill was thus described. It was done in a circle. The men were marched round, at each four paces putting down and taking up a ball and carrying it. The shot was a 24-pounder.

> "At first," said the gaoler, "we had only 18-pounders, but Admiral Patey said they were too light, and caused us to get 24-pounders. The prisoners marched round, putting down and taking up the balls continuously during the drill."

Dr. Waters, the Staff Assistant Surgeon, justly says:—

> "I think the prison diet insufficient. I think also that a man who has been sixteen and a-half hours without food is not fit to be put on shot drill."

Evidence to exactly the same effect was given by the colonial surgeon, Dr. Jeans, and indeed it obviously was outrageous that a man should be put to this very severe work after being from sixteen and a-half hours to seventeen hours without food, and that food itself very insufficient. After the shot drill was over the men were at length allowed to go to their breakfast of plain boiled rice. They were then sent to work again until half-past four, and were then put upon the treadmill, and the gaoler said—

> "There is no board on our treadmill on which a prisoner can rest if tired, and if he relaxes he would fall down. . . . Sometimes they do fall down. This happens frequently. When some drop down I put on others. . . . On the treadmill the prisoners fall down sweating, appearing very much tired. All prisoners sentenced to hard labour are put to shot drill and treadmill without distinction and without reference to their offences. The cook and hospital attendant have to go. My orders are to put any prisoners sentenced to hard labour to shot drill and treadmill. If a prisoner is sentenced to seven days' hard labour in default of payment of a fine, he is treated the same as a felon. The prisoners are put to hard labour as I have described it without any examination of their physical fitness."

The gaoler seemed to have been strongly impressed with the cruelty of the system, and as soon as Admiral Patey went away on leave he stopped the shot drill and treadmill labour; but as soon as the Admiral returned they were resumed, in addition to the ordinary labour. The attention of the gaoler was also called to an entry in the diary—"May 9, Whipped six prisoners." He said—

> "They were tied up and flogged with a cat. The Governor did not fix the number of lashes, but told me to tell the sheriff to give John Day and — Jie a good flogging."

Dr. Jeans, the colonial surgeon, was examined with reference to these floggings, and he said that Day was flogged though he had just come out of a very dangerous illness. Dr. Jeans added that he had felt special interest for Day "because he had been excessively sick." He (Mr. Buxton) had no wish to detain the House, but the brief statement he had made was, he thought, quite enough to show that great and unreasonable cruelties had been exercised upon the prisoners in Bathurst Gaol, and he trusted the Secretary for the Colonies would make further inquiry into the case and would publish any correspondence that bore upon the subject.

Mr. R. N. FOWLER said, he was persuaded that the state of things upon the West Coast of Africa demanded the attention of the Government. Some years ago he had pressed upon the present Secretary of State for War, at that time Secretary of State for the Colonies, the hardship inflicted upon a gentleman of good position practising as a member of the bar at Trinidad, who had been recommended by three successive Governors for the Attorney Generalship of Sierra Leone, and had also filled the position of Acting Chief Justice, and yet was degraded in consequence of a misunderstanding with the Governor. He would not trouble the House with the details of the case now, but would be glad to mention the matter privately to the right hon. Gentleman opposite.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON said, he regretted that the whole subject of the West African Settlements had not been brought under consideration. A case at Cape Coast Castle had come under his knowledge in which, in consequence of some very trifling dispute, a gentleman of good position had been confined in a most filthy dungeon. He regretted to find among his hon. Friends below the Gangway a desire to restrict British operations upon the coast of Africa. If the snail-like policy of withdrawal was to be adopted, he trusted the full-grown prosperous colonies would be allowed to shift for themselves in the first instance, and that we should not give up our protection and our influence over the native races, and in doing so abandon some of the most glorious traditions of the British Empire.

Mr. MONSELL said, he hoped his hon. Friend who had spoken last would give him the particulars of the case to which he referred—he would then cause inquiries to be made with reference to it. His hon. Friend opposite (Mr. R. N. Fowler) had also mentioned a quarrel on the West Coast of Africa. To what cause it was to be attributed, whether to a tropical epidemic, to something peculiar in the character of the West Coast, or to the contact with barbarous races he was unable to say, but the officials upon that coast certainly seemed to spend a vast amount of time in fighting with each other. Statements very similar to those read by the hon. Member for East Surrey (Mr. Buxton) had been received at the Colonial Office; but unfortunately those statements were founded on investigations conducted entirely by persons who were the known enemies of Admiral Patey. The complaint against the Admiral resolved itself into a charge, not of having introduced any improper system of punishments, for the hard labour and shot drill were believed to be perfectly proper in themselves by the Director of Convict Prisons, to whom the matter had been referred, but of having introduced this system without taking those precautions which the climate and the circumstances of the persons to be subjected to the punishment required. The Government had done precisely what his hon. Friend suggested. In the first place, they referred this statement to the Director of Convict Prisons, and then addressed the Governor-in-Chief of the West African Colonies, directing him to have inquiry made, and at once to remedy the grievances complained of, if any such were found to exist, to inquire further as to the conduct of the administration and the management of the gaol. To that letter no reply had yet been received, probably on account of the lamentable visitation of cholera at Gambia, one of the most severe, he believed, upon record. In meeting this visitation, those who had brought complaints against Admiral Patey took no part whatever, but held their hands. Admiral Patey, on the other hand, and one or two other gentlemen, exerted themselves in a manner deserving the highest praise. They buried the dead with their own hands, and went about among the suffering, and did all that lay in their power to relieve them; and this, certainly, had led him to believe that there could not be that inhumanity in Admiral Patey's disposition which was alleged in the complaints about the gaols. With one remark made by his hon. Friend (Mr. A. Johnston) he could not agree. Considering the difficulty there was in administering properly the affairs of these colonies, in contending with the climate, and in controlling the various officials—difficulties which, he believed, had been felt quite as strongly by former Governments as by the present—he certainly thought that if we could manage to draw in our horns on that coast, and get rid of some of our West African settlements, it would be a decided advantage. The necessity which at one time existed of keeping up these establishments in connection with the efforts for the suppression of the slave trade no longer existed; and he believed their relinquishment now would be attended with advantage to this country, and would not be injurious to the settlements themselves. As far as he could see, the general tendency of things upon that coast was far more to barbarize the Europeans than it was to civilize the natives.

CURRENCY LAWS.—OBSERVATIONS.

MR. DELAHUNTY, who had given notice of a Motion upon this subject, which the rules of the House would not allow him to move, said the object which he had in view was to do something which might tend to resuscitate in Ireland manufactures yielding profitable employment to the people. If manufactures could be established in Ireland, the people, being employed, would be perfectly satisfied, and the misery and distress that at present existed in that country would disappear. He regretted that the rules of the House prevented him from bringing the subject under their attention in another shape, but he hoped, on a future occasion, to bring forward a Motion for the purpose of inducing the Government to deal justly with Ireland, as far as the currency was concerned. Ireland had suffered much during the last thirty or forty years, and her population, instead of being 13,000,000 as it should have been, allowing for the natural ratio of increase, was only 5,250,000, or exactly what it was in 1801. The famines that had occurred in that country were not owing to a short supply of food, but to the want of employment consequent upon the absence of a circulating medium. In 1822, in 1828, and in 1848, the periods of the greatest distress in that country, food was abundant and cheap, but the people had no money to buy it in consequence of the contraction of the circulation. He hoped the Government would take this matter into their earliest consideration, and would bring in a Bill to assimilate the Currency Laws of Ireland to those of other parts of the United Kingdom.

MR. AYRTON said, the question brought forward by the hon. Member was a very important one, and at some appropriate time would receive the careful attention of the Government. In the meantime, however, matters of most pressing importance demanded their immediate attention, and would prevent them from giving it that consideration which it would otherwise have demanded. He hoped that the step taken by the hon. Member would be duly appreciated in Ireland.

Main Question "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," put and agreed to

WAYS AND MEANS.

WAYS AND MEANS—considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

(1.) Resolved, That, towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, there be issued and applied to the Service of the year ending the 31st day of March 1870, the sum of £798,132 17*s.* 9*d.*, being the Surplus of Ways and Means granted for the Service of preceding years.

(2.) Resolved, That, towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, the sum of £21,746,684 2*s.* 3*d.* be granted out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

House resumed.

Resolutions to be reported To-morrow.

EAST INDIA LOAN BILL.

Resolution reported;

"That it is expedient to enable the Secretary of State in Council of India to raise a sum not exceeding £8,000,000, in the United Kingdom for the Service of the Government of India, on the credit of the Revenues of India."

Resolution agreed to: — Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. DODSON, Mr. GRANT DUFF, and Mr. STANSFELD.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 251.]

HARBOUR OF GALLE LOAN BILL.

Resolution reported;

"That it is expedient to empower the Public Works Loan Commissioners, out of any monies for the time being at their disposal for the purpose of Harbours, to advance to the Government of the Colony of Ceylon, a sum or sums not exceeding in the whole £250,000, to be applied in improving and fortifying the Harbour of Galle in the said Colony."

Resolution agreed to: — Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. DODSON, Mr. GRANT DUFF, and Mr. STANSFELD.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 250.]

PLANS FOR NEW DINING ROOMS, &c.

Select Committee appointed, "to consider Plans for New Refreshment and Dining Rooms for both Houses of Parliament, and for Improvements in the Ladies' Gallery of the House of Commons:—Lord JOHN MANNERS, Mr. BOUVERIE, Mr. WILLIAM HENRY SMITH, Colonel FRENCH, and Mr. LAYARD:—Power to send for persons, papers, and records; Three to be the quorum." — (Mr. Layard.)

House adjourned at a quarter before Three o'clock.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Saturday, 31*st July*, 1869.

MINUTES.] — SELECT COMMITTEE — Plans for New Dining Rooms, &c., Lord John Manners discharged, Colonel Wilson-Patten added.

SUPPLY—considered in Committee—Resolutions [July 30] reported.

WAYS AND MEANS—Resolutions [July 30] reported.

PUBLIC BILLS—Ordered—First Reading—Consolidated Fund (Appropriation)*.

Committee — Report — Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) (re-comm.) [238]; Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment * [227]; Expiring Laws Continuance * [245].

Considered as amended—Basses Lights (Ceylon) * [224].

Third Reading — Fortifications (Provision for Expenses) * [225]; Militia (Ireland) * [222]; Militia Pay *; Basses Lights (Ceylon) * [224]; Public Works (Ireland) * [202]; Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act (1863) Amendment * [208]; Accounts, &c. Presentation * [240], and passed.

Withdrawn—Land Tax Law Amendment * [188].

The House met at Twelve of the clock.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS (LOANS) (re-committed) BILL.

(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Goschen.)

[BILL 238.] COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clauses 1 to 21, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 22. (Power to levy consolidated rate).

MR. W. H. SMITH proposed a proviso, the effect of which would be to secure that the incidence of the rates, as they now fell upon the owners or the occupiers respectively, should not be altered by the operation of this Bill.

MR. AYRTON said, he believed that this object was secured already in other parts of the Bill. He would, however, consult the draftsman, and if the object were not sufficiently secured he would take care that it was so done in bringing up the Report.

MR. W. M. TORRENS said, he thought the clause had better be postponed. He would suggest that the whole consolidated rate should be divided into equal parts between the owners and occupiers.

Amendment negatived.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 23 to 33, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 34 (Additional borrowing powers of board).

MR. J. LOWTHER moved the omission of sub-section 1, and observed that the Committee were now asked to grant a fund to complete the metropolitan drainage scheme. Opinions were by no means unanimous as to the success attending these works. A memorial had been presented to the House from Barking and other places, the health of whose inhabitants had been affected by the scheme, and he thought that they should not vote more money for the work while it was undergoing investigation.

MR. AYRTON observed that the proposal of the hon. Gentleman was somewhat like that of a man who, after spending a great deal of money in building a house, objected to give the last finishing touch to enable him to live in it. They had spent £4,000,000 in carrying the drainage to a certain point. A small portion of the scheme was yet incomplete. That portion was not at all connected with the outfall, but with the internal drainage of the metropolis. When the rate-payers were taxed for a work they were entitled to receive the benefit of it, and it would be an act of gross injustice not to give them the benefit of the completion of the scheme, merely because there was some difference of opinion amongst the philosophers on the subject.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, he would withdraw his Amendment on the understanding that no further expenditure on the outfall drainage was proposed to be sanctioned.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause added to the Bill.

Remaining clauses agreed to.

MR. AYRTON moved, after Clause 34, to insert a new clause (Loans by board to managers of Metropolitan Asylum District).

Clause agreed to.

SIR WILLIAM TITE moved to insert a new clause (Investment by trustees in stock).

SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE suggested that it would be more convenient if the discussion upon this clause were taken upon the Report, because it was desirable that it should be debated in a full House—seeing that it involved a general principle. The clause not only affected the particular stock to be created, but the whole principle upon which trustees were to deal with trust money. That was a point which demanded the most serious consideration, and he thought more time should be given for that purpose.

MR. CRAWFORD agreed with the right hon. Gentleman that the discussion should be postponed. He did not wish to put any difficulty in the way of the Metropolitan Board of Works raising this money; but this clause would authorize trustees to invest in this stock, though an investment of such a nature had never been contemplated. The question was not one that they could consider at this time; but, if it was considered at all, it should be considered in a Bill affecting the duties of powers of trustees.

MR. AYRTON admitted the force of these remarks, and expressed a hope that the hon. Baronet (Sir William Tite) would withdraw his Amendment.

MR. T. CHAMBERS denied that any general principle was raised by the clause. The question merely was whether trustees should have the power of investing in this particular stock. He hoped, therefore, that the Amendment, if not insisted upon at present, would be brought up again at a subsequent stage.

DR. BREWER said, that even the Three per Cents did not furnish so material a guarantee as this stock would furnish. If facilities for investment in the stock were not afforded the Bill would be worthless.

Clause, by leave, withdrawn.

MR. W. M. TORRENS called attention to the proposed sale by the Metropolitan Board of twenty acres of land purchased for the creation of a park at Finsbury. The sale for building purposes of this land out of the small acreage available would leave the park a mockery and a sham. The Metropolitan Board proposed in the same way to lease land devoted to the Southwark Park. Now, Parliament had declared that a certain quantity of land should be appropriated for the purposes of these parks, and in order to carry out their views he proposed the following clause:—

> "That it shall not be lawful for the Metropolitan Board of Works to sell or let, whether on lease or otherwise, any portion of the lands now vested in said Board for the purpose of a park or other place of recreation."

Clause (Park lands vested in the Metropolitan Board of Works,) — (Mr. Torrens,)—brought up, and read the first time.

MR. AYRTON said, the question was, how much money contributed by the metropolis generally should be devoted for parks situated in two districts of the metropolis, and that question must necessarily be decided by the Board which represented the whole metropolis. The point raised by his hon. Friend had really nothing whatever to do with the subject-matter of this Bill, the object of which was merely to arrange for the debt of the metropolis at large. It was wholly foreign to the measure, and as far as legislation was concerned it would be an impropriety to introduce it into the Bill. If there was anything improper in the Bill giving the Metropolitan Board of Works power over these parks, that should be remedied by a Bill brought in by the local board for this purpose next year. He objected to this clause being introduced into a Bill brought in for a very different purpose.

MR. LOCKE said, this was a question which demanded the serious consideration of the Committee. Supposing a Bill were introduced on the subject next year, it would be of very little use, inasmuch as by that time the Board of Works might have the land disposed of and built upon. The subject was not foreign to the Bill, as the 42nd clause related to the powers of the Metropolitan Board in respect of certain lands. The question was, whether the Board of Works should be empowered to build on land which had been bought, under the sanction of Parliament, for the recreation of the people; and his hon. Friend (Mr. Torrens) had seized upon the right moment for dealing with this question. In all large towns throughout the country it was absolutely necessary to preserve open spaces by every possible means, and that should not be done by sacrificing the beauty of a park, when once the ground was obtained for one, and by taking portions out of it for purposes foreign to those of a park. The same question arose at Southwark, and he hoped the House would put an end to such a system by adopting the clause of his hon. Friend.

Sir WILLIAM TITE said, this question had been fully discussed on a former occasion. Some years ago it had been arranged that a park should be created at Finsbury, the Government contributing £60,000, and the Metropolitan Board finding the remaining half. But the House of Commons protested against the application of public money for the purposes of a park at Finsbury, and Lord Palmerston was compelled to withdraw the proposal he had made, leaving the Metropolitan Board to find the whole of the money. They had scheduled 240 acres, but it was impossible for them to find the means of buying this land; so they bought 130 acres. The clauses enabling the Board to deal with the surplus land were in the Act itself, and Parliament had given the Board power first to offer this land, under certain conditions, to the original owners, and if they did not take to it the land might be sold otherwise. As to Bermondsey Park, he did not believe that any decision had been come to by the Board with respect to the lease of any portion of the land. As a member of the Metropolitan Board, he had voted against the sale of any part of the Finsbury Park, but it was a question on which there might be a fair difference of opinion, and he had been out-voted. It must be remembered that the Metropolitan Board was composed of representatives of the whole metropolis, and that they not only had to buy the land but to lay out and maintain the park at a considerable annual expenditure. In such a Bill as this such a clause was entirely out of place.

Mr. HOLMS urged the Committee to protect the remainder of the land bought for Finsbury Park, and referred to the sale of a portion of Victoria Park, since which time the inhabitants of the borough he represented had been continually desiring that that land, or what remained of it, should be got back for the purpose of the park.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON said, he had surveyed the ground, which was semicircular, and what the Metropolitan Board of Works proposed to do was to cut ten acres out of the whole frontage of the park.

Mr. Alderman LUSK said, he hoped the Government would give way. It was unreasonable to take away the best part of the park as the Metropolitan Board proposed.

Mr. AYRTON reminded the Committee that the parishes concerned in these parks at Finsbury and Southwark had been parties to a Bill for acquiring certain land for the purposes of the parks, on condition that a portion of that land should be sold or let in order to recoup the Board a portion of the cost. The parishes now wanted the whole of the land; but such a change in the conditions of the arrangement would be a wrong to the whole of the metropolitan rate-payers, and he did not see how, if such a clause were inserted, the Bill could proceed.

Mr. W. M. TORRENS denied that his constituents were asking for anything new. They were merely asking Parliament to make good its own words.

Question put, "That the Clause be read a second time."

The Committee divided:—Ayes 40; Noes 34: Majority 6.

House resumed.

Bill reported; as amended, to be considered upon Monday.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

On Motion of Mr. Dodson, Bill to apply a sum, out of the Consolidated Fund and the Surplus of Ways and Means, to the Service of the year ending the 31st day of March 1870, and to appropriate the Supplies granted in this Session of Parliament, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Ayrton.

Bill presented, and read the first time.

House adjourned at a quarter before
Four o'clock till Monday.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Monday, 2nd August, 1869.

MINUTES.] — SELECT COMMITTEE — Report — Despatch of Business in Parliament.

PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading—Education* (259); Basses Lights, Ceylon,* (254); Public Works (Ireland)* (255); Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act (1863) Amendment* (256); Zanzibar (Jurisdiction of Consul)* (246); Fortifications (Provision for Expenses)* (251); Militia (Ireland)* (252); Militia Pay*; Accounts, &c. Presentation* (253); Nitro Glycerine* (245); Volunteer Act (1863) Amendment* (257); Criminal Lunatics* (247); Clerks of Assize* (248); Railways Abandonment* (249); Local Officers Superannuation (Ireland)* (250).

Second Reading—Courts of Justice Salaries and Funds (215); Seeds Adulteration (242); Land Tax Commissioners Names* (158); Dublin Freemen Commission (210).

Committee — Fisheries (Ireland) (236); Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c.* (230).

Committee — Report — Civil Offices (Pensions)* (157); Millbank Prison* (234); Trades Unions (Protection of Funds) (226); Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Supplemental (No. 2)* (136); Straits Settlements* (231).

Report—Evidence Amendment* (239-260); Contagious Diseases (Animals)* (240-261); Jamaica Loans* (204); Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal* (241).

Third Reading—Savings Banks and Post Office Savings Banks* (211); Contagious Diseases* (221); Pharmacy Act (1868) Amendment* (238); Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c.* (209); Valuation of Property (Metropolis)* (229); Public Schools Act (1868) Amendment* (232); Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment* (235), and passed.

Royal Assent—Diplomatic Salaries, &c. [32 & 33 Vict. c. 43]; Greenwich Hospital [32 & 33 Vict. c. 44]; Poor Law Union Loans [32 & 33 Vict. c. 45]; Debts of Deceased Persons [32 & 33 Vict. c. 46]; High Constables Office Abolition, &c. [32 & 33 Vict. c. 47]; Companies Clauses Act (1863) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 48]; Fines and Fees Collection [32 & 33 Vict. c. 49]; Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 50]; Municipal Franchise [32 & 33 Vict. c. 55]; Endowed Schools [32 & 33 Vict. c. 56]; County Courts (Admiralty Jurisdiction) Act (1868) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 51]; Shipping Dues Exemption Act (1867) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 52]; Cinque Ports Act Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 53]; Seamen's Clothing [32 & 33 Vict. c. 57]; Poor Law (Ireland) Amendment (No. 2) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 54].

COURTS OF JUSTICE SALARIES AND FUNDS BILL—(No. 215.)

(The Marquess of Lansdowne.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE, in moving that the Bill be now read a second time, said, that its object was to transfer funds now standing to the credit of the Accountant General and the Accountant in Bankruptcy to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. The Commissioners would cancel stock representing these funds, and replace it by a book debt. These funds might be classed under three heads —1, funds representing investments for suitors in Chancery, standing in their own names and bearing interest for their benefit; 2, funds belonging to suitors, invested, however, not by their own desire but by the court, and bearing interest; and 3, funds consisting of fees, accumulations of interest, and so forth. Now, the Bill did not interfere with the first class, but transferred the second and third classes to the National Debt Commissioners, the funds of the Court of Bankruptcy being dealt with in the same manner. The salaries and pensions of Judges would henceforth be charged on the Consolidated Fund, while the minor salaries and expenses of the courts would be charged on the Votes, and would be subject to the annual review of Parliament. The Bill would put an end to much complication, and he hoped their Lordships would give it a second reading.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(The Marquess of Lansdowne.)

LORD ST. LEONARDS said, he had always been opposed to the Government putting its hand on this fund, and saw no reason for the application of any portion of it, either to the building of new Common Law Courts or to the reduction of the National Debt. It was true that no individual could say "So much of that fund is mine;" but it had been contributed by suitors in equity, and suitors in that court as a class ought from time to time to have the benefit of it. As to the indemnity to be given to suitors out of the Consolidated Fund, that fund could not be got at except through the Votes of the House of Commons, and it was moreover greatly overcharged, while various Acts of Parliament provided that certain claims should have priority over all others. He once knew a gentleman who locked up his property in Chancery for the express purpose that it might be made secure for his children; but if this Bill passed no one but an idiot would take such a course. It made the Treasury the master of the Court of Chancery for all time to come; and its object was not merely to take the £4,000,000 now available, but to enable the Treasury to apply to the Court of Chancery whenever there was supposed to be a surplus, and to claim that surplus in order to appropriate it to the reduction of the National Debt. He saw no reason why the court should be tied hand and foot by the Treasury, nor why Parliament should, at one fell swoop, seize upon this fund. The administration of justice ought to be free, and it was unbecoming a great nation first to exact these payments from suitors, and then to apply £1,000,000 of the amount to the expense of building new Courts for other suitors, and now to confiscate £4,000,000 for the National Debt. The fund ought to be applied for the benefit of suitors themselves, whose fund it was, by the reduction or abolition of fees. In 1852 he had reduced the charges in the Court of Chancery by means of this fund, and he had hoped, if he remained in Office, to enable suitors in equity to enter that court without payment of the heavy charges to which they were liable. If this Bill passes there can no longer be any reduction of the taxation. The building new Courts for all suitors, and the reduction of the National Debt were national objects, to which the nation at large should contribute. Independently, moreover, of the objections to the principle of the Bill, their Lordships ought to reject it on the ground of time. It was introduced into the House of Commons on the 23rd of April, but it did not reach this House till the 23rd of July—almost the last week of the Session. The other House had thus several months allowed them for its consideration, and it was clear that their Lordships could not give sufficient consideration to it at this advanced period of the Session.

Amendment moved to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day three months.")—(The Lord St. Leonards.)

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, he had great satisfaction in hearing his noble and learned Friend (Lord St. Leonards) state so clearly his views with reference to this Bill, and to the administration of justice in the Court of Chancery without fee or payment by the suitors. For a very long time, and up to 1865, when an entire change was made in the principle on which this fund had been hitherto dealt with, he himself shared the hope that, in a very few years, when the compensations to clerks and others fell in, there would be an opportunity of so administering justice to suitors in the Court of Chancery that while, of course, litigants would have to act in the usual manner with regard to the employment of solicitors and others, no fee would be payable to the court. But, in 1865, a scheme was brought forward for the construction of new Courts of Law and Equity; and, though he concurred in the necessity of providing new Courts, he then protested against applying funds paid into court by suitors in chancery, and the profits made upon those funds, to providing buildings wherein to transact the business of other courts than those of equity. However, his protest was in vain—it was determined that the Suitors' Fund in the Court of Chancery should be applied to that purpose, and henceforth it appeared to him hopeless to expect that the fees would ever be done away with. That being so, any objection which he might have felt to the principle of this Bill, anterior to that period, appeared to him to be swept away. There was, he thought, a clear answer to the objections taken to the course proposed respecting these particular funds—namely, the cash paid into court by suitors as distinguished from the stock which stood to their credit. The matter might be easily explained. Suitors in the Court of Chancery might desire to have the money paid into court invested and carried to the credit of the particular cause; but, in many instances, they were not disposed to ask for this. Sometimes, for example, the cause was likely to be disposed of speedily, the sum might speedily be wanted in cash, and suitors did not desire to go to the expense of buying and selling out. In other cases, suitors were afraid of investing in the funds, with the possibility of a fall in value, and they, therefore, simply paid their money into court. In these cases, and in suits for the administration of estates in Chancery, the court was used by suitors simply as a private banker. Now, all the money so paid in was money which the suitor was only entitled to demand again in cash to the amount placed to his credit. But the Court of Chancery had felt itself at liberty to do with this cash just what bankers did when they had large sums standing to the credit of their various customers. Whether the court had herein acted properly or improperly was not the question; but he believed the practice had resulted very much to the advantage of all concerned. The Court of Chancery said—"We will not let this money lie idle; we will invest it, and thereby obtain interest upon the money, holding it as a fund out of which we may answer the call for any cash payments, the principal and the accumulated interest being sufficient to meet any possible deficiency caused by a fall in the price of stock, and being sufficient also to meet the cash demands of the suitor or customer." Accordingly, the cash had been from time to time invested in stock, the income of which was again invested, and the profits represented the sum of between £2,000,000 and £3,000,000, now proposed to be carried over to the Treasury, and applied in reduction of the National Debt. The simple fact was, that henceforth the Treasury meant to undertake the banking for the suitors, instead of the Court of Chancery. This stock, qua stock, in no way belonged to the suitors. It was the stock purchased by the gross amount of the cash lying in the Court of Chancery to the credit of all the suitors, each suitor being credited with the special debt due to him. But if you deposited £1,000 with your bankers you could not afterwards go and ask for the mortgage on which that money had been lent or the shares which it had purchased. You would ask for your £1,000, and to that you would be entitled. In the same way the Court of Chancery sold out stock to produce the specific sum which was wanted, and when that was done the suitor was satisfied and the court retained the profit. From year to year dividends were accruing upon this stock, and in those dividends the suitor had no interest. There were, in fact, two funds. One, consisting of the investments of the suitors' cash payments, was known as Fund A; and the income derived from Fund A was called Fund B. It was from that fund that the £1,000,000 was taken which had been applied towards the building of the Law Courts. He repeated that he should have been glad in 1865 to see the sum applied in reducing the fees payable by suitors; but it had not been so applied, and the Government had undertaken all the responsibility which arose in connection with it. The Treasury now said, with regard to the remaining stock, that they would henceforth be the bankers of suitors in equity, claiming that any profit accruing therefrom should belong to the State. There were no individuals in the Court of Chancery to whom the profit could belong; and who was entitled to it, except the State? The Treasury therefore said — "As that is so in form at present, let it be so in substance." Nothing was really being given away to which the suitors had a right to look, and their security would be just as good in having a charge upon the Consolidated Fund as it now was in having a charge upon £2,500,000 of stock. The credit of the country would be pledged to satisfy the demands of suitors for cash paid by them into court, and the Government bound themselves to pay to the suitor, upon the direction of the court, the money to which he was entitled — always keeping the sum of £300,000 to the credit of the Accountant-General in Chancery for the purpose of satisfying current demands. The whole difference, in fact, would be that henceforth the suitors would have the State for their bankers instead of the court. His noble and learned Friend (Lord St. Leonards) said the Bill ought to have been before their Lordships earlier in the Session, and he (the Lord Chancellor) was anxious to explain how the delay had arisen. This Bill, though it originated with the Treasury, was submitted to him, and on examining it he found that there was a great deal in it which must be looked into and altered. Accordingly he placed it in the hands of the solicitor to the Suitors' Fee Fund—not, of course, that he should pronounce an opinion upon the expediency of the Bill, because the Government took upon themselves the responsibility, but in order that he, being a gentleman of extreme accuracy, and thoroughly conversant with the subject, might examine the details. Such an examination necessarily occupied many weeks; but the result was that, as he believed, there was now no risk of any mistake in the provisions of the measure. As to the several Acts of Parliament which it was proposed to repeal, they had been gone through with the same pains, and he believed that no apprehension need be felt on that score. As to the salaries of the officers being placed in the Votes, he must say that it did not appear to him that the Court of Chancery ought to claim an exemption, which was not enjoyed by other departments, from being subjected to the necessity of having the number of clerks inquired into by the Treasury, so that they might not be allowed to exceed the number requisite.

On Question, That ("now") stand part of the Motion? Resolved in the Affirmative; Bill read 2ª accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House To-morrow.

FISHERIES (IRELAND) BILL—(No. 236.)

(The Lord Dufferin.)

COMMITTEE.

Order of the Day for the House to be put into Committee, read.

Lord CAIRNS called attention to the 16th clause, of which he said he should probably feel it to be his duty to move the omission in Committee. The Act of 1863 gave power to the Commissioners of Fisheries in Ireland to order the destruction of stake nets where they deemed them to be illegal, but that power was to be exercised subject to an appeal to the Queen's Bench under a special case. As a matter of fact, a number of orders had been made by the Commissioners in accordance with the authority thus vested in them, and had, on appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench, been reversed. The Commissioners, notwithstanding, refused to grant certificates as to the legality of the fishing in those instances, and the Act of 1863 contained no provision to meet that difficulty. That being so, the present Bill proposed to enact that no mode of fishing should be legal unless the certificate of the Commissioners was obtained—thus rendering valueless by a sort of side wind the decisions of the Queen's Bench, and to declare that to be legal which the court had declared to be illegal. That was a point on which he should like to have some explanation from the Government.

House in Committee.

Clauses 1 to 15, inclusive, agreed to.

The Lord Chancellor

Clause 16 (Penalty for fishing with fixed engine without certificate of commissioners or inspectors).

Lord DUFFERIN said, that, as far as he was instructed, the clause was not open to the criticism which the noble and learned Lord had put upon it; but he thought the point which had been raised had better be dealt with on the Report.

Lord CAIRNS said, that if a clause were introduced on the Report, which would entirely save the decisions of the Court of Queen's Bench, he would be satisfied.

Lord DUFFERIN acceded to the suggestion, and the Bill passed through Committee.

An Amendment made: The Report thereof to be received To-morrow.

TRADES' UNIONS (PROTECTION OF FUNDS) BILL—(No. 226.)

(The Earl of Morley.)

COMMITTEE.

Order of the Day for the House to be put into Committee, read.

Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into a Committee."

Lord CAIRNS said, there appeared to be a misapprehension as to the object of the Bill. He understood from the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack the other night that this Bill had been brought in, because there had been certain decisions given by the courts of law under which, by reason of some technical illegality on the part of trades unions, the executive bodies of those trades unions were unable to proceed against and convict persons who had been guilty of embezzlement of their funds. He (Lord Cairns) had endeavoured to ascertain the particulars of those decisions, and he thought the noble and learned Lord had been misinformed. What he understood the courts to have decided was that where trades unions, by reason of the illegality in their rules, being in restraint of trade, were not able to register themselves as friendly societies, they could not have the benefit of that summary proceeding against their officers which friendly societies by law enjoyed. There was no difficulty in trades unions benefit societies proceeding against their officers for embezzlement, any more than other benefit societies, and it was only when their rules were in restraint of trade that they were prevented from doing so; and it had not been decided that trades unions were not entitled to the full benefit of the Act passed last Session, which enabled all societies of any kind to proceed against their officers for embezzlement of their funds. It was a very unusual kind of legislation to introduce a Bill which was to last only for one year in the face of the Report of the Commissioners on Trades Unions, whose recommendations went to this effect—that trades unions might be registered as friendly societies, provided they complied with certain conditions. It was a very unusual kind of legislation to authorize trades unions to register themselves for the purpose of recovering from their officers. There was no difficulty in trades unions recovering from their officers for embezzlement under the Act of last Session.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said, he did not think his noble and learned Friend would say that an illegal society could recover by virtue of the Act of last Session. It was held by the majority of the Judges that a trades union whose rules were in restraint of trade, and therefore illegal, could not be registered under the Friendly Societies Act. The Act of last Session could not improve that state of things in any way, and great anxiety was therefore felt in regard to this Bill, which had been brought in for a temporary purpose, while a general measure was under consideration.

Lord CAIRNS observed that the Act of last Session said that no person should be acquitted of a charge of embezzlement, on the ground that he was a partner along with those whose money had been taken. The illegality of those trades unions had nothing whatever to do with that. The Commissioners reported—

> "That the registration of trades unions might be effected through the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and it would be his duty to see that the rules and by-laws of a society claiming to be registered were unobjectionable—that is, not intended to promote those objects which we now proceed to specify as justifying, in our opinion, the refusal of registration—
>
> "1. To prevent the employment or to limit the number of apprentices.
>
> "2. To prevent the introduction, or to limit the use of machinery in any trade or manufacture.
>
> "3. To prevent any workman from taking a sub-contract or working by the piece, or working in common with men not members of the union.
>
> "4. To authorize interference, in the way of support from the funds of the union, by the council or governing body of the union, with the workmen of any other union when out on strike, or when otherwise engaged in any dispute with their employer, in any case in which such other union is an unconnected union."

In the face of that Report they were, by this Bill, going to allow to be registered as friendly societies those trades unions who might infringe every one of those four articles which he had just read.

The LORD CHANCELLOR thought his noble and learned Friend would not say that on an indictment being laid the property embezzled must not be described as the property of somebody; and it could not be set out as being the property of an illegal society.

The Earl of MORLEY said, the noble and learned Lord opposite (Lord Cairns) said the Bill flew in the face of the Report of the Commissioners. Now, at page 20 of their Report, paragraph 59, the Commissioners said—

> "It may be assumed, therefore, that the trades unions, with very few exceptions, have, by their rules and proceedings, placed their funds more or less beyond the protection of the law; and they are not altogether relieved either by the Act (31 & 32 Vict., c. 116) giving remedies to associations in cases of larceny by members thereof, or by the section in the Friendly Societies Act applicable to trade societies (18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, sec. 44) since that section applies only to societies established for 'any purpose which is not illegal.' This is a state of things which we think ought not to be allowed to continue; and we are brought therefore to the consideration of that part of your Majesty's Commission which directs us to suggest any improvements to be made in the law with respect to trades unions."

Therefore the majority of the Commissioners were distinctly of opinion that the state of things by which the funds of trades unions are very imperfectly protected by law should not be allowed to continue. It seemed to him that the Act of last year did not meet the case of the trades unions thoroughly. That Act had two objects. First, it repealed the doctrine of common law by which co-partners were not liable to be sued in case of the embezzlement of the property of the partnership. In the next place it extended to the crime of embezzlement the provisions of the Act 18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, which authorized summary prosecutions in cases of larceny and other offences. But those offences could be brought before justices of the peace in a summary way only if the defendants consented, and if the defendants objected the proceeding must be by indictment; and that being so trades unions were placed at a disadvantage. The object of the present Bill was to enable trades unions to have the same advantages as friendly societies in regard to proceeding in a summary way in cases of embezzlement or misappropriation of their funds by any of their officers. But another important point not touched by the Bill of last year was that trades unions could not recover their property in the shape of books, papers, or other documents. The present Bill would provide a remedy for that evil. He desired also to point out to their Lordships that by this Bill no sort of civil status was given to trades unions. It gave no advantages to any association for criminal purposes, nor, indeed, to any society whatever for illegal purposes, except it be in restraint of trade; but he ventured to submit that "restraint of trade" was a somewhat ambiguous term, and that there was great difference of opinion in the country as to what was "restraint of trade" and what was not. He ventured to submit that the law on this subject was at present anything but clear and precise. He trusted, therefore, their Lordships would assent to this Bill, seing that it had passed the House of Commons without any opposition whatever, and almost without discussion. If their Lordships were to pass this Bill they would be conferring great advantages on trades unions, without in any way touching those controverted questions to which the Commission had referred.

Lord CAIRNS said, the noble Lord had read a passage from the Report which pointed out certain difficulties in the way of trades unions recovering as against their officers; but the Report went on further to say that it would be the duty of the Registrar of Friendly Societies "to see that the rules and bylaws of a society claiming to be registered were unobjectionable" — that is, not intended to promote certain specified objects. By allowing, therefore, trades unions to be registered as friendly societies they would be able to recover as against their officers, provided they did not infringe any of the four cardinal points which, in the opinion of the Commissioners, would make such societies absolutely and radically illegal.

The Earl of LICHFIELD said, he desired to call attention to some remarks of the noble and learned Lord (Lord Cairns) on the second reading, because they had led to some misapprehension as to the views of the Commissioners, and he believed also as to the objects of the Government in introducing the Bill—though he had no communication with them on the subject. The remarks to which he referred were that the provisions of this Bill were not framed in accordance with the views of the Commissioners, and that the Bill had been introduced by the Government with the object of recognizing in some way those trades unions as friendly societies. These were two very important points, and he wished to call attention to an opinion which he held very strongly, that the provisions of this Bill were not at variance with the Report of the Commissioners. But first he would ask their Lordships' attention to the position of these societies, and why it was that they asked for the protection it was proposed to give them by this Bill. To obtain a correct notion of that position it was necessary to refer to certain decisions in our courts of law. In the year 1867, the case of "Hornby v. Close" was decided in the Court of Queen's Bench, and that decision was that the society, which was then prosecuting an officer for embezzling its funds, had no grounds for proceeding in consequence of its being an illegal society, through one of its rules prohibiting piece-work. The next case, that of "Farrar v. Close," was in 1868. In that case the Court of Queen's Bench decided that, although there was a rule providing for the support of members out of employment, that rule did not operate necessarily in restraint of trade; and, therefore, as the case was brought before the court, the society would have had ground for proceeding against its officer. But the case having been referred from the justices at Bradford, the Court of Queen's Bench intimated that possibly evidence might be adduced to show that this rule did operate in restraint of trade. The case was then remitted to the magistrates, and evidence was taken, from which it appeared that this rule had been made to operate in restraint of trade, by encouraging and promoting strikes. The case then came back before the Court of Queen's Bench, and the judgment of the magistrates was confirmed. Now, when this case came back before the Court of Queen's Bench it was clearly decided that a society subscribing funds for the support of strikes, and thus having a rule operating in restraint of trade, was thereby an illegal society. Now, upon this subject he must call attention to the views and recommendations of the Commissioners as contained in their Report. And here he must remind their Lordships that he was not one of those who signed the Report—that is to say, the Report of the majority. He wished to observe, however, that in the Report of the majority of the Commissioners were to be found views which, in his opinion, were in accordance with the provisions of this Bill. He would first call the attention of the noble and learned Lord to page 20, paragraph 60, in which it was said—

> "With regard to the general question of the right of workmen to combine together for determining and stipulating with their employer the terms on which only they will consent to work for him, we think that, provided the combination be perfectly voluntary, and that full liberty be left to all other workmen to undertake the work which the parties combining have refused, and that no obstruction be placed in the way of the employer resorting elsewhere in search of a supply of labour, there is no ground of justice or of policy for withholding such a right from the workmen. It cannot be doubted that a demand, backed by the resolution of a large body of workmen to decline work if the demand be not acceded to, comes with more force than that of an isolated workman; and we think that the workmen may reasonably claim to be allowed any advantage which they can derive from such concerted action in bargaining with their employer from time to time as to the terms on which they will dispose of their labour."

These were the views of the Commissioners as to the right to combine. Then, if their Lordships turned to page 22, paragraph 73, they would find what the Commissioners' recommendations were—

> "With regard to the general question of the right of combination, we are prepared to recommend, in accordance with the principles above stated, that a Bill be brought in, so far relaxing the existing law as in substance to enact that no combination of persons for the purpose of determining among themselves, or of stipulating for, the terms on which they will consent to employ or be employed, shall be unlawful by reason only that its operation would be in restraint of trade."

Now, that was a direct recommendation by the Commissioners of some such Bill as was now before their Lordships. If their Lordships turned to page 24, paragraph 78, they would find that the Commissioners said—

> "With regard to existing trades unions, we think that, subject to certain conditions, to be presently stated, they should be relieved from their present anomalous position."

And in paragraph 79 they said—

> "We notice also that societies have now facilities to apply the law against larceny and embezzlement to offences by their officers and other members coming within the recent 'Act to amend the Law relating to Larceny and Embezzlement, 31 and 32 Victoria, c. 116.' But, although some progress has thus been made towards security for the rights of members of unions, there would be advantage to the unions if they were established with the capacities, rights, and liabilities arising from a status recognized by law; and there would be advantage to the public if their proceedings were made public, and the officers of unions acting according to law had the position to which persons discharging important duties are entitled."

He entirely agreed with the last half of that paragraph, and it was because he held that view that he dissented from the conditions laid down by the Commissioners, as conditions without compliance with which no society ought to obtain the protection of the law for its funds. There were only four conditions laid down by the Commissioners, and that principle upon which the last decision of the courts was based—namely, that a society was illegal which subscribed funds in support of strikes—was not one of them. Of the four objects deemed objectionable by the Commissioners, and as justifying in their opinion the refusal of registration, the fourth and most important—relating to the support by unions, in cases of strike, of men belonging to other and unconnected unions—was not thought objectionable by two of the Commissioners, who entered a dissent upon this point at the end of the Report. The provisions of the Bill, therefore, were not at variance with the opinions or recommendations of the Commissioners. He (the Earl of Lichfield) appreciated the difficulties of the Government in their endeavours to define what should make a society illegal, and pronounced the four conditions quoted by the noble and learned Lord (Lord Cairns) inconsistent with paragraph 73 of the Report, in which the Commissioners say that societies should not be held illegal on account only of any rule operating in restraint of trade. He felt it would be also inconsistent to declare illegal societies having rules to limit apprenticeship or to prohibit piecework, when other societies recognized as legal had rules quite as unsound upon economical grounds. The noble and learned Lord had hinted the other night that this Bill was designed to recognize trades union societies by a side wind, and in that way to give them all the advantages of the Friendly Societies Act. If that were so, he would be the first to oppose it—and, moreover, the Bill would have been opposed by the trades unions themselves. The Bill simply gave trades unions the advantages conferred on friendly societies by the 44th clause of the Friendly Societies Act — that summary mode of procedure in cases of fraud so necessary to such associations. Having given much consideration to the matter, he was extremely grateful to the Government for having introduced a measure calculated to do away with what he felt to be a great injustice; for trades unions were, after all, simply associations of persons combined together for the purpose of promoting their own interests—the uniform object of most associations. Why, therefore, should these trade societies be deprived of the legal protection to their property which every other person in the country possessed? He confessed he could not understand upon what ground of expediency or policy their Lordships could refuse such an equitable demand, so long as those societies conducted their affairs in a manner unstained by anything criminal. If their Lordships believed those societies to be criminal or manifestly illegal, they ought not to rest satisfied with punishing them by simply withholding from them that legal protection which all other societies possessed; but they ought to go much further, and boldly declare that such societies should be altogether prohibited. He trusted their Lordships would assent to the Bill.

Lord PENZANCE thought the noble and learned Lord opposite (Lord Cairns) took an extravagant view of the case. The Bill simply proposed to confer upon trades unions for one year—during which a more efficient measure might be matured—the same legal means of protecting their funds from fraud and embezzlement as was enjoyed by friendly societies. The noble and learned Lord opposite said they had the power to protect their funds from fraud already under the statute of last year. Without inquiring whether this was so or not, he (Lord Penzance) wished simply to point out that the only object of this Bill was to give them a more efficient and ready means of access to that power—such means as the law already gave to friendly societies. It might be a question whether it should be pronounced unwise and unjust to say trades unions should not recover in cases of fraud; but surely it would be still more unwise if, having that power, the Legislature should refuse to give them a ready means of availing themselves of the remedies the law gave them. Looking at the limited time the law would operate, and the limited nature of its provisions, he could not conceive what objection could be raised to, it even from the standpoint of his noble and learned Friend opposite.

Motion agreed to.

House in Committee accordingly.

Bill reported, without Amendment; and to be read 3ª To-morrow.

SEEDS ADULTERATION BILL.

(The Earl of Devon.)

(NO. 242.) SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

The Earl of DEVON, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, that its purpose was to repress by more effectual enactments than those at present in force the practice of adulterating seeds in fraud of the purchasers and to the great detriment of agriculture. As to the prevalence and extent of the practice he would only refer their Lordships to the evidence taken before the Select Committee to which the Bill had been referred by the House of Commons. The practices against which it was directed, and which prevailed extensively, were the sale of seed which had been "killed" by the action of fire, or by other artificial means by which it was deprived of the power of germination, and the sale of spurious seed which had been fraudulently coloured in imitation of genuine seed. Adulteration was carried on principally in turnip seed and clover seed, and in the interests of agriculture, and as affecting the food supplies of the country, it was important that it should be stopped. The penalty imposed for the commission of either of these kinds of fraud was for the first offence a penalty not exceeding £5; and for the second and any subsequent a penalty not exceeding £50; and in the latter cases the court were authorized in addition to cause the offender's name, business, place of abode, and the particulars of his offence to be published in any newspaper or in any other manner, at the offender's own expense.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(The Earl of Devon.)

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY said, he rather doubted the expediency of multiplying offences for the purpose of preventing practices such as those described. It might be that seeds were adulterated, and that farmers suffered in consequence; but he believed that in most cases they might by reasonable precaution protect themselves. He would not offer any opposition to the Bill, for though he did not think it likely to be of any particular use, he thought it would be harmless. In Committee he would propose certain Amendments, which he had submitted to his noble Friend opposite, and the object of which was to simplify the provisions of the Bill. He would take care that the Amendments were placed in the hands of their Lordships before the Bill went into Committee.

Motion agreed to.

Bill read 2ª accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

DUBLIN FREEMEN COMMISSION BILL.

(The Lord Lurgan.)

(NO. 210.) SECOND READING.

On Order of the Day for the Second Reading,

LORD REDESDALE said, he felt it his duty to move that the Order be discharged. Their Lordships were aware of the care he had always taken to prevent the Business of the House at the close of the Session being conducted in a manner injurious to the character of the House. He thought it of the greatest possible importance that the House should never be taken by surprise by any measure, and particularly by one of great importance. This Bill came to their Lordships some time ago without any notice of its being a Government measure; and now, when many of their Lordships had left the House for the Session, notice was given—not by a Member of the Government—of an intention to proceed with it. Whether the step was taken with the concurrence of the Government he did not know; but, whether it was or not, he must say that this was a Bill which ought not to be proceeded with at this period of the Session. It was of considerable importance in point of principle, and it was entirely without precedent. There had never before been an inquiry with respect to one class of voters in a borough. He would put it to their Lordships to consider how unfair such a proceeding would be in itself. Suppose a Judge had reported that bribery had prevailed in a particular ward of a borough, would that justify an inquiry with regard to that ward alone, with a view to its disfranchisement? Their Lordships might feel that this was a Bill affecting the other House, and that it therefore called for some concession from this; but on that very ground he contended that the Bill required particular attention. They all knew that where party feeling ran high, things might be done for a party object, although they were ostensibly done in the name of justice. For this reason their Lordships ought to be jealous of any action of an unusual character in a matter of this kind. Their Lordships could not help knowing that a large body of voters in Dublin were supposed to entertain views which were not in favour with a majority of the present House of Commons; therefore, their Lordships ought to be particularly careful what they did in a matter of this kind, and ought to see that equal justice was done as between the two parties. If there had been any precedent for this Bill, and if it had come before their Lordships under ordinary circumstances, it would have been open to fair discussion; but, considering what had taken place upon the subject, as well as the history of the Bill, and the time of the Session at which it had come up to their Lordships, it was a serious quostion whether the Bill should be allowed to proceed further. The question of the Dublin election was discussed in that House on the 8th of June, when their Lordships were asked to concur in an Address to the Crown sent up by the Commons, praying for the appointment of a Commission to make inquiry into the existence of corrupt practices at the last Dublin election. In the course of discussion it was shown that the Report of the Judge did not authorize such a proceeding, and their Lordships did not concur in the Address. In the other House of Parliament, on the 17th of June, a Bill was introduced for disfranchising the freemen of Dublin; but that was thought rather a strong proceeding, and therefore, on the 1st of July, leave was given to introduce this Bill for a Commission. It came up to their Lordships' House on the 22nd of July; and from that date to the 30th no notice was taken of it, although the Bill had been introduced into the other House by the Attorney General for Ireland and the Chief Secretary for Ireland. Under such circumstances most of their Lordships must have believed that the Bill was dropped, and that it was not intended to proceed with it. It was extremely objectionable that a Government measure should pass without notice for so many days at the close of the Session, if it was intended to proceed with it, and such a proceeding was calculated to bring discredit on their Lordships' House. For these reasons he moved that the Order for the second reading be discharged.

Moved, "That the Order of the Day for the Second Reading be discharged."—(The Chairman of Committees.)

EARL GRANVILLE said, as to this Bill reaching their Lordships at a late period of the Session, the noble Lord the Chairman of Committees had shown that it did not leave the House of Commons until a very late period; and, as to many noble Lords having left town, there had been above an average attendance that evening; therefore he could not attach the slightest importance to the reasons alleged for rejecting the Bill before the second reading was moved, and he must urge their Lordships to consider the Bill on its merits. He entirely repudiated the idea that the Government was actuated by party motives; and he could not conceive how that stigma could have been applied to the Government if the noble Lord himself had been entirely free from such motives—particularly as the Government had left the Bill to be taken up in that House by a Peer who did not belong to the Administration.

LORD CAIRNS said, he would not go into the merits of the Bill, which everyone must admit was one of very great gravity. It proposed ex post facto legislation and legislation without precedent. The Bill came up to this House on the 22nd of July; it was now the 2nd of August; during that interval it might have been carried through all its stages if their Lordships had approved it; and now a number of noble Lords, and especially those connected with Ireland, had left London having fairly concluded that the Bill would not be proceeded with. It was not right that such a measure should be brought under their consideration after the Appropriation Bill had been introduced into the other House.

On Question ? their Lordships divided:—Contents 32; Not-Contents 33: Majority 1.

Resolved in the Negative.

Order of the Day read accordingly.

LORD LURGAN, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time said, that it had been carefully considered and fully debated in "another place," and on two occasions had been carried by large majorities. He was aware that the Bill was objected to as a piece of exceptional legislation, and that it was said that the usual course was to act on an Address from both Houses of Parliament. But that course had been adopted in the other House, and their Lordships had declined to join in the Address, owing to some alleged informality in the Judge's Report. The matter had for the time dropped; but that could not be accepted as a final settlement of the question, and the present Bill was introduced, being simply a Bill for the appointment of Commissioners to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices among the freemen electors of the City of Dublin. It was based on the Report of the learned Judge who tried the petition, before whom an immense number of witnesses were examined, and who reported that he had reason to believe that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed among the freemen. This was certainly a grave charge against them; and, supposing it for a moment to be true, he did not see how another election could be held until after full inquiry—for surely it would be worse than ridiculous to give these freemen, who had thus unworthily exercised the franchise, an opportunity of again disgracing, not only themselves, but also, indirectly, the whole constituency of the metropolis of Ireland. The freemen were undoubtedly a large portion of the constituency of Dublin, numbering between a fourth and a fifth of the whole body. Under present circumstances he would offer no opinion respecting them; but any noble Lord who wished to learn more of their proceedings at contested elections could read the report of the proceedings at the late trial of the election petition. If all there stated were true, it was quite clear that a case was made out for inquiry and exposure. If, on the other hand, there had been any misapprehension or misrepresentation, it was incumbent on those who agreed with him, and doubly incumbent on noble Lords opposite, who had always found these freemen firm allies, to give them the opportunity, which this Bill afforded, of vindicating their character by an inquiry before Commissioners in whom the utmost reliance might be placed. On these grounds he ventured to ask their Lordships to assent to the second reading of the Bill.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(The Lord Lurgan.)

EARL BEAUCHAMP said, the Bill involved a principle which ought not to be sanctioned by the House, and he would therefore move an Amendment that it be read a second time this day three months. Last year an Act had been passed after considerable discussion, putting an end to the trial of election petitions by Committees of the other House. Now, it was because the Report of the learned Judge who tried the Dublin election petition did not conform to the condition of the Act, which would alone justify the issue of a Commission, that their Lordships had refused to concur in the Address which had been sent up from the other House on the subject in the early part of the Session. That Justice Keogh was a man who was likely to commit an informality, no one who knew the distinguished reputation of that learned Judge was likely to believe; and if he had been of opinion that extensive bribery prevailed at the late election for Dublin he was not the person to shrink from giving expression to that opinion in his Report. No objection, he might add, had been made by the Members of the Conservative party in the other House to the issue of Commissions in those cases in which the Judge had reported that extensive bribery prevailed, and to endeavour to make such cases the subject of party contests, and to enter upon the course of legislation proposed by the Government would, he contended, be to run the risk of returning to a state of things in every way discreditable to Parliamentary Government, when almost every contested election was made the subject of a Parliamentary battle. Without wishing to say anything offensive to noble Lords opposite, he must be allowed to point out that in the division which had just been taken the majority against the Motion of his noble Friend the Chairman of Committees for the discharge of the Bill was only 1, and that if such questions were to be decided in that sort of way the public out-of-doors could scarcely be expected to regard the decision of the House with any great respect—seeing especially that those who voted in the majority were, for the most part, composed of Members of the Government whose official duties compelled them to stay in town. As to the freemen against whom the Bill was directed, they amounted, he believed, in all to 2,700; and was it right, he would ask, because charges were brought against some 250 of that number, to pass against the whole of them a measure which could not be regarded otherwise than as a measure of pains and penalties? Those 2,700 electors comprised a most respectable class of men, and he for one protested against having the innocent confounded with the guilty in the way proposed, and a stigma cast upon them which they by no means deserved. It should, moreover, be borne in mind that the Act of last Session provided a remedy in cases of corruption. The Attorney General might have prosecuted in those cases; and if he had done so, and it had been proved the law was not sufficient to meet them, then the Act of last Session might have been supplemented by further legislation. Nothing, however, so far as he was aware, had been done by the Government to vindicate the majesty of the law by prosecuting those whose names had been laid before them as guilty of bribery; and he for one objected to the ex post facto legislation which they now invited the House to sanction—legislation, too, which would violate the fundamental principle that a Member of the House of Commons represented the whole of his constituency and not a fractional part of it, whether represented by freemen or lodgers or any other class of voters. For those reasons he should move that the Bill be read a second time that day three months.

An Amendment moved to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months.")—(The Earl Beauchamp.)

The Earl of KIMBERLEY said, that if he might venture to express an opinion with respect to the credit of the House to which the noble Earl (Earl Beauchamp) had alluded, he did not think it would be consulted by a refusal to pass the present Bill, and thus far placing their Lordships in the position of protectors of corrupt voters. What was the exact point involved in the measure? The noble Earl seemed in his speech completely to overlook the fact that Mr. Justice Keogh, who tried the election petition, had reported that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed among the freemen of Dublin at the last election—a fact which, by no less an authority than the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack, had been deemed sufficient ground for praying the Crown to issue a Commission of Inquiry. Their Lordships refused to concur with the other House in the Address praying for the issue of such a Commission, because it was pointed out that there might be some doubt—which he supposed was what his noble Friend behind meant when he spoke of an informality—as to whether such a Report as Mr. Justice Keogh had made entitled the House to vote an Address to the Crown. That was a technical difficulty; but looking to the spirit of the Act of last Session he felt sure that the noble Lord opposite would feel that it would be absurd that Parliament should be precluded from dealing with the case of a corrupt class of voters, merely because they happened to be supporters of the one political party or the other in the State. Mr. Justice Keogh, at the end of his judgment, said that it was proved by what appeared to him most conclusive evidence, direct and circumstantial, that the freemen of the City of Dublin had been shown to a great extent to be corrupt voters, and that he would leave the House of Commons to deal with their case and with the constituency as affected by it. What could be more clear than that Mr. Justice Keogh contemplated Parliamentary action in that case? The clear intention of the Act and of Mr. Justice Keogh's judgment was that that corruption should not pass without notice. He therefore trusted that their Lordships would not follow the advice given them to reject that Bill.

Lord CAIRNS maintained, in opposition to the noble Earl (the Earl of Kimberley) that there was no question of technicality or informality raised in the discussion that took place on the proposed Address in their Lordships' House. The objection raised was that the Act of Parliament had not been complied with, and that therefore there was no power to address the Crown; and on that ground their Lordships refused to concur in the Address. The Bill was very objectionable on the ground that it proposed ex post facto legislation, and that upon a subject to which of all others that kind of legislation ought not to be applied. He looked upon the Act of last year as an extremely valuable one, and as effecting one of the greatest improvements ever made in election law; and it was by that Act that proceedings relating to elections ought to be governed; and he maintained that the resort to special Acts of Parliament to deal with cases was the most dangerous of all undertakings in which Parliament could engage. If they legislated to-day specially with the Dublin election after it had taken place, they must legislate to-morrow specially with some other election after it had been held. And if they pursued that course—although he did not suggest that any person was actuated by party motives in that or any other case—the consequence would in the long run be that they would get into that line of action which Parliament years ago avowed its desire to abandon—namely, that of dealing with particular cases in a way which excited the party feeling and prejudice of those who engaged in such legislation. It was from that dilemma they were extricated by the Act of last year, and it was in that direction that the present Bill proposed to make a relapse. On that ground he objected to the measure.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said, he was extremely surprised at the opposition now offered to the Bill. When, on a former occasion, their Lordships were requested to join in an Address which the House of Commons was prepared to adopt under the Act of last Session, it was said to be dangerous to take that course, because, should it turn out that the Report of the learned Judge did not justify such an Address, in what a position would the learned Judge and the Commissioners be placed if they attempted to commit anybody by virtue of that Act, and if it were found that by committing any person they exceeded the powers given in the Act? He had not been prepared to face the possibility of there being such a difficulty on the part of those who conducted the inquiry—so that they would have had to act under very considerable disadvantage. And what did his noble and learned Friend (Lord Cairns) say then? Why, that that was not the right course to take—that they had other remedies; that they might have a Committee of the House of Commons, or they might bring in a Bill. The late Chancellor of the Exchequer, in "another place," took exactly the same line and recommended a Bill. Again, it was said that this was ex post facto legislation; but a Committee of the House of Commons had examined into the corruption of the freemen of Yarmouth, and a Bill was afterwards brought in disfranchising them. Mr. Justice Keogh had found extensive bribery to exist among a large class of the constituency, consisting of 2,700 persons: about 270 cases of gross corruption had been proved against the Dublin freemen; The House of Commons, being anxious to preserve the purity of its elections, but at the same time wishing to avoid party bias, concurred in resigning its power to deal with these matters by its own Committees, and passed an Act by which such questions should be investigated by the Judges. Well, that new method of investigation had been adopted; and when about one-tenth part of a large class of voters had been found by a learned Judge guilty of flagrant corruption, their Lordships would place themselves in a strange position if, in opposition to the desire of the other House to purge itself of that gross corruption, they would not allow any further step to be taken for its punishment.

On Question, That ("now") stand part of the Motion? their Lordships divided:—Contents 29; Not-Contents 27: Majority 2.

Resolved in the Affirmative; Bill read 2ª accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House To-morrow.

EDUCATION BILL. [H.L.]

A Bill to enable Town Councils to promote Education in England and Wales—Was presented by The Lord STRATHEDEN; read 1ª. (No. 259.)

House adjourned at half past Eight o'clock, till To-morrow, half past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, 2nd August, 1869.

MINUTES.]—SELECT COMMITTEE—Report—Despatch of Business in Parliament [No. 386].

PUBLIC BILLS—Resolution in Committee—Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan (Guarantee)*.

Ordered — First Reading — Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan (Guarantee)* [253]; Broughty Ferry Provisional Order Confirmation* [254]; Contagious Diseases* [255]; Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c.* [256].

Second Reading — Bishops Resignation [241]; Harbour of Galle Loan* [250]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment* [244]; East India Loan* [251]; Consolidated Fund (Appropriation); Prevention of Gaming (Scotland) [248].

Committee — Parochial Schools (Scotland) (re-comm.) [215]—R.P.

Committee—Report—Dividends on Public Stocks* [247].

Considered as amended—Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) [238]; Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment* [227].

Third Reading — Expiring Laws Continuance* [245]; Inclosure Awards (County Palatine of Durham)* [210], and passed.

Withdrawn—Heritable Rights (re-comm.)* [234].

HERTS CONSTABULARY.

QUESTION.

MR. C. REED said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether Inspector Young, of the Herts Constabulary, was recently removed from his office upon a well-founded charge of exceeding his duty under circumstances of peculiar aggravation; whether, notwithstanding his dismissal, he has been permitted to discharge his accustomed duties; and, whether, it is true that he has been re-instated in the office of Inspector in the town of Hitchin, where the offence was committed?

MR. BRUCE, in reply, said, he believed the facts, as stated by his hon. Friend were substantially correct. This inspector had performed an act exceeding his authority under the circumstances mentioned. He was suspended by the local bench of magistrates and re-instated by those of the county, he (Mr. Bruce) presumed on a consideration of the facts as known to them. He must remind his hon. Friend that, as Home Secretary, he had no power whatever over appointments or removals of members of the county constabulary.

ARMY—SOLDIERS' EMPLOYMENT.

QUESTION.

Dr. BREWER said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for War, If the Government have satisfactory accounts of the results of the industrial employment of Soldiers in their leisure time at the various Military Depôts where the system has been allowed; and if so, whether he will extend the advantage of this system to the Soldiers in Camp at Colchester?

Mr. CARDWELL said, in reply, that very satisfactory accounts had been received of the system of soldiers' employment to which the hon. Member referred. He was very anxious to extend the system as far as possible. He knew no reason why it should not be applied to Colchester, and he hoped it would soon be applied.

EGYPT—SUEZ CANAL.

QUESTION.

Mr. GOURLEY said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether he has received any official information as to the probable navigable depth of water expected in and through the Suez Canal; and when it is to be opened for general commercial purposes?

Mr. OTWAY, in reply, said, he would give his hon. Friend all the information on the matter of which he was possessed, only premising that it was not official. Mr. Fowler, the engineer, who was in Egypt at the beginning of the present year, in an account of the canal, published in The Times on the 1st of February, describes its depth as 26 ft. He says—

> "With minute exceptions the whole of the canal is now being excavated, and completed according to one or other of the following sections:—The first section is 22 miles in length (the difficult part of the work), 196 ft. in width at the surface of the water, and 26 ft. deep for 72 ft. at bottom. The second section is 77 miles in length, 327 ft. in width at surface, and a similar depth of 26ft., for a similar width of 72 ft. at the bottom."

They had heard from other sources, however, that the depth did not exceed 18 ft. It had also been stated that the opening of the canal had been fixed by the company for the 17th of November next, though there was reason to doubt whether the works would be sufficiently advanced by that date to warrant the canal being then opened for general navigation.

IRELAND—GLEBES AND GLEBE HOUSES.—QUESTION.

Mr. STACPOOLE said, he wished to ask the Chief Secretary for Ireland, Whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to introduce a Bill early next Session to give facilities for the purchase of Glebes and the erection of Glebe Houses for the Ministers of all Religious Denominations in Ireland, and to enable Loans to be advanced for that purpose by the Board of Works or other public body in Ireland?

Mr. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE: Yes, Sir, the Government do hope to bring in such a Bill next Session.

RAILWAY GUARDS AND PASSENGERS COMMUNICATION.—QUESTION.

Mr. J. G. TALBOT said, he wished to ask the President of the Board of Trade, How soon the various Railway Companies will comply with the provisions of the Act 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 22, requiring them to provide means of communication between the passengers and the servants of the company; and whether he could inform the House what the nature of such communication will be?

Mr. BRIGHT: Sir, I believe I am able to state that from yesterday, that is, from the 1st of this month, on all lines to which the Act applies there will be some mode of communication between the passengers and the drivers and the guards. There are three forms of communication by way of rope, and one, I think, which is managed upon the electric principle, which have been sanctioned. Of course, the Board of Trade is not able to say positively whether these plans will be perfect and absolutely satisfactory; but they meet so entirely the view of those most competent to judge in regard to these matters, that the Board of Trade has sanctioned them, and hope they will do all that the Act of Parliament had in view.

MR. J. G. TALBOT: Is the communication really in existence?

MR. BRIGHT: The day fixed was the 1st of August. I travelled by a train about a week ago, and there was no mode of communication. But I believe the communication is found to-day on all the lines to which the Act refers.

ARMY—SPITHEAD FORTS.—QUESTION.

CAPTAIN BEAUMONT said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for War that, inasmuch as a considerable section of the House is opposed to the outlay contingent on the Spithead Forts being constructed to mount two tiers of guns in place of one, Whether he will be willing to re-consider the propriety of reducing the scale on which the Forts on the Horse Sand and No Man's Land Sand are proposed to be constructed, and so effect a saving of £225,000?

MR. CARDWELL, in reply, said he hoped the House would remember that in preparing the Bill which had received its approval the whole amount had been reduced below the amount included in the Act of 1867. It was reduced by £491,000 below the estimate of Sir Frederick Grey, and if £75,000 allowed by the Act for unforeseen contingencies were included, the total reduction of the amount was £566,000; and the sum now voted was below the Schedule of 1867 by £85,000. This reduction had been accomplished by giving up works not yet commenced, and postponing other works which might be considered at a future time. The smaller forts had been reduced to one tier, and with regard to the larger forts, it had been considered more truly economical to construct them of two tiers as originally designed. He hoped the hon. and gallant Member would be satisfied with his assurance that the works would be conducted with a strict regard to economy.

PATENT LAWS.—QUESTION.

MR. MACFIE said, he wished to ask the President of the Board of Trade, Whether, among the measures contemplated next Session is one for the Reform of the Patent Laws; and, if so, whether it is to be preceded by an Inquiry by a Committee or a Royal Commission?

MR. BRIGHT: Mr. Speaker, I believe every Member of the Government agrees with my hon. Friend that some considerable change at any rate is necessary to be made in the Patent Laws. I am not sure how many, or whether any, are of opinion that there ought not to be any Patent Laws at all. But notwithstanding their agreement as to the desirableness of some alteration, it would be very imprudent, I think, for me to pledge the Government to bring in a measure of this nature when there is so great a difference of opinion upon it, and when it seems impossible for any two men to agree as to the change that should be made. At the same time, if we come to a question of a Committee or of a Royal Commission, we are in the same difficulty, as we are at a loss to know whether the inquiry should be made as to what amendment should take place in the law, or whether there should be any patent system at all. I can only conclude by saying that, admitting with the hon. Member for Leith that the question is one which requires to be attended to whenever there is time to attend to it, I am quite unable to say that the Government will bring in a Bill next Session. If my hon. Friend were to propose a Committee of this House it would be a very reasonable proposition, to which the Members of the Government and this House would probably agree.

MR. MACFIE said, he would give notice that, if the Government did not bring in a Bill, he would bring the subject before the House early next Session, with the view to the appointment of a Committee or a Royal Commission.

INDIA—PRINCE AZEEM JAH.
QUESTION.

COLONEL SYKES said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for India, Whether the Secretary of State for India had not determined to set aside the sum of £150,000 so far back as April, 1867, and, subsequently, a further sum of £120,000, for the purpose of liquidating certain claims on his Highness Prince Azeem Jah Bahadoor, Nawaub of the Carnatic, and whether all or any part of such liabilities have been so liquidated; and, if not, when such liquidation is likely to be made?

Mr. GRANT DUFF said, in reply, that the Secretary of State in Council had granted a sum of £150,000 for the payment of Azeem Jah's debts; and at a subsequent period he lent Azeem Jah the sum of £120,000 for the same purpose, to be recovered from him by instalments. The last telegram which the Government had received on the subject, dated July 13th last, informed them that the liquidation was progressing satisfactorily, and approaching its close.

INDIA—CALCUTTA PORT DUES.

QUESTION.

Mr. ARMITSTEAD said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for India, Whether it is true that a Bill has been brought into the Bengal Council, proposing to raise the Port Dues at Calcutta, already so excessive, from four annas per ton to eight annas; and, whether this serious advance of charge has been approved by the Home Government?

Mr. GRANT DUFF said, in reply, that a Bill had been brought into the Bengal Legislative Council for raising the port dues of Calcutta, but the Government had received no official information about it. In consequence, however, of the receipt of certain memorials, they had already communicated with the Government of India on the subject.

INDIA—RAILWAYS.—QUESTION.

Sir STAFFORD NORTHCOTE said, he wished to ask his hon. Friend opposite a Question, of which he had privately given him notice, Whether there will be any objection to lay on the Table any Official Correspondence with reference to the system of construction of Railways in India, not included in the Papers presented last week; and, whether any dissents have been recorded by Members of the Council to the Despatch of the Duke of Argyll of the 15th of July?

Mr. GRANT DUFF said, in reply, that there would be no objection to lay the correspondence upon the table. As at present advised, he believed that no such dissents had been recorded. He proposed, however, to answer the Question to-morrow.

PARLIAMENT—PUBLIC BUSINESS.

Mr. GLADSTONE: Having reference to the present state of Public Business, I beg to move that Government Orders of the Day have precedence on Tuesday and Wednesday, August 3 and 4.

Mr. BERESFORD HOPE said, he apprehended that the Motion just made by his right hon. Friend would be a sore blow and heavy discouragement to the Bill which the learned Common Serjeant had been pushing with so much pertinacity during the Session—he meant the Bill for the abolition of sisters-in-law. He, therefore, begged to ask the hon. and learned Member whether, under present circumstances, he still desired to prosecute the Bill; or whether he would not give a holiday to those who were bound to come down, whether to support or to oppose the measure, by moving that the Order be discharged?

Mr. T. CHAMBERS said, he was unable to join in the vivacious tone adopted by the hon. Member. On the contrary, he should be inclined to adopt a very different tone, remembering the enormous number of persons whose dearest interests were involved in the question which he had the honour of raising. He quite agreed that the Government, in the actual state of Public Business, could not have taken any other course than that which had just been adopted by his right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, and he also agreed that it was impossible to prosecute the Bill with any hope of success during the brief remainder of the Session. In the name, however, of the thousands interested in the provisions of the Bill, he begged to thank those hon. Members who had supported it in the face of opposition carried beyond its usual limits, in the use made of the forms of the House. The history of the present Session afforded every encouragement to the belief that in another year the Bill would be passed successfully. There were, first, the large majorities by which the Bill had been supported; then, the most able speech in its favour of the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade, and, still more, the support given to it by the Prime Minister himself; finally, there was the progress of public sentiment in its favour which had shown itself, and nowhere more remarkably than in Scotland. Regretting that, through the action of particular Members, the Bill had been defeated this Session. he should take the earliest possible opportunity of re-introducing the measure next Session.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

LORDS' AMENDMENTS.

Amendments considered.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said, he wished to express his great satisfaction with the manner in which the Bill had been dealt with by the other House of Parliament. They had not interfered with its leading principles or main provisions. The Amendments which had been made were chiefly verbal, and he was free to admit that the greater part of those Amendments were improvements. There were some to which that expression did not, in his opinion, altogether apply; but remembering that they had been introduced by noble Lords of great ability, eminence, and experience, he did not feel inclined to set up his own view in opposition to their Lordships; and hon. Members, as a rule, would, doubtless, share that feeling. There were three Amendments, however, which he thought it would be advisable to invite their Lordships to re-consider. The first was on the 5th clause, and related to the definition of a partnership, association, or company. As the clause left this House, the definition was "a partnership, association, or company corporate, or registered under the Companies' Act of 1862." Their Lordships had substituted the words "or liable to be wound up;" which made a very serious difference. A partnership of seven members was liable to be wound up; and if they adopted this Amendment, men, by simply taking several clerks into partnership with them, so as to make up the required number, would be able to carry on business as fraudulently as they pleased, and still not be subjected to the bankruptcy law. He could not help thinking that this point had not been sufficiently considered, and he should therefore ask the House to disagree on this matter to the Lords' Amendment. The next was in sub-section 3 of Clause 6, line 20. The clause originally stood thus—

> "That the debtor has, with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, done any of the following things—namely, departed out of England, or being out of England, remained out of England, or departed from his dwelling-house or otherwise absented himself; or begun to keep his house; or suffered himself to be outlawed."

The Lords had inserted the words "being a trader;" from which it would follow that such acts might be done by persons who were non-traders. That was a change in the law, as established in 1861, when it was expressly declared to be an act of bankruptcy for non-traders to depart the realm with intent to defeat or delay their creditors, and it seemed to him that the change was not for the better. He should, therefore, move to disagree to these words in line 20. He was prepared, however, to meet their Lordships half-way by inserting those words after the word "or," in line 23, the effect of which would be that the mere leaving the house by a non-trader would not constitute an act of bankruptcy. That was a fair compromise. He trusted that their Lordships would see the force of the arguments that had occurred to him, and that they would not insist upon the Amendments to which he objected. He proposed to add words to Clause 8 to limit the power of the County Courts trying causes under the Act to the extent of their present jurisdiction. There were one or two other technical matters with which he did not propose to trouble the House, in making that statement, and he now proposed to proceed with the consideration of the Lords' Amendments.

Amendment proposed,

> In page 2, line 20, after the word "debtor" to omit the words "being a trader," and insert those words in line 23 after the word "or."—(The Attorney General.)

MR. MORLEY said, it would be better to restore the words of the clause as it stood when the Bill left that House. He could see no reason for the distinction between the trader and the non-trader.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL explained that by agreeing to the compromise he had suggested they would maintain the existing law; and the words of the clause had acquired a technical signification in the case of traders. He should have preferred to have seen the clause pass as it went to the Upper House; but what he proposed would make very little practical difference, and it would facilitate the passing of the Bill.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 14 (Meeting of creditors for appointment of persons to administer bankrupt's property).

Mr. MORLEY said, the point of the arrangement made in the Bill was, that having appointed a trustee the creditors should appoint a committee, consisting of fit persons, not exceeding five in number. The Lords had struck out the word "shall" in reference to the appointment of the committee, and inserted the word "may" in its place. It was important that the appointment of a committee should be imperative, and he thought the Lords' Amendment should be disagreed to, and the original word re-inserted.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said, he would accept the suggestion; and the word "shall" was re-inserted in place of "may."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MORLEY said, he submitted to the Amendment, providing for rent due to the landlord, under protest, as he did not see why a landlord should have a preference over other creditors, to which he had before objected.

Committee appointed, "to draw up Reasons to be assigned to the Lords for disagreeing to the Amendments to which this House hath disagreed:"—Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Jessel, Mr. Morley, and Mr. Rathbone:—To withdraw immediately; Three to be the quorum.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) (re-committed) BILL—[Lords]—[Bill 215.]

COMMITTEE.

[Progress 27th July.]

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BRUCE said, he wished to state to the Committee the course which the Government intended to pursue with regard to the division which took place last week with reference to the interpretation of the word "heritors" in Clause 1. The House was aware that, under the Bill, no change was proposed to be made in the constitution of the Governing Bodies of the parochial schools, until the conversion of those schools into national schools. That provision was inserted according to the recommendation of the Commissioners, and it was understood that, upon the whole, the recommendation met with the approval of the Scotch Members on both sides. Acting upon that belief, the Government had left that provision untouched. But when the Bill was last in Committee, although on a division the clause as it stood was carried by a majority, he understood that in the minority was a considerable majority of the Scotch Members, and it was said by the Lord Advocate that abstractedly he fully concurred with those who opposed the interpretation clause as it stood in the Bill, but that he waived his objection, as the provision in question was the result of a compromise. On consideration of this matter, the Government being most anxious that this measure should become law this Session—they were of opinion that they would best consult the feelings of the large majority of the Scotch Members, as well as of Scotch people generally, if they adopted the proposal which was in substance made by the hon. Member for Edinburgh (Mr. M'Laren), that restored the heritors to the position which they occupied before the Act of 1803—in fact, to vest in all heritors who contributed to the support of the schools a share in the management. The effect of this would be that the parochial schools would be no longer included in the operation of the Bill, and no provision would be made for their conversion into national schools. If the Committee would adopt this suggestion a large number of Amendments would disappear, and the progress of the Bill would be greatly facilitated. The clauses necessary to give effect to this arrangement would have to be adopted on the Report. He hoped that this concession on the part of the Government would be received by the Committee as an earnest of their desire to give effect to the Bill during the present Session. There would remain only one question of great difficulty and importance, and that is the question raised by the 66th clause, as to terms under which denominational schools may, under certain circumstances, be permitted. With respect to this question, also, the Government had taken into their consideration the express desire of this House that some limit should be placed, if possible, on the action of the Commissioners, and when that clause was before the Committee, the Government would state what these limits would be. Under these circumstances, he hoped they would have the assistance of the Committee in pressing forward this measure with speed. Of course, it was not desired that questions involving so much of importance should be disposed of lightly, or without discussion; but he trusted that the discussion which might take place would be conducted with the full conviction that the measure could only be carried during the present Session of Parliament by the exercise on the part of hon. Members of much self-command in the duration of their speeches, and that they would so conduct the business that the Bill might pass through Committee that evening, leaving for the succeeding night the discussion of the very important questions which might arise on the Report.

SIR ROBERT ANSTRUTHER said, he should endeavour to exercise the self-command enjoined by the right hon. Gentleman; but he thought it desirable that Scotch Members should express their opinions upon the course the Government had pursued. It was impossible not to acknowledge that the concessions made by the Government on the points referred to were of the utmost importance. They had conceded that the point of the old parochial schools of Scotland should be managed on this broad principle, which he believed this House would adopt, and which he believed no other House would controvert —namely, that those should manage the schools who paid for them. That was a very reasonable demand; and although it was refused last Tuesday, he congratulated the Government upon having conceded what they unwisely refused last Tuesday. They had, by the means adverted to by the right hon. Gentleman, got the whole of the large sum paid by the heritors, amounting to £48,000 a year, for the purpose of education, and it was satisfactory to think that this large sum would be, for all future time, set apart for the education of the people of Scotland. He did not pretend to say that there were not many points on which serious discussion might not arise; but he would say that the concessions made by the Government were of such a nature that he thought it would be very unwise on their part to refuse to pass the Bill.

MR. ORR EWING said, that anyone who had read the Preamble of the Bill would see how different was the measure they had now to discuss from that which was originally introduced. They were now told that the parochial schools were to be exempted from the operation of the Act — that they were now to have the power of converting them into national schools; but that schools which now afforded one-half of the education given in Scotland were to be kept from the operation of the Government Bill. Could this be called a national system? The hon. Baronet (Sir Robert Anstruther) had said that his great reason for withdrawing his opposition to the Bill was that the burden formerly imposed on the heritors for the maintenance of the old parochial schools—a burden to which they had been too long solely subject—was to be continued. Now, he thought the retention of this burden would be most unfair; and unless the Lord Advocate gave a pledge that he would deduct a sum of money, equivalent to the sum now assessed on the heritors, for the maintenance of the old parochial schools from the new assessment that might be necessary for the building of the new schools, and unless the Lord Advocate also undertook that the old parochial schools which belonged to the Free Church of Scotland were not to be taken over and become national schools, he thought the measure ought to be withdrawn.

MR. SINCLAIR AYTOUN said, the Home Secretary had expressed a desire that the Bill should proceed, and had spoken as if such had all along been the earnest desire of the Government. If this were so, he (Mr. Aytoun) should like to be informed why the feeling of the Government on the subject was so very different in the early part of the Session? The Bill was brought down from the Lords on the 14th of June. At that time the Irish Church Bill had left the Commons, and it might have been supposed that the Government would have found time to consider what, with the exception of the Irish Church Bill, he regarded as the most important measure of the Session. But what had been the conduct of the Government? Instead of considering this Bill with the utmost expedition, they did nothing. They allowed the Bill to remain as it was. They did not read it a second time until the 12th of July; and when it was read a second time, it was at so late an hour that it was impossible to discuss its principles. They were then told that they were to have the discussion upon going into Committee; but when the Bill came to that stage, they were requested by the Home Secretary not to discuss it, inasmuch as if they did discuss it, it would be fatal to the passing of the Bill. Was it not an extraordinary circumstance that the Government, being so anxious to pass the Bill, should have allowed it to remain so long in the House before it was read a second time? The impression on the minds of most persons in Scotland was that the Bill was not to be carried through this Session. ["No, no!"] Certainly; everyone he had spoken to was of that opinion. Now, however, when it had arrived at a period at which it was nearly impossible to pass the Bill, the Government had suddenly become alive to the importance of its being passed. He should like to have some explanation with regard to the reasons which induced the Government to take their present course. They were told that this was an undenominational Bill, and that therefore those who were in favour of such a measure ought to accept the Bill, lest in the next Session they had put upon them a Bill which would in that respect be worse. The Bill was not, on the face of it, a denominational Bill; but there were clauses in it which made it, in a sense, worse than if it were openly and honestly denominational. One clause empowered the Government to name a Board of gentlemen who were to have adequate salaries, and who were to sit at Edinburgh; and another gave to this Board the power to recommend to the Privy Council that denominational grants should be given to particular schools. Reading these two clauses together, how could it be said that this was an undenominational Bill? Why was this change made? Because they were told there was a Roman Catholic population in Scotland which must be excepted from the general provisions of the Bill. It ought to be known that the reason the Bill had to be passed through the House at this late period of the Session was that the Government had thought fit and proper to make it a denominational Bill, for the sake of conciliating and obtaining the support not of the people of Scotland, but of a certain section of the people of Ireland. He would not discuss whether the latter should exercise so much influence over the internal affairs of Scotland; but it ought to be known that this was so, and that the Bill, which had been deferred to the end of the Session, was to be pushed forward in order that it might be passed through the House in this ostensibly undenominational but really denominational form. If the Government were determined to pass the Bill, it would be futile for Scotch Members to oppose it; but it ought to be known that the responsibility of passing the Bill in this form lay upon the Government, and, personally, he would not participate in that responsibility. It was a mistake to suppose that a Board, nominated by the Government, and dependent upon the Government, even though it were composed of Scotchmen and sat in Edinburgh, would represent Scotch feeling, which demanded a system of management different from that which prevailed in England. Such a Board, nominated by and dependent on the Government, afforded no safeguard against the establishment in Scotland of a system which would be unsatisfactory to the Scotch people. He considered it his duty to protest against the denominational nature of this Bill and to guard against the imputation that by silence he had acquiesced in the passing of it.

Mr. M'LAREN said, he was one of those who recently stated that if the question was simply a vote for the Bill as it stood, or for no Bill at all, he should have decided for no Bill at all. But since that time the Government had considered the expressed opinion of the majority of the Scotch Members—not of the Scotch supporters of the Government, but of Scotch Members of all parties—and had consented to the important improvements which had been announced by the Home Secretary. Those changes went so far in the right direction, that he should cordially vote for the Bill in its present form. The question of opening up the management of the parish schools was not founded upon any new principle of democratic rights, but upon the principle of being guided by the wisdom of our ancestors. It was proposed to return to the principle enacted in 1696, that every heritor paying for the support of the schools should have a vote in the appointment of the schoolmaster. This principle was one to which no one could, in his opinion, deny the quality of soundness. The concession made was one which strict justice required, and strict justice would have been violated by any other arrangement being made. The next question related to the leaving out the parish schools from the operation of the Bill. Nobody could forget the praises showered on the parish schools from the other side of the House, as if they were all perfection, and the only means by which education in Scotland had been rendered what it was. The course followed by the Government ensured the maintenance of this system, and if the schools were perfect in the past, they would remain perfect — the Bill providing additional schools for large masses of the people. With regard to the extra schools, the cost would fall much more largely upon the towns, where additional schools were most wanted, than on the rural districts, and would not affect the landowners more than the occupiers, as the proposed rate was to be equally divided between both classes.

SIR JOHN OGILVY had not heard the statement of the Home Secretary; but from what he had been told of its purport he had no hesitation in saying that, unsatisfactory as the Bill was before, it was now more unsatisfactory still. Many Scotch Members had been left in ignorance of the compromise which had been come to, while there had been no opportunity for Scotch Members to communicate with their constituents. The Bill was called the Parochial Schools Bill, but he was told the parochial schools were to be expunged from it. With the view of postponing legislation to another Session, he moved that the Chairman leave the Chair, and, if supported by a sufficient number of Scotch Members, he would press the Motion to a division.

LORD ELCHO would not detain the Committee, but he could not refrain from remarking on the position in which the Scotch Members found themselves. This was a most important question affecting Scotland; it had a place in the Queen's Speech, and yet what was the position in which it stood? There were two prints of the Bill in the other House, there had been two in this; and in Committee in this House, after a division on a most important point, which was carried against a majority of the Scotch supporters of the Government—who were ready, to quote their own words, to support the Government through thick and thin — a Cabinet Council was convened, and a certain decision come to. That decision was to alter one of the main features and characteristics of the Bill. He did not say whether the change was right or wrong; but what was the position in which Scotch Members found themselves within a few days of the close of the Session? They were summoned to meet the Home Secretary at half-past two o'clock that day —a most unusual proceeding, and, after discussion, a Vote was taken—another unusual proceeding—on the question whether the Bill should be proceeded with, about twenty-three voting one way and seven or eight the other. The majority would support the Government through thick and thin against those who wished the matter to be properly and fairly considered, and who wished that no step should be taken without the utmost caution and deliberation, and with the full knowledge of everybody concerned. On such a question Members ought to have time to consult their constituents, and they had not been afforded an opportunity of doing so; but upon the fifth re-print of the Bill, at ten minutes to four o'clock that day, they were told to say, "Yes" or "No," whether the Bill should proceed. With great respect to the Government, he must say this was not a satisfactory way of legislating on a great question affecting any country, and it was unfair to Scotch Members to put them in such a position. He entered his deliberate protest against this mode of conducting Scotch business.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, he trusted that an English Member might be permitted to say a few words upon a matter which might be supposed to be of interest only to Scotch Members. With every respect for the Scotch Parliament which sat upstairs, he would suggest that English Members were entitled to have some further acquaintance with this Bill. When he looked at the history of the Bill he was really astonished at the course which had now been taken, because it was calculated to lead that as well as the other House into difficulties to which they ought never to be subjected. The Bill was introduced into the House of Lords in order that it might receive the most ample discussion. Great alterations were made in it in the other House; but when it came down to that House a Motion was made by the Lord Advocate to go into Committee pro formâ upon it, in order that it might be re-printed. When this was done, the Bill of the Lords was found to be practically done away with; but the Bill which remained was at least supposed to contain the matured opinion of the Government, and to be the measure which it was their wish to submit to the House. Last Tuesday the Government called upon the House to support them upon a particular clause of the Bill; but now this point was given up, and the Bill was so altered that while the hon. Member who had just spoken said that if the Bill were put to the vote as it was orignally printed he must give his negative to it, yet now it was altered he said he could support it. What was he, as an English Member, to think of such a Bill? It was all very well for Scotch Members to meet upstairs and say that they were satisfied; but the House had nothing before it except the Bill, and he could not conceive any greater difference between two measures than between the Bill of the Lords and the measure as it was now proposed to be finally amended. The onus of amending the Bill, which ought to have been thrown upon the Government, was now thrown upon the Members of that House. Even the Amendments of the noble Duke the Secretary for India and of the Members of the Government in the other House had been altered—and yet the House of Commons was called upon at the last moment to take a new Bill upon the mere statement of the Secretary of State for the Home Department, without a single line of it being before them. It was proposed to alter the Preamble, to take out the parish schools of Scotland, and to put upon a new class of heritors burdens to which they had never before been subjected. ["No!"] At all events, it was proposed to give a new management to the schools. [Mr. BRUCE: It only reverts to the old management.] Well, but it took away, at any rate, the management on which the House went to a division last Tuesday, and it made all these alterations at a moment's notice. If the hon. Member for Dundee (Sir John Ogilvy) went to a division, looking to the great inconvenience, both to that and the other House of Parliament, of the course pursued by the Government, he should certainly vote with him.

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, that the complaint of the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Gathorne Hardy) was considerably reduced in dimensions when the facts were stated. The Bill was introduced into the House of Lords in the month of February. It was founded upon the recommendations of the Education Commissioners, which were a compromise between the opposing views of the two parties who were anxious for national education. The Government were not altogether responsible for the delay which had occurred, because the other House did not send the Bill down until the 14th of June, having postponed the second reading until after the county meetings in April and the meeting of the General Assembly of the Church. The House of Lords exercised its privilege to alter the Bill to a very large extent. It was essential that the Government should offer the Bill to the House of Commons in the shape in which they wished it to pass, and for that purpose the House went into Committee on the Bill, with a view to its being re-printed pro formâ. He was prepared to maintain that this was an altogether regular and constitutional proceeding. The Commissioners in the meantime proposed that the management should remain as it was; and that was the compromise which had been spoken of. But did the Lords respect that compromise? By no means. They not only dealt with the question of constitution, but they altered the incidence of taxation. As he had originally explained, it then became a matter of considerable doubt what course the Government were justified in adopting; but, wishing to occasion as little difference of opinion as possible, they decided to revert to the compromise agreed to by the Commissioners. They had treated the question fairly, for the Amendments had been upon the Paper for some considerable time. A division took place, when it appeared that not merely a majority of the Liberal Members, but a majority of the Members from Scotland, were opposed to the proposition of the Government, and, whatever they might have been formerly, were no longer prepared to accept the compromise proposed by the Commissioners. The Government accordingly, in the hope of passing the Bill, had yielded to that view; in doing so he maintained they were perfectly right, and after the concession he trusted that progress would be made with the Bill. True, it was late in the Session; but they knew that difficulties of a much more serious character than those surrounding the present measure had been got rid of in a very short time this Session. There was nothing novel, unreasonable, or unjust in the proposals of the Government, and hon. Members were just as well able to discuss them now as they would be with a month's preparation.

MR. J. LOWTHER thought the remarks of the right hon. and learned Lord Advocate went strongly in support of the Motion of his hon. Friend the Member for Dundee (Sir John Ogilvy), while the history of the Bill given by his right hon. Friend the Member for the University of Oxford (Mr. G. Hardy) was admitted to be substantially correct. English Members undoubtedly had serious difficulties to contend with in approaching legislation purely applicable to Scotland; but they need not apologize, he thought, for interfering upon a measure relating to education, which had been so largely dealt with upon the hustings, and in which, moreover, principles might be introduced to be quoted hereafter as precedents elsewhere than in Scotland. His right hon. Friend (Mr. G. Hardy) had confined his review to proceedings in the House of Commons; but he (Mr. Lowther) had extended his researches further, and found that, since this measure had been first introduced this Session in "another place," there had been no less than five distinct Bills, which he now held in his hand, and which were miscalled "The Parochial Schools (Scotland) Bill." In February last the Bill was introduced in the House of Lords, having been alluded to in the Queen's Speech—a fact in itself suggesting that the 2nd of August was by no means a suitable date for a practical discussion of the question. After it came into the House of Commons a course was taken by the right hon. and learned Lord which was certainly unusual, and if a precedent could be found for it he hoped it would not be again appealed to. All that had been done in "another place" by way of Amendment, after careful and deliberate consideration, was expunged by the right hon. and learned Lord, without any opportunity being afforded to the House of ascertaining the grounds on which the views of the Government differed from those of the majority in the House of Lords. Practically, the House was invited on the 2nd of August to initiate legislation on this subject. It might be said that the Bill having already passed the other House, there were still a sufficient number of days in which the measure might be passed. But what was the fact? As the right hon. Gentleman the Prime Minister had said of another Bill, at the fifty-ninth minute of the eleventh hour it would go up to the House of Lords not merely as a new Bill—that would be bad enough—but as a Bill re-constructed in a shape which practically had been considered and rejected already. What likelihood was there that a measure sent up in such a form and at such a time would be accepted?

MR. GRAHAM said, it struck him as strange that the Committee had spent much time in discussing whether the Government or the House of Lords was to blame, and whether the heritors had been well used, while very little had been said about the 80,000 children in Scotland who were crying out for education. The whole question was in such a state that the House could well consider it, and, looking back upon the abortive efforts of the last twenty years, he hoped the few precious hours that remained would not be wasted. He denied that this was a new Bill; there was nothing in it which in some shape or another had not been upon the Paper. Admitting that the desire of the Scotch people generally was in favour of an undenominational system of education, if that were possible, he asked whether they were by legislation to erect a barrier against the admission of the largest and most indigent class of children? He did not pretend to advocate or defend the course taken by the Roman Catholic clergy; but, as the House knew, with the influence which the Roman Catholic clergy possessed, they would not allow the children of their flocks to receive education in any schools which they distrusted; and the choice therefore lay between relaxing in some respects the notion of an undenominational system and leaving the children of Roman Catholics wholly outside the scope of this measure. If the people of Scotland were prepared to accept a wholly secular education, they would be entitled to impose on every peasant the duty of sending his child to school; but the moment religious considerations intervened, compulsory education became out of the question; for, though in social and secular matters the opinions of the majority might fairly govern, the moment religion entered into the question, the majority, however large and influential, had no right to control the conscience of the minority, however small. It was true that the people of Scotland desired an undenominational system of education, and that under the present system the Roman Catholic children were perfectly safe in Protestant schools. But would the Roman Catholics be equally satisfied; and should this principle be embodied in a Bill? He thought the very attempt to enforce such a system under this Bill would be the very way to make the Roman Catholic clergy hostile to it. The advantages offered by the Bill were that it localized the management of parish schools; that it provided for an extension of those schools; that it gave a rate in aid of education—which they had never yet had—and double grants in poor districts; and that it gave local management for the national schools. Under these circumstances he maintained that Scotch Members should cast aside all their private opinions upon secondary points, and should accept with thanks the Bill supported by the Government.

Mr. ELLICE merely rose to ask whether the definition of "heritors" under the alteration proposed by the Government would embrace the heritors under the old valuation only, or would also include the heritors under the new valuation? In the latter case he thought the Committee might be well content.

The LORD ADVOCATE replied that the Bill proposed to repeal the provisions of the Act of 1833, which limited the management of schools to heritors of £100, and to restore the law to what it was before that date, under which every heritor who was bound to pay the school rate had a voice in the management of the school.

Sir GRAHAM MONTGOMERY thought it would be as well if the Bill were to leave the parish schools out of the Bill altogether, and provide merely for education in the Scotch burghs.

Mr. CRUM-EWING thought that, as the Government had given way upon a very material point, the hon. Member for Dundee (Sir John Ogilvy) should withdraw his Amendment.

Mr. W. E. FORSTER said, looking at the question from an educational point of view, he could not help thinking they had very nearly lost sight of what was after all the great object of the Bill. Scotland, advanced though it was in education beyond England and most civilized countries, and possessing a system of many centuries old to which she owed that state of advancement, was yet in danger of falling behind, because the custom of the country had outgrown the system of education. His hon. Friend (Mr. Graham) had under-stated the fact in saying that there were 80,000 children without an education. The Report of the Commissioners said that out of 510,000 children there were 92,000—or 18 per cent—not on the roll of any public school paid out of, or aided by, public grants, and that of the remaining 82 per cent a large proportion were receiving a very inferior education. With such facts as these before them, they might sink minor differences, and vie with each other in anxiety to devise some measure which would remove this great evil. This measure did propose to grapple with this evil, and he had never heard it disputed by anyone that by this Bill a machinery was set in motion which would meet the necessity, and cause that need to disappear. There had been discussion as to what kind of a Board should be established, what should be its powers, whether it should be appointed by the Government, and whether it should sit in Edinburgh or not; but he (Mr. W. E. Forster) had never heard it disputed that this Board would do its duty; on the contrary, it was admitted by the Scotch Members and the Scotch population that within three or four years such a Board would remove the glaring inconsistency between the present and the past history of Scotland. By that machinery Scotland would be supplied with sufficient schools. Then it should, in estimating the educational condition of Scotland, be remembered that all the existing schools were not good schools. The folly of postponement was not merely that there was this urgent necessity which ought to be supplied, but that the present educational agencies that were in Scotland were unable to perform their duty because of the suspense created by the knowledge that some great educational measure was in contemplation. A Commission had been appointed in 1864, and the Bill which was before the Committee was substantially the same measure as the Bill which was proposed by that Commission. It was asked—Why not confine the Bill to the burghs? But it was not merely the burghs which were suffering from want of education, though they, like the towns in some parts of England, were in a condition to excite the fears of all for the Empire. But the state in some country districts was still more deplorable, and it was shown by the Report of the Assistant Commissioners that unless some radical improvement took place in some country districts, in the course of a generation reading and writing would be unknown. It would, therefore, be a mockery if the Government were willing to consent to deal only with the burghs. The great benefit of the system was that it dealt with schools generally, and made it impossible that three or four years hence the condition of education in Scotland should be in its present state. He took a great interest in the matter, because of the Department with which he was connected, and because he felt that it had some connection with the great measure which was expected by the country with regard to education in England. Not that he expected hints from this Scotch measure, for he was perfectly aware of the different circumstances; but it would be an advantage to have one national system. The circumstances of England, Ireland, and Scotland respectively were different in respect of education, and a system of education which would be suitable for one of the three kingdoms, would not be, in all probability, suitable to either of the two others; but the fact that Scotland had adopted a system of national education, such as that which this Bill would provide, would no doubt greatly assist the Government in framing and passing educational measures for England and Ireland. Under all the circumstances he hoped his hon. Friend the Member for Dundee (Sir John Ogilvy) would not persevere with his Motion.

SIR JOHN OGILVY, yielding to the suggestions of his hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow (Mr. Graham), and his right hon. Friend the Vice-President of the Council, said he would withdraw his Motion.

MR. CRAUFURD said, he must complain that the hon. Member for Dundee should consent to withdraw his Motion. The Scotch Members had been gagged by the action of the Government in respect of this Bill. They had been refused an opportunity of discussing the measure; there had been no discussion on the second reading; and his right hon. Friend the Home Secretary objected to his attempt to raise one on the Motion for going into Committee. He denounced the measure as a denominational rather than a national system of education. This was not a national Bill, but a denominational Bill. Much as he was opposed to a denominational system, he would rather have an honest denominational Bill than one which professed to be a national, but which was used as an ignis fatuus to lure hon. Members, and which contained some of the most fatal elements of denominationalism. He had already said that there were two main features of the Bill which were of vital importance, and that unless these two were satisfactorily settled, he must oppose the Bill. These were the constitution of the Board, and the 63rd and 64th clauses, in which the denominational element most fatally resided; and if these two were satisfactorily settled, then the Scotch Members would be content to waive the question of opening up the parish schools, because they believed that a large proportion of them would be converted into national schools. He was not going to repeat the complaints that had been made as to the management of the Public Business this Session; but he asked the English Members if they would tolerate an Education Bill being taken for discussion on the 2nd of August, on the same evening that the Appropriation Bill was set down for second reading. He ventured to say that they would resent it as an outrage.

MR. C. S. PARKER said, he agreed with the hon. Member that a mistake had been made in not debating principles more fully in the previous stages, for he believed that if such a discussion had taken place, it would have given the Bill momentum sufficient to carry it over the miserable obstacles about which they had been wasting so much time. He denied the accuracy of the assertion that the scheme proposed was not a national scheme — on the contrary, he contended that this was pre-eminently a Bill for establishing a national system of education. In the first place, it was national because in it, for the first time, the nation undertook the direct responsibility for providing schools. In the second place, he held it to be national because it would be no longer partial—all over the country, in burghs as well as in rural districts, in the Highlands and the Islands, as well as the mainland, henceforth there would be proper education for the children, for it would be the duty of the Board to ascertain what was wanted in every part of Scotland, and to provide according to the need. And lastly, it was a national as opposed to a denominational system. He did not say that the Bill retained no trace whatever of denominationalism. They could not expect that if the education of the country had been carried on for a generation under one system, in a single year they could sweep away every vestige of it; and he doubted even whether they would be prepared for the financial results of such a proposal. But the Bill did away with denominational inspection, and provided that parochial schools, which had not hitherto been examined by the Government at all, should be subject to national inspection. It was also undenominational in the sense that, although it permitted the existing denominational schools to continue, no new denominational schools could be set up, except under the narrowest possible limits. The chief thing that they ought to set before their minds was the picture of the miserable and uneducated children whose case this Bill was intended to meet. He believed that the numbers had been understated, and if the worse educated were to be brought to the level of the better educated parts of Scotland, it would be found that there were at least 100,000 children for whom provision must be made.

Colonel SYKES said, he was one of the eight independent Members referred to by his hon. Friend; and when the Lord Advocate to-day, at a meeting of Scotch Members, announced the important concessions made by the Government, he to give practical effect to their wish, proposed that hon. Members having Amendments on the Paper, should withdraw them; but he was met by a pretty general "No." He despaired, therefore, of getting the Bill through this Session. What was the urgency of the case? Was Scotland enveloped in such Cimmerian darkness as to require that a Bill should pass through the House at a railway pace in order to give her education? Certainly not. In London there were more uneducated children than in all Scotland. After the liberal proposals of the Government he should not oppose the Motion of the Lord Advocate.

Motion made, and Question put, "That the Chairman do now leave the Chair." —(Sir John Ogilvy.)

The Committee divided: — Ayes 36; Noes 113: Majority 77.

Clause 4 (Meeting of the board. Three members to be a quorum)—Clause A. (Board meetings.)

Mr. CRAUFURD said, they had had a long discussion on the constitution of the Board, and the Government had agreed to re-consider the question, and inform them at some future time what they intended to do. Before dealing with the powers and action of the Board they ought to know how it was to be constituted.

Motion made "That the Clause be postponed."—(Mr. Craufurd.)

The LORD ADVOCATE said, they might as well postpone the whole Bill as the clauses relating to the Board. When the proper time came he should give the required explanation as to the constitution of the Board.

Sir GRAHAM MONTGOMERY inquired of the Lord Advocate, whether all the meetings of the Board were to be open to the public?

The LORD ADVOCATE replied that he intended to agree to an Amendment, which was to be proposed by the hon. Member for Fifeshire (Sir Robert Anstruther), extending the open meetings to ordinary as well as to half-yearly meetings.

MR. ELLICE wished to know whether he had understood the Lord Advocate right when he thought he heard him say that the meetings of the Board were to be open to the public. How would the Board get on with their business if the public was to be admitted to all their proceedings?

COLONEL SYKES said, it was certainly understood at the meeting upstairs that all the meetings were to be in public.

SIR EDWARD COLEBROOKE asked if it was seriously proposed that an excited public should be admitted to attend the proceedings of a Board consisting of only two or three members? The thing would defeat itself, for the Board would hold private meetings for the transaction of their business, and the public meetings would become a mere farce.

MR. BRUCE said, the reason why that concession was made by the Government was this—He agreed with his hon. Friend that it was absurd to talk of public meetings to be held of a Board consisting of only three gentlemen met to transact ordinary business; but it was impossible rightly to define the occasions when the public ought to be admitted. Take the case where the conduct of a schoolmaster was under discussion—or where denominational schools sought to be admitted. These were matters where the public ought to have security that the questions were fully considered, and, therefore, he thought they ought to be present.

MR. CRUM-EWING said, there was another reason which had not been mentioned by the right hon. Gentleman. The Board would have powers of taxation, and, therefore, they ought to satisfy the public that these powers were reasonably exercised.

LORD ELCHO asked whether there was any precedent, either in England or Scotland for such a proposal as this—that an important Board like this should conduct its business publicly. It seemed to him to be a proposal to get in the thin end of the American wedge, where thousands took part in, and cheered the proceedings of an assembly. It would be contrary to the spirit of independence to have such a thing, because the Board might be under the terrorism or other demonstrations on the part of the public.

MR. M'LAREN said, it seemed to be forgotten that the Board would, on many occasions, sit as a court, and that representatives from local committees would be heard before them for and against the planting of a new school at a particular spot, or perhaps objecting to the adoption of a denominational school. The speaking would be not so much of the members of the Board as of those who came to plead their cause before them. It might as well be said that because the Judges of a court of law consisted of only three or four members, therefore the public should not be admitted.

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, his first impression certainly was that it would be inconvenient that the Board should hold its meetings in public; but when he remembered that the Board would have great powers in determining where new schools were to be placed, in the adoption of denominational schools, and in the indirect power of taxation which they would confer, he changed his mind. He thought the inconvenience would be met by giving the Board power to sit in committee.

Motion negatived.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 (Power to appoint committees) was agreed to, after a short discussion.

Clause 6 (Power to make rules and regulations which shall be laid before Parliament).

MR. ORR EWING moved in page 4, line 24, after "occasion," to insert "to frame a code for Scotland in accordance with the provisions contained in the Schedule A to this Act, and." It had been admitted that the manner in which education was carried on in Scotland differed very materially from the system adopted in England, and that the schools in Scotland not only gave the best elementary education, but also a higher education to youths intending to proceed to the Universities. They did not object in Scotland to payment by results; but they desired that the results should be taken from a higher standard, so that the schools included in this Bill might be improved rather than deteriorated by this operation. His object, therefore, was to intrust the initiative in framing this code to gentlemen of thoroughly Scotch feeling, who could appreciate the Scotch system of education and its superior advantages, leaving, however, the ultimate decision in the hands of the Committee of Council for Education, whose authority he had no wish to over-ride.

Amendment proposed,

In page 4, line 24, after the word "occasion," to insert the words "to frame a code for Scotland in accordance with the provisions contained in the Schedule (A) to this Act, and."—(Mr. Orr Ewing.)

Mr. W. E. FORSTER said, the Government should feel it their duty to oppose the Amendment. The Government were quite aware of the different conditions of education in Scotland and England, and they had acknowledged that fact by appending to the Bill a Schedule which mentioned certain conditions which must be fulfilled in any Revised Code for Scotland. It would be for the hon. Member, when they got to the schedule, if he was not satisfied with the conditions, to move an Amendment; but it would be impossible for the Privy Council to continue to be responsible to the country for the distribution of the public money, and not to be the Department which had to submit to Parliament the condition on which that aid was granted.

Dr. LYON PLAYFAIR expressed a hope that the Amendment would not be pressed. It was perfectly conclusive that if the money was to be administered by the Privy Council, the code must be framed by them; but he had an Amendment in Schedule A, to the effect that before the Privy Council proceeded to make a code they should receive a Report from the Board as to peculiar requirements of Scotch education.

Mr. W. E. FORSTER said, the Government would have no objection to accede to that Amendment.

Sir EDWARD COLEBROOKE was inclined to place faith in the administration of those grants by the Privy Council. He thought it most important that everything with reference to the public contributions should be under the strictest regulations possible.

Mr. CRAUFURD said, it did not matter whether the taxation was national or local; what was wanted was that the Board should be in reality a Scotch Board, and that that Board should draw up any code of Scotch education that might be deemed necessary. They required that there should be a joint action between the Scotch Board and the Privy Council, and that the former should have the power to compel the Privy Council to take a Scotch view—or at any rate a reasonable Scotch view—of Scotch education.

Mr. W. E. FORSTER said, the hon. Member (Mr. Craufurd) said that it made no difference whether the taxation was local or otherwise. The difference was this, did the hon. Member propose to entrust the Scotch Board with the key of the Imperial Treasury, with power to use what money they thought proper?

Mr. ORR EWING denied that his Amendment was intended to throw the cost on the State. It was intended rather to draw up a principle upon which the fund should be administered, and to insure for the education of Scotland at least as high a position as it had hitherto held. He did not wish that the Board should draw up a rule and act upon it; but that what they did should be submitted to the Privy Council before anything was done in regard to it. His Amendment had the approval of a majority of the Scotch Members, and he hoped the Government would accede to it.

The LORD ADVOCATE said, this was not the proper place for such an Amendment as that before the House. The proper time was on the consideration of the Schedule, and when that time came the Government would be prepared to accept an Amendment, the effect of which would be "that the rules are to be drawn up after receiving a report from the Board as to the modifications of the Revised Code that may be suitable for Scotland." He thought this ought to satisfy the hon. Member who had moved the Amendment. There were things in the Revised Code which would not suit the case of Scotland, and those could be amended at the proper time. Although, perhaps, they could not pride themselves upon the state of elementary education in Scotland, it was in the main satisfactory; while the Privy Council was prepared to give a bonus to higher education by making an allowance for four years longer in respect of the age during which the attendance of children at school was followed by an allowance.

Mr. CRAUFURD said, his intention was not to take the key out of the hands of the Privy Council; but that there should be two keys, of which the Council should hold one and the Board the other, and he did not wish the purse to be opened unless with the consent of the holders of both keys.

MR. W. E. FORSTER thought the Amendment just referred to by the Lord Advocate would meet the case.

Question put, "That those words be there inserted."

The Committee divided: — Ayes 17; Noes 81: Majority 64.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Clause 8 (Parochial and parliamentary schools shall be old national schools, and shall continue to be managed as at present)—CLAUSE B. (Vote of heritors in election of schoolmasters).

MR. LOCH moved to omit the words "every parochial school and," his object being to exclude parochial schools from the operation of the Bill, so far as the powers of converting the parochial schools into national schools. He wished to preserve the system which had produced in Scotland such splendid results, and had brought about an amount of general information and intelligence which was not eclipsed by any other part of the United Kingdom. While they were quite right in endeavouring to establish a system to remedy any deficiencies that had arisen, why should they not preserve that which they knew to be good and efficient? The feeling of the people of Scotland generally was in favour of the maintenance of the parish schools; but the people also desired that the management should embrace a larger number of heritors, and that the schools should cease to be connected exclusively with the Established Church. It was obvious that those who contributed towards the maintenance of the schools should share in the management, and now that so large a proportion of the people had ceased to belong to the Established Church, it was but reasonable to require that the management should extend beyond the ministers of that Church. Another important aspect of the question was the amount levied throughout Scotland; £40,000 or £50,000 a-year could not be enough for the purposes of education, and it was, therefore, important to retain the large endowment which now existed. He was glad to know that his Amendment was not to be opposed by the Government.

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, this Amendment was a necessary consequence of one which was discussed and settled at an early period of the evening; but he thought the best course would be to strike out the words of the clause from line 14 to the end—

> "Every private school and every parochial school is hereby declared to be a national school, and shall, from and after the passing of this Act, be vested," &c.

There were many other useful and important provisions applying to parochial schools.

MR. LOCH expressed his willingness to adopt the suggestions made.

SIR GRAHAM MONTGOMERY hoped the Lord Advocate did not intend to change the name "national schools."

MR. LOCH then withdrew his Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause amended, and agreed to.

Clause 9 (Union of parochial schools).

MR. MILLER said, he had three Amendments to propose in relation to this subject. First, of all, he wished to strike out the words in the clause, "and minister," in lines 20 and 25, his object being to take away the denominational character of the schools. As he understood the Government, they desired to liberalize the heritors as far as possible, and the object of his Amendments was similar. So long as the minister was a member of the Governing Body of the schools in question, they would be to all intents and purposes denominational. In parishes where the population was small—in the Highlands, for example—the parochial ministers had the whole say, so far as the schools were concerned, the heritors being mostly absent, and the schools were entirely under his management. He hoped the Government would adopt the Amendment.

MR. CRUM-EWING supported the Amendment. The present state of things was most anomalous, and the Lord Advocate should, in conformity with his own principles, be prepared to place all denominations on an equality. It was well known that the Established Church did not comprehend above one-third of the people.

MR. CRAUFURD believed that the proposals of the Government could not be completely carried out unless this Amendment were carried.

Mr. ELLICE also urged upon the Government the propriety of getting rid of the clerical element in the management of the schools.

Sir ROBERT ANSTRUTHER said, although a member of the Established Church, he was opposed to the invidious distinction which it was now sought to remove. He had said over and over again in Scotland that he thought that if one minister were put upon the board all the ministers in the locality ought to be put upon it; but that expression of opinion was invariably received with marks of disapproval. People in Scotland said—it was not his own opinion—that if three or four ministers were placed on the managing committee of a school it would be quite impossible to transact business of any kind. As they had to choose between putting no ministers on the managing body and putting all, it seemed to him highly desirable to adopt the Amendment.

Mr M'LAGAN thought that they should pause before they struck out the word "minister." In many parishes there would be no one to manage the schools if the minister were shut out. He rather approved of the levelling-up system, and thought all the ministers should be members of the board.

The LORD ADVOCATE said, this question was not without embarrassment. In a country split up as Scotland was into at least three large denominations, it would not be desirable that one minister alone should manage the schools; but, on the other hand, it was not desirable, in his opinion, that no minister should be capable of sitting on the board. There could be no doubt that the clergy had rendered great service in the management of parochial schools. Although he wished to destroy the denominational character of the schools, he did not wish to destroy their religious character; and he had no doubt that under a freer system of management ministers of different denominations would act harmoniously. The Amendment only applied to the case of a combination of parishes for school purposes, and he thought it would be best to have the question raised under its general aspect, and to determine distinctly whether ministers should or should not take part in the management of parochial schools. That they had done so since 1696 there could be no doubt.

Dr. LYON PLAYFAIR was of opinion that, under the circumstances of the case, and as the heritors were to a certain extent to be doubly taxed, the Committee ought to give them the parochial schools under the same management as at present, which would not be done if the minister were taken away.

Mr. MILLER said, he understood that the interpretation of the word "heritors," as used in the Bill, was all heritors on the valuation-roll; and therefore the management was already altered. The Government thought the constitution of the Board could not be kept as it was, and he (Mr. Miller) proposed further to liberalize it by striking out the word "minister." The minister did not contribute sixpence on account of his manse or glebe, and yet he had power, by his casting vote, to levy money from others.

Mr. BRUCE thought the object of his hon. Friend would not be gained by the adoption of his Amendment. It was not the intention of the Government to revoke the old legal arrangement of 1696, and he did not think it was desirable to open up such a large question then.

Mr. M'LAREN had objected from the first to the contemplated union of schools, which would compel many children to daily travel three or four miles to obtain education. He thought the clause very objectionable, and that it would be better to strike it out altogether.

Sir GRAHAM MONTGOMERY concurred in this opinion.

Amendment withdrawn.

Clause struck out.

Clause 10 negatived.

Clause 11 (Board, with the sanction of the Lords of the Treasury, may appoint special commissioners).

Sir EDWARD COLEBROOKE wished to move as an Amendment in the clause, line 10, after the word "Act," to insert—

> "Due regard being had to the number of private and endowed schools already existing in the parish or burgh, and the quality of the education furnished therein."

There was no doubt that both in England and Scotland private schools were popular among the working classes, and evidence had been given before the Duke of Newcastle's Commission of that fact. He thought, therefore, they ought not to discourage private schools.

THE LORD ADVOCATE suggested that the Amendment should run thus—

"Due regard being had to the schools already existing in the parish or burgh, and the quality of the education furnished therein."

MR. M'LAREN said, he was afraid that these words would not be held to be legally applicable to private schools, and thought it would be a great evil if they were not so. The Lord Advocate knew that in the city with which he was connected there were large private schools most successfully conducted. There was one Lancastrian school with 500 scholars, and why should the Commissioners set to work and erect another school next door to it?

After short conversation,

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, that on the whole he would accept the Amendment as originally proposed.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 12 (Board with the sanction of a majority of the trustees, managers, or proprietors of any school, may adopt any school).

SIR EDWARD COLEBROOKE then moved the insertion of the following words after the word "board" on line 29:—

"And it shall be the duty of such special commissioner or commissioners to inquire into the nature and amount of the funds devoted to the maintenance or education of young persons, and they shall also inquire into the administration or management of schools wholly or in part supported by endowments, and to the system and course of study pursued therein, and to report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any and what changes in the administration and use of such endowments are expedient, by which their usefulness and efficiency may be increased."

MR. M'LAREN thought it would be inexpedient to introduce these words. He entirely approved of the object desired, but he should like to see a Commission to inquire into educational endowments in Scotland. These were estimated by the Member for the University of Edinburgh at £150,000 a year, while the whole payments by the heritors of Scotland were only £48,000. He believed that the parties charged with the administration of these endowments would not open their doors so freely to a subordinate of a subordinate—as a Commissioner from the Board would be—as to a Commission appointed by the Crown.

THE LORD ADVOCATE would not object to the Amendment if the word "board" were substituted for "special commissioners."

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 13 struck out.

Clause 14 (School committee to take proceedings to erect school).

MR. CRAUFURD said, the object of this clause was to compel the erection of schools, whether the rate-payers wanted it or not, and he thought that, before agreeing to it, they ought to know who the Board was. The powers given to the Board were of a very despotic character, and there was no power of appeal.

THE LORD ADVOCATE observed that, under the 31st section of the clause, every order of the Board was subject to appeal to the Home Secretary.

MR. CRAUFURD said, the appeal was from a Board of which the Lord Advocate was a member, and the only information which the Home Secretary could receive about it was from the Lord Advocate. What was that but an appeal from Philip to Philip?

MR. CRUM-EWING stated that there was considerable alarm about the clause in Scotland. There would be no use of the Bill, unless the power to put down schools was given to some one; but some alarm was felt at being put at the mercy of the Edinburgh lawyers.

MR. M'LAREN said that this clause ought to be watched with great jealousy. There could be no doubt that the opinion of the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor General would be taken by the Board before pushing any matter to extremity, and the appeal, therefore, would practically be from the same Judge to the same Judge. He had the strongest possible objection to the Law Officers of the Crown being on the Board.

Question put, "That the Clause stand part of the Bill."

The Committee divided:—Ayes 128; Noes 11: Majority 117.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 15 (New schools to be "new national schools," and to be managed by school committee).

Clause 16 (School committee may elect teacher, &c.).

Agreed to, after short discussion.

Clause 17 (Combined national school).

Mr. ORR EWING proposed to substitute £50 instead of £35 as the minimum for schoolmasters' salaries. He wished to remind the House of what was expected from these schoolmasters. They were expected to have a University education, and to be able to teach Latin, and Greek, and French, and geography. He believed that the welfare of Scotland depended more upon the education of the schoolmasters than upon anything else, and he hoped the Scotch members would support him in this small measure of justice to these industrious, hard-working men.

Dr. LYON PLAYFAIR observed that there were several other Amendments nearly to the same effect. He would raise the minimum to £50; but after the word "pounds" he would insert "nor more than one hundred," which should be the maximum salary.

Mr. M'LAREN thought the minimum should remain as stated in the clause. That, it should be recollected, would not be the whole income of the teacher. Besides the Privy Council grant, the schoolmaster would have a free house, garden, and the school fees.

Sir ROBERT ANSTRUTHER said, nobody would expect a good master for a low salary; but it was admitted on all hands that there were parts of the country on which it would press very hard indeed to give the schoolmaster £50. He should therefore vote for keeping the sum at £35.

The LORD ADVOCATE pointed out that £35 was not the salary to be paid generally; but the lowest sum that would be given. When the subject was considered in 1861, the minimum was fixed at £29. He should support the Amendment of the hon. Member for the University of Edinburgh for fixing the maximum salary at £100.

Mr. FORDYCE hoped the hon. Member for Dumbartonshire would press his Amendment to a division. One great ground for supporting the Bill was the hope that it might raise the status of the schoolmasters.

Mr. ORR EWING said, he would withdraw his Amendment, hoping, after the expression of opinion which had been given, that no parish would take advantage of the limit of £35 to pay a schoolmaster so low a sum.

Clause amended by the insertion of the words "nor more than one hundred;" Clause further amended and agreed to.

Clause 18 agreed to.

Clause 19 (Conversion of old national schools into new national schools).

Major WALKER moved the insertion in line 38, after the word "the," of the words "heritors and minister, or." He said it was only fair that the power proposed to be given to the school committees under the new arrangements, to combine and employ pupil teachers on special subjects, should be extended to the old parochial schools. This was the object of his Amendment.

Mr. MILLER moved, as an Amendment to the proposed Amendment, the omission of the words "and minister."

Mr. GRAHAM said, some hon. Members appeared to regard ministers as firebrands. He suggested that the difficulty might be got over by some words in the interpretation clause.

Mr. CRAUFURD said, this question of the minister had been ingeniously evaded the last time, but it had now come up again, and he hoped the difficulty would be fairly met by a distinct statement from the Government. What the Scotch Membsrs wanted to know was, whether they were to have a thorough and honest liberalizing of the parochial schools in the sense contemplated by the division on Tuesday last against the proposals then made by the Government.

The LORD ADVOCATE thought there were no grounds whatever for the remarks just made by the hon. Member. Since 1696 there could be no doubt that ministers had a share in the control of these schools.

Mr. M'LAREN objected to the words proposed to be inserted altogether.

The LORD ADVOCATE said, there was a good deal in the objection of the hon. Member for Edinburgh, and he thought that the hon. Member for Dumfriesshire had better prepare a clause which should be entirely devoted to the parish schools.

Lord GARLIES asked whether the right hon. and learned Gentleman accepted the words of the Amendment, because they had already been twice put aside with his assent?

THE LORD ADVOCATE was perfectly prepared to accept the clause he had indicated.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 20 struck out.

Clauses 21, 22, and 23 agreed to, with Amendments.

After short discussion, House resumed; Committee report Progress; to sit again To-morrow.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

LORDS' AMENDMENTS.

Reasons for disagreeing to certain of the Lords' Amendments reported.

MR. S. MORLEY said, he wished to take that opportunity of stating his belief that the Government had fairly and honestly redeemed their pledge with regard to this measure, which was the best that had been secured during the lifetime of any trader in this country. The thanks of the trading community were due to the Government, and especially to the Attorney General for the manner in which he had listened to the representations of the Chambers of Commerce on this question.

Reasons agreed to: To be communicated to the Lords.

BISHOPS RESIGNATION BILL—[BILL 241.] [Lords.] SECOND READING.

Order for Second Reading read.

MR. GLADSTONE said, he wished to move the second reading of this Bill, and, if it were convenient to the House, to postpone any statement of the objects of the Bill until it could be taken at a more convenient hour, which he would secure by placing it as the first Order on Thursday. The hon. Member for Boston (Mr. Collins) had given notice of a Motion, from which he gathered that the hon. Member desired that the Bill should not be proceeded with. But he wished the hon. Member to observe the effect of an Amendment which he proposed to move in the Bill. An Amendment had been introduced into the Bill in the Lords which very materially altered its character, and introduced subjects of difficulty and complexity not originally included in the measure. He referred to the 3rd clause, which made the Bill applicable to physical incapacity for the purpose of appointing coadjutor Bishops. That was not at all in harmony with the general structure of the Bill, and he wished the House to consider the Amendments he would place on the table to-night, and how the Bill would stand in the event of those Amendments being adopted. He moved that the Bill be now read a second time.

Motion made and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a second time."—(Mr. W. E. Gladstone.)

MR. COLLINS said, he did not object to that part of the Bill which applied to resignation; but he hoped that, if the Bill were to proceed this Session, all the clauses with reference to the appointment of coadjutor Bishops would be dropped by the right hon. Gentleman. The Bill might have been sent down from the other House three months ago, seeing that they had nothing to do there but idle away their time in the early part of the Session; and he hoped, taking into account that it was a measure of so much importance, it would not be proceeded with at a period when it could not be adequately discussed.

MR. HENLEY said, the first clause of the Bill appeared to him, to say the least of it, to be rather oddly worded. It stated that an Archbishop or Bishop was canonically to resign his benefice, and then went on to state that that was to be done only if he were incapacitated by mental or physical infirmity. The same words "mental infirmity" were used in the second provision of the Bill, in which the process was rendered compulsory. The difficulty lay in supposing that a different meaning was to be attached to those words in the same document. If mental infirmity existed to a degree which produced complete mental incapacity, he did not see how a Bishop could canonically resign, or an Archbishop report to the Crown that he was infirm. He also saw another difficulty in the Bill as it stood. It was set forth that an Archbishop or Bishop was as a preliminary matter canonically to resign, and afterwards that the Crown was to be satisfied by proof that he was either mentally or bodily incapable. But should the proof fail, in what position, he should like to know, would things then be placed? If a see had been canonically resigned it could not be taken up again, and if the proof failed it was not easy to perceive what was to be done. He quite concurred in thinking that it would be inconvenient to discuss a Bill of so much importance at so late an hour, and under all the circumstances of the case, he thought the wisest course to adopt would be to pass it only for one year.

Motion agreed to.

Bill read a second time, and committed for Thursday.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS (LOANS) BILL.

(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Goschen.)

[BILL 238.] CONSIDERATION.

Bill, as amended, considered.

MR. AYRTON moved the addition of a proviso at the end of Clause 22, defining further the relative rights and liabilities of landlord and tenant with respect to the payment of rates.

Amendment agreed to.

MR. AYRTON said, he wished to call attention to the clause which was introduced into the Bill on Saturday on the Motion of Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens—

> "That it shall not be lawful for the Metropolitan Board of Works to sell or let, whether on lease or otherwise, any portion of the lands now vested in said Board for the purpose of a park or other place of recreation."

The clause as it stood was extremely ambiguous, and it was difficult to know what interpretation ought to be put upon it. The Act authorizing the Metropolitan Board of Works to purchase land expressly declared that they should be empowered to purchase such land as they might think fit for the construction of a park, and that they should be at liberty to sell any surplus land not required for that purpose. Such were the provisions contained in two Local Acts already passed—one for the construction of a park at Finsbury, and the other for the construction of a park at Southwark. Now, it was quite obvious that the Board, on the faith of those Acts, had been encouraged to make larger purchases than were necessary for the mere construction of a park, in each case feeling that they might re-imburse themselves by the sale of the surplus lands. Of the authority to sell them, however, the present clause was evidently intended to deprive the Board, and the Government ought not, he thought, to acquiesce in such an arrangement, especially when it was borne in mind that some hon. Members had, as he had been informed, voted for the clause with the idea that it was necessary for the preservation of the parks themselves intact. If that were its only object he should offer no opposition to it, although even then he should look upon it as entirely irrelevant and as by no means required. But it affected the rights of the rate-payers of the metropolis, by declaring in effect that a special grant should be made for the benefit of two or three parishes. If the parishes in question wished to make any application to Parliament, with the view of having the surplus lands in question appropriated to particular purposes, it was open to them to do so next Session. He had the authority of the Metropolitan Board of Works to say that no step would be taken between this and the next Session of Parliament for dealing with that surplus land, in order that the parishes might have the opportunity of prosecuting their views in the only way in which they ought to do so—namely, by Private Bill. Therefore there was no ground for that hasty and unjust legislation, and with that assurance he hoped the Committee would have no difficulty in striking out that clause. The hon. Gentleman concluded by moving to leave out the clause.

Amendment proposed, to leave out Clause (Park lands vested in the Metropolitan Board of Works.)—(Mr. Ayrton.)

MR. W. M. TORRENS said, that before putting on the Paper notice of his intention to propose the insertion of that clause, he had consulted the Chairman of Committees as to its strict regularity, as, without the sanction of that authority, he should have hesitated to take a step so important as to move the clause to which he had the good fortune to obtain the assent of the House. He must at once join issue, as he did on Saturday, with the Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Ayrton), and deny that that was an attempt by a clause in a Public Bill to deal with that which was first enacted in a Local and Private Bill. When he introduced to the first Commissioner of Works, in April last, a deputation from the neighbourhood affected by that question, he took care to go to the officers of that House, who were its officers when the Bill of 1857 was originally passed, and inquire what was the nature of that Act. He learnt that it was a hybrid Act, and that, consequently, its Amendment might be sought by a Bill like the present one. He denied that the Act of 1857 could be fairly described as a Local Act. It was introduced during the Ministry of Lord Palmerston; and Lord Palmerston, no inexperienced authority as to the rules of that House, volunteered, on behalf of his Government, to move a large grant of money in aid of the objects then contemplated. The Bill was promoted by the Metropolitan Board of Works, and was carried by their influence, with the assistance of the Government. It was not a Private, but a Public Act, and it belonged to the class of measures familiarly called "hybrid Bills." The Reports of the Board of Works, on which it was supported, were to the effect that they sought powers from Parliament to complete the drainage of the metropolis, with the promise and upon the undertaking that they would create public parks, where they were expedient and necessary, in the metropolis. After that Bill passed, the Board of Works, in the following Session, came to Parliament for new powers, including the power to mortgage 3*d.* in the pound of the metropolitan rates to raise £3,000,000; and the inducement held out to the House to pass that Bill was composed in part of the promise made officially that the Metropolitan Board of Works intended to devote £216,000 to the formation of a park in Finsbury, and a further sum for a park in Bermondsey. His case was that that Board had broken faith with Parliament and with the people of London, because, instead of so expending those sums, on the faith of expending which they obtained the power of mortgaging 3*d.* in the pound of the metropolitan rates and raising £3,000,000 sterling, they had expended the money neither in the one case nor in the other; and he asked the House not to rescind its vote of Saturday, because, to do that, would be to encourage breaches of contract by municipal bodies. On the 18th of April, 1859, after they had got that Act on those pretences and promises, the Chairman of the Board of Works wrote a letter to the Home Secretary for the time being, in which he recurred to the conditions on which the Act had been passed, and stated that among the most important objects of the measure was the establishment of those two parks. The people of London, therefore, did not come now to that House to sue in formâ pauperis, but they asked that they might not be robbed of their own money. And he hoped the House, after the vote it had given within the last forty-eight hours on that matter, would not now undo that act of justice. It was not true that the Board of Works had a discretionary power to sell portions of that land as they thought fit. The words of the statute, which were very careful and precise, enabled the Board only to dispose of such lands as were not required for the purposes of the park. But was anybody prepared to stand up and tell the House that 115 acres were too much for the purposes of the health and recreation of a part of the metropolis whose inhabitants were to be counted by hundreds of thousands, and that twenty acres might be taken away? The metropolis was divided into nine Parliamentary cities and boroughs. The poorer population of the East-end, comprising the Tower Hamlets, the City, Hackney, Finsbury, and Southwark, was considerably over 1,500,000. Yet for parks they had, on the whole, only 460 acres; whereas, the genteel end of the town, with a smaller amount of population, and including Westminster, Lambeth, Chelsea, and Marylebone, had 1,460 acres in the shape of parks; or 1,000 acres more than the unfortunate people of the East-end of London, who were entitled to no less care and attention from that House than the inhabitants of the West-end. It was unworthy of a great and powerful Government to bring its gigantic power to bear on particular localities in this way; and he was sure they would not have long to wait before they would find discontent cropping up if they were to do acts of this kind.

Mr. GOSCHEN said, he would ask the House to decide simply on the merits of the question. It appeared that in all cases in which the Metropolitan Board had taken land for the purpose of parks, it had always got power to sell a small portion, and why? Not to diminish the area of the park, but that the valuable frontage which would be created by the formation of the park should be reserved for the benefit of the rate-payers of the whole metropolis. Then there was this other point. It struck him that there was considerable force in the argument that where land for a park was taken in a populous district, the Board should have power to make what he should call "a fringe" to the park itself—that was, should have power to build a decent class of houses around the park, instead of allowing the miserable tenements that might be in the neighbourhood to stand around it, or contractors to come in and run up a wretched description of houses. It was a most expensive proceeding to construct parks in the midst of populous districts, and the least that could be done was to reserve a small portion of the land for the purpose of recouping some of the expenses incurred. He was informed that the land in question in the neighbourhood of Finsbury and Southwark Parks was worth £76,800, and that was a sum worth consideration. His hon. Friend complained that twenty acres were taken out of 115 and said it was too much. [Mr. M'CULLAGH TORRENS: Out of 250.] His hon. Friend would not allow that any one corner of the parks should be built upon now or at any future time. He agreed with his hon. Friend in much that he had said; but he thought he might ask the House not to vote for the retention of so stringent a clause. The difference between them was simply this—whether the hon. Member for Finsbury would not tie the hands of the Board too much, and thus really defeat the object he had in view. His hon. Friend would find that some of the metropolitan Members who supported him on a previous occasion would not now do so, because since the last division they had found out that the views of their constituents did not coincide with those of the hon. Member.

MR. HENLEY said, he was sorry the Government had tried to reverse what the House had done the other day. There was a very great, rapid, and unprecedented increase of population in the neighbourhood where these parks were, and whatever might have been considered suitable a few years back, everyone must admit that the spaces now open were not too much. There was a good deal of force in what the right hon. Gentleman had said about the profit that might be made by "a fringe" around the frontage. They all knew that the frontage near a park was very valuable; but "a fringe" was a very wide term, and when they came to talk of a fringe all round they might reduce the area very considerably. When they considered how densely the people were packed, what the effect upon their health of that dense packing was, how every day and every hour the population was increasing, and how the country and fresh air were being put further away from them, it was very unfortunate now that open spaces had been obtained, that every morsel of those spaces should not be kept open for the health of the people.

MR. GLADSTONE said, he could assure the right hon. Gentleman that the Government had no desire whatever but that simple justice should be done, and he put it to the candour of the hon. Member for Finsbury (Mr. W. M. Torrens) that his statement as to the acreage of the parks available for the East-end and West-end of the metropolis respectively did not fairly represent the merits of the case. The Green Park, St. James's Park, and Hyde Park had not been purchased by the public money; they were Crown estates made over to the metropolis. And here he would point out to the right hon. Gentleman that the whole of his speech appeared to be founded on a principle diametrically the reverse of what Parliament had deliberately adopted. The right hon. Gentleman had made an appeal to compassion, and said—"Assuredly you don't think these acres too much." But was Parliament to make parks for London, or was it not? If Parliament was to make parks for London, the cost must come upon the Consolidated Fund. But Parliament eight or ten years ago deliberately and advisedly set up a system of local government charged with the execution of public works, and, among others, with the formation of these parks. Surely that was a most important consideration. It was a most serious thing for Parliament to take this course, and then to say that the local authority so constituted should not deal with the matter in accordance with the rules already laid down, but that Parliament itself should step in and say upon what terms parks should be made. If this were done the rate-payers would not let the point rest there. Parliament had distinctly declared that the funds of the country at large should not go to make parks for London, that London must attend to its own wants in this respect, and had provided machinery for the purpose; if Parliament, however, interfered, a responsibility would be entailed which it must not shrink from discharging.

MR. COLLINS said, he thought the Prime Minister had over-stated the case in dealing with it as if the country did nothing for London. The country at large had done much for Battersea Park and the Royal Parks, and having thus contributed a rate-in-aid, the people of the country had a right to be heard when they expressed an opinion on the subject of parks to be made at the East-end. He hoped, however, that his hon. Friend opposite (Mr. W. M. Torrens) would so modify his proposal as to allow a smaller portion of the park than twenty acres, say ten acres, to be placed within the power of the Board of Works for appropriation.

DR. BREWER said, he should support the original proposition, giving the Board power to sell, because he desired other parts of London besides Finsbury to have parks; he could point out places in London which would be thankful for a fourth of the space Finsbury would gain by the Bill as it originally stood.

SIR HENRY HOARE said, the only argument in favour of the sale of the twenty acres of land was the fear that the rates on the metropolis at large would be increased. As he thought the richer portion of the metropolis—the West-end—could afford to bear a heavier burden in order to give the poorer portion—the East-end—a better park, he would vote with the hon. Member for Finsbury.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, the question was not one of policy, as to how much the House would feel disposed to give or withhold, but was one of simple justice. A piece of land had been divided into two portions; one had been given to the people of Finsbury for a park, the other to the Metropolitan Board, as representing the rate-payers, and when the Board of Works came to Parliament asking for facilities to borrow money, the hon. Member for Finsbury asked the House to rob the rate-payers of their portion of the land in order to give it to the people of Finsbury; he, in fact, asked the House to impose a heavy burden on the rate-payers, in opposition to a bargain solemnly agreed to by Parliament.

MR. HINDE PALMER said, he had heard no reason whatever to justify him in voting in a contrary direction to that in which he voted on Saturday; though he thought the clause might be modified. It was never intended to divide the ground into park and building land, and he objected to describing the twenty acres as surplus land, because "surplus land," as applied to schemes ordinarily before Parliament, referred to land beyond what was necessary for the object in view, and this twenty acres was not more than sufficient for the park. The Finsbury Park Act gave power to the Metropolitan Board of Works to take 250 acres and to sell the surplus; but that Board only required 115 acres, and they now asked to apply to building purposes the proportion of twenty acres to 115, though the proportion originally named was that of twenty acres to 250 acres.

Motion made, and Question put, "That the Clause stand part of the Bill."

The House divided:—Ayes 56; Noes 79: Majority 23.

Another Amendment made.

Bill to be read the third time To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

CANADA (RUPERT'S LAND) LOAN (GUARANTEE) BILL.

Resolution reported;

"That it is expedient to authorize the Treasury to guarantee the interest of a Loan not exceeding £300,000, to be raised by the Governor in Council of Canada, under the terms of an arrangement concluded with the Hudson's Bay Company for the surrender of Rupert's Land to Her Majesty; and to make provision for the payment, out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, of such sums as may be required to fulfil the said guarantee."

Resolution agreed to: — Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. DODSON, Mr. STANSFELD, and Mr. CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 253.]

BROUGHTY FERRY PROVISIONAL ORDER CONFIRMATION BILL.

On Motion of The LORD ADVOCATE, Bill to confirm a Provisional Order under "The General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862," relating to the burgh of Broughty Ferry, ordered to be brought in by The LORD ADVOCATE and Mr. ADAM.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 254.]

House adjourned at a quarter after Two o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Tuesday, 3rd August, 1869.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading—Cursitor (County Palatine of Durham) * (263); Expiring Laws Continuance * (262).

Second Reading — Telegraphs (243); Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act (1863) Amendment * (256); Public Works (Ireland) * (255); Clerks of Assize * (248); Zanzibar (Jurisdiction of Consul) * (246); Fortifications (Provision for Expenses) (251); Basses Lights, Ceylon, * (254); Criminal Lunatics * (247); Local Officers Superannuation (Ireland)* (249); Militia Pay *; Militia (Ireland) * (252); Nitro Glycerine * (245); Railways Abandonment (249); Volunteer Act (1863) Amendment * (257); Metropolitan Building Act (1855) Amendment * (232).

Committee—Report—Courts of Justice Salaries and Funds * (215); Land Tax Commissioners Names * (158); Dublin Freemen Commission (210).

Report—Fisheries (Ireland) * (236); Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. * (230).

Third Reading—Civil Offices (Pensions) * (157); Evidence Amendment * (260); Contagious Diseases (Animals) (261); Jamaica Loans * (204); Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal * (241); Millbank Prison * (234); Trades Unions (Protection of Funds) * (226); Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Supplemental (No. 2) * (136); Straits Settlements * (231), and passed.

Withdrawn—Joint Stock Companies Arrangements * (167).

TELEGRAPHS BILL—(No. 243.)

(The Marquess of Lansdowne.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, their Lordships would remember that an Act was passed last year enabling the Postmaster General to purchase the interests and property of the various telegraph companies of the United Kingdom, with a view to secure cheaper and extended telegraphic communication. Negotiations were entered into with those companies, and their machinery and accounts were carefully examined, the result being an agreement that twenty years' purchase should be paid. The companies, in the first instance, claimed in the aggregate the sum of £7,000,000 as the value of their property, but this was ultimately reduced to £5,220,000. The railway companies possessing lines had also to be arranged with; and this, and further expenses that had been incurred owing to the Government having taken upon itself the management of the telegraphs, and making them of the utmost utility to the public, raised the sum to £6,730,000, or, in round numbers, £7,000,000. If this sum were raised by loan at 3½ per cent, the annual interest would be £236,000. Now, according to the most careful calculations, the revenue likely to be derived was £673,828. In addition, however, to the interest, there would be various outgoings for salaries, the maintenance of the lines and instruments, way-leaves, and incidental expenses, the probable amount of which was £359,000. This would leave a surplus or profit of £77,000, which, if the capital were obtained at 3¼ per cent, would be raised to £94,000. They might reasonably expect, moreover, that this bargain, which he regarded as a good one at present, would become still better hereafter. It must be remembered that the business of the companies had for many years been steadily increasing, and it might be expected that the increased facilities and superior management of the new system would bring about a still further increase. Among those facilities might be mentioned the wires into every post-office where there was a money order office, the receipt of telegrams in all receiving houses and boxes, the payment by postage stamps, that they might be deposited for transmission in letter-boxes, and a uniform rate of 1*s*. This last, he thought, would more than counterbalance the abolition of 6*d*. messages in a few of the large towns, for the number of these bore a small proportion to the total number of messages. It was hoped, moreover, that before long the uniform rate might be reduced to 6*d*.; but it was thought best not to attempt too much in the first instance. Exception had been taken to the monopoly clause in some quarters; but it must be borne in mind that the price to be paid to the companies was a monopoly price; hence it was only fair that the Government should be protected against the contingency of being undersold and exposed to ruinous loss, while there was no fear that the Government would not be ready, at all times to adopt manifest improvements, and give the utmost accommodation to the public.

Motion agreed to.

Bill read 2^a accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) BILL—(No. 261.)

(The Lord President.)

THIRD READING. AMENDMENTS.

Bill read 3^a, with the Amendments.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY moved an Amendment enabling railway companies to charge on owners of cattle the expense of disinfecting the trucks. The noble Chairman of Committees invariably opposed any attempt on the part of companies to raise the rates they had originally laid down, on the ground that they formed a contract with the public. Now, admitting this for argument's sake to be correct, justice required that no burdens should be imposed on the companies beyond those originally contemplated, and at the time when the tariffs were fixed it was plainly impossible to foresee the necessity of disinfection as a precaution against the cattle plague. He might be told that the expense would be small; but last year two new expenses —those of smoking carriages and of communication between passengers and guard—were cast on the companies, and many small items like this formed a heavy burden on the poorer companies, such as would account for the difficulties under which they laboured.

EARL DE GREY AND RIPON opposed the Amendment, on the ground that the cleansing and disinfection of trucks had been obligatory on railway companies under various Acts of Parliament ever since the Cattle Plague Orders of 1867. An attempt, moreover, on the part of the company with which the noble Marquess was connected to impose a charge on its customers had been pronounced illegal, Mr. Justice Keating holding that it was not a service rendered to the plaintiff individually as distinguished from the rest of the public, and Justices Montague Smith and Brett concurred with him. On the ground stated by the learned Judge the existing law ought to be maintained.

Amendment negatived.

Amendments made; Bill passed, and sent to the Commons.

FISHERIES (IRELAND) BILL.—(No. 236.)

REPORT.

Amendment reported (according to Order).

Amendment proposed,

In page 5, line 12, after ("engine") insert ("Provided always, that where the Court of Queen's Bench shall on appeal from the decision of the said commissioners or inspectors have decided that any such fixed engine is legal, the said inspectors shall give a certificate to that effect to the person entitled thereto.")—(The Lord Dufferin.)

Amendment agreed to.

Bill to be read 3^a on Thursday next.

DUBLIN FREEMEN COMMISSION BILL.

(The Lord Lurgan.)

(NO. 210.) COMMITTEE.

Order of the Day for the House to be put into Committee, read.

Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into Committee."—(The Lord Lurgan.)

THE EARL OF LONGFORD urged that, considering the slender and accidental majority of 1 last night in favour of proceeding with the measure, it was scarcely reasonable that the Government should persevere with it. They had no doubt introduced it in the belief that it was for the public interest; but, instead of being a statesmanlike endeavour to remedy an abuse, it was really a party proceeding, and the persecution of a political interest. He moved that the Bill be committed this day three months.

Amendment moved, to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day three months.")—(The Earl of Longford.)

EARL GRANVILLE hoped the opposition would not be pressed, the question having been decided last night on two separate divisions, and no notice having been given of the Amendment. He denied that any party question was involved in the Bill.

LORD CAIRNS said, he thought the merits of the Bill were fairly challenged last night. The majority was not a very large one; but at this period of the Session it would hardly be right to divide again on the same question, and he hoped his noble Friend would not persevere with his Amendment, particularly as no notice had been given of it.

On Question, That ("now") stand part of the Motion? Resolved in the Affirmative. House in Committee accordingly; Bill reported without Amendment; and to be read 3ª on Thursday next.

FORTIFICATIONS (PROVISION FOR EXPENSES) BILL—(No 251.)

(The Lord Northbrook.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

LORD NORTHBROOK, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, stated that the original estimate of the works was over £10,000,000; that a subsequent estimate was £7,470,000; that a loan of £6,000,000 had been authorized, the greater portion of which had been expended; and that the Bill authorized a further loan of £1,500,000, which it was believed would bring the works to completion. The estimate of 1867 would not be exceeded—indeed, the present estimate showed a reduction of a few thousand pounds. Last year, in consequence of a discussion in the House of Commons, Sir John Pakington, then Secretary for War, appointed a Committee of highly competent men to inquire into the condition of the works, and their Report gave a very high opinion of their construction, of the carefulness of the estimates, and generally of the designs. They recommended some modifications, which had been submitted to the Defence and Fortifications Committee, comprising His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief and eminent officers. One of them was that in consequence of the introduction of Captain Moncrieff's gun carriage the guns so mounted would not require the expensive iron shields otherwise necessary, and this would effect a considerable saving.

Motion agreed to: Bill read 2ª accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

RAILWAYS ABANDONMENT BILL.

[NO. 249.] SECOND READING.

(The Lord Privy Seal.)

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY, in moving that the Bill be now read the second time, said, that by the Act of 1867 the Parliamentary deposit of any company was made liable to its debts in the event of its being wound up. Schemes were sometimes got up without any expectation of fulfilment, and the solicitors and others who promoted them not unfrequently incurred considerable expenses, which were at present paid out of the Parliamentary deposits. Now, it was very desirable that, in the case of schemes of an illusory nature, the promoters should be prevented from obtaining repayment of their costs out of the Parliamentary deposit. It did not appear that the Board of Trade was the proper tribunal for determining whether the scheme was or was not of an illusory character, and this question would be decided by a court of law. The Bill, therefore, empowered a court of law to decide whether the promoters should receive their expenses out of the Parliamentary deposit until all the other creditors had been satisfied.

Motion agreed to: Bill read 2ª accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

NATIONAL GALLERY.—RESOLUTION.

THE EARL OF WINCHILSEA said, that he had asked a few days ago a Question concerning certain pictures in the National Gallery, but had received an answer which he thought far from satisfactory. The noble Lord who then answered on the part of the Trustees of the National Gallery (Lord Overstone) did not, as he expected, offer any evidence of the genuineness of the pictures then referred to. He had been very much surprised at the statement made by the noble Lord with respect to the power of the Director in purchasing pictures; but having since looked into the Treasury Minute he was bound to say that the noble Lord was perfectly correct in his statement. At the same time a more extraordinary Minute he never saw in his life. From the Minute it seemed that the Trustees had a mere barren power, and all the real power was placed in the Director. It appeared that in the case of the purchase of pictures the whole power of the Trustees was confined to a barren protest, and that pictures were bought upon the judgment of the Director alone, whose decision, upon all the suggestions made to him, would be final. According to the Treasury Minute, one of the most important of the duties of the Director was to construct the history of every picture in the collection. In this way the history of one of these pictures had been constructed, no evidence of its genuineness being offered, though opinions were referred to in its favour. Reference was made to Vasari, who was represented to have said that Michael Angelo left many unfinished works in painting. Now, this was a complete misrepresentation of the passage in Vasari, who said that they were finished works. He contended that, for the satisfaction of the Director himself, and certainly for that of the public, it would be better that those who had the power of altering the Treasury Minute should alter it in the terms of the Motion of which he had given notice. What he proposed was—

> "That henceforth it be an instruction to Mr. Boxall, R.A., to buy no picture in England without previously submitting it to the judgment of the Trustees of the National Gallery, or any picture in foreign parts which has not got an authentic pedigree from the date of its being painted by the Master to whom it is ascribed to the day of purchase, unless by special permission in writing from the aforesaid Trustees."

Now, he did not think that was at all an unreasonable restriction. The country in no way stinted the National Gallery in the grant of money for the purchase of pictures; and in return he submitted that the country had a right to require genuine works of art, and not works about which there was a great variety of opinion. The variety of opinions respecting the supposed Rembrandt was so great that it should be put, with the spurious "Ecce Homo," in the cellar of the National Gallery. That would be the best place for it, because to see this picture attributed to Rembrandt surrounded by undoubted Rembrandts was too much for a person who had formed a correct notion of art. He hoped he should not be understood as saying anything offensive to Mr. Boxall personally. He had not the honour of that gentleman's acquaintance, and it was only on public grounds that he brought forward this question. He should not trouble their Lordships to divide on his Motion; but having directed attention to the subject, which he thought was really of vital importance, he hoped that something might be done to insure for the future that the public, in return for their money, should have pictures about the authenticity of which there could be no doubt.

Moved to resolve, That henceforth it be an instruction to Mr. Boxall, R.A., to buy no picture in England without previously submitting it to the judgment of the Trustees of the National Gallery, or any picture in foreign parts which has not got an authentic pedigree from the date of its being painted by the master to whom it is ascribed to the day of purchase, unless by special permission in writing from the aforesaid Trustees.—(The Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham.)

Earl GRANVILLE said, he did not question that his noble Friend had directed attention to this subject upon public grounds, nor did he venture to impugn the correctness of his taste, knowing the attention he had paid to art subjects. But as to the authenticity of these pictures, he thought he had hardly ever heard a more complete answer than that given the other evening by the noble Lord (Lord Overstone), who, he regretted to say, was not now present, and who was conversant with all the details connected with these pictures. With regard to the mere business question of where the responsibility should rest in these cases, he entirely disagreed from his noble Friend. In his opinion it was of great importance that one paid officer—an officer paid by Parliament — should be made responsible for every purchase. If he did that which the Trustees thought he ought not to do, they could protest against the purchase. But there was no mistake so great as to invest with responsibility a considerable number of persons, sometimes attending, sometimes not attending, and all occupied with other matters. The real mode of insuring effective responsibility was to declare that whatever was done should be done by one paid officer responsible to Parliament and to public opinion. Holding this opinion, he could not encourage his noble Friend in the hope that the Government would be inclined to make the change which he proposed.

Motion, (by leave of the House) withdrawn.

House adjourned at half past Six o'clock,
till To-morrow, half past
Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Tuesday, 3rd August, 1869.

MINUTES.]—New Writ Issued—For Antrim, v. Rear Admiral George Henry Seymour, C.B., deceased.

Public Bills—Ordered—Benefit Building Societies Regulation *.

Ordered — First Reading — Attorneys and Solicitors Remuneration * [260]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland) * [261].

First Reading—Millbank Prison * [258]; Straits Settlements * [259].

Committee—East India Loan * [251]—R.P.; Parochial Schools (Scotland) (re-comm.) [215] —R.P.

Committee—Report—Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) *; Warehousing of Wines and Spirits, &c. * [201]; East India Loan * [251]; Harbour of Galle Loan * [250]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment * [244]; Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment (re-comm.) * [221].

Considered as amended — Dividends on Public Stocks * [247]; Inclosure of Lands * [31].

Third Reading—Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) [238], debate adjourned; Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment * [227], and passed.

Withdrawn—Inclosure of Lands (No. 2) * [148]; Offices Abolition * [246].

The House met at Two of the clock.

INFANTICIDE.—QUESTION.

Mr. RAIKES said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to introduce any measure, during next Session, with the object of enabling juries to convict persons guilty of infanticide, without exposing them to the sentence of death now necessarily pronounced, but never carried out in such cases?

Mr. BRUCE: Sir, I am unable to give any pledge on this subject, more especially as I am in doubt, as at present advised, whether it would be proper to consider infanticide apart from the general question of murder.

COURTS OF JUSTICE—CAREY STREET SITE.—QUESTION.

Mr. MONK said, he would beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether it is the intention of the Government to proceed forthwith with the erection of the New Law Courts on the Carey Street Site, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Committee?

Mr. GLADSTONE: In answer, Sir, to the Question of my hon. Friend, I have to say that I do not think it possible for the Government to arrive at any positive decision, much less to take any positive step in relation to a document understood to proceed from a Select Committee, but not yet laid before the House, and which, if laid before the House, could not be considered along with the evidence. I am afraid, at this period of the Session, my hon. Friend's Question is premature.

Mr. MONK said, he would like to know from the Secretary of the Treasury when the Report would be in the hands of Members?

Mr. AYRTON said, he could not say. It rested entirely with the Chairman of a Select Committee to see that his Report was printed accurately.

Mr. MONK said, he had asked the question of the Secretary to the Treasury in the absence of the noble Lord (Lord Stanley) the Member for King's Lynn, who was Chairman of the Select Committee.

SCOTLAND—DISTRIBUTOR OF STAMPS FOR AYRSHIRE.—QUESTION,

Lord GARLIES said, he wished to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether Mr. Oswald has resigned his appointment as Distributor of Stamps for the county of Ayrshire; and, if so, whether the appointment has been or is intended to be filled up?

Mr. AYRTON: Sir, it is quite correct that Mr. Oswald has ceased to hold the office of Stamp Distributor for Ayrshire, and arrangements are made for the appointment of another officer to discharge the duties, but on the understanding that the appointment will be subject to further arrangements with a view to economy.

INDIA—TROOPS IN BHOOTAN.

QUESTION.

Sir ROBERT ANSTRUTHER said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for India, Whether the troops that served in Bhootan in 1864 and 1865 will receive the medal granted for frontier service in India; and, if not, the reasons for not giving it to them?

Mr. GRANT DUFF: Sir, I must repeat to my hon. Friend the Member for Fife the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Perth (Mr. Kinnaird) some weeks ago—namely, that the North-west Frontier medal was conferred at the suggestion of the Government of India, but that the Government of India has not recommended the grant of any medal for Bhootan.

UNION OF PARISHES IN WESTMINSTER.

QUESTION.

DR. BREWER said, he wished to ask the President of the Poor Law Board, If, before proceeding to unite the parishes of St. Margaret's and St. John's Westminster, to the parish of St. George Hanover Square, he will cause an investigation to be made into the Workhouse accommodation, the debts on account of Poors Rate, and more especially into the general system of management prevailing in the aforesaid parishes?

MR. GOSCHEN: In reply, Sir, to my hon. Friend, I have to say that I cannot undertake to cause an investigation to be made into the workhouse accommodation in question, because it has already been made. The debts have also been ascertained; they will be discharged by the parishes of St. Margaret's and St. John's, and, of course, no portion of them will fall on the parish of St. George, Hanover Square. It is also unnecessary to inquire into the general system of management prevailing in the aforesaid parishes, because that will be charged on the union of the parishes under the Amalgamation Act, in which amalgamated management very probably my hon. Friend will have a part.

INDIA—PUNJAUB TENANCY ACT.

QUESTION.

MR. C. DENISON said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for India, If he will lay upon the Table the Petition of the Landed Proprietors of the Punjaub against the enforcement of the Punjaub Tenancy Act, together with the Minute of the Lieutenant Governor, Sir D. MacLeod, transmitting the said Petition to the Supreme Government; and, whether he will state the substance of any Resolution thereupon which may have been adopted by the Secretary of State?

MR. GRANT DUFF: Sir, these Papers cannot be laid at present on the Table, as no resolution has yet been taken about them. The whole question is engaging the attention of the Secretary of State.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL—COMMITTEE.

(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Ayrton.)

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

MR. CRAWFORD begged leave to call the attention of the House to an important alteration which had been introduced into one of the clauses of this Bill. In all previous Appropriation Bills there had been a power of borrowing on the part of the Government, but that power had been somewhat restricted. The power hitherto was expressed thus—"The Governor and Company of the Bank of England shall have power to lend to the Government." He believed that these words were in the draft of the Bill as it originally stood; but it had since been altered, and they now ran in this way—"The Commissioners of the Treasury may borrow on the credit of the same"—or, in other words, that the Commissioners of the Treasury should have a general borrowing power conferred upon them. Now, he had no objection to such a borrowing power; but this was a very important alteration, and he thought attention should be called to it, giving, as it did, great latitude to the Treasury. He conceived the Treasury was quite justified in obtaining for the service of the State such advances of money as might be required from any quarter they might think fit; and he wished the House clearly to understand that it was not at all in consequence of his connection with the Bank of England that he raised any objection to this change in the borrowing powers conferred on the Government. His only wish was that attention might be drawn to the fact, and that the people out-of-doors might know that this great change had been made in the borrowing powers of the Government. The only further observation by way of criticism he should like to make on the matter was this—that the change was of that important character that he thought the attention of the House ought to have been called to it by some one of those having charge of the Bill, and it should not have been left to any private Member to draw attention to the subject. He wished distinctly to repeat, standing there as the representative of the Bank of England, that no jealousy was felt at the enlargement of the powers of the Government, and he only made these observations on the subject because he thought it right that the people out-of-doors should be informed of the fact of the change which had been made. He was quite aware that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had pointed to a change of this kind on introducing his Budget; but the language of the right hon. Gentleman had hardly justified the expectation that his intention would so soon be carried into effect.

House resumed; Bill reported, without Amendment; to be read the third time To-morrow.

EAST INDIA REVENUE ACCOUNTS.

COMMITTEE.

Considered in Committee.

(In the Committee).

MR. GRANT DUFF *: The House has just resolved itself into Committee, for the purpose of discharging, what I may be permitted to call, not the least important of the many duties which are discharged by the most powerful and most hard-worked Assembly which exists, or ever has existed, in the world. It has resolved itself into Committee for the purpose of hearing the annual statement which it requires with regard to the affairs of its great vassal Empire in Asia—an Empire covering as large a portion of the earth's surface as France, Spain, Portugal, Holland, Belgium, North Germany, South Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Denmark, Scandinavia, Turkey, and Greece, all put together, and inhabited by men at least as various as those who inhabit all these countries, but of whom some 147,000,000 are our fellow-subjects, just as much as the inhabitants of Yorkshire or of Kent, and another 50,000,000, although not precisely our fellow-subjects, are amenable to our influence in a far greater degree than any of our neighbours in this quarter of the globe. Nothing gives a more striking idea of the ease—or ought I to say the heedlessness?—with which this great nation still, in spite of the poet, sustains "the too vast orb of its fate," than the fact that it so seldom takes the trouble to investigate, through this House, which is the reflection or concentration of itself, the progress of its affairs in the East, giving its confidence thoroughly to those who represent it here and in India, and only asking an account of their proceedings at distant intervals. If the effect of this were that our affairs were neglected, and that our Empire were slipping from us, such conduct might be properly represented as a base dereliction of duty; but if our affairs are going from better to better, then perhaps it is only a sign that the instinct which taught us how to acquire, till teaches us how to keep our wonderful possession. The phrase Indian Budget, usually applied to the business which comes before us to-night, is a misleading one. We have to deal with something less and something more than a budget. Our position is a very different one from that which we occupied on the 8th of April last. Then we were considering matters directly bearing upon our own pockets and purses. Now we are going to consider matters whose direct bearing is on the pockets and purses of men separated from us by many thousands of miles, and by still wider gulfs than any that are made by mere distance. Even if it were possible for the representative of the Indian Government in this House to invoke the assistance of the fairy Agreeable Surprise, who generally presides over English Budgets, the Committee would hear with comparatively languid satisfaction that such and such taxes, which neither they nor their constituents pay, can be dispensed with. But that fairy cannot possibly be invoked; for those hon. Members who take most interest in the affairs of India, know pretty well the main features of the statement which I shall have to present to them. I cannot accordingly indulge, as my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer did on a recent occasion, in the pleasure so natural to a benevolent mind, of shaking my hearers over the pit of financial ruin, or of letting them drop into it, and catching them half-way down. That pleasure, I say, is denied to the mouthpiece of the Indian Government; but as some compensation he is always encouraged by the Committee, and is, indeed, obliged by the necessity of the case, to enter into somewhat wider considerations than the English Chancellor of the Exchequer is permitted to do. For the India Office is not a great Department, like the Treasury. It is the whole controlling government of an Empire, with its own Treasury and its own War Office, dealing with interests, not so large, indeed, as those with which the English Departments deal, but larger than those which are managed by the corresponding Departments at Vienna or Berlin.

The necessity for compressing an enormous mass of matter into a small space must make the statement which I have to lay before the Committee to-day drier than I could wish; but I shall do my best to eliminate from it all facts which are incapable of being retained in the mind of the hearer. My business, as I understand it, is to give such an exposition of the finances of India as may make pretty clear to all who listen to me, what is the actual position of that country at this moment; how it has been getting on since the 31st March, 1867, and how it seems likely to get on up to the 31st March, 1870. The Committee will see that I mean to devide my statement in the usual way, into three parts. I mean to explain the actual completed accounts for the year ending on the 31st March, 1868; to tell hon. Members, as well as I can, how the accounts of the year, ending on the 31st of March, 1869, of which we have not yet seen the whole, are likely to turn out, and to make the best predictions which our information enables me to make about the year which will end on the 31st March, 1870. In technical language, I will deal first with Actuals; secondly, with the Regular Estimate; thirdly, with the Budget Estimate. First, then, for the Actuals; that is, for the year which began on the 1st of April, 1867, and ended on the 31st of March, 1868. In that year the gross amount of our receipts was £48,534,412. That is to say, we had not so large an income as the United States, as France, as England, or as Russia; but we had a larger income than any nation except these four. Now, from what sources did this enormous income come to us? Much the largest item of our Indian Revenue is the sum which we derive from our assessments on the land. This amounted in the year ending March 31, 1868, in round numbers, to £20,000,000 (£19,986,640). This source of income is sometimes described as a rent, but that description is not altogether an accurate one; for, as is well said in the despatch by which the Court of Directors replied to a remarkable Minute of Lord Harris's in 1856—

> "The officers engaged in the duty of fixing the assessment should always bear in mind that, as you have expressed it, the right of the Government is not a rent which consists of all the surplus produce, after paying the costs of cultivation and the profits of the agricultural stocks, but a land revenue only, which ought, if possible, to be so lightly assessed as to leave a surplus or rent to the occupier, whether he, in fact, let the land to others or retain it in his own hands."

The spirit which animates these lines is that which has guided the Indian Government of late years. The tendency has been to diminish assessments—not to increase them—in ether words, to let the people, as we say in Scotland, "sit easy." In 1862, it appeared that the then rulers, forced to take action by a Resolution of Lord Canning and his Council, in the autumn of the previous year, had made up their minds that the old Indian land revenue had not the virtue in it which used to be believed, and that the summum bonum of the financier was to be found in a wealthy people, able to buy large quantities of taxable articles, and to endure all the various financial tortures which modern ingenuity has divised for the contribuable of Europe. And so a despatch went forth from the India Office on the 9th of July, 1862, decreeing the establishment of a judicious permanent settlement. A few days afterwards, Mr. Vansittart moved for certain dissents which had been recorded by Members of Council. The result was the laying before Parliament of two most excellent Papers — one by Mr. Mangles, advocating the old land revenue arrangements, the other by Sir John Lawrence advocating a permanent settlement. No one can read these Papers without being greatly impressed by both of them, but the side which he will take will depend rather upon his general views with regard to taxation, than upon his special views with regard to India. Far be it from me to say to which opinion I incline when such great doctors disagreee; but the outcome of the controversy, looking at the matter purely historically, has been a strange one, for the victrix causa has, it would seem, pleased the gods as little as it pleased Cato, and the old system of moderate assessments, liable to be revised at the end of long periods, still goes on. The permanent settlement which was contemplated has never been carried out. We are now, with regard to our land revenue, very much in the position of a gentleman who has property in various parts of the British Isles, where different customs prevail with respect to the granting and length of leases. In the North-west Provinces, for instance, no increase is to be looked for till the end of the century, for we are just commencing a new period of settlement or lease for thirty years. In Madras, on the other hand, where the settlement is made on totally different principles, we may look for a slow and steady increase. In Bombay, we may look for an increase which will be steady and not slow; and so I might go on through most of the provinces of India, showing that we and our descendants may expect a large rise of revenue from the land throughout the greater part of British India. Tributes and contributions from Native States form the second item of our revenue, and bring in not much less than £700,000 (£689,286). To explain how that aggregate has accrued to us would be to recount a very large part of Indian history during the last 200 years. The amount is not great; less than would be brought in to the English Exchequer by a halfpenny income tax at home. Of old, however, tribute has been the distinguishing mark of rule, and he must be strangely constituted who does not reflect, with a certain satisfaction, that amongst those whose offerings swell this sum are men who may vie in the splendour of their lineage with the oldest European Sovereigns, and more than one who could, with no offence to truth, make prouder answers than even that which Prince Massimo made to the First Napoleon, when he was asked if he was descended from Fabius Maximus—"I cannot prove it; but it is a story that has been repeated for 1,000 years in my family." Our forests yielded about £330,000 (£331,088), a much smaller amount than they would have yielded if we had begun to attend carefully to them when we first grew strong in India. That, however, was not to have been expected. Forests always seem inexhaustible until they begin to be exhausted. When history comes to number up the good deeds which Britain has done for India, she will not, I am sure, forget to record amongst them that—not an hour to soon, indeed, but yet not too late—she called in European science to check the destruction of the forests. No one who has not looked into this subject has the faintest idea how terrible have been the effects, over wide regions of the globe, of carelessness in keeping up a proper proportion of trees. Let any one to whom this whole subject is new turn to the remarkable work of the American Minister at Florence, Mr. Marsh, upon Physical Geography as modified by Human Action, and he will shudder at the dangers which we have only just escaped. If our predecessors had known what we know, much of the enormous expense that we are now being put to with regard to irrigation would have been quite unnecessary. But the mistakes of former days are past praying for, and we can now only rejoice that free course has been given to Dr. Brandis and his subordinates; that the saving of the forest has been recognized as a great State necessity; that a regular Forest Department has been inaugurated, which will take to India the science of France and Germany, and that the good example of forest conservation set in British territory is beginning to spread into some of the Native States. The forest revenue is derived chiefly from the sale of timber, but also from a system of seignorage or license to cut, which will, however, disappear when the amended arrangements for forest organization are complete. In Burmah, something is brought in by a duty levied on the wood floated down the great rivers from non-British territory. Something, too, is gained in many places by miscellaneous products, such as honey, bees' wax, and lac. I have no doubt that when science has been more systematically applied in various places to the investigation of the resources of India, a great many small gains of this kind will be realized, all tending to make heavy the coffers of the State, and to ease the burden of the taxpayer. With a view to this, among other good results, the preparation of a Flora Sylvatica for the Punjaub and the North-western Provinces has just been sanctioned. A large project for taking stock of the natural products of India is likewise in contemplation, and the preparation of a Guide to the Indian Forester is proposed. In time we shall, no doubt, have a special college for forest science in India, like that for teaching engineering, which already exists at Roorkee. There are few sources of revenue the increase of which it is more agreeable to contemplate than this; and, although the rise will be gradual, because we have a great deal still to do, and much to expend before we can reap the full results of good and economic forest management, it will ultimately be very large. The next head is Excise on Spirits and Drugs, or, as it is sometimes called, the Abkari revenue. From this source we derived nearly £2,250,000 (£2,238,931). The articles which contributed to swell this large amount were many and various. There were spirits distilled by native methods from several palms—as the cocoa-nut, the date, and the palmyra. There were spirits made from the young leaf-stalk of the cashew, as well as from the fruit of the mangoe. There were spirits distilled by English methods from rice and sugar, and there were the many preparations of opium and of hemp, which, to a great extent, take the place in India of the alcoholic stimulants familiar to more northern climes, happily without producing quite such bad effects, although, no doubt, mischievous enough. The next head is the Certificate Tax, which gives us more than £650,000 (£653,848). This impost was introduced in 1867, by Mr. Massey, under the name of a license tax, but was somewhat altered in 1868, and changed its title. It amounted to a kind of graduated income tax, upon persons engaged in trades and professions; but as it has now, in the year 1869-70, merged in a different tax, of which I shall have to speak presently, I need not dwell further upon it. The Customs gave us upwards of £2,500,000 (£2,578,632). They are derived partly from export and partly from import duties. The schedule of the first of these is very short, and contains only indigo, grain, lac, oils, seeds, shawls, cotton goods, hides or skins, and spices. The list of import duties is longer, still comprising sixty-five principal heads of taxed articles. Before 1867 they were far more numerous. The rates are low, 7½ per cent ad valorem, being the usual duty. Some classes of goods are exceptionally favoured—thus cotton twist pays only 3½ per cent; cotton, flax, silk, and woollen piece-goods only 5 per cent. It will be seen that our Indian tariff contrasts favourably with most others, though I confess that, speaking only for myself, and by no means committing anyone else, I trust the hour may one day arrive when we shall be enabled still further to reduce, not to say to extinguish, it altogether. The next head of revenue is that of Salt, from which we derived more than £5,700,000 (£5,726,093). The days are long gone by when this tax could fairly be represented as an extremely oppressive one. Nevertheless, there are large districts of the country, more especially the Punjaub, the North-west Provinces, Central Provinces, and Oude, in which a very great deal is to be said for a reduction of duty, and in some parts of which the existing state of things is, at the least, highly inconvenient. This salt question has occupied, during the last year, much time, both in India and at the India Office, and I trust that before very long some improvements may be inaugurated. We are certainly very far from having yet arrived at the dernier mot of politico-economical wisdom in dealing with this matter. From salt, the third largest feeder of our revenue, I pass to Opium, the second largest, from which we received in 1867-8 nearly £9,000,000 (£8,923,568). Our opium revenue is derived from two sources — first, from the opium which is grown under our own superintendence, and prepared for exportation at Patna, in Bengal, and at Gazeepore in the North-west Provinces, after which it is sold by public auction for Government account; and, secondly, from a transit duty levied on the opium grown in the States of Central India, and shipped at Bombay. No one who occupies himself with Indian finance can be altogether happy about this revenue. I do not speak of its moral aspect; that is a large and interesting subject, on which I cannot enter now. When I speak of our opium revenue as a weak point, I am thinking only of its financial aspect. It is exposed, it seems to me, to three dangers—first, to the possibility of some movement in China which may effectually close that market; secondly, to an effective competition in the Chinese markets from other countries; and, thirdly, to such an improvement in the manufacture of opium in China itself, as to make it independent of the Indian supply. The first of these dangers is not an imaginary one; for we know that hostility to the poppy was one of the many strange characteristics of that terrible rebellion misnamed the Great Peace, which lately desolated so many cities in the Flowery Land, and added by its results one more irony to history. Nevertheless I cannot believe that any movement of this kind will ever be so general in China—a country which is, be it remembered, equal in size to eighteen Great Britains—as to lead to anything like an entire cessation of our traffic. Nay, rather, I expect that increased communication with Western China will favour it. As to the second danger, the increase of competition from other countries, especially Persia, some persons think it the gravest of the three; but it has not yet been proved that the supply is likely to increase very much. As to the third danger, the best authorities tell us that although the poppy is very largely grown in some parts of China, for instance in the great province of Szechuen, the Chinese drug cannot compete with the Indian, which stands to it in the relation of the Havanna cigar to ordinary European produce. At the same time, no one can venture to say that this superiority will always continue. Stamps gave us nearly £2,200,000 (£2,186,269). These do not differ materially in general character from those with which we are familiar at home. Up to the days of Mr. Wilson, the use of stamps in India had been confined to proceedings in the courts, but by him they were extended to bills of exchange, receipts, agreements, and other papers. Some persons expect a great deal of increase under this head of revenue, meeting the argument of the possible danger of a denial of justice, resulting from the operation of the stamp law, by pointing to the intense litigiousness so common in India, which they would fain check, lest our tribunals be altogether broken down—and no doubt the stamp revenue has grown enormously, having trebled itself since 1859-60; but it is a financial expedient, the operation of which seems to me eminently to require watching, and on which it would be easy to build too high hopes. The Mint yielded £120,000 (£120,252). The Post Office £660,000 (£659,670)—not a large sum; but then it should be remembered that within the limits of India our post is one of the cheapest in the world. From Cape Comorin to Peshawur in the far North-west, from Peshawur to Sudyah in Assam, whence a few days' march takes the traveller into China, the charge is uniform, and the service is generally performed with fair regularity, though the Government of India very justly conceives that it can be still further improved, and is taking measures to import the last European methods. It is, perhaps, worth considering whether we should not increase our revenue, and do more real good to the population of the Indian Continent, taken as a whole, if we somewhat increased the charge for letters passing over long distances, and very considerably reduced the charge on letters passing over very short distances. A large amount of native correspondence is said to dispense with our postal facilities. The Telegraph gave us about £215,000. Fees of court and similar payments brought us in about £720,000 (£719,342), under the head of Law and Justice; and about £232,000 (£231,972) came in under the head of Police, from fines and payments for services performed. Shore dues, pilotage charges, and the like gave us £455,000 (£455,090). School and College dues, with other small matters, made up a sum of about £74,000 (£73,845), under the head of Education. Interest on Government Securities held in the Currency department, on shares in the Bank of Bengal and Madras, and on advances to the various service funds, brought us about £212,000 (£211,975), and under the three heads of Miscellaneous, Army Miscellaneous, Public Works Miscellaneous, we received the large sum of £2,428,000 (£2,428,103) from sources too numerous to mention, but chiefly from the sale of stores. I have been dealing with round numbers, but the Committee will, I dare say, take it from me, that the amount of all our items of receipt united came to £48,534,412 in the year with which I am occupied, the year of Actuals, the year ending March 31, 1868.

I now come to the other side of the account—to our expenditure. The first item which I would mention is the Interest on our Registered Debt in India, amounting to £62,827,200, for which we paid in the year ending 31st March, 1868, £2,761,000 (£2,761,833). Our home debt was, on 31st March, 1868, £30,697,000, on which we paid £1,452,490, so that we are paying £4 13*s.* 8*d.* per cent on the debt in England and India taken as a whole. In the year 1800 we were paying 8½ per cent upon our debt. That is not a very unsatisfactory state of things—little more than 4½ per cent on a debt equivalent to about twice our gross annual income. I wish our home debt was no worse, and the other great Empires of the world, the United States, France, and Russia, may well wish the same, although our positions are not quite similar. I do not know if the attention of hon. Members interested in India has been called to a short Return which was laid before the House some weeks ago, showing approximately the amount of our registered debt in India held by Europeans and natives respectively. From that it would appear that a good deal more than three times as much of our securities is held by Europeans as by natives, and that a larger amount is held in London, in enfaced paper alone, than is held by natives in all our funds put together. One sometimes hears a good deal of uneasiness expressed at the small amount of the Government securities which are held by natives, and conclusions are drawn unfavourable to the confidence of the native population in the security of the tenure by which we hold India. No doubt it would be desirable to have a far larger number of native holders, and perhaps as time goes on we shall, by savings banks and other devices, succeed in tapping the hoards of the non-mercantile classes. The education of those classes has not, however, yet reached the investing point; and, as for the mercantile classes, why on earth should they invest at under 5 per cent, when they can get perfectly good security at 12 or 18 per cent? Such being the golden opportunities of the Indian investor, we cannot be surprised that those natives who hold our securities largely should be chiefly persons whose families have risen to importance through their connection with the British, and who are, to a certain extent, Europeanized. The second item is Interest on Service Funds and other Accounts, for which we paid more than £800,000 (£824,113). The Military and Bengal and Bombay Medical Service Funds have been taken over by us since the amalgamation, we becoming responsible to the subscribers and annuitants for the amount they would have received if the old arrangements had continued. When the last beneficiary under the funds dies, the whole funds, and a good deal more which we have given as a matter of grace and favour, will have disappeared, the charge will vanish from our account, and the capital which we only administered, so to speak, as trustees, will vanish also. The Civil Service Annuity Fund and the Widows' Funds, also in connection with the Civil Service, still go on, and, so long as they continue, the charge on their account will appear in our expenditure.

Then come the expenses in getting in our revenue, classed under thirteen heads, with which I will not trouble the Committee, because there are only two of these items to which I think it is worth while particularly to allude. These are the Post Office and the Telegraph. The facilities given by the former are, as I have already shown, very great, but the expense is also considerable, and it is steadily increasing. In the year with which we are dealing it cost £490,000 (£491,690). The Telegraph cost £396,000 (£396,517), being more than it brought in; but, considering the peculiar conditions under which the service is carried out, this is not surprising. We send messages of ten words from one end of India to the other for 2*s.* Law and Justice cost £2,500,000 (£2,544,349), a sum whose relative if not absolute amount may be perhaps diminished, if it is found, as I hope it may be, that we can substitute, to a considerable extent, in the judicial department, cheap native for high-priced European agency. I do not think I need specify the sums which we paid for Marine Charges, Ecclesiastical Charges, Medical Services, Stationery, and Printing; but the Committee may be interested to know that Superannuation, Retired, and Compassionate Allowances in India cost more than £900,000 (£911,256). Administration and Public Departments are set down in our accounts as costing £1,100,000 (£1,124,396); but, of course, a large part of the items which I have described as charges for getting in our revenue, are made up of administration charges. It is a pity that no one has ever succeeded in conveying to the imagination of Englishmen what their countrymen really do in the way of administration in India. When one has realized it, one's first feeling is one of satisfaction that men taken out of the ordinary current of English life, neither superior nor inferior in point of natural ability to the ordinary run of fairly successful professional men at home, should be capable of doing, under the stimulus of early responsibility, such wonderful things; and his second feeling is, that we hardly make sufficient use of the large number of trained administrators who return year by year to our shores. England affords no field for their labours, no field for the exercise of their peculiar aptitudes. If they succeed here, it is by virtue of possessing other aptitudes; but the remarkable administration of Sir John Peter Grant in Jamaica shows that England need never be at a loss when a colony situated like that island has to be rescued, and surely if such things were possible, more than one country might borrow retired Indian Governors to its own great advantage. The next charge which I shall mention, is that for Allowances and Assignments under Treaties and Engagements, about £1,900,000 (£1,873,072), a head of expenditure which was once neatly described in this House as the purchase-money of our position in India. That is a phrase which would require, of course, large qualification to make it square accurately with the facts, but it represents a side of the truth about our position in India which is too often forgotten by persons of the blood-and-iron school. The Indian Diplomatic Service cost £240,000 (£241,801), not a large sum when we remember the vast amount of work that is done for it. It is impossible to keep too continually before us the fact that India was not won, is not held, and never will be held, by force alone. It was won, it is held, and it always will be held, while our Empire lasts, partly by force, but largely, much more largely, by policy. Next to making the people happy within our own territories, there is nothing so important as the maintenance of satisfactory relations with the powers, small and great, scattered up and down through our vast dominions, and that not only with great princes like Scindiah, or, greater still, the Nizam, but with very many others of far inferior importance, who are yet, most of them, a good deal more influential than the observer of Indian politics would, at first sight, suppose. I am happy to say that at present our relations with all the native States is very satisfactory. From this trifling charge for policy, it is melancholy to turn to the frightful drain on our resources which is caused by the sad necessity of being always ready to use the "last argument of kings." The total Army charges in India for the year under consideration amounted to over £12,600,000 (£12,603,467). In England, including costs of stores, they nearly reached the sum of £3,500,000 (£3,499,829). Thus the total Army charges in England and India were £16,100,000 (£16,103,296). Enormous as this sum is, the force which we maintain is not very great. We had, by the last Returns, 64,704 Europeans serving in India, as against 45,522, the number which we had on the 1st day of January in the year of the Mutiny; and we had of native troops 122,984, as against 249,153, whom we had on that same 1st day of January, 1857.

> "There is no country in the world," says Major Chesney, "in which the military force bears so small a proportion to the population. City for city, the military garrisons of India are smaller than even those of England."

The strong point of our system is, that we have an organization by which we could rapidly, in case of war, increase our Army to any extent we desire. Its weakest point is its enormous cost, and to this the attention of the Secretary of State in Council has been lately called. The result has been a despatch to India, which will, I trust, strengthen the hands of economists in that country. Over and above our Army we have a Police Force, which numbered, at the end of 1865, nearly 160,000 men, and cost, in 1867-8, nearly £2,500,000 (£2,434,125.) Fears have been more than once expressed in this House as to whether it was safe to maintain so large a body of armed men alongside of our native troops. The truth would seem to be, that through very large districts of the country the police is in a satisfactory condition, and in no way either dangerous or inefficient, but that in other parts it is susceptible of improvement. The next item to which I will allude is Education, Science, and Art, our civilizing agencies, which, with its £780,000 (£783,510), shows very poorly beside our colossal military outgoings. The purely educational portion of this sum of £780,000 went, for the most part, to the maintenance of Government Schools and Colleges, but some of it also for grants-in-aid, scholarships, payment of inspectors, Government book-depots, &c. We have six classes of schools in India—(1.) Village or Vernacular Schools; (2.) District Schools, where English is taught in the higher classes; (3.) Colleges, where the education is conducted in English; (4.) two Presidency Colleges, each with a faculty of arts and law; (5.) the Engineering and Medical Colleges; (6.) the Normal Schools. In all, we may have about 20,000 schools, or like establishments, with a continually improving network of official inspection. It is a matter for congratulation to those who have had of late years the disposal of Indian patronage, that when the University of Edinburgh was called upon to select a successor to a man so eminent as the late Sir David Brewster, it sent to the other end of the world for the Director of Public Instruction at Bombay. So much for our teaching machinery. Our machinery for testing the success of our higher education consists of three Universities—one at Bombay, one at Madras, and one at Calcutta—all modelled on the University of London, and doing their work extremely well. £780,000 would not be a large sum if the whole of it were spent on education; but out of this inconsiderable amount come innumerable expenses, such as those of our great surveys, the trigonometrical, the topographical, the revenue, and others; so also do the expenses of observatories, museums, scientific and literary institutions, botanical gardens, and other things too numerous to mention. In the Central Provinces, which are about as big as the British Isles, surveys and museums seem to have cost, in the year of which I am speaking, the magnificent sum of £35. This is, however, the day of small things in all these matters, and I heartily hope that this item of Indian expenditure will steadily increase, because money expended on education and civilization will, to take the lowest view, soon pay us cent per cent. Under the head Miscellaneous come expenses which defy classification; such as rewards for the destruction of wild beasts, charitable donations, cotton experiments, with much else. Under this head, too, are classed famine relief charges, which, in Bengal, amounted to no less than £227,826, that is, to rather more than a third of the total amount which stands under the head of Miscellaneous in India—over £670,000 (£672,992).

I come now to the last item of our ordinary expenditure in India, the largest of all except our Army expenditure, that, namely, for Public Works Ordinary, for which we paid in India, in the year with which I am dealing, no less than £5,800,000 (£5,800,269). There are two reproaches often brought against Indian administration which effectually neutralize each other. The one is, that enough is not done to improve the magnificent estate which we possess in the East; and the other is, that India lives quite up to her income, and is always borrowing a little. The position, however, of the Indian Government is precisely the position of a country gentleman who, with a moderate immediate income, has a large and very improvable property, on which it is distinctly right for him to make improvement of two kinds, improvements which, I suppose, the country gentleman would class in his accounts as improvements not bearing interest, and improvements bearing interest. The first of these are what we call in India "Public Works Ordinary," and the second are what we call "Public Works Extraordinary." Under the first of these heads the country gentleman would class cottages, roads, and other improvements which he made for the general benefit of his estate, but not as directly and immediately remunerative. And we class under it in India precisely the same kind of things—as roads, improved barracks for our troops, and, in short, all ameliorations which will improve our general position, but will not give direct, obvious, palpable returns for our money. Till recently it has not been the custom of financiers in India to draw a sufficiently broad line between these two very different kinds of expenditure; but a peremptory order was sent out by my right hon. Friend opposite, directing that henceforward only irrigation works, State railways, and what are known as the Special Fund works of Bombay, shall be considered as Extraordinary.

The Committee is aware that new barracks are now being constructed all over India on a magnificent scale. Some persons wish us to treat these as the fortifications of this country were treated by the Government of Lord Palmerston, urging that the saving of European life which they will bring about will diminish our military expenditure, and that they will be possessions for ever, as useful for posterity as for ourselves. We are not so sanguine. We feel that, although it is right to provide the best accommodation for our troops that the science of the day can give, we have by no means arrived at final results, good for all time, with respect to the method of housing our troops; and that, although the huge buildings which are now rising, in deference to public opinion, under the combined advice of benevolence and science, are an improvement upon much that preceded them, they may yet be very far from fulfilling the conditions which the same authority may prescribe to the Indian Governors of the future. Again, even if these barracks could be considered the last expression of sanitary science in stone and lime, posterity, if it has not barracks to build, will, assuredly, have plenty of other things to build. We need only see how our expenditure, both on improvements bearing interest and improvements not bearing interest, has increased in our own time, and to listen to the loud voices, which even now accuse us of sluggishness, to be very sure of that. Common roads, again, we think, should be paid for out of income. The reason of this is, that while we can see some end, though a far-off end, to the making of railways in India, the making of roads will be endless; and to throw the charge for them upon capital would be wildly improvident. A great deal has been already spent upon making roads in the last quarter-of-a-century, since a sudden impulse was given to this form of improvement, first by Mr. Thomason in the North-west Provinces, and then under the orders of Lord Dalhousie in the Punjaub. Still, so enormous is the country with which we are dealing—as large, the Committee will keep in mind, as Europe without Russia—that we have hardly done more than make a commencement, although we are already constructing at the rate of about 8,000 miles of good road in every ten years—each mile of good road costing, according to Major Chesney, £1,000 to make, and £75 a year to keep up. What are 8,000 miles of road, however, in a country like India? After all it only means, supposing it were distributed equally, eighty miles of good road a year in each of the ten provinces; eighty miles in Oude, which is as big as Holland and Belgium; eighty miles in the Punjaub, which is as big as the kingdom of Italy; nay, eighty miles in Bengal, which is very much bigger than France. If we were once to begin borrowing for roads we should borrow to the crack of doom. Looking through the items for Public Works Ordinary, I confess it seems to me that the amount spent is greater than it ought to be, and I hope that, although it might be bad economy suddenly to stop plans in progress, greater caution may be used in future before new schemes are entered upon. Another part of the Public Works Ordinary expenditure requires a word of explanation, loss by exchange on railway transactions—£101,877. This loss arises in the following way:—When the arrangements with the Indian railway companies were made, it was provided that for every rupee they paid in in India from their traffic receipts, they should be credited with 1*s.* 10*d.* in London, and for every 1*s.* 10*d.* they paid in in London to our account at the Bank of England, that is, for every 1*s.* 10*d.* of capital they raised, they should be credited with a rupee in India. A rupee is, however, at the usual rate of exchange, worth 2*s.*, and not 1*s.* 10*d.*, and all accounts between the Indian Office and the Indian Governments are settled at that figure. It follows, therefore, that the companies lose 2*d.* on every rupee they pay in in India, and gain 2*d.* on every 1*s.* 10*d.* they pay in in England, and that as the one-and-tenpences they pay in in England are more numerous than the rupees they pay in in India, they gain and we lose a great deal in the course of the year. Ere long, however, I am happy to say, that the tables will be turned; they will pay in more rupees in India than one-and-tenpences here, and we, not they, will begin to be the winners in the game of exchange.

I have now exhausted our ordinary expenditure in India. It remains to say a very few words on that portion of our expenditure which, as a matter of convenience, is disbursed at home, but over nearly all of which the Home Government has, in the nature of things, only the same general control that it has over the expenditure in India itself. First came the Charges on account of our Home Debt and of some other debt paid at home, for which we paid in 1867-8, £1,516,841, to which must be added £629,970, the Dividends on the Capital Stock of the East India Company. Over these charges we have, of course, no control. Then came the charge for the guaranteed Interest on Railway Capital, less net traffic receipts. That cost more than £1,500,000. Next followed Stores, which cost £970,000, and some other items of the same nature which I need not mention. The Committee will understand that the authorities in India indent on us for everything they want from home. We collect most of the manufactured goods which they require in that large building which stands on the south side of the river between the railway bridge at Charing Cross and Westminster Bridge, examine the articles carefully, pack them, and send them off; other things go direct. From time to time we consider the indents too large, and remonstrate; but, on the whole, the check over expenditure of this kind must be exercised by the good sense of those who order, not by the agents who execute the orders. Our business is rather to see that the Indian Government gets its money's worth for its money, and I must say I think the indents of India might often with advantage be reduced. Then came an item over which we have more control—the Secretary of State's Office and its dependencies, the great India Stores of which I have just been speaking; and, in short, the whole machinery of Indian government in this country. That cost about £193,000 (£193,141). We subscribe £35,000 a year to aid the Imperial Government to keep up a Mission at the Court of Persia, and Consular and Diplomatic Establishments in China. Our Army expenses at home I have already stated. As with revenue so with expenditure, I have been using throughout round numbers, but the Committee will, I dare say, take it from me, that the exact amount of the whole expenditure that I have been tracing comes to £49,542,107, chargeable against our income for the year ending 31st of March, 1868.

So much then for our ordinary expenditure. We are not done, however, with our outgoings for 1867-8, for we spent £219,255 for irrigation works, £382,613 for Special Fund works, as they are called, and £594 in preliminary expenses in connection with railway operations to be undertaken by the State; £602,462 in all. About irrigation works and about State railways I shall have to speak presently. I must first, however, say a word about the Special Fund works, for this phrase, which occurs so often of late years in the Indian accounts, certainly requires explanation. Some time ago the Government of Bombay determined to pull down the ramparts of that city, which were considered useless for modern purposes, to sell the land on which they were built, and to apply the proceeds to the construction of new and more available defences, as well as of a new post office, new court houses, recreation grounds, roads, and a great many other good things. If Bombay had continued prosperous, I think it is probable that all this could have been carried out without making any demand for assistance from the Imperial funds of India. But the crash came—the land cleared of the ramparts, which was expected to fetch immense prices, became temporarily unsaleable, except at a ruinous sacrifice, and Bombay had to approach the Government of India as a suppliant, and to ask for assistance to carry on its works, until the tide of prosperity began to flow again. The Government of India agreed to assist it, and the result is this frequently recurring expenditure for Special Fund works at Bombay, which, if the Government of India holds perfectly good security for the re-payment of its advances, both principal and interest is, quite rightly, not charged against annual income. The accounts, then, of the year ending 31st of March, 1868, when balanced, show a deficit, proving that £1,007,695 have been expended over and above what has been received, irrespective of an amount of about £600,000 which has been sunk in directly reproductive works, and which may be considered simply as capital invested. In round numbers, then, India was, in the year 1867-8, just about £1,000,000 to the bad.

I come now to what is called the Regular Estimate, by which not very appropriate term is designated the estimate of our receipts and expenditure for the year intervening between the close of the year of which we possess the actual accounts, and the commencement of the year with regard to which all is calculation or conjecture. In this case, of course, the year of the Regular Estimate is the year which began on the 1st of April, 1868, and ended on the 31st of March, 1869. In March of this year, 1869, the Indian Chancellor of the Exchequer (Sir Richard Temple) expected to receive about £750,000 more during the year of the Regular Estimate than Mr. Massey anticipated in March, 1868, from the year of the Regular Estimate, and expected to pay, in round numbers, for the ordinary expenditure of the year, £3,750,000 more than Mr. Massey anticipated having to pay in that year. £3,750,000 of extra expenditure is somewhat startling, but I hasten to explain that £1,750,000 of it arise simply from a change of account. Mr. Massey having charged £1,750,000 for barracks and like works to extraordinary expenditure, or, as we should say in our own private accounts, to capital, and Sir Richard Temple, under the orders to which I have already alluded from the right hon. Gentleman opposite, being most properly, as I think, obliged to charge the same to ordinary expenditure. It remains then to account for the increase of £2,000,000 anticipated by Sir Richard Temple. That arose—first, from an unexpected additional outlay on central jails; secondly, from the fact that the amount of traffic receipts paid over by the guaranteed railway companies to us, in diminution of the interest we pay to their shareholders, has been less than we anticipated; thirdly, from a largely increased expenditure in England, including stores sent out to India from this country, on the requisition of the authorities there—an increase which we observed during the progress of the year, and thought so formidable that we were obliged to call the attention of the Government of India to it by a special despatch; fourthly and lastly, from famine relief works. The year 1868 was, as we all remember, a very exceptional year in Europe so far as the weather was concerned. It was also a very exceptional year in India, and towards its close the greatest possible alarm was excited about the condition of Behar, of the North-west Provinces, of the whole of the native States in Rajpootana, and of all the British districts bordering upon them. It was not only a famine of grain, but a famine of water. The cattle, so indispensable to the native cultivator, died by thousands, and great populations pouring out of the most afflicted territories, such as Marwar, overflowed into our provinces. The great calamity of Orissa had, however, produced its effect. Immense efforts were made alike by the local and by the central authorities; and before Christmas it was pretty clear that, although there might be terrible distress, there would, in purely British possessions, be no famine. Just, however, at the most critical moment, telegrams reached London to say that copious and far-extending falls of rain had suddenly come to the rescue, so that the spring crops have been saved in extensive regions, where, before this fortunate event, there was no hope. Still, however, the failure of last year's crop has pressed with terrible severity upon many thousands of people, and not only does it show its effects in diminishing the expected receipts, and increasing the expected expenditure of the year with which I am dealing — the year of the Regular Estimate—but it throws something of a shadow over the year of which I am presently going to speak—the year of calculation and conjecture. The general result of the somewhat increased receipts and the much increased expenditure, as it seemed to Sir Richard Temple, in the month of March last, was that the ordinary expenditure of the year of the Regular Estimate will be about £1,000,000 more than the receipts. In short, he conceived that there would be a deficit of about £1,000,000. Such were substantially the prospects of the year of the Regular Estimate — for the year, that is, ending 31st March, 1869, when Sir Richard Temple made his statement in Calcutta in the month of March last. Our latest news, however, from India, does not, I regret to say, permit me to stop here. The Committee will remember that in the month of March, Sir Richard Temple had only before him the accounts of about eight months of the year 1868-9, and the four months of which he had not the accounts are the critical months of the Indian financial year. The two great Indian crops are gathered in November and March, and the briskest Indian trade goes on during the cold seasons. We have still only imperfect information, but it seems probable that the accounts of the year 1868-9 will not turn out even so well as Sir Richard Temple expected.

I come now to the year 1869-70, the year of the Budget Estimate; the year for which we have no accounts, and which is entirely dependent on calculation and conjecture. Speaking in the month of March, Sir Richard Temple expected to receive about £49,300,000. He calculated on a great falling off in the opium revenue — a falling off of nearly £637,000, as compared with the year 1867-8; but he expected to retrieve this by a better return on various heads of expenditure — for instance, on salt, and by changing the certificate tax into an income tax. This is, I think, a very good impost, free from the faults of the old income tax imposed by Mr. Wilson, the defects of which have been, perhaps, a good deal exaggerated. It will very slightly alter the taxation of those who now pay the certificate tax, while it will catch the rich landholder, the holder of house property, and the fundholder who receives his dividends in India. Managed by a rough assessment, it will not require any returns or any inquisitorial process; and not falling below £50 of annual income, it will only be paid by 150,000 persons — that is, literally, by about one in 1,000 of our Indian fellow subjects.

Turning to the other side of the account, Sir Richard Temple expected to expend rather less than he did expend in the year 1867-8, and a good deal less than he expected to expend in the year 1868-9—£49,250,000 in all, thus obtaining a small surplus of £50,000. This was, it is impossible to deny, running it very fine; and I am not over sanguine about our surplus in 1869-70, though, if peace and weather favour us, all may be well. I am speaking, the Committee will observe, of our ordinary expenditure. Over and above our ordinary expenditure, however, we shall have in this year, 1869-70, to expend about £3,500,000 (£3,565,800) in remunerative public works—public works for the execution of which we think ourselves entitled to borrow. Of this large sum about £2,750,000 will be for irrigation works. £360,800 will be for the State railways, including £250,000 for a railway from Lahore to Peshawur (£257,000). The rest will be for the Special Fund works at Bombay. The very large sum which we propose to devote to irrigation includes rather more than £1,000,000 (£1,055,000), which we have lately paid under the provisions of an Act of Parliament of this Session, for the transfer to us of the great works commenced by the East India Irrigation Company in the delta of the Mahanuddy in Orissa, and of certain rights, which that company had, to make irrigation works in the province of Behar. A further sum of about £600,000 will be spent in various parts of India, much of it in connection with the Ganges and Jumna river system, some of it near Poona, and in many other places. Irrigation is, I need not say, of the last importance in the development of our great Indian estate, and we shall spend, I believe, a great many millions upon it before the century is done. At the same time we should, I think, be cautious not to allow ourselves to be led away by those who believe irrigation to be a panacea. Irrigation would not by itself have prevented the Orissa catastrophe. Roads and railways coming in aid of irrigation would have prevented it. Anyone who looks at the maps prepared by Mr. Frederick Danvers, which I lately laid upon the table, and which will presently be in the hands of Members, will be glad to observe that although much remains to be done, much has been already effected. The Ganges Canal alone would entitle the Government which created it to a high place amongst the benefactors of mankind. It is, however, out of the question for us to carry on either great irrigation works or State railways out of annual income; and if they are to be useful, as we believe, to future generations, and if they are to be directly remunerative to us, there is no reason why they should be so carried on. Some of our friends are advising us to spend £10,000,000 a year, out of borrowed money, for the construction of remunerative public works. No array of terms can express how glad we should be to do so if we had a certainty that we could spend that sum in works which would be remunerative to us. We think, however, that in the new railway scheme which has been so much discusssed since it was laid before the country by my noble Friend the Secretary of State for India, ten days ago, and which will, I doubt not, be much discussed here to-day, we are going just as far and as fast as we dare, with a due regard to prudence and to the safety of our credit. If we find we can in future years go further and faster, depend upon it we shall be only too happy to do so; but I fear our friends who are so very urgent in pressing us to spend £10,000,000 a year on remunerative public works would be uncommonly sorry to guarantee the Indian funds standing as high this day ten years, if we follow their advice, as they did in The Times this morning.

Now, then, the Committee knows all that I can tell it about the probabilities of our receipts and outgoings for 1869-70. There is, however, another question which must be asked and answered, before our pecuniary position is fairly before hon. Members, and that is, What was the state of our Indian cash balances at the close of the year of the regular estimate? In other words, What balance may India have had at her banker's on 31st March, 1869? India had at her banker's, on 31st March, 1869, £10,359,497. That is, I think, a sufficient cash balance, but she will, during 1869-70, have to borrow £3,565,000 for extraordinary public works, and she will have to borrow the better part of £1,500,000 to meet certain liabilities becoming payable during the year, if she is to have as good a balance at her banker's on 31st March, 1870, as she had on 31st March, 1869. £2,000,000 of this she has already borrowed on an open 4 per cent loan at $90\frac{1}{6}$ in India. £400,000 has been lent on reasonable terms by the Rajah of Putteealla, and the remainder, that is, £2,600,000, will be raised chiefly in this country. A Bill enabling us to borrow £8,000,000 in this country stands on the Orders to-day. We may very possibly be able to get through this financial year without trenching upon this sum, but that is very doubtful, for our borrowing powers under the last Act are nearly at an end.

Well, then, I have told the financial story of the year about which we know everything, the year about which we know a good deal, and the year about which we can, in the nature of things, only make more or less plausible guesses. I have told it with an earnest desire to blink no disagreeable facts, and have, with that object, been studious to use, at the risk of incurring excommunication from all the optimist school of Indian financiers, the ugly, unpleasant word deficit. Now, however, when it is all said and done, is our position so very bad? Let us see what prospects there are of things getting better. I will not enlarge on our undeveloped resources. It may be very right for others to do so, but for me it is more pardonable to err on the side of expecting too little than too much. In 1874 we shall get rid of a charge of about £430,000 a year, being so much of the old India Stock as will be covered by the Guarantee Fund now accumulating to pay off as much as it can of our liabilities under this head. Turn, then, to Guaranteed Interest on Railway Capital. That figures at considerably over £1,500,000, alike in the year of the Actuals, in the year of the Regular Estimate, and in the year of the Budget Estimate. Now, here is an expenditure which, although it may continue at its present amount for some time, will not continue at its present amount indefinitely. One line after another will gradually become paying, and the burdens of the State under this head will be largely reduced. Turn, then, to loss by exchange on railway transactions, more than £100,000. I have already shown that the items of loss by exchange on railway transactions will ere long cross over from the expenditure to the receipt side. There was a time when a great deal was expected from the sale of waste lands in India. It was to go far, in the opinion of some, to pay off our debt. These golden dreams have not been realized; yet a decade in the life of a nation is but a small thing, and in the next two generations I fully believe that the sale of waste lands, partly to natives, and in certain districts also to European colonists, will not improbably have to some extent lightened our burdens. That, however, is for the future. For further help at present we must look to economy, and our chief hopes must centre in a large reduction of Army expenditure, and a determination to restrict Public Works Ordinary within reasonable limits. It is all very well to say that most of these works are likely to be very useful; but unless they are to be directly remunerative, some of them must wait until we can afford them better than we can now. In so great an expenditure there is abundant room for retrenchment. Something may be done, I think, in other directions, but I will not weary the Committee by speaking of smaller economies. I have no doubt, however, that if the Anglo-Indian mind once disabuses itself of the pernicious heresy that its finances are in a thoroughly satisfactory state, and once for all resolutely refuses to listen to the sirens who sing to it that barracks and the like should be built out of loans, we shall soon put an end to Indian deficits. It should never be forgotten that our revenue not only rises, but positively springs upwards. In the year 1856-7, the year before the Mutiny, it stood at £33,000,000. In the year 1867-8, it stood, as we have seen, at £48,000,000, and this not by acquisition of fresh territory, and in spite of the fact that India, after making all allowance for the comparative poverty of her population, is one of the most lightly taxed countries in the world. The progress seen in all directions is great and incessant. If India is living fully up to her income, she has, at least, the consolation of enjoying her life. We hear much about the laches of the Indian Government in promoting commerce; but the imports and exports, which were under £15,000,000 in 1834-5, were over £101,000,000 in 1867-8: not bad progress for one generation. We have over 4,000 miles of railways open, and we have 1,820 more under construction, or about to be constructed, as part of our old scheme, and we have a huge new scheme settled and about to be undertaken. Material progress is the mother of moral progress, and it needs but little insight to see everywhere indications that the ideal of at least the upper and middle classes in India is sensibly rising. The civilization of Europe is beginning not merely to varnish over the surface of Indian society, but to stir the Indian mind to its depths. The two great branches of the Indo-European race, which parted before the dawning of history on the plateau of Central Asia, have met, rich with the contrasted experiences of I know not how many thousand years. The ancient and fruitful antagonism between East and West, which fills so large a part of human history, is renewed under changed conditions, to what strange issues who shall say?

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That it appears by the Accounts laid before this House that the total Revenue of India for the year ending the 31st day of March 1868 was £48,534,412; the total of the direct claims upon the Revenue, including charges of collection and cost of Salt and Opium was £8,957,464; the charges in India, including Interest on Debt, and Public Works ordinary, were £32,362,402; the value of Stores supplied from England was £970,926; the charges in England were £5,710,880; the Guaranteed Interest on the Capital of Railway and other Companies, in India and in England, deducting net Traffic Receipts, was £1,540,435, making a total charge for the same year of £49,542,107; and there was an excess of Expenditure over Income in that year amounting to £1,007,695; that the charge for Public Works extraordinary was £602,462, and that including that charge the excess of Expenditure over Income was £1,610,157."

MR. CRAWFORD said, it was not his intention to follow his hon. Friend through all the figures he had submitted. His hon. Friend in the course of his very able and lucid speech had referred to matters of great moment to one who, like himself, had passed many years of his life in India, and who still felt great interest in that country. He should like to say a few words upon the demand now made by the Secretary of State for India to use his borrowing powers, and to the great change in the policy of the Indian Government in regard to the manner in which railways were in future to be constructed and worked in India. With regard to the Financial Statement, the best conclusion he could come to was that the Indian Government required to raise, during the present year, a sum of about £5,000,000; of which £3,500,000 was required for carrying on various extraordinary works for India, £1,000,000 for paying the debt, and £500,000 for replenishing the cash balances in India. By the Bill which would come on for discussion at the Evening Sitting his hon. Friend would ask the House to authorize the Secretary of State to raise between the present time, and April 30, 1872, the very large sum of £8,000,000 sterling in this country for the service of India. What he (Mr. Crawford) desired to do was to call attention to the way in which this power of borrowing money was likely to be exercised, judging from the manner in which it had been exercised by previous Secretaries of State. In the year 1863, the then Secretary of State for India (Sir Charles Wood) came before Parliament for authority to raise a similar sum of £8,000,000 for the purpose of re-placing debts that had been incurred in this country; and what was the course of policy which he pursued? Why, he went into the market, when he wanted money, without any communication with the public, disposed by private arrangement of the securities for the sums he was authorized to raise, and the public knew nothing whatever of the demands made upon it. The whole transaction was conducted secretly, so that only a limited traffic or dealing took place in the particular stock dealt with in the market. That was not a proper way of raising money. In the language of the Stock Exchange, the Secretary for India "turned on the tap when he wanted to raise money." If, however, he wanted money, it would be better that he should come into the market and say how much he wanted, in which case, by inducing competition, he would raise money on better terms. His hon. Friend had referred to the public debt of India, which he stated was £62,000,000. He also alluded to a Paper, which had been laid upon the table two or three weeks ago, giving the details of that debt, from which it appeared that the securities were of various forms and denominations, extending as far back as 1824-5. Some of the loans were of very small amount, and if measures could be taken for consolidating these into one single debt he believed that considerable advantage would be gained. The ultimate re-payment of principal might be secure, and also the payment of interest meanwhile; but with small stocks not easily marketable, a loss was always entailed on those holders who found it necessary to realize. If, however, these different stocks were all consolidated into one stock in a form which would meet the requirements of the present day, the public would not alone be pleased, but the value of the security would doubtless be increased. He desired also to make a remark with regard to the export duties of India. It was perfectly true, as stated by his hon. Friend, that they were few in number, but they were levied, contrary to all sound principles, on some of the principal commodities exported from India. Every 82 lb. of grain exported—and this country drew from thence a great deal of grain in the shape of rice and for consumption in distillation—incurred a charge of 3 annas, or 4½*d.*, before it left India, the effect of which was not merely to limit our access to the Indian market, but to diminish the sales of the producer of grain. That portion of the indigo crop produced in Madras had to encounter a sharp competition here with the indigo grown in Central America; yet while the Madras indigo had to pay 3 rupees for every 82 lb., that which came from Guatemala and other Central States was free, and being produced on the Continent of America was admitted into the New York market on more favourable terms than the produce of India. Moreover, these very commodities, taxed so heavily on their export from India, had already paid a heavy tax to the Government in the assessment of the soil upon which they were grown. There were other commodities to which reference might be made; but he had said enough, he thought, to show that the continued levy of these charges was attended with positive disadvantage to Indian interests. Another subject to which he would refer, and which was of the greatest importance, was the new railway policy to be carried out in India, which had been described by the noble Duke (the Duke of Argyll) in "another place," and was also described in the despatch which had been laid upon the table. No opportunity, however, had been given to the House of Commons of perusing this despatch till Saturday last, though there was reason to believe that it had been for some time in readiness; the Report of Mr. Danvers on the Indian railways had been ready, to his own knowledge, for some time before it was published. The House had a right to expect that these documents would be placed before them in sufficient time to enable them to be perused and considered, and these should not have been, he must almost say, withheld, until so late a period of the Session. He believed the view taken in that despatch was based upon a Minute by Lord Lawrence, dictated, he was sure, by a single object of what was for the benefit of India. A new state of things had arisen, and the Government were perfectly justified in seizing the present opportunity of considering whether they could not extend the railway system of India by a principle of action different from that which had hitherto been followed. The only exception which he took to the action of the Government was that they appeared to ground this new policy upon a condemnation of the existing system. Instead of being condemned, the existing system was rather, in many respects, an example to be followed. The foundation of the Government policy in constructing railways for themselves was this. Hitherto, no money had been found for the construction of railways in India, except on the security of the Government, and as the rate guaranteed for raising money in the market had been uniformly 5 per cent., whereas the Government themselves could borrow money at 4 per cent, they were losers of 1 per cent upon the transaction. He was prepared to dispute these assertions, and to prove that they were based upon error. The Government also alleged that the railway companies had hitherto constructed their lines—as it was called in India—departmentally; that was to say, by means of contractors, acting under the direction and supervision of the engineers and staff of the companies. Contractors had been employed in this country and their servants sent out; and it was suggested that these measures could as well be taken by the Government as by the companies. It was further alleged that the process of construction by the companies heretofore had been needlessly extravagant and costly, and that the working was extravagant, ill-managed, and profitless. He admitted the necessity of a Government guarantee to raise money for works in India, but the remainder of the argument he denied. When it was represented, for instance, that it had cost 5 per cent to raise the money for construction, and that the Government guarantee accordingly was the sole test of the value of the railway property, he pointed to the fact that there were different railway companies whose shares commanded, not an uniform, but different values in the market. The stock of the line with which he was connected—the East Indian—was selling for 111, whereas the stocks of the other Indian companies as a rule did not fetch more than 106 or 108. If the Government guarantee of 5 per cent were the sole test of value they would all be exactly equal in price. There was another element which had been left out of sight, and that was the element of the speculation that the profits arising from the railways would exceed 5 per cent, as they had already done in two or three instances. In the course of the last year and the present year, his company had occasion to raise £2,000,000. The Government said, "It is unreasonable in you to ask us to guarantee 5 per cent, because you will issue the stock at a large premium, which you will then put into your own pockets." The company felt the objection to be a reasonable one; but they urged the Government not to make a difference in the rate of interest hitherto guaranteed, and undertook to pay over the gain of £110,000, obtained by the issue of the stock at the current price, into the hands of the Secretary of State, to form part of the capital of the company to which the Government guarantee would not attach, because it was not the property of any individual shareholders. There was one passage in the Minute of Lord Lawrence which he thought had been written without due care or consideration, and was certainly unjust to the railway companies. His Lordship stated that their capital was an investment from which a return was guaranteed under all circumstances, and that in some cases even a wasteful outlay might be directly advantageous to the officials, as leading to the creation of stock. The meaning of this—and it was so stated in the despatch of the Government — was that the shareholders and managers of these railway companies were indifferent to the sums which they expended on the construction of their railways, because the more they expended, and the more stock they got out, the more they would make in the way of profit in placing these shares in the market. He ventured to assert that out of the £80,000,000 raised in this country for the construction of Indian railways there had been no larger outlay or allowance than fairly covered the expense of placing these shares in the market. The whole of that money had been paid over, and not a single farthing beyond the legitimate profit on the issue had been kept for their own advantage. He fully admitted that there were times when the Government might go into the market and borrow money at 4 per cent, but there were other times when they could not do so. During 1859, when the Indian Government was unable to obtain money on reasonable terms, or on hardly any terms, in the market, the railway companies were enabled to raise large sums at a moderate rate of interest, partly, no doubt, because they could offer the security of the Government guarantee, but also because they could offer, in addition, the tangible security of valuable property. Under these circumstances it could not be said that the Government were in a better position to raise money than the private railway companies. The Indian railway companies had been charged with reckless extravagance in the construction of their lines. He would lay before the Committee a few facts which, he thought, would show that that charge was entirely unfounded. It appeared from Mr. Danvers's Report — which was issued on Saturday last, and which divided the cost of the construction of these Indian lines into its several elements, such as the mileages, the permanent way, stations, rolling stock, &c. —that the East Indian Railway Company had constructed their 1,500 miles, 600 being double and the rest single lines, at a cost of less than £20,000 per mile; and that the Madras Railway Company, also a single line, had constructed their line at a cost of less than £11,000 per mile. The great difference between the cost per mile of these two railways was accounted for by the fact that the latter, while having an excellent management, had none of the engineering difficulties to encounter which had rendered the construction of the former line so costly. Another cause of the great cost of the construction of the East Indian Railway was the Indian Mutiny. The question had been elaborately gone into, and the result, which had been reported to the Government, was that if the Mutiny had not occurred that great work would have been constructed at a less cost by about £3,000,000 sterling. The expense of the conveyance of materials had been enormously increased by the Mutiny, and a large portion of the finished line had been destroyed—no less than 17,000 tons of rails being found wanting in transmission up the river. £500,000 had afterwards to be expended upon the erection of a steamboat flotilla, for the purpose of sending the materials up the river. In fact, the total extra cost resulting from the Mutiny might be safely put at £2,000 per mile. It must not be forgotten, in calculating the cost of the Indian railways, that they had to pay enormous sums for conveying from this country the materials necessary for building their bridges. The East Indian Railway had constructed no less than three miles of iron bridges, one being nearly four-fifths of a mile in length, and the whole of the materials for erecting those works, and for locomotive purposes, had been sent out from this country, at a total cost for conveyance of nearly £3,000,000. They had also to provide European superintendence; and for every man sent out to India they had to pay two or three times as much as they could secure their services for in this country. The expenses incurred for drivers of locomotives was a most costly item. All these elements must enter into the question of the cost of the railway. When they were pointed at as persons who had been guilty of extravagance, all these things should be taken into consideration. What he had said as to one railway applied to all of them. It was not improbable that the Indian railways might have made mistakes in the construction of lines for the first time over the vast Continent of India; but the Government would be warned by those mistakes, and would, therefore, be to a certain degree benefited by them. If they were guilty of extravagance, which he denied, the Government ought to share the blame with them, because the companies could not, and in fact did not, spend money without Government control. If the Government said — "You are extravagant and thriftless," he said they were parties to these things. But he denied the fact. He maintained that the Indian railways might be held up as instances of the expenditure of enormous sums of money, with as little cause for reproach as had ever occurred under similar circumstances. In the whole course of this expenditure there had been nothing illicit in the contracts or profits of the company. He did not mean to say that everything might have been entirely proper in the case of every subordinate; but he affirmed that, as a whole, this vast expenditure might be held up as an example of fidelity on the part of those concerned. With reference to the subject of the cost of working the Indian railways, he would call the attention of the Committee to the Return laid before the last half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of the East Indian Railway Company, comparing the working expenses and receipts of that railway with those of thirteen of the principal railways in this country. The real tests of the profitable working of a railway company were its mileage receipts, its mileage cost, and its mileage net receipts. Judged by these tests, during the half-year ending the 31st of December last, the East Indian Railway Company appeared, out of every £100 earned, to have expended £41 for working expenses, leaving £59 profit; while the London and North-Western Railway Company had expended £46 per cent for working expenses; the average expenditure under that head of the whole of the English railways being £49½ per cent. It was impossible, under these circumstances, to contend that the management of the Indian railways was expensive as compared with that of other countries, and the Government of India when asserting that that management was guilty of profligate extravagance, was doing it a great injustice. The directors had endeavoured to exercise the utmost economy in their business, but the Government authorities did not take the slightest notice of this. The Government of India not only did not do the railway company justice, but they did the company a positive act of injustice, when they charged them with want of economy, and with the design of securing fresh profit on the issue of additional capital. The Government ignored the fact that the company had lately sent out to India an eminent and experienced engineer, at great expense, to ascertain the exact cost of all the necessary works remaining to be executed, so that they might prove at once what would be the full outlay in this costly expenditure. So far from the company trying to increase the cost, they actually refused to undertake the construction of a bridge over the Hooghly, at Calcutta, which the Government wished to put upon them, and which would have rendered it necessary that their capital should have been increased by £1,500,000. They would not have acted thus if they had desired to traffic in the profits of new capital. They had also declined to undertake the construction of a line from Cawnpore to Lucknow, and willingly surrendered to another company that from Delhi to Lahore. They were anxious to be free from adding to the capital. He might add many other instances in proof of his argument. Their object had been to limit themselves to the works on the enormous line of 1,500 miles which they had undertaken to construct, and the resources of which they desired to utilize as quickly as possible, and to do the best they could for their shareholders. He quite agreed that in the case of Native States the Government must make the railways themselves, and that where railways were required for political purposes it might be left to the Government to make them. This would afford an opportunity for comparison between the two systems; but he deprecated their entering upon great operations of this character merely for presumed economical reasons. He did not think that any Government, as a Government, could do work of this kind so effectually as those who had devoted years to the consideration of the work, and who possessed experience which no Government Department could secure. What would be the effect of the Government going into the market for the purchase, from time to time, of 10,000 or 15,000 tons of rails by advertisement? Why, not only the price of iron but the cost of freight would be immediately raised. Whereas the Government, for their own protection, were compelled to buy by public tender, private companies could purchase what they required for the construction of their lines by ordinary contract, usually at a much lower price than the Government would have to pay. They were under the control of the Government, and had the official director appointed by the Secretary of State sitting by their side. He regarded the conduct of the Government in this matter as showing a remnant of the old exclusive policy; they did not like an imperium in imperio. The Government had resented the unwillingness of the directors to succumb to the Government officials. In one instance the Government desired the removal of a gentleman whose position was not agreeable to them, but the directors did not think that this would be just. There was a feeling of discontent on the part of the Government in having a body to deal with whom they could not command. It was very questionable whether these operations should be removed from popular observation. Opportunity should be given to the people of this country of knowing what was going on in connection with these railways. Once these lines passed under Government control nothing more would be heard about them, and the public interest in them would be quenched. There still remained the question of the extent of the intended operations of the Government with respect to these lines to be considered. It was now proposed that the Government should make 10,000 more miles of railway, at a cost of £120,000,000 of money. This was the demand to be made upon the money market. They had been told that there was owing by India in this country and in India between £90,000,000 and £100,000,000; and he thought that they did not sufficiently weigh the effect of coming, year after year, to the House for authority to raise money for the service of India. It was one thing for £80,000,000 to be taken out of the market for the construction of railways by railway companies in twenty years, and another thing for the Government to borrow £4,000,000 year by year for thirty years from the public on that account. He maintained that the Government could not expect to be able to continue to place these large sums upon the market at the rate that they boasted they now raised it—4 per cent. He also wished to point out that had railway construction been in the hands of the Government at the time of the Mutiny in India the works would not have been proceeded with, as the whole attention of the Government was directed to quell the Mutiny, whereas the railway companies continued the construction of the railways, notwithstanding the Mutiny, and were enabled to assist the Government by the facilities afforded by such portions of the lines as were constructed. One clause of the Bill that was before them earmarked £4,000,000 of the money proposed to be raised, and set it apart for the construction of railways only; but this money would not be so spent if war or other adverse circumstances should absorb the attention of the Government. An instance of this was that when Lord Ellenborough went to India in 1843 he found there was war with Gwalior, and in consequence he suspended the works of the Ganges Canal. He took the opportunity of calling the attention of the Under Secretary for India to the manner in which the telegraph service with India was carried on. Last year a convention on this subject was held at Vienna, and every State on the Continent of Europe, together with England, was represented at that convention. One of the terms there agreed on for the conduct of the telegraphic business was that every message should be sent in the order in which it was received; but a priority in the dispatch of messages was still given to Mr. Reuter. A remonstrance was made to the Secretary of State, and then it was found that Mr. Reuter had made terms at Constantinople with the Turkish Government, giving him, in spite of the convention, an advantage over everybody else. The system still continued, notwithstanding it was said that steps would be taken to put a stop to it, and he hoped that the promise which had been given would now be carried out.

Sir STAFFORD NORTHCOTE said, that, as there was other important business on the Paper, he would not waste time by complimenting his hon. Friend the Under Secretary for India on the excellent speech he had delivered, but would at once notice an expression which was not characterized by the same exactness as the rest of the hon. Gentleman's observations. The hon. Gentleman spoke of two complaints against the Government of India which, he thought, effectually neutralized each other. One of these complaints was, that the Government did not do enough to develop the great resources of the Indian Empire, and the other was, that the Government were living up to or rather exceeding their income. The hon. Gentleman thought that those two charges might answer each other; but that was not strictly the case, for it might happen that the Government, though exceeding their income, were not by economy saving means to improve the resources of the country. That was a danger which the Government of India should guard against. There was a magnificent field in India for the development of the resources of that Empire, but care should be taken to provide by prudent economy the power to effect that object. He wished to direct attention not only to the importance of economy in details, but to the adoption of a sound principle of finance by laying down a distinction between the different classes of expenditure which were being incurred. What he meant was what was shown in the speech of Sir Richard Temple, in which he laid down the great importance of the Government maintaining a distinction between unproductive expenditure and that which was not so. His (Sir Stafford Northcote's) opinion was that upon the strict maintenance of this distinction depended the whole foundation of our credit and prosperity. Our Indian credit might be seriously affected if we went on borrowing without making proper provisions for re-payment, and therefore it was of great importance that the distinction that he had pointed out should be maintained. He, last year, with the approval of the Council of India, endeavoured to draw a distinction between productive works and other classes of works. The principle they proposed to go on was that they would allow no expenditure to be provided for out of borrowed money, except that class of expenditure that would be reproductive, and they meant not only that expenditure that was capable of reproducing, but that which was made that it might reproduce. To do this there must be separate accounts kept, in order to see that the money so laid out did come back to the Treasury. He had no doubt that this subject was still engaging the attention of the Indian Government; and he would press upon Her Majesty's Government the importance of seeing that the principle to which he had referred was carried out. If this principle were adopted the Government might then borrow freely, because they would be sure that the money would come back again. There was another principle which they must not lose sight of; they must take care that in their ordinary balances of income and expenditure they kept a good regular surplus of income over expenditure. It was very well to have a £50,000 surplus for a year or two, but it would not do in the long run; for there should be a regular surplus of £500,000 or £1,000,000 of income over expenditure, because contingencies might arise which could not be foreseen. The only safe policy therefore was to keep a really good margin of income over expenditure. That involved both economy and the careful maintenance of their resources. He believed the principle of the income tax was a great, a bold, and a wise step. It required some sacrifice on the part of the Government of India. There was great temptation to put off works, owing to the necessity of raising funds by what was considered an unpopular tax. He hoped they might look to a fair surplus. With regard to items of taxation, he would not say any more than that he most cordially agreed with what his hon. Friend the Member for the City of London (Mr. Crawford) had said of export duties. He hoped the time would come when they would get rid of duties which were wrong in principle, and very injurious to India as well as to the trade of this country. With regard to railways he entirely sympathized with his hon. Friend in the expressions he had used, and the spirited defence he had made for the existing companies. He sympathized with him as to the want of cordiality and generosity of their treatment in these despatches. Considering the work done they ought not to have been treated with harshness; there should have been every acknowledgment of the services which the guaranteed companies had rendered. Even assuming that such companies were to be altogether dispensed with, still there should have been some acknowledgment of the fact that we never should have had this great network of railways so well constructed, and so ably worked in so short a time had it not been for the assistance of the companies. Though they might find fault with some details of management and upon the principle upon which the system was founded, still they should speak a little more gratefully of those who had initiated the plans of so great a man as Lord Dalhousie, and who had carried them out so successfully. His hon. Friend had complained that these Papers recently laid on the table had been kept back rather long from them. He (Sir Stafford Northcote) did not think it was right to make that complaint, for the Duke of Argyll's important despatch was only dated the 15th of July, and could not have been produced much sooner than it had been. But it was to be lamented that there had been so short a time to consider the Papers, and that they were not in so complete a form as they might be. It would have been better if the Papers had extended a little further back, and if the origin of these communications had been given; for this matter had been under consideration for a year or two, and some Papers had not been produced which would have thrown light upon it. As to the distinction between commercial and political lines, that was a distinction that was drawn in a despatch that went out when he was Secretary of State for India, and that despatch was intended to call attention to the importance of making some definite plan for carrying out in future the railway system in India. He thought that there were several reasons why that despatch and others should have been printed, and they would have given an answer to several of the objections of the hon. Member. Now this was a matter that had been forced upon the Government. It had become necessary that something should be done to systematize the railways in India. Projects came in in driblets from the Hooghly, Madras, Assam, or Bengal for the construction of railways, here or there, and the Council for India always felt it extremely important not to commit themselves to general plans, or to inconvenient expenditure. He therefore addressed a despatch to the Governor General of India, asking them to take into consideration the general wants of India, and give a systematized plan of the works recommended—at what rate it would be possible, with reference to financial and other considerations, to carry out those works; in what order they should be proceeded with; and by what agency they should be conducted. At the same time, the Government of Sir John Lawrence had directed their attention to the same subject. He wrote to the Government at home at the same time that the despatch of the Secretary of State was being prepared. These despatches were both independent of each other, but both came to the same conclusion—that it was desirable to come to some systematic arrangement as to what should be done, and at what rate. He hoped these Papers would be printed, and that they would be able to turn their attention then more deliberately to them than was possible at present. There was a great deal yet to be considered as to the propriety of the State undertaking the whole railway management of India. It was pretty plain from expressions in these despatches that the mind of the Government of India was hankering after getting the whole system into their own hands. That policy, however, had not been adopted by the Duke of Argyll, and he hoped it would not be; but this was a point which would have to be fully considered next Session. In the meantime he was entirely satisfied with what the Government proposed to do. The principle was, that where railways were to be made for political considerations or for the general benefit of the country, but which were not likely to pay—these railways should be made by the State. There was another principle, that where railways were to be made through Native States they also should be made by the Government. Upon both these principles he thought that there was a general agreement; and he entirely agreed as to the importance of the action of the Government with regard to the political railways. He would, however, venture to point out that there were one or two special considerations that the Government should bear in mind. In the first place, they should consider whether they really would be able to take the matter up as a whole, when its very advocates admitted the scheme to be imperfect. He hoped that he might say, without offence, that there was certainly an impetuosity about some of Lord Lawrence's writing, when he took a strong view, that rather carried one away. He appeared to take always a strong view of a subject, so that one side of it was seen very clearly indeed. He also spoke his mind very strongly and ably, therefore one side was always presented in the clearest possible light. Where action was required this was a very valuable quality; but when they had to take counsel they were apt to be staggered by seeing the case made out, as it were, too good. The noble Lord talked of the expediency and importance of limiting the outlay of capital upon lines of railway, and no doubt it was important; but was he quite sure that the Government would always limit their own outlay better than the companies, when they were acting under the control of the Government? The Government, no doubt, had not properly controlled the action of the companies; but if they could not control another person, would they be able to control themselves and their own officers, as to the outlay of capital? There was a strong temptation on the part of the Government to save themselves from any outlay on their ordinary expenditure. He observed a tendency on the part of the Government of the day to put down everything they could to capital, and on the part of the Indian Government there was just as much temptation to put down all expenditure on public works as remunerative. But was it true that the Government would always keep these works going as well as the companies that undertook them? There were, if he mistook not, instances in which the Government were not quite so ready to carry on works of this kind when other and more pressing claims were made upon them. The history of the Great Trunk Railway of India did not show that the Government always proceeded very rapidly with the works they undertook. There was another point of importance, and that was whether the Government would be able to get a proper staff and work these undertakings properly. They had the admission of Lord Lawrence that the Public Works department was not in a proper state to undertake these works. The Indian Government had taken a great deal upon themselves. They had only just taken in hand all the irrigation works, and it was not yet known whether they could carry them on satisfactorily. They were now going to undertake the railways, and they called upon the Government at home for more assistance and for engineer officers, and the Indian Government complained that they did not receive all the assistance they ought to have. He would earnestly urge upon the Government of India that, if they were going to take these great works upon themselves, they should take care to strengthen the hands of the departments which had the execution of the works, not merely by sending out officers, but by a proper organization of these departments, and by regulating relations between the Public Works departments of India and those of the several presidencies; because, if jealousies existed between them, a good deal of mischief might happen. He would also urge the Government not to suspend the execution of the harbour and irrigation works which they might have in hand for these new pet railway projects. He would likewise impress upon the Government the importance of not running into debt, and of providing a proper system of account for writing off the debt. He believed that the matter was in good hands, both at home and in India. He was not afraid of the expenditure, estimated by the hon. Member for the City of London at £120,000,000, if it were incurred wisely, and expended in a way to develop the resources of India. He had sanguine hopes of the future of India, if the Government did its duty in promoting the moral and social progress of that country. The Government of India was a paternal Government of the very best class, and its relations with its neighbours and subjects were of the most satisfactory and friendly character. They must, however, look to the possibility of dark days; but the best way of providing for them was by developing and husbanding the resources of India, and making the people feel that we were real friends to them. Whatever the Government did, let them not overwork their departments or overstrain their finances.

SIR CHARLES WINGFIELD said, he observed that for the year 1868-9 there was a deficit of about £1,000,000, and a total deficit during the last three or four years of about £4,500,000; but he thought that this would soon disappear if the principle laid down by the late Secretary of State for India were carried out—namely, that all expenditure, except that which was extraordinary and strictly reproductive, should be met by income. By such a course only could the Government meet its liabilities and this country so preserve its credit as would enable it to borrow such large sums as would be required for railways and irrigation. With respect to barrack expenditure, he feared that many of the sites which had been declared to have every sanitary qualification would be found to be unhealthy, and consequently be abandoned. He did not believe that in India health was promoted by mere solidity of construction. The great want in that country was cubical space and free ventilation for currents of air, and mud walls and a thatched roof were cooler than stone or brick buildings. Where the barracks now in course of construction were likely to last some time, and where they were also military stations, the works might be suspended, and the Exchequer saved from any further outlay of money for some time. There were fifty-one places in India where barracks were either built or building. Some were only seventy miles distant from each other; and it was worthy of consideration whether some concentration were not possible. He should like to see a Return of the outlay in building barracks since the Mutiny. He believed that they had been a most frightful drain on the resources of India. He believed that the expenditure from this source was not less than £15,000,000 up to the present time. With regard to railways, he thought it probable that the strategic considerations upon which they had been laid out would undergo a change, and that new military stations would have to be undertaken. As to the Army expenditure, he did not think that the European force could be reduced below its present standard, which he believed to be 62,000 men, He doubted whether the Native troops would ever have revolted if they had believed there were sufficient European troops in the country to coerce them. He should have regarded with greater satisfaction the increase in the Indian revenue if he did not know that half of that increase had been derived from opium and salt. It was stated that the Chinese Government had renewed their edicts against opium; but this he regarded as only the means of obtaining larger bribes for the officials. Across the Continent of India there stretched a huge Customs line, guarded by an army of several thousand officials. To the north of this line salt paid a duty of 6*s*. per 80lb., while to the south of the line salt was only taxed at 3*s*. Statistics showed that in the northern districts the consumption of salt was only at the rate of 8lb. a head, whereas to the south the consumption amounted to 13lb. a head. If the rates could be equalized, or nearly so, a considerable increase in consumption might be expected. At the same time, he could not agree with the right hon. Baronet opposite (Sir Stafford Northcote) that the consumption of salt afforded the best test of the condition of the poorer classes, for, unlike tobacco or alcohol, a man was not likely to consume more salt than nature prompted him. He was glad to perceive that by the extension given to the quantity of roughly manufactured salt which a man might have in his possession the convictions for infractions of the salt laws had fallen nearly 1,000 in number. As to the railways, he had for a long time been of opinion that a system of public companies would work most advantageously, fearing that in times of financial difficulty the construction of railways in the hands of the State would come to a standstill; and also remembering that at the time of the Mutiny a 5½ per cent open loan did not fill. Having read the despatch, however, and the exhaustive Minute on which it was based, he had come to the conclusion that the principles laid down by the Government were those which ought in future to be acted upon. The Government of India had shown a very strong case for raising such funds as were necessary upon their own credit, and they ought, he believed, to be supported in doing so. There was an apparent increase in the circulation of the paper currency. That increase, he thought, was more apparent than real, a large proportion of it being only issued in the sense of having left the central establishment for the district offices, where it lay unissued. The true remedy had been suggested in the Report of the Paper Currency Committee. As a mark of the increase of comfort and prosperity amongst the population of India, it was gratifying to observe that 600,000 lbs. of sugar were now imported, whereas, in 1850 and 1851, there were 1,800,000 lbs. exported, so that in the article of sugar, India from an exporting had become an importing country. He considered that there were two reforms needed in India. The first was the separation of the executive and fiscal from purely judicial functions, and the restriction of all offices in the service to one or other of those branches of administration. Such a multiplicity of duties were now thrown upon a collector that it was impossible he could get through them all except by devolving the larger share of the duties upon his assistants. Another evil of the existing system was that men, unless they would sacrifice pay and promotion, were constantly being transferred from one branch of the service which they thoroughly understood, and for which they were well fitted, to a totally different branch, for which, perhaps, they had no taste whatever. A separation already existed in the upper branches of the administration, which ought to be continued downwards through the various stages. He would not interfere with the general apprenticeship served by a man on entering the service, which was always useful to him, but after four or five years he ought to be called upon to choose between the executive and the judicial branches, and, having done so, should be strictly confined to that which he had selected. With a view of ascertaining the opinions and feelings of the natives, and bringing these into harmony with the acts of our officials, weighed down as they were by their various duties, Sir Robert Montgomery had recommended the establishment of consultative native councils. Such a course would be quite in accordance with the views of the late Lord Canning, that we should abandon "the anomalous attempt to govern a country by thrusting aside every man whose birth, position, or social influence gave him a right to share in administering its affairs." Had such councils been in existence, with the facilities which they afforded for studying Native sentiment, the recent spectacle would not have been witnessed of a large number of landowners in India presenting a Petition against what they conceived to be an infringement of native laws and usages, and a violation of the spirit of Her Majesty's proclamation. Such a course could not but be injurious to our reputation in the East.

Mr. R. N. FOWLER: Sir, the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for India (Mr. Grant Duff) has admitted that it is unsatisfactory, on financial grounds, that £9,000,000 of the Indian revenue should depend on the article of opium. Sir, I object to this source of revenue, not only on financial but on moral grounds. I have always regarded the conduct of this country in forcing this poisonous and deleterious drug upon the Chinese, as the greatest blot upon the name of the British nation. Did time permit I could quote the authority of eminent men of all classes—statesmen, diplomatists, officers in the Army and Navy, physicians, and missionaries—in support of my opinion; but, at this period of the debate, considering the number of hon. Members connected with India who are anxious to take part in it, I feel that I ought not to trespass on the Committee, and will content myself with two short extracts. The first is from a speech in this House by the late Sir John Cam Hobhouse, afterwards Lord Broughton, and long President of the Board of Control, who stated that "he did not deny the use of opium being a great vice, for a great vice it was." The other is a sentence from a despatch of the East India Company, the originators of the traffic, who declare that "were it possible to put an end to the use of the drug altogether, except for medical purposes, we would gladly do it in compassion to mankind." I may be told, Sir, that the question stands on the same ground as the revenue derived from wine and spirits; but there is this essential distinction, that whereas the use of wine and spirits is constantly ordered by medical men, I never heard of any patient being directed to smoke opium. I trust that Her Majesty's Government and the Indian authorities will endeavour so to regulate the finances of India that this large portion of its revenue shall not continue to be dependent on the trade in this pernicious drug.

Sir WILFRID LAWSON: Sir, the Committee, no doubt, observed that in the able and comprehensive statement of the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Grant Duff), there was one point on which he touched hastily and lightly. I allude to the revenue derived from opium. The hon. Gentleman said he should not allude to the moral aspects of that question. He was right; for there is no defence on moral grounds to the raising of revenue by these means. He told us that about £9,000,000 of the Indian revenue (nearly one-fifth) was derived from opium. What does that mean? It means that a large portion of the most fertile soil in India is diverted from the production of food for the people, and devoted to the production of a deleterious drug. This drug is employed to pauperize and demoralize hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of the inhabitants of China. Thus, it indirectly is a great hindrance to that legitimate trade with China which it is generally considered so desirable to promote; for not only are the pauperized inhabitants unable to become our customers, but the better educated and superior classes in that country, seeing our hateful policy of forcing this drug upon their country for our own gain, become more and more hostile to us, and determine to throw every obstacle in their power in the way of our commercial pursuits. Those Gentlemen in the House—and there are many—who are interested in missionary operations, know well that nothing sets the Chinese so much against accepting the truths of Christianity as witnessing this immoral and cruel policy of our Government and merchants. What, then, is the defence of this trade? There is no defence, except that the money must be had. Is, then, money to be set against morality? Several times during the Session I have heard the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Oxfordshire (Mr. Henley) inveigh with righteous indignation against the power of mammon, when he has seen, as he thought, a tendency in our public proceedings to sacrifice moral to material interests. I hope, therefore, that he and hon. Gentlemen who sit with him will aid my hon. Friend opposite (Mr. R. N. Fowler) in the move which he has made in this matter. But I fancy that it may be said, raising this large revenue from opium in India is no worse than raising, as we do, a large revenue from drink in England. I do not say that it is worse; both are bad enough, but two blacks do not make a white. And we must remember that there is a feeling rapidly rising here against the English system to which I have alluded, which is certain in the end to sweep it away. Many years ago the present Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Gladstone), speaking on certain resolutions in reference to China and this opium traffic, moved by the late Sir James Graham, said—

> "Justice is with them (the Chinese); and whilst they—the pagans and semi-civilized barbarians—have it, we—the enlightened and civilized Christians—are pursuing objects at variance both with justice and with religion."

Now, those were the words of the head of the present Ministry. But I am not so sanguine as to believe that our Government will at present act in this spirit, and abolish this evil system. I know the temptation which there is for Government to raise money in an easy, handy manner. I fear that the Government will, for a time, go on in the old system; but I do hope that the remarks of my hon. Friend (Mr. R. N. Fowler) may help to arouse the public conscience, bring it to bear upon our rulers, and ultimately compel them to desist from raising the revenues of this great Empire by promoting the misery and degradation of millions of the inhabitants of another Empire.

Colonel SYKES said, he could not help congratulating the hon. Member (Mr. Grant Duff) in having been the first to create in that House an interest in Indian Budgets. Time was—and he recollected more than one occasion—when not a dozen Members remained in the House to listen to the annual Indian Financial Statement, and this was the first occasion since he had a seat of more than forty Members being present when the Indian Financial Statement was made, and he trusted that the present comparatively large attendance was a proof that the new Parliament was taking an interest in matters connected with that gigantic Empire which had been committed to our care, and for which we were responsible, both morally and physically. He was glad to hear from the statement of the hon. Member that the result of reducing the amount of the assessments on land had been to largely increase the land revenue. He had always maintained that we did not levy a rent in India, but imposed a tax on the produce of the soil — in fact, a land tax. With regard to the question raised by his hon. Friend the Member for the City of London (Mr. Crawford), he must say that the idea of the Government assuming the execution of railway works in India was by no means a new one. It was broached in the days of the East India Company, when railways in India were first spoken of, and at that time it received the support of several men who might well be considered authorities on Indian affairs —George Tucker, Butterworth Bayley, Sir Henry Willoch, and others. As to the Army in India, it was worthy of remark that before the Mutiny the cost of our Indian Army was £12,000,000. Now it was £16,000,000. The number of European troops in India before the Mutiny was about 42,000; now it was 64,000. The native Army had been diminished by 130,000 men, and the European Army had been increased by 22,000. There was no justifiable reason for this. When the Mutiny broke out it was confined to the Bengal Army. The armies of Calcutta and Madras were not parties to it. The 42,000 European troops had sufficed to break the neck of the Mutiny before a single reinforcement had landed in India, and the number that had sufficed before would suffice in the case of another mutiny, of which there was not the remotest probability; indeed, in the Mutiny of 1857, had the native soldiery been adroitly handled, there should not have been any Mutiny at all. He not only objected to the present number of European troops, but that 20,000 or 30,000 of them were not local troops, as under the East India Company, by which the great expense of relieving annually 6,000 men would be greatly diminished. That European troops could be maintained for lengthened periods in a state of efficiency we had a proof the other day in the arrival of one of the East India Company's regiments at Aldershot, which had been 112 years uninterruptedly in India. He felt convinced that the revenue of India was amply sufficient to meet any calls that might be made on it. There was a mischievous belief in the native mind in India that England drained bullion from India, and that India was consequently being impoverished. The fact being that the balance of trade had been in favour of India since 1800, and that balance had been paid in bullion. From successive Returns given to him by the House of Commons, it appeared that, after deducting exports of bullion from India from imports, there remained an annual balance of bullion in India on the 30th April, 1867, of £311,131,300, the aggregate accumulation since 1800, and of that, £262,567,643 had been coined into rupees in the Mints of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay. It was his wish to have noticed some other subjects in the Budget, but the hour did not permit him to do so.

MR. J. B. SMITH moved the adjournment of the debate. It was now half-past six o'clock, and they could not hope to conclude the debate before the time when the sitting would be suspended.

Motion agreed to.

House resumed.

Committee report Progress; to sit again this day.

IRELAND—TRINITY COLLEGE (DUBLIN).

RESOLUTION.

MR. FAWCETT rose to move a Resolution respecting Trinity College, Dublin, and remarked that the Prime Minister, in his memorable speech in introducing the Irish Church Bill, had admitted that Trinity College must be dealt with. The question, therefore, arose whether it could be dealt with in such a manner as to place all the inhabitants of Ireland, whatever might be their religious opinions, in a position of perfect equality with regard to University education. This was a subject of vast importance. It would, of course, be idle to say that it was of so much importance as the disestablishment of the Irish Church; but, at the same time, it was no exaggeration to say that the establishment of that Church did not inflict greater injustice on the residents of Ireland who did not belong to its communion than was inflicted upon them by their being excluded from the emoluments and from many of the honours which were associated with University education. He would ask the House to picture to itself the relative positions of two youths, one a Catholic and the other a Churchman, who entered Trinity College, Dublin, together. Suppose, for instance, that they lived on terms of intimacy with each other, that they were inspired throughout their academical career by an ennobling intellectual rivalry, and that when the examinations had been concluded the Catholic student was adjudged to be somewhat the more distinguished of the two. Yet the Catholic student would go out into the world without any reward for his intellectual achievements, while the other, because he was a Churchman, would obtain a Fellowship, which was valuable not only in a pecuniary point of view, but as an honour and a distinction. That very morning a Catholic Irishman, who was a most eminent mathematician, had remarked to him—"Catholic emancipation has no doubt been a great boon for the people of Ireland; but, as far as men of science and letters are concerned, it has been a dead letter. Most of the educational positions, emoluments, and honours from which we were shut out before Catholic emancipation we are shut out from still. And," he added, "this must continue until all the Fellowships, Professorships, Scholarships, and honours in Trinity College, Dublin, are thrown open to all without distinction of creed?" The question, then, was, what was the best mode of carrying out this policy of educational equality? Three schemes had been propounded with this object. First, it had been proposed to leave Trinity College in its present position, and to found in the University of Dublin Colleges for Catholics, Presbyterians, and other denominations. In his opinion such a scheme was utterly impracticable; but if practicable would prove so mischievous that he, for one, would sooner see things continued as they were. The endowments for those Colleges should be as large as that of Trinity College itself, and would amount to no less a sum than from £4,000,000 to £5,000,000. There was no Government that would propose to ask Parliament for such a sum. When the late Liberal Government proposed to give the supplemental charter to the Catholic University, they were opposed by some who were in general their most stedfast supporters, and the late Conservative Administration brought disaster on itself at the General Election in consequence of their attempts to charter and endow the Catholic University. Such a scheme would also prove pernicious in the highest degree. He was bound to confess that in Trinity College, Dublin, many of the advantages of an undenominational education were encouraged at the present time. When at Oxford and Cambridge no Roman Catholic or Dissenter could obtain a degree, no impediment was thrown in the way of Roman Catholics and Dissenters obtaining degrees at Trinity College, Dublin. The consequence had been that in that College a great number of men of different religions had been educated and had lived in harmony together with the happiest results to their country. Many a most distinguished Roman Catholic Judge and many a distinguished Member of that House—among whom he need only mention the Attorney General for Ireland (Mr. Sullivan) — had been educated at Trinity College, Dublin. If, therefore, denominational Colleges were established a deadly blow would be struck at the principle of undenominational education in Ireland, and every Roman Catholic student would be withdrawn from Trinity College and sent to a Roman Catholic College. Nothing ought to be done that would discourage that mixed system of education, which was the best antidote to those religious rancours and sectarian animosities which had so long been the bane of Ireland. Another scheme, analogous to that which he had just noticed, had been proposed by the Under Secretary for the Colonies (Mr. Monsell), but it had one point of difference which made it still worse. The right hon. Gentleman proposed to endow the suggested denominational Colleges, not by public money, but by spoliating and taking away the revenues of Trinity College, Dublin, a proceeding which would inflict a great injustice upon that institution, inevitably break it up, and destroy the mixed character of its education. Without professing to be an attached friend to Trinity College, he should not hesitate to give his humble assistance and vote, if they were of any service, to defeat this attempt at spoliation. It was of a very small advantage to bring students of different religious opinions into the same examination room; what they should do was to bring them to live together in the same Colleges, under the same daily social influences, where they would become friends, and never feel that mutual antipathy and religious bigotry which, unhappily, too often were the fruits of denominational isolation. With that view they ought to free Trinity College, Dublin, from all religious disabilities. That was a scheme at once simple and practicable; it would not, in the least degree, affect the efficiency of Trinity College itself, and, instead of discouraging undenominational education, it would place it on a wider and safer basis. He understood that the authorities of that College had at last recognized the fact that it could not continue in its present position; and, unless he was misinformed, they were prepared to accept the scheme he had last described. By leaving Trinity College with its revenues untouched, and simultaneously freeing all its Professorships, Fellowships, and Scholarships from religious disabilities, they would take the course which was most likely to increase its usefulness and render it in the future still more illustrious in respect to intellectual distinction than it had been in the past. Contemporaneously with those changes certain other internal reforms in the College itself — among others the improvement of the constitution of the Board of the College, an alteration in the mode of electing to Fellowships, and the establishment of less inequality between the emoluments of the senior and the junior Fellowships — would, he was led to believe, if adopted, prove beneficial to the best interests of the institution. In conclusion, he trusted that his personal connection with that subject would cease that evening. It was the duty and the privilege of the advanced Liberal party to advocate questions which were in a minority. When their proposals had advanced to such a point as to be ripe for legislation in that House, then they ought to resign them to the Treasury Bench, the occupants of which should reap the fruits of their past efforts. In relinquishing the question of Trinity College, Dublin, he placed it in the hands of the Prime Minister with the most sincere pleasure, knowing that it would give the right hon. Gentleman another opportunity of passing a great measure of justice to Ireland. Since he had had charge of the question it had gone through many strange vicissitudes. Only last year it was thought to be so awkward and troublesome a subject that its discussion was thwarted by counting out the House at four o'clock in the afternoon. Little then had he supposed that in nine months after that "count out" the Prime Minister would admit that it was a question which must be dealt with, or that the authorities of Trinity College would themselves give a conciliatory reception to his Motion. He hoped that next Session the Government would propose a measure on the subject; and if it was based on the principle of placing all the inhabitants of Ireland, whatever might be their religious opinions, in a position of strict equality in regard to University education, it would be alike his duty and his pleasure to give it a silent but cordial support. If, however, the Government should be unwilling to do that, then he should see that the House should have an opportunity of affirming the great and important principle that the splendid educational endowments of the United Kingdom should be so administered as not to promote the opinions of any particular sect, but rather with a view to destroying the rivalry of religious rancour and of promoting the moral, mental, and material advancement of the nation.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That, in the opinion of this House, those who are not members of the Established Church cannot be placed in a position of equality with regard to University Education in Ireland until all the Fellowships and Scholarships of Trinity College, Dublin, are freed from all religious disabilities."—(Mr. Fawcett.)

DR. BALL: At this period of the Session, and with the great amount of Public Business which remains undisposed of, it is impossible to enter upon the very extensive question raised by the hon. Gentleman in such a manner as its importance demands. It is quite plain that you cannot consider the case of the University of Dublin or of Trinity College, which is in effect that University, without considering the position of the other Colleges in Ireland. In fact, you must consider, if you enter upon the question, the whole system of collegiate education in Ireland. Now, it is quite unnecessary to say that no more extensive or more important subject for discussion or investigation can be proposed. It is not with a view of entering upon this extended subject that I rise, but in consequence of a communication made to me by the Board of Trinity College, to the effect that whereas, on former occasions they did petition in opposition to the Motion of the hon. Member for Brighton, they do on the present occasion feel it their duty not to petition against it or oppose it. The Board, in taking that course, have been actuated by the consideration of the change which has occurred with regard to the ecclesiastical arrangements of Ireland. The Board were of opinion —and I believe history confirms them in the opinion — that the prominent and main object of the foundation of the University of Dublin was to place a great educational institution in connection with the Church which was a very short time before established in Ireland—the same Church as had been established in England—the Protestant Episcopal Church, according to the faith of the Church of England. It was the liberality of the University itself which afterwards expanded its sphere of action and provided general education for all religious denominations; but the main object, as I have said, was originally education in connection with the Established Church. As long as that Church remained the Established Church of Ireland, it is plain that the Governing Body of the University, which the Board were, could not support a Motion which went to introduce among the Governing Body persons of other religious persuasions than that for the maintenance of which the University had been established, without infringing upon the object of the original foundation; and, therefore, when the hon. Member proposed to open the Scholarships, senior Fellowships, and membership of the Governing and Teaching Body to the professors of different creeds, the University heretofore opposed the Motion. But now when the Legislature has, by the Irish Church Act of this Session, terminated the connection between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the State and the policy on which that connection was founded, the Board feel that they are no longer called upon or in a position to oppose the Motion. And here I wish to call the attention of the House — because in this respect I do not think that justice has been done to the University — to the fact that long since they opened all their Professorships, except those connected with the Divinity School, and all their other honours and emoluments, except Fellowships, to persons of every religion. The offices limited to Protestants are—1, Fellowships; 2, Foundation Scholarships; and 3, Professorships confined to Fellows, or ex-Fellows, which are as follows:—Regius Professorship of Divinity, Archbishop King's ditto, Hebrew, (salary only £60), and Lectureships in the Divinity School. All other Professorships, without distinction, are open to Roman Catholics and Dissenters. For example — Feudal and English Law, salary £700; Civil Law, salary £210; Anatomy, emoluments over £1,200 (now held by a Presbyterian); Chemistry, emoluments nearly £1,000; Surgery, Botany, and all other Professorships in the School of Medicine; all the professorships in the Engineering School, that of Political Economy—which is at present held by a Roman Catholic—Sanscrit, Arabic, and the Professorships of modern languages. The Arabic Professor is a Mahomedan. All the Medical Professorships were opened to persons of all religious denominations, by an Act passed in the year 1867, promoted by the Board, and with their sanction. Fourteen University Studentships—the entire number—are open to Roman Catholics; three are actually held by Roman Catholics: all University honours and prizes, without distinction, except those in the Divinity School (the amount annually distributed is about £1,000); and all Exhibitions, except those which by original foundation are limited to Divinity students or sons of clergymen are also open. Now, taking as the basis what the Board had laid down for itself, that the University was connected with an Established Church, and was founded in the interest of that Church, I say, with the exception of the Fellowships which, as connected with the Governing Body, they considered to be essentially and intrinsically connected with this primary and paramount interest, they have always shown the greatest liberality to persons of a different religious persuasion. They opened all the various prizes and Professorships, with the exceptions that I have stated; and, as I have mentioned before, at this moment there are Roman Catholics holding these College emoluments. The number of Roman Catholics and Dissenters educated at the University has always borne a fair proportion to the number of Episcopalians, and there has always been a large number of persons not members of the Established Church receiving their education there. For myself, I must say that I believe one of the greatest benefits ever conferred on the country was that this University at an early period admitted persons of all persuasions to the advantages of education. I admit that the Professorships and other offices have been opened only in recent years—I believe since the Union; but before the Union Roman Catholics and Dissenters were admitted to education in the University, and from that period to the present time no man has ever said there was any attempt to interfere with the religion of any person educated in the University; no man has ever complained of the way in which the Roman Catholic students were dealt with, as regards the distribution of the honours or advantages held out to them. The confidence which this honourable conduct created led to a large proportion of the Roman Catholics, distinguished in the legal and medical professions and in public life, receiving their education in Trinity College. Protestant and Catholic met together to pursue the same studies and imbibe the elevated and generous sentiments which those studies inspire. Hence arose mutual esteem and respect, friendships and intimacies, mitigating and softening differences of opinion upon public questions in after life. One of the most important testimonies in support of the principles which ought to be kept in mind in any legislation on this subject, is a petition by the Roman Catholic laity of Ireland to the Irish House of Commons, in 1795, at the time when

Maynooth was founded. The petition was presented by their great advocate, Henry Grattan, in opposition to that foundation, and on what ground? On the ground that Maynooth, which originally was not confined to ecclesiastics, but was open to laymen, was to be devoted to Roman Catholics, while Protestants were to be excluded. That petition says—

> "The petitioners submit that if the youth of both religions were instructed together in those branches of classical education which are the same for all; their peculiar tenets would be no hindrance hereafter to a friendly and liberal intercourse through life; that the petitioners having received the permission of having their youth educated along with the Protestant youth of the kingdom in the University of Dublin, and experience having fully demonstrated the wisdom and utility of that permission, they see with deep concern the principle of separation and exclusion revived and re-enacted."

This is an extremely remarkable document, and it is the only one in which, as far as I am aware, the educated Roman Catholic laity of Ireland have expressed their opinions on the subject. The only observation I wish now to make in reference to the general question, is to express my earnest hope that in any future legislation, nothing will be done which shall have the slightest tendency to diminish the beneficial effect that is to be derived from men of every variety of religious opinion being educated together, and living on terms of intimacy from the earliest period of their lives.

MR. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE: I hope it will not be considered unreasonable if I request the hon. Member who has brought this subject forward (Mr. Fawcett) not to press his Motion to a division, or, if in case he should not yield to my appeal, I move the Previous Question. I fully admit that the two speeches we have just heard are speeches of very great interest upon a most important question. The speech of the hon. Member for Brighton was marked by all the sincerity and earnestness which he always brings to bear on this important subject; and the speech of the right hon. and learned Member for the University (Dr. Ball) has shown a spirit most creditable to the right hon. Gentleman and to the great institution he represents. I understand the right hon. Gentleman to say that he does not object to the Motion of the hon. Member on the part of those whom he represents; but there is a ground upon which the Government and, I think, the House cannot accept the Motion as it stands. The Resolution of the hon. Member for Brighton implies more than we can with prudence or safety accept, with due consideration for those whose interests and feelings we are bound to consider. The Motion is couched in strong and even indignant terms; it calls upon the House to affirm that a certain change in the University system of Ireland is the only change that can satisfy the claims of justice or, I presume, the rights and feelings of the people of Ireland; but it is a question whether the change asked for is in accordance with the feelings of those who have a right to complain of the present educational system of Ireland. Upon that point I am bound to say we have not sufficient evidence to bring us to an affirmative conclusion; indeed, on the contrary, we have reason to believe, from the long controversies which have already occurred upon the subject, and from the further controversy which may be anticipated, that the change demanded by the Motion before us would not by itself satisfy those who believe themselves aggrieved by the system of education in Ireland as regards the higher branches. The Motion of the hon. Member implies that the great University College of Dublin, Trinity College, shall be thrown open to all comers without religious tests being imposed upon those who are to enjoy any of its emoluments or dignities. With that doctrine I am certainly not here to quarrel; but what I have to say is that, judging from the experience of the past, that doctrine does not meet all the views of large bodies of the Irish people, because their grievance is not that they cannot obtain the dignities and emoluments of Trinity College, Dublin, in consequence of the religious tests imposed, but that a large part of the Irish population are unable to obtain a University degree without passing through Colleges constructed upon a system which is not approved by their consciences. That is the grievance with which we have been often asked to deal, and it is not met by the Motion of the hon. Member. We all know that there is no access in Ireland to a University degree except through the Queen's Colleges and the Queen's University on the one hand, or through Trinity College and the University of Dublin on the other; this is a matter of complaint by a large body of the Irish people, and the change suggested by the hon. Member would not satisfy the complainers, although it goes a long way in another direction in which the hon. Member has my sympathies largely with him; the change suggested, in fact, gives no opening for the attainment of a University degree except through Colleges constructed on the principle of mixed education. This is the only objection I have to the hon Member's Motion, but it is an objection which makes it impossible for the Government to endorse it in its present form. I have listened with great satisfaction to a great deal that has been said by my hon. Friend and my right hon. and learned Friend on this subject; but I am bound not to limit the action of the Government or of Parliament to the change suggested, inasmuch as the Motion evidently excludes any other change in the higher branches of the Irish educational system. Perhaps the hon. Member will excuse me if I point out one circumstance of a general nature of vital consequence which must be taken into consideration in dealing with this matter. The difficulty of framing a satisfactory educational system is far greater in a case where you have, as in Ireland, to deal with a Protestant and a Roman Catholic population, than where you have, as in England or Scotland, to deal only with a variety of Protestant denominations. That is a circumstance which is continually forcing itself upon me as one who knows something of these questions both in England and in Ireland; and those whose experience is derived simply from educational affairs in England or Scotland are very often misled by that experience when they come to review an educational system designed to meet the wants of a people composed of Protestants and Roman Catholics. The difficulties in our way are obviously, for this reason, far greater in the case of Ireland than in the case of Scotland or England, and demand from us corresponding caution. Feeling therefore, and asserting on the part of the Government, the duty of dealing with that grievance of a large portion of the people of Ireland to which I have alluded — the grievance that they cannot gain a University degree in their own country without doing violence to their conscience—I am bound to say I am not able to pledge the Government to the terms of the Motion of the hon. Member. Perhaps as the hon. Member has by bringing forward his Motion re-excited interest in the subject, and, as I fully admit, that it will be the duty of the Government to deal with it, he will not think it necessary to divide the House upon the question.

Mr. FAWCETT said, that if he had to consider simply in the light of the speech of the Chief Secretary for Ireland whether he should divide the House or not, he would be obliged at all risks to divide, because he disagreed so entirely from every sentiment the right hon. Gentleman had expressed, and because the whole tone of his remarks was so contradictory of the true principles of Liberalism. But many Irish Members had left the House, and the present attendance was so meagre that a division would not probably test the feeling of the House, and for this reason he proposed to withdraw his Motion. He had listened to the two speeches that had been delivered from the front Benches, and pronounced them the most remarkable and perhaps the most significant he had listened to since he had been in Parliament. The speech of the right hon. and learned Member for the Dublin University (Dr. Ball) was liberal and enlightened, and he agreed with every word of it; indeed, he was bound in candour to say he had never heard the advantages of undenominational education put more forcibly than when he described the benefits which result from bringing persons of different religious opinions within the educational advantages of Trinity College. This Motion, which was too wide and sweeping to be accepted by the Government, was, according to the right hon. and learned Member for the University of Dublin, already accepted by the institution which we were accustomed to look upon as the centre of Conservatism. As a supporter of the Government, he believed it best that if he meant to oppose their policy he should frankly tell them so in time. In reply to the speech of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, he would observe that he thought the whole line of the speech of the right hon. Gentleman pointed clearly, distinctly, and unmistakably to the establishment of denominational Colleges in Ireland; and of all schemes that could be proposed there was none that he should feel it his duty so warmly and so strenuously to oppose. In this respect his opinions were those of the English and the Scotch constituencies, and of the great majority of the Liberal Members. What did the Secretary for Ireland mean to do in order to carry out his scheme of denominational education? His Government had already tried their hand at founding a denominational College; they attempted to force a supplemental charter upon the Queen's University. ["No, no!"] It was not the present Government, but it was the late Liberal Government, of which many right hon. Gentlemen now on the Treasury Bench were Members. They attempted to grant a supplemental charter to the Queen's University; he opposed the Motion, and he knew something about it; and, but for the determination of the present Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Lowe), the unfortunate scheme would have been carried out. Remembering what occurred last year, he would add that, if there were any force or reason in the remarks of the Secretary for Ireland, the right hon. Gentleman was bound to support the scheme of Lord Mayo for the establishment of a Catholic University. Listening to the right hon. Gentleman, he could well have supposed it was Lord Mayo come back to advocate the policy of "levelling up." Although he would not divide the House, he trusted the Government would re-consider their opinions upon this question. He would earnestly and emphatically entreat them to remember, before it was too late, that there was nothing which the Liberal party in this country and in Scotland more deeply cherished, and were more firmly pledged to, than the carrying out of undenominational education. In conclusion, he begged to withdraw the Motion.

Sir PATRICK O'BRIEN said, he would not have risen but for the remarks just made. There were men who assumed to themselves a peculiar Liberalism, and who would ride to death theories which they believed to be imbued with Liberalism; but they were not liberal in attempting to force their own favourite abstract ideas on multitudes of people. Now, it was to him a subject of regret that an hon. Gentleman, a Professor of a distinguished University, should get up in that House, and, speaking on behalf of Liberalism, put forward a theory which he (Sir Patrick O'Brien) as a Liberal Member begged to repudiate. He would also inform that hon. Gentleman that if he would have regard to true Liberalism he must consult the feelings of the people for whom it was proposed to legislate. The hon. Gentleman had said that anyone who knew Ireland would share his opinion. Did the hon. Gentleman, in the presence of the Irish representatives, mean to assume that he spoke with the authority of a Delphic Oracle on this subject? He might profess to know as much of his own country as the learned Professor, and his belief was that the Resolution proposed by the hon. Gentleman would find no favour with the great mass of the people; but an idea had been put forward by a Member of the Government which might be fairly accepted as a compromise between those who wanted an essentially denominational system and those who wished for a University open to all. It had been stated that it was possible to connect with the University of Dublin colleges for Catholics and Presbyterians, who, having received their education in their own Colleges, might enter into fair and honourable competition with men of all opinions and creeds, in the examination of the University for the degrees which it might confer. He merely rose to protest against the assumption on the part of the hon. Gentleman of a peculiar Liberalism. He not unfrequently found that men who spoke most about liberty were, in regard to all questions about which they entertained peculiar theories which were not accepted, the most illiberal and dogmatic.

Mr. BRUCE said, his object in rising was to protest against the distortion of the speech of the Chief Secretary for Ireland of which the hon. Member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett) had been guilty, no doubt, unintentionally, and to his entire misrepresentation of the conduct of the Government of Earl Russell with respect to the proposal of a supplemental charter for the Queen's University. What the right hon. Gentleman said was that he objected to the Motion of the hon. Member because it did not provide for that which was the great need of Ireland, which was an examining body for all Ireland—the creation, either in the University of Dublin or elsewhere, of a body to which all persons, whether coming from Colleges, denominational schools, or elsewhere, might go for a degree. With reference to the project of the Government of Earl Russell, he would speak of what he knew, because he was in Ireland at the time, and had much to do with the negotiation of the matter; and he affirmed most distinctly that there was nothing in that negotiation which had for its object the encouragement of denominational education, or the discouragement of the mixed system pursued in the Queen's Colleges. All that was proposed by the Government of Earl Russell was that the charter of the Queen's University might be so enlarged that it might examine not only the members of the Queen's Colleges, with which it was not proposed to meddle, but all persons who might present themselves from any part of Ireland. That was the simple object of what was proposed, and it had nothing of the character which was imputed to it, and which the hon. Member for Brighton represented it to have. When the hon. Member first brought similar charges against the Government of Lord Russell, they had been explicitly contradicted; and now that they were repeated he could not refrain from repeating the denial of their accuracy or justice.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

NATIONAL DEBT.—RESOLUTION.

Mr. LAMBERT rose to call the attention of the House to the financial position of the country with regard to the National Debt, and to move a Resolution in favour of steps being taken to reduce it gradually. The hon. Gentleman said, if he wanted a precedent for his Motion he should point to the case of America. She commenced her late war with no debt at all, and at the end of it had a debt almost equal to ours in amount and larger in interest, and America had all her resources within herself. Our position was very different, for we draw a large portion of the necessaries of life from abroad, our vessels are scattered over every sea to bring them to us, or to carry away our productions to pay for them. In case of war, as Mr. Reverdy Johnson had said in one of his speeches, we should be in a worse position than any other nation. Our vessels would be preyed upon by privateers from every port, our commerce ruined, and our supplies stopped. Now, therefore, when we were at peace and prosperous, was the time to reduce this enormous debt, which hung like a millstone round our necks. In a smooth sea we might swim with it, but in troubled water it might swamp us. During four years since the termination of their war America had paid off £100,000,000 of debt, or at the rate of £25,000,000 a year, and was still reducing it. Belgium was gradually reducing her debt, which now only amounted to £25,000,000, little more than three times the amount of her annual revenue. Let us follow their example and put our house in order while yet it was in our power to do so. The question would be asked, how was this to be done? and several ways had been suggested. One was by converting our debt into terminable annuities. He did not, however, see how this could well be done, and he would prefer to "take the bull by the horns" and have a special direct tax for the purpose. An increase in the income tax would be best, and he suggested that to the present 5*d.* 7*d.* should be added, making the tax 1*s.* in the pound. Including compound interest at 3 per cent, this would enable us to entirely sweep away our debt in thirty-two and a-half years; but in all probability, owing to the increased wealth of the country, it would be paid off in twenty or twenty-five years. As to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's last Budget, he regretted that, when the duty on wine, the rich man's luxury, had been so much reduced, a corresponding reduction had not been made in beer, which was not only the luxury, but the necessary of the poor man. What could supply the waste and exhaustion of the body so well as good beer? Instead of taking off a 1*d.* on the income tax, which nobody expected, and the 1*s.* registration duty on corn, amounting together to more than £2,000,000, he would have liked to see the malt tax reduced to that extent. In his Budget the right hon. Gentleman did not allude to the National Debt, making only a passing remark on the floating debt. The expense of the Abyssinian War was probably the reason why he proposed no reduction in the debt this year. It was to be hoped, however, that next year he would come forward with a bolder policy, and say to the House and the people of this country—"Your position with regard to your National Debt is unsatisfactory and even dangerous, and if you consider your own interests and the interests of your children, you will submit to a tax to pay off your debt." The hon. Gentleman concluded by moving his Resolution.

MR. MACFIE, in seconding the Motion, said, he should be proud to be a Member of a House of Commons which tried to rid the country of the millstone that might one day bring us to the ground.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that steps should be taken gradually to reduce the National Debt."—(Mr. Lambert.)

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: I do not exactly know how to deal with the Motion of the hon. Gentleman, because it really expresses approval of a policy which has been hitherto pursued by this country. The Motion was probably not intended in that sense, and the hon. Gentleman may not know what we have done of late years to reduce the debt; but if I can show him that such a reduction has been effected, he will probably withdraw a Motion which might otherwise bear an ambiguous interpretation. I have caused a statement to be prepared with reference to this subject, and this is the effect of it—On the 31st of March, 1858, the National Debt of this country was £832,843,000. On the 31st of March, 1868, it was £795,024,000. That is to say, in the ten years between March 31, 1858, and March 31, 1868, the National Debt of this country has been reduced by no less a sum than £37,819,000, being at the rate of about £3,782,000 a year. Thus, though some of us may wish to go faster, I think it cannot be said that this great and important subject has been neglected. We have, in fact, been making progress in the right direction, and I only hope that that progress may be maintained. As far as I am concerned, I should be very glad if the House would consent to put on a 1*s.* income tax for the reduction of the debt; but I cannot say that I think they would allow me to do so, and I cannot hold out any hopes to the hon. Gentleman of such a result. But by means of terminable annuities and of sinking funds we are making very fair progress in the way of reducing this great national burden; and if we can only keep clear of "just and necessary wars," and other things of the same kind, and if gentlemen who come to me on deputations, the object of which is always to increase and never to diminish the public expenditure, would limit their efforts a little in that direction, I do not despair of making still further progress in the reduction of our Debt.

MR. LAMBERT said, that an annual reduction of only £3,700,000 would hardly make any impression on the National Debt.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

SIERRA LEONE—CASE OF THOMAS v. HUGGINS.—RESOLUTION.

MR. H. B. SHERIDAN rose to call attention to the case of Samuel Thomas v. Horatio James Huggins, Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court at Sierra Leone, a report of which appeared in the "African Times," June 23rd, 1869, and generally the conduct of the said Mr. Huggins in his capacity of Judge. The hon. Gentleman said, Thomas, it appeared, had been induced to plead guilty to a charge of having stolen a coat and a pair of trousers, although no evidence had been called to prove the offence, in the expectation that he would be leniently dealt with. The leniency, however, which was extended to him by Mr. Huggins was to sentence him to receive 150 lashes with a cat-o'-nine-tails, to be imprisoned for a year, and to be kept at the hardest possible labour during that time. The trial had created the greatest interest at Sierra Leone, because the punishment was regarded as excessive, and as being altogether inconsistent with the law. Mr. Huggins was also accused of having been guilty of many offences of the same sort, and the action brought against him might be said to be the action of the whole community of the colony, because it was impossible for Thomas to bear the expense of such a proceeding. The decision arrived at was one which was not calculated to allay their anxiety, for it was to the effect, without any opinion being pronounced as to whether the punishment inflicted on Thomas was legal or not, that Mr. Huggins was not responsible for any act which he might do in his judicial capacity. The only court of appeal from that decision was the Privy Council, to whom an appeal would involve a very great expense, or the Colonial Office, failing to obtain redress from which it only remained for the people of Sierra Leone to appeal to that House. A number of petitions had been sent to the Colonial Office, complaining of the sentences that have been pronounced by Mr. Justice Huggins; but, notwithstanding the complaints made, Mr. Huggins was, in 1868, promoted from the office of Assistant Judge to that of Judge. The answer given by Mr. Huggins to the allegations contained in those petitions was that, under an old Act of the reign of George III., he was justified in passing such sentences as that which he had passed in the case of Thomas. It was, however, generally understood in Sierra Leone that that Act had been virtually repealed by what was called a general ordinance of the local Government, passed in May, 1862, by which the laws in force in England were made applicable to that colony. They contended, therefore, that the sentence in the case of Thomas was illegal, as the use of the lash was certainly repugnant to their feelings. Earl Granville, he might add, stated in a despatch of the 26th of February, that there were six sentences pronounced by Mr. Huggins which could not, in his opinion, be in any possible way, explained or justified. Several of the sentences passed by him were, the colonists complained, excessive. In some instances he had sentenced persons convicted on charges of simple larceny to be imprisoned with hard labour and whipped three times, while in other instances sentences of penal servitude had been passed for one, two, three, four, and as many as seven years beyond the period prescribed by the Act of Parliament for the offences of which they had been found guilty. In a great number of cases it was alleged that punishments had been awarded in excess of the power conferred on the Judge. When the case of "Thomas v. Huggins" was tried it was dismissed with costs, although, according to a statement in the African Times, the excess of punishment awarded by the defendant beyond what the law authorized was, in the aggregate of cases decided by him, no less than twenty-one years of penal servitude, six years of hard labour, and 2,200 lashes with the cat-o'-nine-tails. All that the petitioners asked was a full and fair inquiry in which both sides should be heard; and he hoped that so reasonable a prayer would not be refused by the House or the Colonial Office. The hon. Gentleman concluded by proposing his Motion.

Mr. R. N. FOWLER, in seconding the Motion, said, he was inclined to concur in the opinion expressed some time ago by the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State, that it was desirable that the connection between some of the colonies and the mother country should cease; but until that state of things was brought about, it was the duty of that House to bestow careful attention upon all colonial questions which were brought before it. He believed it would be only fair for the sake of Judge Huggins himself that the proposed inquiry should take place, because there remained upon his reputation at present a certain amount of suspicion which nothing but such an inquiry could remove. He, therefore, had great pleasure in seconding the Motion.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That, in the opinion of this House, a Court of Inquiry should be held at Sierra Leone to investigate the charges against Mr. Horatio James Huggins, the Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone, contained in the Petition from that Settlement sent to the Secretary of State for the Colonies."—(Mr. Henry Brinsley Sheridan.)

Mr. MONSELL said, his hon. Friend the Member for Dudley could hardly complain that the attention of the Colonial Office had not been directed to this subject, for three or four petitions in reference to it had been presented to the Department, and they had felt it their duty to give their consideration to each of those petitions. One of these was presented when the Duke of Buckingham was Secretary of State for the Colonies; it was referred to the then Governor of the colony, who, in reporting on it, stated that he had a very high opinion of Mr. Huggins, and that he acquitted that gentleman of all fault in the course he had pursued. After that petition had been so decided upon, the Duke of Buckingham promoted Mr. Huggins to the position he at present occupied. Hon. Gentlemen would, doubtless, agree with him that it would not be a desirable thing for the House to require the Colonial Office to constitute itself a court of appeal in judicial matters. Nothing, indeed, could be more calculated to impede the course of justice. The course laid down by the colonial regulations was as follows:—In every colony where a complaint like the present was made against an official a petition might be presented to the Governor, who was bound, after referring it to his council, to consider and decide upon it. If the Governor was of opinion that the Judge was in fault, he could suspend him, and refer the case to the Secretary of State. That course was not pursued, however, in the present case, and his hon. Friend might shorten matters very much if he would recommend the persons whose cause he was pleading to adopt that course. As to the law laid down by the Judge, that was a question sub judice. As his hon. Friend stated, it had been brought before the Chief Justice of Sierra Leone, and he understood it was now before the Privy Council in this country on appeal. [MR. H. B. SHERIDAN said, there had been no appeal.] He understood that an appeal was contemplated, and, at all events, an appeal was open to the parties interested. In regard to the punishments referred to by his hon. Friend, the simple question was whether the Act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 57, was in force in the colony or not. If it was not in force there, the sentences were in accordance with law; if, on the contrary, it was in force there, the sentences were not in accordance with law. This was a point which neither the House of Commons nor the Colonial Office was the proper tribunal to decide. When Sir Arthur E. Kennedy arrived in England—and he was expected very soon—the complaint should be submitted to him; and he should be glad to lay upon the table the petitions, the replies of Mr. Huggins, and the remarks of Colonel Blackall and the Governor, if the hon. Gentleman would move for their production. All he could promise the hon. Gentleman was that the whole question should be submitted to Sir Arthur E. Kennedy.

MR. H. B. SHERIDAN, in reply, pointed out that Earl Granville had stated that six of the cases were not justified by any law. He (Mr. Sheridan) relied upon that in calling upon the right hon. Gentleman to say whether he would institute this inquiry which had been so earnestly asked for.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

MARLBOROUGH STREET POLICE COURT.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

MR. EYKYN rose to call the attention of the House to the charge made by the Police against three young men on the night of the 30th June last, and tried before Mr. Knox, the Police Magistrate at Marlborough Street, who dismissed the case with observations strongly condemnatory of the conduct and evidence of the Police; and to move an Address for Papers on the subject. The hon. Gentleman said the police and the public were certainly not in that accord which ought to exist between the two. The police deserved gratitude for the general care they took of the metropolis by night and by day; but still there were blots in the management of the force, to which he wished to draw the attention of the Home Secretary. Among those blots was their conduct in reference to the charge made before Mr. Knox, as to three young clerks of the National Bank. Those young men, after balancing their books on the balancing night of the bank, partook of a light supper, and proceeded, perfectly sober, from the bank towards home, when an altercation ensued between them and the police, and they were taken into custody. The police endeavoured to make out that the young men were in a state of intoxication at the time; but the evidence of their superiors at the bank went entirely to exonerate them from any such imputation; and in his judgment, Mr. Knox treated it as incredible that they had been drunk or had used the bad language attributed to them. He (Mr. Eykyn) feeling that there might be more doubt in the case than was to be gathered from the statement in the newspapers, went into the neighbourhood; and, though the police in most cases exercised their duties with great discretion and forbearance, still he found them using extremely bad language to the unfortunate creatures who were walking in the neighbourhood. It was true that at present we placed implicit reliance upon the police; but if these combinations of policemen took place, and brought about such results as in this case, he should soon lose confidence in them. So grave was the charge in this instance, that Mr. Knox declined to take on himself the responsibility of a public prosecutor, but he gave instructions that counsel should be retained by the Treasury on the part of the police. The defence of these three young men had entailed on them and their friends an expense of over £100; and as the prosecution had failed, and as the police were involved in the much more serious charge of perjury, he thought the Treasury were bound to see that the young men were put to no further expense. He knew from experience the way in which the police would sometimes act, for on leaving that House after a late division, in 1866, a policeman came up to him, when within a few yards of his own door, and told him that a dog which was his companion was a perfect pest to the neighbourhood, being in the habit of killing cats. He (Mr. Eykyn) said it was not so, and was proceeding on his way, when the policeman laid violent hands on his neck, causing him to suffer the sensation of being strangled, and led him across Grosvenor Square. He did not know what to do—whether to knock the man down or to call a cab; but at last, after talking to him, he gave the policeman a kick and sent him head first in the mud; and then, using his heels as well as possible, he ran home as fast as he could. He was told that, not long ago, one of Her Majesty's Judges suffered almost the same indignity as himself, when on duty as a Judge of Assize. If such things were done to a Judge and a Member of that House, it was natural to suppose that the lower orders must be treated still worse by the police. There was a growing want of cordiality between the public and the police, owing to acts of that kind; and he hoped the Home Secretary would take steps to relieve the anxiety existing on the subject. Some more Governmental notice ought to be taken of the particular case to which he had referred; the three young clerks ought not to be called on to pay any further expense in the matter, and the affair ought to be sifted to the bottom. The hon. Member then moved for the production of any correspondence that had passed between the police authorities and the Home Office in regard to the case in question.

Mr. CRAUFURD, in seconding the Motion, expressed a hope that a more satisfactory reply would be given by the Government than that which they gave a few days since to the Question of the hon. Member for Southwark (Mr. Locke) on the subject. He agreed with his hon. Friend (Mr. Eykyn) that the general conduct of the police was good; but he could quote instances that came under his own knowledge, in which the police exercised their power in an offensive and even oppressive manner. One evening a friend of his, who was about to leave this country for a foreign appointment, came out of the theatre when a cab "touter" pressed him to let him get a cab for him. His friend begged the man to go away, and a policeman coming up and seeing the gentleman being annoyed, instead of gently removing the man, gave him a slap in the face, struck him with his fist on the head, and knocked him down. The gentleman remonstrated, and said that the policeman ought not to have knocked the man down, as he was not committing a breach of the law, whereupon the policeman told the gentleman that if he did not move on and refrain from interfering with him in the execution of his duty, he would take him into custody. His friend having to go abroad very soon, and not wishing to figure at the police courts, preferred to walk on. If that could happen to a well-known gentleman they could easily tell how poor men would be knocked about and oppressed by the police. The case of the three young clerks which had been brought under the notice of the House ought not to be allowed to rest without inquiry. It ought to be taken up as a public matter. In the evidence brought before Mr. Knox it was distinctly shown that the policemen must have perjured themselves, and, therefore, this was a case, if ever there was one, in which the Home Secretary should prosecute. It was very hard if, after having spent upwards of £100 in defending themselves, and having gone out of court with a character perfectly established, they were to be told by the Home Secretary that the policemen were men of the highest character in the force, and that if the young men felt themselves hurt they must prosecute at their own expense. But if the young men were to undertake a prosecution it would be said that the action was a vindictive one. He hoped, therefore, the Home Secretary would give an assurance to the House that an inquiry should be made, and thus afford protection to all those who were not in a position of life to protect themselves.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, that She will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House, Papers relating to the Charge made by the Police against three young men on the night of the 30th June last, and tried before Mr. Knox, the Police Magistrate at Marlborough Street."—(Mr. Eykyn.)

MR. BRUCE said, he was not able to accede to the Motion of his hon. Friend, inasmuch as there existed no correspondence whatever upon the subject. The hon. Member was perfectly right in bringing under the notice of the House any case in which he thought the police had been guilty of improper conduct. He (Mr. Bruce) was not there to defend the police, but was simply there to listen to statements regarding them, and see that justice was done. What, in this case, he was asked to do, however, was to undertake, on behalf of the Government, the prosecution of a number of men of whose guilt, after a careful examination of the case, he entertained the greatest doubt. His hon. Friend had himself looked at the Papers in connection with the case, and had read the result of the inquiries made by the Chief Commissioner of Police; and he would ask him, having done so, whether he felt satisfied that the story was so clear as it had been generally assumed to be. He had carefully looked into the question himself, and he felt bound to say that there existed in his mind very grave doubts as to whether the imputations cast upon the policemen were well founded. Under these circumstances he was asked to bring the authority of the Government to bear on those men, and to institute a prosecution for perjury against them. The whole case of the young men was open to very grave suspicion. In going home to Pimlico or Putney they found it necessary to go to the top of the Haymarket in search for a cab, though it appeared there were cabs in the lower part of the Haymarket. The case of the police was confirmed by a statement which he had heard from an inspector, who was one of the most trusted men of the force. This inspector stated that in passing by this portion of the street he saw a considerable disturbance, but he did not observe the young men nor anybody in particular. He spoke to the crowd and told them to go away, and then went on the duty in which he was engaged of visiting some night houses. As the disturbance continued, he turned back, and saw at a distance the very thing which the police swore to—namely, the umbrellas of these young men raised over their heads. That was the statement of a man long in the force, which those who knew him did not doubt. Since the case has been tried before the police magistrate a good deal of additional evidence had been obtained, and under the circumstances he declined — and he thought himself justified in declining — to throw the weight of the Government against these men by undertaking their prosecution. The remedy was a simple and easy one. Those gentlemen were not called upon to bring an indictment for perjury against the police. All they had to do was to summon one or other of them for an assault; the witnesses were all known, the cost would be next to nothing, and if they were successful the expense would be thrown on the police. In that way the matter could be judicially decided, and it would be far better than to have recourse to an exceptional proceeding. The hon. Member had spoken of the employment of counsel in the case on behalf of the prosecution. When the police commenced proceedings, they proposed to do so without professional assistance, by merely tendering their evidence; but as the accused had a barrister of eminence to defend them, Mr. Knox, from a feeling of fair-play, recommended the police to apply for counsel to conduct the prosecution, and it was only on his recommendation that counsel was employed. He admitted that the observations of Mr. Knox were very strong; but they had been carefully considered, and the result of the examination by the Chief Commissioner of Police had led him to entertain grave doubt whether most unwittingly a great injustice had not been done to the police. Under these circumstances he did not think himself justified in undertaking to prosecute them.

MR. KINNAIRD said, he regretted the answer which had been given by the Secretary of State for the Home Department. He could assure the right hon. Gentleman that there was an immense sympathy on behalf of these young men. It was wrong, in his estimation, to refuse the inquiry which was now demanded. A case in which the police were to blame had come within his own knowledge. A gentleman, who was a foreigner, happened to be passing through a turnpike, and did not know that he had to pay anything. His horse was seized, and, upon his making an effort to proceed, he was dragged off his horse and was taken to the station. He (Mr. Kinnaird) went to Sir Richard Mayne on behalf of the foreigner, and had a gentleman to produce as witness who saw the whole transaction from his parlour window; but his experience was that no person had any chance against the police, and it was perfectly useless to proceed against them. The gentleman who had been thus ill-treated was well known at Geneva and in Switzerland, but would not prosecute because he did not wish to have his name spoken of. He had found that every policeman swore that every other was right; and if the Home Secretary would not use his influence to protect individuals proved to be innocent, there would be a lack of justice in this country.

Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY said, he had heard the answer of the Home Secretary with great regret. He had no stories to tell against the police, and was not likely to be accused of being ready to join in any cry against them. He had always been in the habit of placing great confidence in them, and had invariably encouraged others to do the same. He feared, however, that if no inquiry took place into this case he would not be so successful for the future as he had been in the past. What were the facts? The case referred to had been investigated before a most intelligent police magistrate. Witnesses were heard on both sides, and after a full and complete inquiry the magistrate decided clearly that the story told against these young men was false, who accordingly quitted the bar without any stain upon them. The real decision which the magistrate came to was not merely that the young men were innocent, but that the police were guilty. He did not profess to form any opinion upon the matter; but he said that the matter ought not to be allowed to rest where it was. Public confidence in the police would be weakened if the matter were not investigated. It seemed to him, therefore, to be very important that the matter should be sifted to the bottom. Government could easily direct proceedings to be taken, which could leave no doubt as to which party was really to blame. It would be a great neglect of duty if the question were allowed to rest, and if those young men, who had been pronounced innocent, were to be put to all the expense and trouble of a fresh prosecution. Who were the parties interested in the matter? Not the young men, for they had been pronounced to be innocent. Their characters were cleared, and they had no interest in the question, except as part of the general public. And who were to represent the general public? Assuredly it must be the Government. They were the parties who were interested in having this case decided. There was one other party still more interested, and that was the police. It was for the sake of the police—for the sake of the character of the police, and for the sake of the public confidence in the police, that it was absolutely essential that some further inquiry should take place.

Mr. EYKYN said, he was still utterly at a loss to account for the refusal of the Government further to inquire into the subject. Mr. Knox had declared himself unable to believe the evidence of the police; but no doubt ulterior proceedings would be taken, and expressed the opinion that the young men had been much wronged. He, therefore, again urged the Government to inquire further into the subject.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL observed that the hon. Member for Windsor (Mr. Eykyn) had not answered the challenge thrown out by the Home Secretary, when he asked him to state the impression left upon his mind on reading the Papers which had led the Home Secretary to the conclusion he had come to. The hon. Member had seen those Papers, and it was due to the House that he should state candidly whether that perusal of those Papers had or had not induced him to change his original opinion on the subject. And he would entreat the House to consider what the Home Secretary was asked to do. He was asked to bring the whole power of the Government against certain policemen—a measure which it would be excessively disagreeable for a Minister to take, unless he was satisfied in his own mind that those whom he prosecuted were substantially in the wrong. He (the Solicitor General) had not gone into the matter sufficiently to form a decided opinion on the case; but he was by no means satisfied that the policemen were in the wrong, or that the clerks were as much in the right as Mr. Knox had decided. His opinion, however, was beside the question, because his right hon. Friend had to act upon the conviction the information at his command obliged him to come to. That might or might not be a satisfactory state of things; but it was the necessary consequences of the present state of our criminal law and its administration. Guided by the ordinary rule, the matter must be decided by the opinion of the Home Secretary, and the Home Secretary was often applauded for reversing the judgment of a jury or a Judge when it happened to assume the shape of a conviction; why should he not be left to decide in a case because it happened to result in an acquittal, and say in such a case that the court was wrong? His right hon. Friend said he had looked into the case, and was satisfied from information laid before him that this was not a case in which he should instruct a prosecution of these policemen? Did the House think it would be wise for a Home Secretary to prosecute in a case in which he was not himself satisfied that the persons charged deserved conviction? Would such a course inspire confidence among the police? The House was bound to trust in the character of the Minister, and it would much surprise him if the House obliged the Home Secretary to proceed in this case after the statement he had made.

MR. JESSEL said, he very much lamented that the Home Secretary did not think it incumbent upon him to institute a prosecution in this case. On the one hand, they had a public investigation before a magistrate of high character and authorized judicial reputation, who had given judgment after having heard evidence in public from witnesses submitted to the severest test of cross-examination. On the other hand, they had that decision impugned—he did not say wrongly impugned—and virtually upset by a private investigation in a room withont the assistance of counsel or the test of cross-examination, and without the check of publicity. That was not a satisfactory feature in the crimin al jurisdiction of this country, and was only another reason for the appointment of a public prosecutor. In countries having a public prosecutor such a state of things as that before the House could not occur, because the public prosecutor would interfere as a matter of course. They would hear nothing about bringing the whole force of the Government against the accused, because it would then be the ordinary duty of the Government to institute a judicial inquiry against its officers, whether policemen or not, who, in the opinion of a competent magistrate, were guilty of misconduct. At the same time, he could not help agreeing with the right hon. Gentleman when he said that, in this case, having arrived at a conclusion favourable to the police he would not lend the weight of the Government against the accused, and that he did not feel justified in taking so extreme a course when he was not satisfied that the probable result would be a conviction. It was said that the young men referred to might move in the matter, but no one appealed against a decision in his favour. They were satisfied, and it was not their business to institute an inquiry into the conduct of the police. If he were a friend of theirs he would feel very much for them on account of what had fallen from the Home Secretary; because if the policemen had not committed perjury some one else had, and the case, if it had rested with this debate, would have ended with a slur upon the characters of those young men, from which they could not have been freed but by incurring heavy expense. He lamented a state of the law which permitted such occurrences as this, and trusted the Home Secretary would not allow another Session to pass without introducing a measure to amend it.

MR. R. N. FOWLER remarked upon the very probable circumstance of these young men having been detained late at night on the 30th of June, seeing that upon that day it was customary for bankers to balance their books for the half-year. As a banker he could say it was a natural thing that these young men should be going home late at night at that period of the year; one cabstand might be empty, and they might have to go to another; and in that case nothing was more natural than that they should find their way to the Haymarket in search of a cab. It seemed to be thought that it was some imputation on their character that they should be there at that time of night; but it seemed to him, as a practical man, that nothing was more natural. What he was most anxious to do was to vindicate the character of gentlemen in the same business as himself, to show that they might legitimately be at the Haymarket at that time of night, and that the fact was no imputation upon their character.

Mr. GOLDNEY said, he thought that what had been said almost resolved itself into a charge against the Home Secretary. The right hon. Gentleman had made considerable inquiry, and he found nothing which induced him to prosecute the police; but he did not cast any slur upon the young men, whom he left exonerated from blame by the decision of the magistrate. He had found that further investigation might possibly tend to relieve the police from the slur cast upon them; but he did not wish to push the matter any further, and he did not think it was the duty of the Government to take any steps in the matter. Was the House to call the Home Secretary to account under such circumstances? They ought to remember that this great metropolis was in the charge of the metropolitan police, and that the Home Secretary was responsible for their conduct; and it would be exceedingly dangerous if the House were, on every slight occasion, to interfere with him in the discharge of his duties, or to insist on his prosecution of every policeman who might be censured by a magistrate.

Mr. T. CHAMBERS said, it did not appear to him that the decision of the magistrate would necessitate any action on the part of the Government. Mr. Knox stated that it was an extraordinary case of conflicting evidence, which he spent many days and nights in considering, and he came to the conclusion that he ought not to send the young men to trial, but that he ought to dismiss the charge against them. What was the process by which he arrived at that conclusion? He asked whether it was probable that three young men holding responsible offices in a bank should misconduct themselves so soon after leaving it? but à priori argument was worth very little in such a case, which must depend upon the credit due to evidence. Mr. Knox proceeded to remark that it was natural there should be confusion in the Haymarket at the hour when the nighthouses were being cleared, and that in the confusion the wrong person might have been taken into custody; so it did not at all follow, because he thought it right to dismiss the charge, that the police were perjured. The magistrate did not say he arrived at the conclusion that the police were perjured; he only said he believed their statements "improbable." The whole story was an improbable one. Commenting on the manner in which a policeman gave his evidence, did the magistrate deduce perjury? He only said that it "jarred vehemently with his opinion of what was fitting." The decision acquitted the young men, but left open the questions involved, and it did not justify anyone in imputing perjury to the police. The language used by the magistrate showed that, while he discharged the young men without any stain upon their character, he studiously avoided imputing perjury to the police; if he had intended to do so he would have used much stronger language. After subsequent investigation the Home Secretary did not see reason to interfere, and there was nothing extraordinary in that conclusion.

Lord ELCHO said, the Home Secretary appealed to the hon. Member for Windsor, asking him whether the Papers he had read had not changed his views, and to that appeal no response had been made. He should like to hear a reply from the hon. Member.

Mr. EYKYN said, he had read the Papers, and it was the perusal of them which induced him to word his Motion as he had done, in the hope that they might be laid on the table, and hon. Members derive their own impressions from them.

Mr. BRUCE said, the Papers could not be produced without doing the grossest injustice to the young men whose characters were at stake. They contained the statements of a number of witnesses, many of whom were not called before the magistrates. The witnesses mentioned circumstances corroborating the statements of the police, and to publish the Papers alone would be unjust.

Mr. W. M. TORRENS said, that an extra-judicial decision of the Home Secretary had over-ridden that of Mr. Knox.

Mr. BRUCE said, he had given no decision, and he had not set aside that of the magistrate.

Mr. W. M. TORRENS said, he thought the remark made by the Home Secretary that, looking at the papers before him, he had great reason to doubt the accuracy of the magistrate's decision, amounted virtually to setting aside that decision; and he held that the Home Secretary was bound either to act upon that opinion, or to give the House an opportunity of considering the grounds upon which it was formed.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) (re-committed) BILL—[Bill 215.] [Lords.] COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 24 (Act not to affect certain bequests).

Mr. ELLICE said, he wished to make a few observations on this subject, and, in order to put himself in Order, he would conclude by moving that the Chairman leave the Chair. The very sudden metamorphosis that had taken place on the Bill last night had placed him and many other Members of the House in the position that they really had not time to consider the course they should take with regard to the small remainder left of the original Bill, which was called, and was now miscalled, the Parochial Schools Bill. It was, therefore, perfectly fair, in the circumstances, that he should take that opportunity, once for all, of expressing his opinion upon the Bill as it now stood, and stating the course which he would take. This question of education had been for many years occupying the thoughts and attention of the people of Scotland. There had been the greatest possible anxiety to have a complete and perfect measure of education, which would not only overtake all that class of the population that had been stated by competent authority to be without the necessary means of education, but which would also improve and strengthen the existing parochial system of Scotland. The points upon which it appeared to him that the minds of the people of Scotland were set were these—that the parochial system should be liberalized, and that in any extension of it they should, as far as possible, get rid of its sectarian character. The Bill, as first introduced by the right hon. and learned Lord Advocate, went far to satisfy the reasonable desires of the people of Scotland, and he had hoped to give it support upon all its material points. Minor amendments were desirable, but upon the main points the Bill was satisfactory, and he had a strong hope that they would be able to pass it into law. The Bill, after it was introduced into the House of Lords, was largely amended on many important points. They were points to which, no doubt, objections would have been taken here; but at the same time it was a Bill which was open to discussion and improvement, and it might possibly, with one indispensable alteration with respect to the denominational principle, have been passed in despair of getting a better. But since the Bill came from the House of Lords into that House it had been wholly and entirely altered. Two-thirds of the Bill were excluded from it last night, by knocking out the whole parochial system. The title of the Bill could no longer be called the Parochial Schools (Scotland) Bill—it ought rather to be entitled a Bill for encouraging a new system of sectarian schools in Scotland. What was the effect of knocking the parochial schools out of the Bill? It left those schools under the restricted and limited management which had been so long complained of. It was all very well to say that the Government had agreed to extend the qualification of heritors, by reducing it to all heritors who held under the old valuation roll, and who were liable to assessment for the maintenance of the parochial schools. The answer to that was, that the heritors were not the only parties interested in the question. It was those people whose children were educated at these schools who were most interested in the matter, and the complaint had always been that those who had the greatest interest in having the schools properly maintained and properly conducted had no share whatever in the management. What had been done, therefore, by shutting the parochial schools out of the Bill, was to leave the whole system under the old restricted form of being managed exclusively by the heritors and the minister of the parish, without any reference to the great bulk of the parents and guardians of the children who were educated in the schools. The management remained the same; the clerical element remained the same. He could not conceive that anything could possibly give greater dissatisfaction than a Bill which left a state of things which it was the greatest object of a reform in the educational system to remove. What was done by the Bill with regard to denominational education? The measure, as originally introduced, did away in some measure with the denominational system of education. It liberalized the parochial schools, and enacted that the new schools should be national schools. In what manner had the Bill been altered? It had been altered so as to allow of the continuance of a system under which denominational grants might be made. If the Bill passed in its present shape, the denominational system, which it had been one of their great objects to get rid of, in order to prepare the way for a system of compulsory education in Scotland, would be strengthened. With regard to the Central Board, he had no objection to it as it was now proposed to be constituted. He thought it far preferable to the constitution of the Board originally proposed, and he did not believe that it would be possible to invent a much better constituted central authority. He entirely differed from his hon. Friends who desired to see that central authority brought to London. He thought that in Scotland they were perfectly capable of managing their own affairs. They had always been able to manage their own affairs well, and he did not see why any fear should be entertained that they would not be able to do so for the future. But he wanted to know what the proposed Board under the Bill as it now stood would have to do. Under the old Bill the Board proposed was not too large. Three members were nominated with large salaries to do a great duty; but by striking the parochial schools out of the Bill, they had entirely removed them from under the control of the Central Board, whose duties had been reduced to something like one-third of what they would have been under the original Bill. He asked, then, whether they were going to maintain this Board upon precisely the same footing as if it had—as it was intended it should have—control over the whole educational system of Scotland? He thought he misunderstood the learned Lord the other night when he stated that the meetings of the Board were to be open to the public; and he must say now that the more he considered this matter, the more fatal he thought it was to the transaction of any business. Would they think of proposing that the Committee of Education in London should transact all their business in public? He thought that in any Bill they must place some restriction on the operation of the clause which was passed last night, and which enacted that all the ordinary meetings of this Board should be in public. He thought that on every ground the Bill ought to be postponed. He could not conceive that, even if the Bill were in a reasonable shape, and not in the confused and shattered form in which it was now before them, it would be fair to ask them at the eleventh hour to proceed with it. Thursday now was taken up, and if this Bill was to be proceeded with at all it must be proceeded with that very morning. He thought the discussion which had taken place on the Bill this year would have cleared the way very much for future legislation, and that any delay which might be suffered now would be fully compensated for by being enabled next year to consider a mature and thoroughly satisfactory measure, which should be based upon the principle of liberalizing the present management of our parochial schools, and, as far as possible, getting rid of the denominational character in their educational system. He would only add that, if the Bill was persevered in, the Government would take that course on their own responsibility. He entirely washed his hands of having anything whatever to do with it. He had no hesitation in saying that, if the Bill were to pass in its present shape, it would not be at all satisfactory to the people of Scotland, and he for one threw the whole responsibility of it upon the Government.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Chairman do now leave the Chair."—(Mr. Ellice.)

Sir EDWARD COLEBROOKE also urged the Government to postpone legislation on the subject till next Session. He felt it was impossible to legislate effectually at this late period of the Session, and no Member of Her Majesty's Government could foresee what course the House of Lords might take with regard to the Bill. In point of fact, the Government was in such a position that they were obliged to yield this way or that. He would not anticipate what course the other House might adopt, but it was unreasonable to suppose that they would accept it at once; and the result would probably be that the House of Commons, during the very last hours of the Session, would be called upon to decide a most important question, affecting not only Scotland, but the whole Empire—because the measure involved principles which, if carried for Scotland, must almost of necessity be subsequently applied to the whole kingdom. On the whole, he thought the Government would act most prudently if they postponed legislation on this difficult subject until next Session.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, the time had now arrived when they should have some explicit declaration from the Government as to their real intentions with regard to the Bill. It was clear from the speeches just addressed to the Committee that the Bill could not pass into law this Session. Last night he had stated that the measure had passed through four phases; but the Committee were now actually about to consider a fifth edition of it, as he understood the right hon. Gentleman intended to accept in bulk the Amendments of which notice had been given. He might take this opportunity of remarking that there was a practice very much in vogue just at present with respect to Scotch legislation, and one which, if extended, might be productive of great inconvenience. It was what the Americans called the "Caucus" system. He admitted that, in regard to questions on which the great majority of Members had not the opportunity of informing themselves, legislation might be advantageously expedited by the Members specially acquainted with those questions meeting together and agreeing upon a combined course of action. But, in his judgment, the practice ought not to be extended to important public questions, which might serve as precedents for the whole of the United Kingdom. He had reason to believe that the attitude assumed by Her Majesty's Government on the various occasions when the Scotch Members had this subject under consideration in another part of that House underwent a considerable change. There would, he trusted, be no more of these attempts to expedite legislation. In conclusion, he expressed a hope that the right hon. and learned Gentleman would not allow this measure to occupy any longer the time of the Committee, as it was evident that it could have no practical effect.

MR. W. E. FORSTER did not think this was a question that could be considered as a party question by Members on either side of the House; and he hoped both Liberals and Conservatives would look at it merely with regard to education. He should not endeavour to anticipate the decision of the Committee as to whether the Bill should be proceeded with or not. That must depend on the feelings of the Committee; but especially on the feelings of that portion of the Committee comprising the Scotch Members. But if it was the feeling of the Scotch Members that this most important Bill should be proceeded with at this time, Her Majesty's Government were prepared to proceed with it, whatever inconvenience they might suffer. It was, however, essential that they should proceed upon a correct state of facts. No one would say that his hon. Friend the hon. Member for St. Andrew's (Mr. Ellice) had not given a clear statement in regard to the facts. But it was his (Mr. Forster's) business to look into the figures, and he could not help thinking that his hon. Friend had very much overrated the importance of parochial schools in this whole matter of school education. The parochial schools in the eyes of Scotland were naturally most important; because they were the representatives of the old system which gave the country education, but which no longer gave it. Therefore, he was not surprised that it occupied a most important place in the minds of the Scotch Members. But what were the facts of the case? There were 312,000 scholars on the rolls of schools, and there were 510,000 children that ought to be at school, and there were 418,000 who were at some sort of school. Well, how many were at the parochial schools, after giving them the side schools and the Parliamentary schools? There were 88,000 children at the parochial schools. His hon. Friend (Mr. Ellice) said that what affected the parochial schools affected the education of Scotland. But the parochial schools only affected less than a quarter that of those who were on the rolls. Besides, it only affected the mode in which these schools were made over. The Bill still remained a Bill that would give a complete education to all the children in Scotland, and would restore that state of things of which Scotland was in former days so proud, and would make the professions of Scotland accord with the actual facts. Scotland professed to have a national system, but she had it not. This Bill would give it; and this great feature of the Bill had not been altered by any change that the Bill had undergone. If the Scotch Members were still of opinion that the Bill should be given up, then, he thought, the Government and the Committee would feel bound to yield. But if they wished, notwithstanding the late period of the Session, to take the opportunity of this year to secure that there should be a national system for Scotland, all the Members that care for education will suffer any inconvenience to enable the Bill to pass.

Dr. LYON PLAYFAIR: Sir, if we are to abandon this Bill, as proposed by my hon. Friend the Member for St. Andrews, we must have better reasons than those given by him. He argues that the national schools are removed from the educational system. This is a mistake. They will be under inspection, and will be as efficient and unsectarian as they have always been. All that will happen is that the £48,000 per annum now devoted to education will be continued to it, and that a liberalized management will be extended to them. The denominational compromises in this Bill have created keen opposition in the minds of many Liberal Members, who view it as a sort of contradiction to the effort for nationalizing our schools. The Bill, no doubt, abounds in compromises to the Churches and to their schools, and naturally disappoints the expectations of those who hoped to see Scotland adopt a truly national system, in which the ground should be open and common to the children of all classes and all religions. I find this feeling so prevalent among English educationalists in this House, that if you will bear with me for a few minutes, I should like to explain to them the object and nature of these compromises. They must remember that the Bill does not deal with a new country, but with one whose educational history begins in the first half of the 12th century. Her educational traditions, though progressive, are blended by time into the characteristics and habits of the people. Without dwelling on details, let me remark that there are three notable periods in Scottish education. The first period was purely ecclesiastical, and began as early as the reign of David I., continuing even a century after the Reformation. During this period the Church did everything and the State nothing for the education of the people. The second period of Scotch education began in 1646, when a short-lived Act of Parliament founded the present parochial school system, and was followed by the great Act of 1696. This national period lasted till 1843. Though it was essentially national, the schools being supported by a tax upon land and managed by lay heritors, still the Church continued its visitations through the Presbyteries. The minister of the parish also, by custom if not by right, took an active part in superintending the parochial school. Finally comes the third or denominational period of education, beginning with the disruption of the Church in 1843, and continuing to the present time. The Free Church has, during this quarter of a century, made immense efforts in the cause of education. In all three periods — the ecclesiastical, national, and denominational —there has been a strong Church influence bearing upon and pervading the education of the Scottish people. When the Royal Commissioners found this to be the case, could we have expected such a body of men, versed as they were in public affairs, to have framed a scheme of education from which all consideration for the religious bodies of the country had been carefully eliminated? Such a scheme might indeed have been prepared, more logical and coherent than that in the present Bill, but it would have been totally unfitted to receive support from the various interests represented in Parliament. The most satisfactory feature of all the periods to which I have referred is that the national character of the people has dominated them all, and modified the ecclesiastical pretensions of the Churches. On this account, the denominational peculiarities of schools in Scotland have never become marked, not because the Churches did not encourage them but because the people took possession of the schools in their determination to use them for their primary educational purpose, and not with a view to their secondary object, of upholding the influence and powers of the Churches. So markedly has this been the case, that the Church of Scotland schools contain 40 per cent of Dissenting children, and the Free Church schools 39½ per cent of those of other denominations. Hence, though there has been denominational management, there has been no sectarian teaching in any of them. The freest conscience right prevails by custom in all of them—so much so, that upwards of 7,300 Roman Catholics and 2,600 Episcopalians enjoy their toleration. All this proves beyond doubt that Scotland is ripe for a national system of education, and the Bill skillfully provides for this in a way that does violence to none of the many interests affected by it. There was a necessity to reconcile these interests, for their power is nearly balanced. The old national schools, including in these the side and Parliamentary schools, notwithstanding their excellent service to the nation, educate only 28 per cent of the school children, while schools actually supported by grants from the different Churches have 31 per cent; and schools which are either undenominational or connected only by friendly alliance with the different Churches educate the remainder, or 41 per cent. A compromise between such little preponderating claims was absolutely indispensable. You could not pick out denominationalism, the growth of a quarter of a century, and prefer it to the national system, which had the traditions of 250 years in its favour, simply because the former had 3 per cent more of scholars; neither could you ignore the existence of the undenominational and allied schools, which had aided so largely the deficiencies of the national system. Hence have arisen the adopted schools of the Bill, with the facilities for absorbing them into the national system, when they desire absorption. But let me remind those who, like myself, are anxious for a more thorough national system, what a large concession the Churches in Scotland have made to promote it. They have accepted without resistance, and in a spirit of perfect conciliation, the scheme of undenominational inspection. This is an immense gain to the nation, both as regards economy and efficiency, and gives an example to the Churches of England, which I hope the Vice President of the Council will bear in mind in his Education Bill of next Session. So far as one vote can influence the result, I, for one, shall not be responsible for the rejection of this Bill. Out of a population little exceeding 3,000,000, 92,000 children are growing up without any education, and a greater number with a very indifferent one. This Bill gives to us organization, efficient undenominational inspection, and a graduated scheme of adoption, which must before long end in a thorough national system. But above all, it gives us means, by local rates and Imperial subsidies, which will enable us to offer education to every child in Scotland. With this in our view, and almost within our grasp, it would be a heavy responsibility for any man to sacrifice the education of a people.

MR. KINNAIRD hoped the Government would persevere with the Bill, and throw upon those Scotch Members who were opposed to it the responsibility of stopping it. If they allowed this opportunity to pass, they would not have a similar opportunity next Session, because the English Education Bill and the Irish Land question would absorb the whole time of Parliament. They had now devoted night after night to this measure; and if they were now to give it up, let the whole responsibility rest upon those Members who had opposed their proceeding with it.

SIR GRAHAM MONTGOMERY said, that as the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council on Education had invited the Scotch Members to express their opinion on this subject, he had no hesitation in saying that, in his opinion, they ought not to proceed further with the Bill this Session. His reason for doing so was that the course which the Government had taken with regard to the parish schools was one of which they had great reason to complain. Originally it was arranged to leave the management of the parish schools as they were, in accordance with the recommendations of the Royal Commission. That was the position of matters when the Bill came into this House. Now it was totally altered, and they were told that the management was to be changed and handed over to different parties altogether. Another objection was the introduction of the provision making the proceedings of the Board public. Further, he thought it a very bad precedent that a Bill of this importance should be discussed in the dying and expiring days of the Session. It did not seem to him that there was any great haste in this matter. They had had many Education Bills before, and he did not think that they would be doing their duty to their constituents if they proceeded to pass rapidly a Bill of this description. This Bill would have paved the way for a settlement of this question in a future Session; and he appealed earnestly to Her Majesty's Government whether it would not be consistent with their duty to withdraw this Bill and bring it in at an early period next Session.

Mr. M'LAREN said, he thought the Government were getting a very hard measure of justice. When the Bill was before the Committee on Tuesday last, the Government refused to make any concessions in regard to opening up the management of the parish schools. On that occasion a vote was taken, and the unexampled fact was manifested that thirty-three Scotch Members voted against the Government and in favour of opening up the parish schools. The Government thereon resolved to retrace their steps and to open up the management of the parish schools; and, having done that, the two hon. Members who had made the most vigorous speeches against the Government came forward and found fault with this very thing, and urged it as a reason for not going on with the Bill. He entreated the Committee to go on with the Bill, for when it was carried through he was sure they would receive the gratitude of a large proportion of the people of Scotland.

Major WALKER said, the measure as it now stood was an entirely new one, and he declined to enter into its merits when there was not time to deliberate upon them. He also repudiated most emphatically the insinuation that those who opposed the progress of the Bill would be morally responsible for the non-education of some 90,000 children in Scotland. He wished that Gentlemen who said so had taken the subject more to heart at an earlier period of the Session; if they had, there would have been a good chance of carrying a measure of Scotch Education successfully through Parliament this Session.

The Marquess of LORNE said, the hon. and gallant Member for Dumfriesshire (Major Walker) had stated that this was entirely a novel measure; but he was puzzled to understand which part of the Bill the hon. and gallant Gentleman considered the most important. For his own part, he thought the importance of the Bill lay in this—that it was an endowment Bill for the education of Scotland. If it were not an endowment Bill for this purpose, it was nothing; and regarding the measure as one of national importance, he hoped the Government would press it forward.

Mr. SINCLAIR AYTOUN said, that if the Motion that the Chairman do leave the Chair were pressed he should vote for it, as it would be impossible that any good could be done under the circumstances. Whether a denominational Bill were better or worse than an undenominational Bill he would not stop to discuss; but he thought it impossible to have a more denominational Bill than the present.

Mr. GRAHAM urged the Government to persevere with the Bill. He did so on behalf of his own constituents, among whom there were 25,000 children in the neglected condition described, of whom 3,000 would be dead before another Session. Now, this Bill gave an opportunity of obtaining additional schools, and he thought that whatever objections hon. Members might have to some of the minor features of the Bill, they would in the main be found to assent to the principal project, which was that of providing the new schools which were so much required.

Mr. COLLINS said, that whether this Bill were or were not intended to promote denominational schools, the subject was so vast, indirectly affecting, as it did, both England and Ireland, that it would be utterly impossible on the 4th of August, at ten minutes past one in the morning, to discuss it. They would probably have one division, and then the Government would say that they very much regretted the divided state of opinion of the Scotch Members on the subject, and therefore felt compelled to abandon the Bill.

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, that the question of whether they were to go on with the Bill or not depended very much on what they really wished to do. There were two things which the Bill professed to do, but they were two things of very different relative importance. The one was to provide the means of education for those who were now uneducated, and the other was to improve the existing means of education. The first was certainly the matter of most importance; and, if it were not for that, he doubted whether it would have been worth while to have spent all the time they had already devoted to legislating upon this question at all. The existing means of education in Scotland might not be the very best, but the main reason why this Bill was required was that there were, as had been stated by the hon. Member for Glasgow, a large number of children who from year to year are without education. The question, therefore, was, whether it was not a duty to provide the education which was required, and whether or not they should perform this duty now. As regarded this portion of the Bill, there was no real difference of opinion in the House. With regard to the question of central management, all were agreed upon that point. They were also agreed that the Board should ascertain what schools were required; that they should make, as it were, a map of the educational destitution of the country, and that having done that they should provide the means for alleviating that destitution. He utterly denied that this was in any respect a denominational Bill in any sense of the word. He knew indeed he had many antagonists to contend against, but the most formidable was the period of the Session. The Government had done their best to struggle against that enemy, and he now appealed to the House to assist them.

MR. ORR EWING said, that there were so many good points in the Bill that he would rather see it carried than not. But he rose principally for the purpose of correcting the exaggerated statement which had been made as to the deficiency of education in Scotland, especially in his own native city of Glasgow. The Commissioners who reported that there was this vast number of 60,000 children going about without education, and that the school accommodation was deficient to the extent of 23,000, came to that conclusion upon the estimate of the number of children between three years and fifteen years who were not at school. But was that a fair basis for calculation to go upon? Where was it the practice to send a child of three years of age to school? Six years was the earliest period at which a child ought to go to school. Therefore he said that the datum upon which the calculation was made was perfectly erroneous, and he had not the slightest hesitation in saying that instead of 60,000 children being without education in Glasgow at that moment, there was not one-third of that number.

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, that if the hon. Gentleman would refer to page 174 of the Report, he would find that the estimate was made of children not between three and fifteen, but between four and thirteen years of age.

MR. MACFIE contended that the Bill was denominational in character; but, if the Government would leave out the second part of Clause 66, with a view to that section being brought up in the measure for dealing with parish schools, he would support it.

MR. GOLDNEY asked whether there was any reasonable chance of the Bill passing this Session, when there were no less than 258 notices of Amendment to it upon the Paper.

MR. CRAUFURD said, his opinion was very well known already. He was ready to share with others the responsibility of urging upon the Government to withdraw this Bill; and he did so on the ground that he did not think the Bill would do any of the good pointed out by the Vice President of the Council of Education and the learned Lord Advocate. It had been said that the new schools which were to be planted will not be denominational; but no proof of that had been shown, and he ventured to deny the correctness of that statement. Was there not a clause in the Bill enabling denominational schools to be planted in those places where the Board may deem it proper that they should be be established? Was that an undenominational system? Then they were appealed to to let the Bill proceed, on the ground of the number of children who were without any education at all; and the hon. Member for Glasgow had informed them that the want of education had led to the starvation of 3,000 children.

Mr. GRAHAM said, that what he said was that 3,000 children in Glasgow wanted the bread of intellectual life. He protested against his expressions being thus misrepresented.

Mr. CRAUFURD said, hitherto he had always believed that people died of starvation for the want of bread, and not for the want of education. The changes which had been introduced into the Bill were such that it was utterly impossible to understand what its effect would be. He was satisfied that the people of Scotland were in utter ignorance of what they were doing. They believed that the Bill which they were now discussing was the same that came down from the House of Lords, and under all the circumstances he hoped the Government would not press the Bill.

Mr. C. S. PARKER said, that Her Majesty's Government had appealed to the Scotch Members to know whether or not they should go on with the Bill. He thought the majority of those who had spoken on his side of the House had urged upon them that they should go on with it. He begged to add his voice to theirs. He thought they would have much cause to complain if the Government should now fail to press the Bill forward.

Mr. GATHORNE HARDY said, he must refer the Government to the clock, which now pointed to half-past one, and remind the Committee of what had been done during the day, how long the House had sat, and that they would meet again at noon to consider a most important measure, the Habitual Criminals Bill. He trusted, therefore, the Government would not compel them to proceed with the discussion of this Bill in Committee. The Lord Advocate had referred to the large number of Amendments that were to be proposed; and he had heard so many different opinions expressed by Scotch Members that he was driven to the conclusion that there must be considerable discussion on every portion of this Bill. One hon. Gentleman pledged his support if half a clause were dropped; another laid stress on undenominational education, which he held to consist in a certain kind of school; another considered that this was not a denominational school—all these things showed that the Bill would give rise to numerous controversies; and was it reasonable of the Government to press the Bill, under these circumstances, when the time had arrived that hon. Members were entitled to know when Parliament would rise? The Bill had been discussed two or three nights, yet the Committee had reached only the 24th clause—and that in spite of meetings upstairs to arrange matters. On the Opposition side of the House there had been unusual silence, and no attempt to interfere with the progress of the Bill in an irregular manner. Influential Scotch Members on both sides of the House were dissatisfied with the Bill. They said it was in a state of confusion, and that the House could not deal with the question without a much longer discussion than there was now time for; there were on the Order Book a number of important Orders which must be disposed of; and he would, therefore, ask the Government whether they must not feel it was impossible to carry the Bill. They had made great efforts to pass the Bill; but, under present circumstances, they were only wasting time and energy in the attempt.

Mr. BRUCE admitted the great difficulties under which the Government laboured. At the same time they felt the very great importance of the Bill; they were quite uncertain as to what would be the fate of any measure to be introduced next Session; they felt that if there were any earnest, honest determination to pass the Bill it could be carried this Session; and as long as a sufficient number of Members would assist the Government they would press the Bill forward.

Question put,

The Committee divided: — Ayes 35; Noes 98: Majority 63.

Lord ELCHO moved that the Chairman report Progress. He said the question of Scotch education was a serious one, and there was a danger of it becoming ridiculous. It was desirable the curtain should fall before the question degenerated into a Parliamentary farce; and it became a farce when a Government, however strong, backed by a majority, however willing, at twenty minutes to two o'clock, endeavoured to force them to sit on, discussing a Bill on which there was the greatest diversity of opinion, to which there were 200 Amendments, and on which they had got only to the 24th of its 69 clauses. A broader and deeper principle than education was at stake, and that was the mode of conducting not only Scotch business, but all Public Business. He would not shirk responsibility; but if he stood alone he would resist such attempts to force important measures through Parliament by the mere influence of a strong Government. That was a principle he would resist.

Motion made, and Question put, "That the Chairman do report Progress, and ask leave to sit again."—(Lord Elcho.)

The Committee divided:—Ayes 24; Noes 102: Majority 78.

MR. KNIGHT moved that the Chairman do leave the Chair. It was not reasonable, the House having sat, with a short interval, since two o'clock yesterday, to call on hon. Members to continue the discussion of such an important question at so late an hour—especially as the House was to meet again at twelve o'clock this day.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, that the Home Secretary seemed about to treat the House after the fashion of "habitual criminals," by asking them to meet this morning again at twelve o'clock to consider that Bill as the first Order.

MR. BOUVERIE said, that it was clear Progress must now be reported—it was impossible that they could do anything at two o'clock in the morning—and the Government would do well to consider in the interval whether what the Lord Advocate had described as the greatest enemy to the Bill was not absolutely invincible. If they thought the Bill might yet pass he was prepared to stay in town to assist in passing it; but if, looking at all the circumstances of the case and the other business still to be got through, the Government made up their minds to withdraw the Bill, he should recognize the necessity under which they acted. Anything would be better than bandying accusations at that hour of the morning from one side to the other as to the responsibility of abandoning this measure.

Motion made, and Question put, "That the Chairman do now leave the Chair." —(Mr. Knight.)

The Committee divided:—Ayes 24; Noes 100: Majority 76.

MR. R. N. FOWLER said, it was now twenty minutes past two, and moved that the Chairman do report Progress.

MR. BRUCE said, it was of course impossible to resist reiterated Motions of this sort. He could assure the House that the reason the Government had been so anxious in pressing this Bill was that they really believed it in all its main principles acceptable to both sides. The Government would consider what course they should take. It would be with the greatest mortification and regret if they found themselves compelled to abandon the Bill.

LORD ELCHO said, that the pressure for time arose partly from the difference of opinion on the Ministerial side and the long speeches made by its Members. It was stated in one of the journals that four Members had in one afternoon spoken twenty-five times.

House resumed.

Committee report Progress; to sit again To-morrow.

ATTORNEYS' AND SOLICITORS' REMUNERATION BILL.

On Motion of Mr. RATHBONE, Bill to amend the Law relating to the Remuneration of Attorneys and Solicitors, ordered to be brought in by Mr. RATHBONE, Mr. MORLEY, and Mr. GEORGE GREGORY.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 260.]

BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETIES REGULATION BILL.

On Motion of Mr. GOURLEY, Bill to amend the Act for the Regulation of Benefit Building Societies, ordered to be brought in by Mr. GOURLEY, Sir ROUNDELL PALMER, and Mr. STEVENSON.

SANITARY ACT (1866) AMENDMENT (IRELAND) BILL.

On Motion of Mr. ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND, Bill to amend "The Sanitary Act, 1866," so far as the same relates to Ireland, ordered to be brought in by Mr. ATTORNEY GENERAL for IRELAND and Mr. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 261.]

House adjourned at half-after Three o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Wednesday, 4*th August*, 1869.

MINUTES.]—Public Bill—First Reading—Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment* (266).

The House met; and having gone through the Business on the paper, without debate—

House adjourned at Four o'clock, till To-morrow, a quarter before Five o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Wednesday, 4*th August*, 1869.

MINUTES.] — Select Committee — Report—Plans for New Dining Rooms, &c. [No. 392.]

Public Bills—First Reading—Benefit Building Societies Regulation* [262].

Second Reading—Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* [261]; Millbank Prison* [258].

Committee—Habitual Criminals [73]—R.P.

Considered as amended—East India Loan* [251]; Warehousing of Wines and Spirits, &c.* [201]; Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment* [221].

Third Reading—Consolidated Fund (Appropriation); East India Loan [251]; Inclosure of Lands* [31]; Warehousing of Wines and Spirits, &c.* [201]; Dividends on Public Stocks* [247]; Harbour of Galle Loan* [250]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment* [244]; Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment* [221], and passed.

Withdrawn—Grand Jury Cess (Ireland)* [60]; Court of Exchequer (Ireland) Offices* [63]; Real Estate Intestacy* [45]; Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister* [23].

MALT TAX.—QUESTION.

Sir GEORGE JENKINSON said, he wished to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, If the Government intend to introduce any measure next Session to grant relief to the Agricultural Class in relation to the Malt Tax?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: Sir, as a preliminary matter, I do not admit that an alteration in the Malt Tax would be any considerable relief to the agricultural class. My belief is, that one portion of any such benefit would go to the owners of land, and the other to the consumers of beer, little or none going to the farmers. Having made that preliminary caveat, I decline to answer as to my intentions with regard to measures having relation to taxation in next Session until the proper time comes for me to make my financial statement.

BRITISH SUBJECTS IN PARAGUAY.
QUESTION.

Mr. W. H. SMITH said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, If Her Majesty's Government have any information as to the condition of the British subjects detained in Paraguay; and if it is the intention of the Government to take any measures with the view of affording them relief, or of procuring their release?

Mr. OTWAY said, in reply, that the last intelligence the Government had was derived from an account of two officers of the United States who had been to Lopez's head-quarters for the purpose of communicating with the United States Minister. Those officers told Commander Parsons, the British naval officer in those waters, that they had seen Mr. Valpy, Dr. Skinner, and others of the British subjects, apparently all well in health. Every effort had been made and was still being made on behalf of the Government to communicate with those British subjects. Commander Parsons had communicated with President Lopez, and had endeavoured to go to his head-quarters, but had not succeeded in doing so. He had also written to the United States Minister, General MacMahon, and asked him to use his good offices with regard to those persons, who, it was supposed, were detained against their will in the mountains, where Lopez is at present. The Minister had directed the commanding officer of the United States gunboat on the station to take advantage of every opportunity that might offer to assist in obtaining information as to the fate of the British subjects in question.

UNITED STATES—ISLAND OF SAN JUAN.
QUESTION.

Viscount MILTON said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, What was the result of the original occupation of the Island of San Juan by General Scott or by Officers under his order in or about the year

18 ; whether there is any objection to give the whole of the Correspondence which passed between the British Embassy in America and the English Government, with the various Enclosures relating thereto, referring to the occupation of the Island of San Juan; why the question of the Water Boundary was included in the last Correspondence (of which a Return was made to the House) with the question of the Extradition Treaties; the Alabama Claims; and the subject of Naturalization; whether the Government is aware that evidence exists and is in the possession of Government, by which it appears that the Islands of San Juan, Orcas, &c., have been acknowledged by the American Government to be part of the British possessions in those regions; what has been the expense to which the English Government has been put by the joint occupation with America of the Island of San Juan; and, why the Correspondence respecting the Island of San Juan, presented to both Houses of Parliament in 1860, was so short and selected?

MR. OTWAY: Sir, the series of Questions of the noble Lord refer to a matter upon which for many years past there have been differences of opinion between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States. During last November a Protocol was signed by Lord Stanley and Mr. Reverdy Johnson, by which it was agreed to refer the question to the arbitration of the President of the Swiss Confederation. That Protocol was converted into a Convention and signed by Lord Clarendon on the 14th of January, and this Convention was submitted to the Committee of Foreign Affairs of the Senate of the United States, and has been recommended by them for ratification. But the consideration of the matter is deferred until the meeting of Congress in December next. Her Majesty's Government desire and hope that this question and all questions in controversy between this Government and that of the United States may be settled on a fair and equitable basis, and in a manner honourable to both countries. Under these circumstances I hope the noble Lord and the House will excuse me if I refrain from replying to the points which are in controversy between the two nations. But with regard to other parts of the question I would simply say, that I presume the Government of 1860 submitted to Parliament those Papers which they thought proper to communicate; and although we believe we are in possession of full information, we shall be happy to receive any special information with respect to the British claims and the line of boundary of which the noble Lord may be in possession. As to the expense to the Government of this country of the joint occupation of San Juan we are unable to state the amount, but it is utterly insignificant in comparison with the advantage derived from avoiding collisions, which would inevitably have taken place if it had not been for the arrangement made by General Scott that the Island of San Juan should continue in the joint possession of a like number of British Royal Marines and troops of the United States. I do not think it would be desirable at present to lay the Correspondence on the table.

BRITISH SUBJECTS IN THE LEVANT.

QUESTION.

MR. R. N. FOWLER said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether, before concluding any arrangement with the Sublime Porte and the Government of Egypt affecting the jurisdiction over British Subjects in the Levant, Her Majesty's Government will give Parliament an opportunity to express an opinion on such arrangement?

MR. OTWAY, in reply, said, he feared that he could not add anything in answer to the Question to what he had stated on previous occasions. The matter was in a most inchoate state. It had been suggested by the Egyptian Government that delegates from the several Governments interested in the subject should meet in Egypt in October next; but, as these delegates had not yet been sent to Egypt, he left his hon. Friend to judge whether it was possible for any action to be taken by the British Government in reference to the matter before the meeting of next Parliament.

ASSESSED TAX PAPERS.—QUESTION.

SIR GEORGE JENKINSON said, he would beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, If it is right for the parish authorities to be sending now Assessed

Tax papers in respect of such Taxes (for 1869-70) and payable for the year ending April 1870, such being directly at variance with the answer given to me by him on Thursday June 17th, and reported fully in "The Times" of Friday June 18th; is it right for any Income Tax to be deducted from any payments, funds or rents, or otherwise, due between April 1869, and January 1870; and, in the future new arrangements for the collection of Income Tax once every year, will instructions be given for that Tax to be collected for all property liable within any entire parish, and not, as now is done, to be separately collected for every separate tithing or portion of a parish, which practice leads to great confusion?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, in reply, that the Assessed Taxes in 1868-9 had not yet been paid. They fell due in October this year, and in April next year. As they had to be collected by the ordinary parochial officers on the old system, he presumed it was right those papers should be circulated which were necessary for collection. His answer was that it was right to send round these papers.

SIR GEORGE JENKINSON said, that a notice had been placed on the church doors giving the date 1869-70.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, that was evidently a mistake on the part of the local authorities. Instead of 1868-69, they had printed 1869-70. With respect to the supposed variance with the answer given by him on the 17th June, the answer he then gave was that the taxes would not be collected till October. What he had stated on that occasion was that the taxes did not become payable until October in this year, and April in the year afterwards. That statement which he then made was the one which he made now. In answer to the inquiry of the hon. Baronet, whether it was right for any income tax to be deducted from payments due between April 1869 and January 1870, he would say that it would be quite right if a tenant was called upon to advance the income tax for the landlord that he should deduct it from the next payment made to the landlord. With respect to the last Question he could only say that he was not aware of any intention of altering the area.

FOOT AND MOUTH CATTLE DISEASE.

QUESTION.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, he wished to ask the Vice President of the Council, Whether Her Majesty's Government have received information that the foot and mouth disease has broken out among cattle in the county of Bucks, and that such disease has been imported from Spain; and, whether, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, it is too late to consider some alteration in the Contagious Diseases Animals Bill, which may prove a more efficient protection against the importation of such diseases?

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, in reply, that the Government had received no information of the foot and mouth disease having broken out among cattle in the county of Bucks, but they had received information of that disease being at Windsor, as they had heard of its being in other parts of England and Ireland; but they had no reason to suppose or believe that it was imported from Spain, any more than other cases of disease which for many months, he might say for years past, had been more or less prevalent throughout the kingdom. It would be too late now to make any alteration affecting this matter in the Bill, which was in the Paper to-day for the consideration of the Lords' Amendments. Perhaps, as he observed from the newspapers that foot and mouth disease existed in one or two parts of the country, he might be allowed to state how the law now stood, and how the law would stand when the new Act passed in relation to it. At present there were stringent restrictions in regard to foreign cattle having that disease. They were detained by the Custom House authorities and slaughtered. There were no restrictions as to home cattle. The prevalence of the disease had arisen from the removal of the restrictions, which were found too stringent to be borne without very great reason, and since their removal the foot and mouth disease had spread very much throughout the country. There was an apprehension, he observed, that the present disease was preparatory to rinderpest; but it had, in fact, nothing to do with rinderpest. It had been in the country since 1836, and there was a difference of opinion as to whether it had been imported or not. The effect of the Bill now becoming law would be to check the movement of cattle having foot and mouth disease, under regulations which, in the opinion of the Government, would tend to isolate the disease and prevent its spreading. It was not a disease to be stamped out like cattle plague, because it was curable. Foreign cattle would, under the new law, remain under much more stringent restrictions than home cattle.

SCOTLAND—POOR LAW AMENDMENT.

QUESTION.

MR. ANDERSON said, he wished to ask the Lord Advocate, Whether, seeing that the Poor Law Amendment (Scotland) Bill has been withdrawn, he intends to re-introduce it next Session, or to deal with the subject in any other shape; and, whether he has any objection to state why the Bill was not proceeded with?

THE LORD ADVOCATE, in reply, said, the Bill had not been proceeded with for this reason. It related, as the title indicated, mainly or entirely to the Poor Law, and its object was to put the assessment on the gross rental. It was sent to a Select Committee, but it was found absolutely necessary to deal not only with the Act regulating the Poor Law, but also with the Valuation Act in regard to the ascertainment of the gross rental, and the effect which parts of the Valuation Act had on the valuation of railways and other similar works. The Select Committee had authorized him to apply to the House for an Instruction to enable them to deal with the whole question; but that Instruction was obstructed and opposed in various quarters; and as the President of the Poor Law Board intended, during the Recess, to consider the whole question, he had been induced to withdraw the Bill. It was his intention to deal with the whole question next Session, and the principle of the Bill would be carried out.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS BILL—[BILL 73.] [Lords.] COMMITTEE.

Order for Committee read.

MR. BRUCE said, he should not press this Bill at so late a period of the Session if it did not appear to him that there was a strong desire on all sides that at least its leading principles should become law. It would be recollected that the Bill had been originally introduced in that House, but was subsequently withdrawn in order that it might be brought forward in the other House, where it had been fully discussed and met with general approval and support. He had carefully examined the Amendments which had been placed on the Paper, and it appeared to him none of them were in any way opposed to the principle of the Bill; the greater part of them were intended to give it increased effect, and some of them might be adopted with advantage. The main objects of the Bill were the supervision of criminals, and a proper system of registration in order to secure the recognition of previously-convicted offenders when brought up for trial. Other provisions were introduced of more or less importance, but, so far as he was concerned, he should be well pleased if the Bill left the Committee giving power for the effectual supervision of "habitual criminals" and their registration. He wished it to be understood that the Bill was not brought forward on account of any sudden or alarming increase of crime, though he admitted that there had recently been some increase. It was gratifying to find, on examining the records of the last thirty years, that crime, on the whole, had rather diminished, and during the last ten years it might be said to have been stationary—not relatively to the population, but positively. While we had increased in wealth and in population, and while the chief increase in both had taken place in towns, crime had decreased. Among the causes of that decrease of crime, the greatest was undoubtedly emigration, which, by relieving the labour market, diminished poverty, one of the great incentives to crime. Another cause was the spread of education; for ignorance and crime went together. As to this, nothing could be more striking than the testimony of their criminal records. Out of every 100 criminals only thirty-five could read or write, and only three could read and write decently well, while only one criminal out of every 500 could properly be called well educated. In addition to these causes there had been a progressive and improving system of repression and penal legislation. Of late years great attention had been paid to this subject, and the present system of prison discipline had undoubtedly produced beneficial effects. The average number of convictions for indictable offences in England and Wales during the ten years ending 1867 was 18,661, or 1 in 1,125 of the population. For the year 1868 the numbers were 20,091, or 1 in 1,085, being an increase of 1,430, or 7·6 per cent. This increase was no doubt due, in a great extent, to the great depression in our commerce and the pressure of poverty. But it could also be shown that it was not due to that cause alone; it was to some extent owing to our past legislation, especially to the operation of the Act of 1864. That Act was passed in consequence of the Report of a Commission of very able men, who, having thoroughly considered the subject of transportation and penal servitude, satisfied themselves that the short sentences of three or four years were insufficient to produce the great objects of punishment—namely, to deter and reform offenders. The rule then laid down was, while transportation itself was abolished for the future, that wherever a sentence of penal servitude was passed for the first time it should never fall short of five years, and where the criminal had been previously convicted of felony the sentence of penal servitude should not fall short of seven years. The effect of that Act, he had no doubt, had been in some respects good, but its effect in another way had been very remarkable. In 1863—which was not the highest year, but a fair average—the number of persons sentenced to penal servitude was 3,071, and in 1868, a year of unusual crime, the number sentenced to penal servitude was only 1,939, showing a decrease of 1,132, and this obviously arose from the unwillingness of Judges in a great many cases to impose a sentence of penal servitude for seven years, while yet they would have been willing to impose sentences of three or four years. There was a very extraordinary variation in the number of twice-convicted felons in different places who were sentenced to penal servitude. Thus, in 1868, at Bristol there were 54 per cent of twice-convicted felons who were sentenced to seven years of penal servitude. At Bedford only 24 per cent were so sentenced. Here were a few other instances. In Cumberland there were 47 per cent, in Dorsetshire 40 per cent, in Nottinghamshire 40 per cent, in Durham 38 per cent, in Norfolk 21·1 per cent, and in Derbyshire 16·1 per cent of twice-convicted felons sentenced to seven years of penal servitude. The effect had been necessarily to increase the number of offenders, and very grave offenders, at large. Of the increase of 1,430 in the year 1868, the larger portion—over 1,100—were the graver crimes, such as burglary, housebreaking, breaking into shops, robbery with violence, and larceny. Of this increase 646 cases occurred in Middlesex alone. The causes were general, such as long-continued depression of trade, or special, such as the greater number of criminals at large under the operation of the Act of 1864. In four years previous to 1864 the penal servitude sentences in Middlesex averaged 24·4 per cent of the total convictions; in 1868, only 16·2 per cent received this sentence. Thus, in 1868, 454 persons received sentences of imprisonment averaging fifteen months each in lieu of penal servitude, which they would have received previously to 1864. It could be proved that, under the operation of the Act of 1864, during the last three years, 635 of the worst class of criminals had been, in consequence of the aversion of the Judges to impose long sentences of penal servitude, allowed to return to their old haunts and habits, without any supervision, in excess of the number who would have been so let loose previous to 1864. In all England 836 persons were annually sentenced to terms of imprisonment, averaging fifteen months, who would, before 1864, have been sentenced to penal servitude. Had they been sentenced to penal servitude, not only would they have been withdrawn from society for a greater length of time, but when they returned to society they would have been under the supervision of the police as holders of licenses; whereas, those previously convicted persons, under the existing law, were turned loose on society without any supervision at all. It seemed obvious, therefore, if they were to continue the legislation of 1864, which he admitted had produced good effects, that it would be absolutely necessary to supplement it, as was proposed by this Bill, by placing persons twice convicted under a system of supervision, and by depriving them of that presumption of innocence which every other person in this country enjoyed. This would make the proof of dishonest practices more easy against them than against persons who had not been previously convicted. What was proposed by the Bill was this. With respect to convicts it would add but little to the existing legislation; it only made the law a little more stringent. What it did provide was a more complete system of registration. The present registration, although it did some good, was ineffectual, inasmuch as it failed altogether to trace the prisoner in his movements from one part of the country to another. He was obliged to report himself; but if he failed to do so on leaving a town there was no trace of him from that time forward. The object of the Bill was to secure a complete record of the movements of every convict under supervision, by means of a central registration, so that information might be given to the police if any license-holders should have removed without notice. The number of persons holding a ticket-of-leave in this country might be taken in round numbers at 1,500 men, and 450 women. The average length of their licenses was one year and seven months. With respect to those who had received a sentence of penal servitude for the first time, and who could hardly be classed as "habitual criminals"—persons committing generally some great commercial fraud and sentenced at once to penal servitude—the supervision would only last during the period of the original sentence; but those previously convicted would be placed under the supervision of the police for seven years longer. This class would be liable to be summoned to give an account of themselves, and to show that they were not gaining a livelihood by dishonest means. They would also be subject to be apprehended, and, in case the offence were proved against them, they would be sentenced to imprisonment, or if found by any constable in any private or public place under circumstances of suspicion, or if found by any private person on private property, not being able to give a proper account of themselves, they would be subjected to a year's imprisonment. With respect to those sentenced twice previously, it was proposed that they should in all cases receive sentences of seven years' penal servitude, and, after the end of their detention, be subjected to the supervision of the police for the remainder of their lives. He admitted there might be objections to dealing in this manner with "habitual criminals," but he had no doubt a man convicted three times was an "habitual criminal." There was a strong probability that for every detected crime he had committed ten undetected ones. In such cases society was justified in taking vigorous measures of repression. With regard to this class of criminals he thought the law had hitherto been too lenient, and it was time that society should arm itself with more effectual weapons against habitual crime. He had little faith in the moral effect of the ordinary imprisonment of an offender who had been living a life of crime. On the other hand, a long sentence of penal servitude had this effect—it broke up the habits of the criminal, separated him from his old associates, accustomed him to vigorous labour, while means were put within his power of returning to a life of honesty and industry; and, as a matter of fact, those means were frequently and successfully resorted to. He had seen a classification of prisoners made in a pamphlet, published by one who had himself suffered six years' penal servitude for his guilt in a commercial fraud; and which seemed to be trustworthy. That calculation was that 10 per cent of all the prisoners convicted were persons who, under some strong temptation, had fallen into a great crime, and were therefore severely punished, but who were not, nor likely to become "habitual criminals." Of the remaining 90 per cent 40 had no other intention than to return, at the expiration of their sentence, to a life of crime, and were wholly irreclaimable. Of the remaining 50 per cent he believed that most were susceptible of good influences—that they were generally persons of weak wills, not utterly depraved; and that if they fell into good hands they might be reformed. That, he might add, accorded very much with the experience of the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society. Now, in such circumstances, what ought the Legislature to do? He was aware of the difficulties to be encountered in dealing with this important question; but it seemed to him that what they ought to aim at was to give encouragement and assistance to the reclaimable, but with respect to the hopelessly irreclaimable to hunt them down without mercy. He did not say that this Bill was the best that could be devised for such a purpose. Our criminal legislation had been tentative and progressive; it had made improvements from time to time, and experience might prove that still greater improvements might be made hereafter. The discussion of this very Bill had led to a large number of suggestions which could not, perhaps, be embodied, in immediate legislation, but were deserving of serious consideration. He would especially refer to a valuable paper on the subject, written by Mr. Henry Taylor, in Fraser's Magazine, in which he advocated a life of imprisonment for those criminals who had been shown to be irreclaimable. The remaining provisions of the Bill related to questions of minor importance. It contained stringent provisions against vagrants, and against those who kept lodging-houses, beer-shops, and other places of public entertainment which were the resort of thieves. It was also proposed to deal severely—though he thought not with undue severity—with receivers of stolen goods. Any person previously convicted, before or after the passing of that Act, who should be found in the possession of stolen goods would be presumed to be guilty unless he could show to the contrary. And it was also provided that if any person had been convicted of that offence it should be lawful to prove against him that other stolen goods had been found in his possession. There was also a clause not strictly germane to the Bill, but required by the necessities of the times—one imposing a more severe punishment than could now be assigned for assaults on the police. At present the penalty for an assault on the police was even less than for an assault committed on an ordinary person. The Bill gave power to fix the penalty at six months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, instead of one month's imprisonment or a fine of £5. These were the principal provisions of the Bill. He believed it to be one—he would not say of pressing necessity or peculiar urgency, but one which would have a most useful effect in diminishing crime throughout the country. The evil of crime was not so much in the direct loss it occasioned, by the plunder committed, as in the fact that the offenders constituted schools of crime in which the young and ignorant were entrapped; and it seemed to him right and just that the Legislature should arm society with the means of repressing those evils. He had been anxious not to carry this repressive legislation further than was strictly necessary, and he was glad to find from the Notices of Amendments which had been given, that those who propounded them were in favour not of narrowing or weakening but of enlarging the principle of the Bill. He moved that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, and he hoped their discussions in Committee would be so businesslike that they would make rapid progress with the measure.

Sir CHARLES ADDERLEY said, he was surprised to hear the right hon. Gentleman say that this Bill was not of pressing urgency, for it seemed to him that its being most urgent was the only justification for pushing it forward for its first discussion just as the House was rising for the holidays.

Mr. BRUCE explained that he had meant to say that it was not more pressing now than it had been for the last ten or twenty years.

Sir CHARLES ADDERLEY said, it was most necessary before so important a Bill passed into law that it should receive the most ample discussion; yet it was brought forward when three-fourths of the House had left town. It had been said that the other House were reduced to merely recording the decisions of that House; but now the tables were turned, and on the subject of this Bill the House of Commons were asked simply to record the decisions of the House of Lords. Very few of those hon. Members who had the experience necessary for the proper discussion of this question remained, and there could only be a mere semblance of debate. Changes in the criminal law should be made carefully, completely, and, if possible, permanently. This Bill introduced several novel principles into our criminal law and greatly extended and developed old ones. Among the new principles, it gave the police power to arrest a man without warrant on the suspicion that he was not earning an honest livelihood. Another new principle was that in certain cases it threw the onus of proving his innocence upon the accused, while another consisted in a new test of crime which was to be punished as habitual. Among the developments of old principles it made the handing a man over to the surveillance of the police a part of his sentence — not, as heretofore, a condition of suspended punishment. There were only three principles on which punishment could justly rest—the incapacitation of the criminal, the reformation of the criminal, and the deterring from a repetition of the crime. The first was the object of our punishments of hanging and transportation. The main idea in those punishments was to get rid of the criminal. It is the right principle in punishing the incorrigible. But we carried it out too far in secondary punishments to save ourselves from more troublesome treatment. Fortunately, we suffered from that selfish view. Transportation was found to close our colonies against our emigration which was the best remedy for poverty — and poverty was the chief cause of crime. When transportation was no longer available, and it was found necessary to keep our criminals within our own shores, the necessity of reforming our criminals was recognized. In carrying out this principle in punishments, however, two great mistakes were made. In the first place, the new plan was confused with the old idea of putting criminals out of the way, and they were accordingly sentenced to long terms of imprisonment, similar to the old terms of transportation. Upon this point he was at issue with the right hon. Gentleman. He disapproved these long imprisonments, and was horrified to hear the right hon. Gentleman's approval of the opinion of Mr. Henry Taylor, that after a second conviction for felony—and they all knew what slight crimes were included in that category—a man might be imprisoned for the rest of his life. If this idea were carried out a great part of the population would soon be in prison; and this was to be supplemented by a wholesale system of police surveillance, so that another considerable portion would be in a state of out-door imprisonment, tied, as it were, by the leg to the police. Society would be, in fact, mainly divided between warders and wards, and the latter would be a heavy burden maintained by the remaining industry of the country. The next mistake in carrying out the principle of reformatory punishment, was the attempt to educate criminals in prison—a bastard kind of education which would fail of both penal and reformatory effect. All the old reformers of our criminal law, Howard, Bentham, Mackintosh, Romilly, and Peel, kept in view that education should precede punishment, which should be the corrective of violated laws; but the Acts of 1853, 1857, and 1864, under pretence of supplying in prison the education which had been omitted, simply translated to home servitude the system of transportation. If we had, as the right hon. Gentleman stated, a class of "habitual criminals," well-known to the police, the sooner stringent measures were taken to break it up the better. Any mistake, however, in carrying out this intention would only aggravate the evil, because if the Bill were made too stringent it would simply lead to evasion. Let them fairly try the principle of supervision by drawing a distinction between imprisonment and tutelage. If kindness was the idea of supervision in the process, let it be done by instruments of kindness, and not by the officers of punishment. The first change to be made in the Bill was to take the supervision of criminals who were let out of prison from the police and intrust it to the benevolent societies which devoted their efforts to this special purpose, and could and did carry it out much more successfully. The proper supervision was not that which would be exercised by the police, who would only watch the occasion when they should cleverly lay hold upon a man that they might put him in prison directly he went wrong again, but a supervision which helped him out of the way of prison and police, and enabled him to find for himself an honest livelihood. The criminal class looked upon the police as their natural foes, while the police regarded them as their natural prey. He did not believe in the right hon. Gentleman's 40 per cent of incurable criminals. The Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies, at an extremely small outlay, had got 90 per cent on their discharge into employment. He was acquainted with two of these societies, and from his experience of Birmingham and of Staffordshire, he felt convinced that the right hon. Gentleman's was a darker view than need be taken. These societies, by an Act which he was the means of passing, were enabled to draw upon the county rates to the extent of £2 a man, yet even this limited sum exceeded four-fold the requirements of the Staffordshire Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society which had to do with the "black country," notoriously one of the most criminal districts of the kingdom. The only drawback was that these societies were not sufficiently numerous to provide for the whole country at present; but where they existed the Bill might give power to the chairmen of quarter sessions to commit prisoners on their discharge to their care. The Chief Commissioner of the Police in London was aware of the use of these societies, and by a memorandum of March 5, he proposed to avail himself to the utmost of their services. But the memorandum of the Chief Commissioner put the cart before the horse. He put discharged prisoners into the hands of the police in the first instance, who were to hand them over to the society afterwards, whereas the process should be reversed, and the society should hand over a discharged prisoner to the police only when they were unable to get him to take to honest employment. His only fear was lest the use of the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies by the Government might be injurious to the action of the societies themselves. The difference between London and the country was however great, and it appeared that in the metropolis a special class of the police—men selected for tact and judgment — were employed for the purposes of supervision, while in the country no such class could be set apart; and the prisoners under supervision might suffer from the country police what could not occur in London. He feared that this scheme of supervision was too closely drawn from the experience of Ireland, where there was not the same class of thieves, possibly not the same plunder to prey upon. On the other hand there was in Ireland a better organization of police, and it was easy to carry out the registration of their criminals with the aid of the police centre in Dublin. With regard to Clauses 9 and 10, the main principle in the cases they referred to should be that of deterrence by fear of pain. There was no better motive to appeal to. For the reformation of such offenders they must no longer look to prisons but to the coarser and more bitter medium suited to the disease, if they reasonably sought a cure. In Clauses 9 and 10, however, as drawn, the repetition of the principle of deterring from crime was carried out to an outrageous extent, which was certain to defeat itself, for they provided that every man who had been twice convicted should undergo seven years' police supervision in addition to his sentence. Major Fulford, the governor of Stafford County Prison, put to him the case of a lad who had been convicted of some small theft under the Summary Felony Act, and who, through some accident of drink, might be convicted of something else before he arrived at years of discretion. He might afterwards go to work steadily and marry. Major Fulford says—

> "Such a man is not a thief professionally, and would do well if let alone. But by Clause 9 he is to be made liable at all hours for seven years to be harassed by a policeman, and doubtless in some cases goaded into offending, when, of course, the policeman's word would be good against his."

MR. BRUCE: The supervision would be of that special character which is provided by the clause itself.

SIR CHARLES ADDERLEY said, the fact stated by the right hon. Gentleman did not remove his objection to the clause. Then, under Clause 10, every person convicted for the third time must be sentenced to seven years' penal servitude and to supervision for the rest of his life. Now, a felony might be anything, from murder to taking an apple off the ground. The Recorder of Birmingham had pointed out that at quarter sessions, where minor offences were tried, the chairman would be compelled to sentence many prisoners, for a very light offence under such circumstances, to seven years' penal servitude. "The schedule of crimes," he added—

> "Is most confused, grouping large and small together, and omitting graver offences, such as embezzlement."

In fact the terms felony and misdemeanour require re-definition. The Recorder said that if this Bill had been law sixty-one prisoners would have been sentenced to seven years' penal servitude last year in Birmingham alone, and 3,570 in the whole of England during the same time. Fixing a minimum rate of punishment by law, instead of leading to uniformity, had always led to evasion. With regard to clause 14, he must say that there the deterrent principle had been deserted just where it was wanted. The sole test of a punishment was whether it was likely to put a stop to the repetition of the crime. Judged by this test they ought, by all experience, to introduce some amount of corporal punishment for stopping the brutal assaults committed by men whose very acts showed them capable of no other check. His own Act for flogging garrotters had signally succeeded, and dispersed the arguments used against it. Major Fulford, in a paper on this subject, said—

> "Clause 14 will not stop a single offence in the way of brutal assaults. This class sees no terror in imprisonment. Now is the time for insisting on all persons convicted of brutal assaults, or with knives, being whipped. What higher motives than fear of pain have you for men who half kill their wives and jump on the bellies of policemen, and on the smallest provocation use their knives, which is becoming more common every day? The Times police reports contain three or four brutal assaults on policemen daily. In France such assaults are never heard of."

The root of most of the crime that filled our gaols was the habitual drunkenness and disorderly conduct by which men got sent to gaol for the twentieth and even fiftieth time. When they were wearied of drunkenness and crime they went willingly back to prison, for "there the weary were at rest." The treatment of these men bred a general contempt for the law. He agreed that some such Bill as the present was necessary to break up bands of "habitual criminals," but two essential improvements were necessary in it—one that the use of the police in supervision should be postponed until after the action of the Prisoners' Aid Societies failed, and the other was the greater adoption of the deterrent principle in Clauses 9 and 10, and making the law more efficacious in cases where corporal punishment alone would appeal to the motives of criminals wholly brutalized. With these remarks he would not move the Amendment which stood in his name for referring the Bill to a Select Committee for the purpose of substituting a Discharged Prisoners' Aid Agency throughout the kingdom, to which, instead of the police, the supervision of certain criminals might be intrusted, but would consent to the Bill going at once into Committee, when he hoped to introduce some Amendments now, reserving other points for another Session.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, he was very anxious to go into Committee on the Bill, and thought it would be better to discuss the points raised by his right hon. Friend (Sir Charles Adderley) when they came to the clauses. The main object of the Bill was to get some unity of inspection of "habitual criminals" throughout the country. He was glad they were not legislating on this subject under the pressure of any panic, but after full consideration and additional experience of the existence of a class of "habitual criminals." His right hon. Friend said that the Bill would introduce novelties into their legislation, but he could not quite agree with his right hon. Friend upon that point. The supervision of license-holders had been in existence for some time, and the Bill would only carry it further to those who belonged to the class of "habitual criminals," and who went on living in a course of crime. Objections had been made to the clause throwing the proof of innocence on the accused; but it should be remembered that the system had long been applied in various branches of industry in the North of England, as, for example, in the case of those employed in the worsted, silk, and other manufactures. Persons found in the possession of property called "waste" were obliged to show how they came into possession of it; and after 6 o'clock in the evening any person found carrying "waste," even in the public thoroughfares, could be called upon to prove where he got it, and in default was liable to a penalty of £20, and a long term of imprisonment. The present Bill was only an extension of that principle. No one was more ready than himself to acknowledge with gratitude the services of the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies, but his right hon. Friend himself admitted that they did not exist in sufficient numbers in the country to enable the House to hand over to them the care of discharged criminals. They were volunteer societies, and they could not be created by an Act of Parliament. The moment you gave them the character of a Department of the State they would lose all their energy and efficiency. It was the energy and earnestness of men like his right hon. Friend (Sir Charles Adderley) which gave to these societies their value. Where they existed he had no doubt the police would be only too glad to make use of them. The fact was that the police wished to be relieved from the surveillance of discharged prisoners and to know that they were getting their living in an honest career. As long as the license-holders were getting on well they never went near to annoy them or to give information about them, but were ready to assist them in getting work. There was a good deal of force in the objection raised by his right hon. Friend to the clause which subjected men to seven years' penal servitude, and he should also be glad to assist him in doing anything in reason to prevent those brutal assaults on the police which were at present so frequent.

Mr. NEWDEGATE said, that he had done all he could to dissuade the House, some years ago, from sanctioning the abandonment of transportation, that best of secondary punishments, that most effective process of reformation. He then foresaw that the necessity for arbitrary measures of internal administration must arise from the aggregation of discharged convicts in this country. He had known many instances in which convicts had been unable to get employment, and had found the doors of society shut against them, and he looked with great suspicion upon a measure which would deprive these criminals of the primary right of every Englishman that he should be held to be innocent until he had been proved guilty. He consequently deprecated this great anti-constitutional change in the fundamental law of this country. By this attempt to ostracize those who had more than once lapsed into offences, many of which were not of a serious description; to create out of these an element—a separate, in fact, a servile class—would in time produce a state of feeling the reverse of satisfactory. Parliament would run the risk of changing the temper of large bodies of their fellow-countrymen towards the law and its administration. At this advanced period of the Session the measure, if passed at all, ought to be limited, he thought, to the very smallest amount of change.

Mr. T. CHAMBERS said, that while agreeing with most of what had fallen from the right hon. Baronet opposite (Sir Charles Adderley) he disagreed with the proposition that the only test of punishment was whether it was or was not an adequate means of suppressing crime. He believed it was quite possible to invent a punishment which would put down a crime, yet at the same time demoralize a community. The administration of the criminal law was one great instrument of moral instruction, and the moment any principle was adopted which had a tendency to lower the moral tone of the community a mischief was done which far exceeded in importance the advantage gained in the suppression of individual crimes; and anything vindictive in the administration of the law, or anything degrading in the punishment inflicted, had a tendency, he maintained, to lower this moral tone. There was a great deal to be said in favour of the present measure; but he thought it was in very strong contrast with former portions of our criminal legislation. Happily, it was not pressed forward now under any sense of panic, though when first suggested and introduced something very like a panic prevailed on the subject of crimes accompanied with violence. But what were the facts? By the official Returns, extending from the years 1863 to 1867, it appeared that a steady diminution was occurring. Offences against the person had diminished 18 per cent between those years; offences against property accompanied with violence had diminished 11 per cent; offences against property without violence had diminished 5 per cent; forgery and offences against the currency had diminished 21 per cent; burglary, house and shop-breaking, and attempts to commit those offences had diminished 13 per cent; robberies by persons armed and in company, and simple robberies had diminished 10 per cent; and larcenies to the amount of £5 from a dwelling-house, larcenies from the person, larceny by servants, and simple larcenies had diminished 5 per cent. The significance of these statistics was increased when it was remembered that this diminution of crime, actual, though not very large under all those heads, had occurred in the face of a constant increase of population, and during several years of great trade depression, when a very large portion of the community in London was thrown out of employment and left to depend either upon the public rates or upon plunder for subsistence. Hence, although some measure, passed in a spirit of moderation, might be desirable for dealing with criminals, there was nothing at present in the shape of enormous increase of crime calling for the application of extraordinary remedies. He had taken some pains to ascertain the actual state of things with regard to those whom the Bill called "habitual criminals." He found that the total commitments in Middlesex in 1867, male and female, were 23,431; of these 1 in every 5½ had been committed once previously; 1 in every 15 had been committed twice before; 1 in every 37 three times; 1 in every 43 four times; and 1 in every 70 five times previously. So far there had been a rapid falling off, but now there was an equally rapid rise again. One in every 55 had been committed six or seven times previously; 1 in every 60 had been committed eight or nine times previously; and 1 in every 27 had been committed upwards of ten times. The House would be surprised to learn that the turning point in these different ratios was due to the commitals of women. In Middlesex there was, unfortunately, a very large depraved class; these women were continually getting drunk or committing assaults, and for these offences they spent half their time in gaol, and so swelled up the figures rapidly. But such items ought really to be left out of the calculation when they were considering whether these Returns furnished any justification for so strong a measure as that now before the Legislature. For the reasons which he had just given, he entertained very grave doubts as to the necessity or propriety of such powers as were given by this Bill; but, recommended as it was by Her Majesty's Government, he did not feel justified in resisting it. To the 10th clause, however, that which obliged the Judge to inflict a sentence of seven years' penal servitude for the third conviction, he was decidedly opposed. Many cases would suggest themselves where this would be attended with very great hardship. A boy, for instance, stole a bun; some years afterwards he stole a red herring; and, finally, two years later, he stole a piece of cheese. Could it be seriously proposed that for this third offence he was to suffer seven years' penal servitude? If so, the character of the administration of justice would be gone; the jury would shudder at the consequences of their own verdict, and on the very next occasion would deprive the Judge of the opportunity of passing a sentence which they believed to be extreme. Anybody familar with the practice of our criminal courts could tell very well what would happen. The counsel for the prisoner would be sure to acquaint the jury with the minimum punishment that could be inflicted on the prisoner if they found him guilty, and the jury in the teeth of the facts, would thereupon acquit him. It was not a very logical, nor yet a satisfactory proceeding; but such was the rough mode in which, by means of our judicial process, and the feelings with which juries were animated, legislation was corrected that went beyond what equity required.

MR. HENLEY said, the Secretary of State for the Home Department could not be surprised if considerable discussion arose upon this measure. Upon the second reading of the Bill the right hon. Gentleman postponed his statement, and since then he has circulated a Paper containing Amendments which enlarged the scope of the Bill ten-fold. As the measure came down from the House of Lords its operation was confined to this country, but the Amendments extended it to Ireland and Scotland. Moreover, the provisions of the Bill were originally limited to license-holders—that was to say to persons who had been convicted and sentenced to penal servitude; but they were now applied to all persons who, having once been convicted of felony, were again convicted, without reference to the period of time that might have elapsed, or to the nature of the felony of which the person might originally have been convicted. The Bill had now attained dimensions rendering it impossible to say to what number of persons it would probably apply. On this point the right hon. Gentleman himself had given no information; his speech was confined to license-holders and persons sentenced to penal servitude. The right hon. Gentleman had stated that 50 per cent of the existing license-holders were irreclaimable——

MR. BRUCE: No; that 10 per cent were beyond all suspicion, and that of the remaining 90 per cent 40 were irreclaimable.

MR. HENLEY: As to those that were irreclaimable, he said his object was to "hunt them down." But had the right hon. Gentleman considered with what risk this process was attended, and how many of those who would otherwise be reclaimable he would drive into the ranks of the irreclaimable while engaged in this process of hunting down? Look at the magnitude of this question. The hunting-down system was to be brought to bear on reclaimable and irreclaimable alike, for the police could make no distinction. He should have looked with apprehension on the principle as applied to license-holders simply; but when it was extended to all persons convicted of felony, what chance had they of escaping from the terrible position in which they were placed? In this country, where the struggle for existence was so great, it was enormously difficult at best for a person once tainted with crime to find means of gaining an honest livelihood. How vastly those difficulties must be increased by the operation of this Bill! As to the clause in the Bill naming a fixed sentence of seven years' penal servitude, he thought it a very great mistake. He was old enough to recollect the time when the capital punishment for horse-stealing being done away with, the punishment substituted was transportation for life without power of abatement. What happened? The Judges who charged the grand juries made all sorts of suggestions to them about finding bills for receiving instead of stealing, knowing that if the man was convicted of stealing they would be obliged to pronounce a sentence which, under the circumstances, perhaps they felt to be unjust. He recollected this as well as if it had only occurred yesterday; all sorts of suggestions were made with regard to proof and the sufficiency of evidence, as to which previously there had never been a doubt. That was the way in which extreme legislation always defeated itself. Difficulties were raised, and passed on from Judges to jurors, and so to all parties concerned; and the end was that instead of persons being convicted and undergoing a reasonable punishment, great numbers were acquitted and received no punishment at all. This Bill introduced several new and objectionable principles; of which not the least objectionable was that persons would in future be punished on suspicion, and not on proof. The Bill was introduced by a Liberal Government, and he was sorry for it; for he believed that if the principle that a man was to be convicted not upon facts proved, but upon what was called reasonable suspicion were once adopted it might soon get a pretty wide extent, and the first principle of justice would be broken down and destroyed. What proof had been given to the House that this system of police supervision had been attended with advantage in the countries where it had been long practised? He did not believe that the right hon. Gentleman could bring forward any such proof. On the contrary, the evidence which was given before a Committee on the subject of Transportation some sixteen or seventeen years ago left upon his mind the impression that no advantage resulted from this system of supervision. He could hardly conceive a more extravagant power than that which it was proposed to put into the hands of the police. "It is not every man who is born a huntsman," and catching thieves was a particular trade. Accordingly, to give to men who had no natural aptitude for it all those extraordinary powers was a proceeding of very doubtful wisdom. Thieves knew the police quite as well as they knew the thieves; and the result of the new system, he feared, would be to diminish rather than to stimulate the repression of crime. The right hon. Gentleman had referred to the great number of criminals in London; but he (Mr. Henley) had carried away from a perusal of the judicial statistics the impression that, for every policeman in London there were a man, a woman, and a small boy—surely not an extravagant number for them to watch. He fully agreed with his right hon. Friend (Mr. Gathorne Hardy) as to the value of reformational efforts after the criminals were turned loose, and he greatly wished that system could be extended. He did not, however, agree with another right hon. Friend as to the more frequent use of the lash, and did not believe it would have the effect anticipated. Neither did he see the advantage of the power proposed to be conferred on the magistrates; for, without any reflection upon them, he thought that, in cases of assaults upon the police especially, persons accused were more certain of an impartial trial before a jury. He greatly regretted that a measure of such great importance as this Bill should be pressed at the end of the Session, when very few Members were in town, and with such important Amendments proposed to be introduced as those to which he had called attention. By one of these Amendments the expenses, instead of being defrayed by the public purse, as proposed when the Bill left the House of Lords, were to be thrown upon the local rates. He hardly thought that a fair proposal to make at this late period of the Session.

SIR GEORGE JENKINSON said, he thought the Bill a very valuable one, and he hoped they would now go into Committee, when any objections to it which were capable of being urged might be removed.

MR. HADFIELD said, he objected to the Bill as a departure from the more humane tendencies of the criminal legislation of recent years. Our criminal jurisprudence had been too severe; it was not framed on the principles of mercy, or with the object of reclaiming offenders. The late Governor of Wakefield Gaol supported this view. He believed that the principles of the Bill were repugnant to the English people, and he wished some one would move its rejection, that he might have the satisfaction of voting against it.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 1 struck out.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

Clause 4 (Power to apprehend holders of license on suspicion).

MR. STAPLETON moved in page 2, line 1, to leave out "and whom he suspects of getting a livelihood by dishonest means." He should move at the end of sub-section 1, to insert—

> "And any chief officer of police having reason to believe that any convict who is the holder of any such license as aforesaid is getting a livelihood by dishonest means may authorize any constable or police officer, in writing, to take such convict into custody and bring him before a justice of the peace or other competent magistrate as aforesaid."

The word "suspects" carried us back to the very worst times of the French Revolution; whereas the substituted words of his Amendment "has reason to believe" were taken from an Act brought in by Lord Campbell when Lord Chief Justice. [Mr. BRUCE intimated that there would be no objection on the part of the Government to abandon the word "suspects."] He also desired to throw the responsibility of the arrest on the chief officer of the police force instead of leaving it to the rank and file.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, he thought that the words "has reason to believe" would be preferable to the word "suspects."

MR. BRUCE said, he had no objection to the change suggested by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the University of Oxford (Mr. Gathorne Hardy). He was extremely anxious that this Bill should have the good opinion of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Oxfordshire (Mr. Henley); and therefore he wished to relieve that right hon. Gentleman's mind of all apprehension of dangerous consequences being likely to result from it. He had obtained from the Chief Commissioner of Police a Return of the number of license-holders in the metropolis. While the metropolis contained one-seventh of the whole population of England and Wales, it contained a larger proportion of the criminal population of the whole kingdom. The number of persons at present holding licenses was 2,000; and yet it appeared, from a document furnished to him by the Chief Commissioner of Police, that the number of license-holders whom the metropolitan police could lay hands upon under this Bill was only twelve.

MR. HENLEY observed that he had said very little about license-holders. As they were persons at large before the expiration of their sentences, there would be no reason to complain of their being under the surveillance of the police.

MR. BRUCE said, he hoped to be able, at the proper time, to convince his right hon. Friend that in the case of persons who had already sustained long periods of imprisonment there would be no grievance any more than in that of the license-holders.

MR. STAPLETON withdrew his Amendment, and moved to leave out "suspects of," and insert "has reason to believe to be."

Amendment agreed to.

MR. BRUCE moved, in lines 2 and 3, to leave out "a justice of the peace or other competent magistrate," and insert "two or more justices of the peace or a stipendiary magistrate."

MR. M'MAHON moved after "if," to insert "it shall appear from the facts proved before such justices or magistrate that there are reasonable grounds for such belief." As the clause stood the magistrate would have no discretion if the holder of the license were not able to give negative evidence.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir GEORGE JENKINSON proposed in page 2, line 14 at end of clause, to add "or if such justice or magistrate prefers not to assume the responsibility of so acting he may commit such holder of a license for trial at the next quarter sessions, there to be dealt with as above provided." He feared that some magistrates sitting alone would hesitate to take upon themselves the responsibility of acting on the clause as it stood.

Mr. BRUCE said, he thought that after the alterations made in the clause the Amendment was unnecessary.

Sir GEORGE JENKINSON said, he would not press the Amendment against the opinion of the right hon. Gentleman. As a justice he should not hesitate to act on the clause himself. He had seen in The Times an account of a man who some years ago was convicted of burglary and murder, and sentenced to be hung. Through the kindness of some Home Secretary the sentence was commuted, the convict was sent to one of the colonies, and at the end of four years received a ticket-of-leave available only for the colony. He returned, however, to this country, and after going on well for some time got again into the hands of the police. Now, he could not think it a hardship on a man like that to be under the surveillance of the police.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 5 (Penalty for breach of conditions of license).

Mr. BRUCE, in moving a verbal Amendment, said, he believed that the supervision of the police was most useful to the convicts themselves. These persons had themselves borne testimony to the delicacy and kindness of the police. He had received a communication from the Chief Director of Prisons which stated that in 475 cases of revoked licenses there had been only six in which the license-holders complained, and only two in which they had alleged oppression on the part of the police. Again, he was informed that out of 3,000 cases which had come before the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society there were only two in which the parties said they had been oppressed by the police. Besides, this clause would get rid of that which license-holders had complained of as harassing and vexatious, and as operating so as to prevent their obtaining and retaining employment. He alluded to the requirement that license-holders should report themselves monthly to the police.

Mr. BOUVERIE pointed out that under the clause license-holders could be punished for breaches of conditions inserted in the license by the Secretary of State without the sanction of Parliament.

Mr. BRUCE said, he would, at a subsequent stage, introduce words providing that all conditions inserted in licenses by the Secretary of State should be laid before Parliament.

Clause ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 6 (Register of holders of licenses).

Mr. BRUCE said, that by this clause, as he proposed to amend it, provision would be made for the registration of criminals. At present it might, and frequently did, happen that a person who had been convicted of six, eight, or ten felonies was put on his trial for another offence, and was tried and convicted without the Court being aware of the previous convictions. This was very likely to happen in the case of tramps who had been convicted in different counties. If this clause were agreed to there would be a complete register of criminals—that was, criminals convicted of the graver classes of offence. As the clause stood the register would only include holders of licenses. The right hon. Gentleman then moved in lines 25 and 26, to leave out from "convicts" to "them," in line 27, both inclusive, and insert "criminals."

Mr. HENLEY said, he thought that, owing to the imperfection of our classification of crime, the proposed register would not be a very reliable record in respect to the real character of the offences. To pick up from under a tree and carry away a half-rotten apple was felony; so that the name of a person who had been convicted of that offence would be recorded on the register as that of a person who had been convicted of "felony." He believed that the want of information in the case of previous convictions was owing in a very great degree to the parsimony of the Treasury in cutting down the expenses of gaol officials coming to give evidence on such points.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, he thought that in the interpretation clause the "criminals" to be registered might be described as persons who had been convicted of crimes set out in the Schedule of the Bill.

MR. RUSSELL GURNEY asked whether persons convicted of assaults would not be registered. He thought it would be well to include them?

MR. BRUCE said, they could not extend the registration to assaults. He agreed with his right hon. Friend that it was an anomaly to have an offence like that of picking up an apple classed with the heinous crimes which were also included under the head "felony;" but he was afraid that if Parliament held its hands in the matter of registering criminals till we had a proper classification of offences the community would suffer severely. He thought that Parliament would feel itself obliged to leave to the Executive the regulation of details like that of registration.

MR. BOUVERIE asked if there was to be a register kept of every person that committed any kind of misdemeanour?

MR. BRUCE said, he would consider the question whether words might not be introduced which would more accurately define the system of registration.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 7 (Returns for purposes of register).

MR. BRUCE proposed, after line 42, to add as a separate paragraph—

> "All expenses incurred in any place in carrying this section into effect with the sanction of the authority authorized to allow charges on the funds for the maintenance of the police in that place, shall be deemed to be part of the expenses of such police, and be defrayed accordingly."

MR. HENLEY said, that notice of this Amendment had been given only two days ago. The expenses to which the Amendment related ought not to be very large; but the principle involved in the Amendment was an important one, and it ought not to be adopted at a period when there was not time for its consideration. As the register was for the benefit of the country at large, and as London would derive more advantage from it than any other place, the Returns ought not to be a charge on local funds, but ought to be paid for out of moneys provided by Parliament.

MR. BRUCE said, that as there was a contribution of one-fourth towards the police in the counties and boroughs, the cost of the Returns would not be thrown entirely on local funds. He agreed with the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Henley) that the Returns ought not to cost much; but the way to secure economy in the matter was to make the charge in the main a local one.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 8, agreed to.

Clause 9 (Person twice guilty of felony and not punished with penal servitude to be subject to the supervision of the police).

MR. BRUCE said, he was anxious to meet the objections that had been raised to this clause, and to mitigate its stringent severity in the cases of boys or young persons who might have committed two very trivial offences which, under the present law, were regarded as felonies. He therefore proposed to insert the following words after the word "not" in line 19:—

> "Unless the court by or before whom he is tried, for special reasons to be stated by the court, declares that a less punishment is to be awarded to him."

MR. GATHORNE HARDY said, the object of the right hon. Gentleman might be more simply secured by the insertion of the words "unless otherwise declared by the court," in place of "whether so declared by the court or not."

MR. BRUCE accepted the Amendment proposed by the right hon. Gentleman, and withdrew his own Amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY moved to insert the words after "seven years," "or such less period as the court shall direct."

Amendment agreed to.

MR. RUSSELL GURNEY asked, whether the previous convictions must have taken place before a court of quarter sessions?

MR. BRUCE answered in the affirmative.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 10 (Person thrice convicted of felony to be liable to be taken up if found under suspicious circumstances).

Mr. BRUCE said, great objection had been taken to this clause, and undoubtedly great hardship might result from it. He would, therefore, suggest to the Committee to consider whether they would give the Judge the power to remit the sentence of seven years' penal servitude, or whether they would omit the portion of the clause relating to it. A Judge already had power to inflict a sentence of seven years.

Mr. J. G. TALBOT said, he thought it would be better to leave this part of the clause as it stood.

Mr. COLLINS thought the retention of the words would indicate the intention of the Legislature that this sentence should be the rule and not the exception.

Mr. T. CHAMBERS moved the omission of the first part of the clause down to the words "seven years."

Sir GEORGE JENKINSON said, he hoped the words would not be struck out, because they would do something to produce uniformity in sentences.

Mr. BOUVERIE said, that if this fearful sentence were absolutely imperative, it would be a powerful argument with counsel in addressing the jury against conviction.

Mr. DICKINSON said, the sentence depended on a third conviction. After conviction, as a matter of form, the two previous convictions would be proved, and therefore the matter would not be brought before the jury.

Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY said, he thought it most desirable that the words should be omitted. There would be many cases where, even in the case of a third conviction, seven years would be too severe a sentence.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 11. (Amendment of sect. 4 of the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 83).

Mr. STAPLETON opposed the clause.

Mr. BRUCE said, the object of the clause was to remove a difficulty with respect to a class of persons who were reputed to be thieves, and were well known to the police. They were watched by the police; they were seen going about attempting to pick pockets; there was no moral doubt of their intention to commit crime; and yet, unless they were taken in the act of attempting to pick a pocket or commit a theft, the magistrate had no power to inflict punishment. The intention of this clause was to give the magistrates more summary powers than they at present possessed. The cases contemplated by the clause arose mainly in the towns, and would for the most part come before stipendiary magistrates.

Mr. T. CHAMBERS said, that the clause in effect provided that a person reputed to be a thief might be convicted without evidence; no act or acts were to be proved at all.

Mr. HENLEY said, the wording of the clause was a matter of considerable importance, for the phraseology would be looked to by magistrates convicting persons under the preceding sections of the Bill. The clause spoke of the "general circumstances of the case," and he should like to know what they could be if they did not include the acts of the person. It could not be meant that a man was to be convicted of a substantive offence on account of his character; in an ordinary way a person was not convicted unless there was proof of an act which led to a presumption of guilt.

Mr. BRUCE said, there had been cases in which a person had been seen to put his hand into the pocket of another, and yet, because he abstracted nothing, and theft was not completed, the magistrate could not convict.

Mr. COLLINS said, the object aimed at was to shift the burden of proof in some cases. Instead of speaking of the "known character" of a man, he would say a person "previously convicted," and with that Amendment the clause would be a valuable addition to the Bill.

Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY said, it was impossible to define the acts which should induce a magistrate to believe that a man intended to commit felony. The words must be general, and the magistrate must be left to form a judgment from the circumstances of the case. It would be an improvement to say that a man should have been already convicted instead of speaking of his known character. He would suggest the omission of the word "general" before the word "circumstances."

Dr. BREWER said, that both pickpockets and shoplifters often went in gangs, and that increased the difficulty of obtaining convictions.

Mr. BRUCE assented to the Amendment to leave out "general" before "circumstances."

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 12 (Penalty for harbouring thieves &c.; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 101, s. 337).

Mr. DIMSDALE said, he wished to call attention to the necessity of inserting words to amend the law relating to night houses, so that such houses should be deemed disorderly without the necessity of proving that women were found entering or going out of them with men. He moved, in line 7, after "thieves," to leave out "or," and he would move, after "reputed thieves," to insert "or prostitutes."

Mr. BRUCE said, he could assure the hon. Member that the proposed Amendment would not carry out his object; and he must point out that the subject the hon. Member proposed to deal with did not come within the province of the Bill.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 13 (Burden of proof in cases of receiving stolen goods).

Mr. AMPHLETT said, he thought a hardship would be inflicted if a person who had once been convicted were in all future time compelled to prove his innocence if charged with receiving stolen goods. He moved, in page 7, line 1, after "is," to insert "within five years of the termination of the period of punishment awarded on such previous conviction."

Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY said, he would not object to the clause, if prisoners were enabled to give evidence on their own behalf on oath.

Mr. AMPHLETT said, he would withdraw his Amendment if the right hon. Gentleman (the Secretary of State for the Home Department) would consider it on the Report.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL for SCOTLAND (Mr. G. Young) proposed that in case of a person charged with receiving stolen property, "evidence of such previous conviction shall be admissible as evidence of his knowledge that such goods had been stolen," leaving it to him to prove the contrary.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. STAPLETON said, he wished to introduce words giving the same power to the police to search for stolen goods as they had to search for obscene prints; but rendering it unnecessary for them previously to go to a magistrate for a warrant to search. He begged to move, in line 19, after "him," to insert—

"Any constable or police officer may, if authorized so to do in writing by a chief officer of police, enter any house, shop, warehouse, yard, or other premises in search of stolen goods, and make such search, and seize and secure any property he may believe to have been stolen, in such manner as he would be authorized to do if he had a search warrant, and the property seized, if any, corresponded to the property described in such search warrant: Provided, That in every case in which any property is seized, the person on whose premises it was at the time of seizure, or the person from whom it was taken if other than the person on whose premises it was, shall, unless previously charged with receiving the same knowing it to have been stolen, be summoned within three days before a justice of the peace, or other competent magistrate to account for his possession of such property and such justice or other magistrate shall make such order respecting the disposal of such property as the justice of the case may require; and it shall be lawful for any chief officer of police to give such authority as aforesaid in the following cases:—

"First, When such premises are at, or have been within eighteen months of, the time of such search in the occupation of any person who has been convicted of receiving stolen property or of harbouring thieves.

"Second. When such premises are at the time of such search in the occupation of any person who has been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty, and punishable by penal servitude or imprisonment.

"And it shall not be necessary for such chief officer of police in giving such authority to specify any particular property, but he may give such authority if he has reason to believe generally that such premises are being made a receptacle for stolen goods."

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 14 agreed to.

Clause 15 struck out.

Clauses 16 and 17 agreed to.

House resumed.

Committee report Progress; to sit again To-morrow.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.—THIRD READING.

Order for Third Reading read.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, that he owed an apology to the hon. Member for the City (Mr. Crawford) for not being in his place yesterday. He had intended to call attention to the proposal to borrow money from others than the Bank of England, but was too late yesterday to do so from an oversight.

Bill read the third time and passed.

And it being Six of the clock, Mr. Speaker adjourned the House till To-morrow, without putting the Question.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Thursday, 5th August, 1869.

MINUTES.] — Select Committee — Report—Office of the Clerk of the Parliaments and Office of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. [No. 278.]

Public Bills — First Reading — Consolidated Fund (Appropriation); East India Loan (267); Inclosure of Lands* (270); Warehousing of Wines and Spirits, &c.* (272); Dividends on Public Stocks* (269); Harbour of Galle Loan* (268); Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment* (273); Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment* (271); Creditors Sequestrations* (275).

Second Reading—Adjutants (Jury) Exemption* (75); Cursitor (County Palatine of Durham)* (186); Expiring Laws Continuance* (262); Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment* (266); Accounts, &c. Presentation* (253).

Committee — Seeds Adulteration (242 - 276); Nitro Glycerine* (245); Railways Abandonment* (249).

Committee—Report—Telegraphs* (243); Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act (1863) Amendment* (256); Public Works (Ireland)* (255); Clerks of Assize* (248); Zanzibar (Jurisdiction of Consul)* (246); Fortifications (Provision for Expenses)* (251); Basses Lights, Ceylon,* (254); Criminal Lunatics* (247); Local Officers Superannuation (Ireland)* (249); Militia Pay*; Militia (Ireland)* (252); Volunteer Act (1863) Amendment* (257); Metropolitan Building Act (1855) Amendment* (232).

Third Reading—Courts of Justice Salaries and Funds* (215); Fisheries (Ireland)* (236); Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c.* (230); Land Tax Commissioners Names* (158); Dublin Freemen Commission (210), and passed.

SEEDS ADULTERATION BILL—(No. 242.)

(The Earl of Devon.)

COMMITTEE.

Order of the Day for the House to be put into Committee, read.

The Earl of KIMBERLEY said, he had given notice of some Amendments which, while not affecting the principle of the measure, would mitigate the penalties to be imposed for killing and dyeing seeds. He had also received communications stating that inconvenience would arise from fixing an early date for the operation of the Act, there being on the Continent a practice of drying seeds in order to give them a better appearance rather than for purposes of fraud, and there being large stocks of these on hand, while but little notice had been given of the Bill.

The Earl of DEVON said, he was ready to accept the Amendments of his noble Friend; but, at the same time, begged to remind him that the operation of the Bill had already been deferred from the 1st of October to the 1st of May.

House in Committee accordingly; Amendments made: The Report thereof to be received To-morrow, and Bill to be printed as amended. (No. 276.)

BANKRUPTCY BILL—(No. 265.)

COMMONS' AMENDMENTS.

Commons' Amendments considered.

The LORD CHANCELLOR moved, "That the House agree to the Commons' Amendments made to the Lords' Amendments, and not to insist on the Lords' Amendments, to which the Commons have disagreed." The Commons had adopted all their Lordships' Amendments, which occupied twelve pages, with the exception of two. One of these related to companies, which their Lordships thought should not be adjudged bankrupt. It had been found that there might be an easy means of avoiding bankruptcy in such cases, and the Commons had therefore adhered to their original proposal. The other left the appointment of the committee of inspection optional. With regard to non-traders, the Bill originally exposed them to the consequences of bankruptcy to a greater extent than the existing law; but the Select Committee of this House, while amending this, went further, and diminished their present liability. The Commons now proposed to continue the existing liability, neither widening nor contracting it.

On Question? agreed to.

DUBLIN FREEMEN COMMISSION BILL.

(No. 189.) THIRD READING.

(The Lord Lurgan.)

Order of the Day for the Third Reading, read.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3ª."—(The Lord Lurgan).

The Earl of LONGFORD said, he had received so many representations with regard to the policy of the measure and the manner in which it had been brought before Parliament that he felt bound to take the opinion of their Lordships upon it, having given notice to the noble Earl opposite (Earl Granville) that he should do so. As he remarked on the former occasion, the Bill had the appearance of being the persecution of a political interest, and he saw no reason, at the present moment, for altering that opinion. This, indeed, was the third attack on the Dublin freemen. The first, founded on a Report which the Judge who tried the petition had not made, was abandoned. The second was a bold proposal to disfranchise a large portion of the constituency of Dublin without investigation; and this also fell to the ground. The third was this proposal for a special inquiry. The Government disclaimed any party motive in promoting the scheme, seeing in it purity of election, exactly as they saw justice, generosity, and peace in a measure which had now unhappily become law; but those who were not its members or supporters could not fail to perceive a disposition to disfranchise or throw discredit on a supposed Conservative element in the constituency of Dublin, with a view to a more favourable Liberal result at future elections. At this period of the Session, when the attendance of Peers was declining, days were of importance in the arrangement of the Business of the House, and he could not but remark that while on the 22nd of July this and two other Bills — the Savings Banks Bill and the Married Women's Property Bill—were brought up from the Commons and printed on the following day, the second reading of those two Bills was proceeded with on the 29th and 30th; whereas it was not till the 30th that notice was given of the second reading of this measure on the 2nd of August. He had little doubt that had that stage been fixed for the 29th or 30th of July the House would not have been troubled with any discussion upon the third reading. The delay might possibly have been accidental; if so, it was an unfortunate accident; while if it arose from management, the aspect of the matter was still more unfavourable. He repudiated the imputation of shielding electoral corruption; but he saw no reason for going beyond the limits of the Corrupt Practices Act of last Session. Regarding the measure as an act of oppression and as overbearing conduct on the part of the strong towards the weak, he moved to defer the third reading for three months.

Amendment moved, to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months.")—(The Earl of Longford.)

Earl GRANVILLE said, he did not rise to discuss the merits of the Bill, which had been found in "another place" to be the only way of dealing with a question which originated with the Report of the Judge, but to remind their Lordships of what passed on Tuesday night in this House. The noble Earl (the Earl of Longford) having moved that the House should go into Committee that day three months, he appealed to him to withdraw the Amendment on the ground that there had been two divisions on the previous night, and that no notice had been given of the Amendment. An intimation had been given by a noble Earl on the opposite side, who had some authority to give such an intimation (the Earl of Malmesbury), that there would be no further opposition to the Bill. He (Earl Granville) was backed up in that appeal by the noble and learned Lord (Lord Cairns), the Leader of the party opposite, whose words, as reported in The Times, which he thought stated exactly what fell from him, were these—

> "Lord Cairns thought the merits of the Bill were fairly challenged last night. The majority was not a very large one; but at this period of the Session it would hardly be right to divide again on the same question, and he hoped his noble Friend would not persevere with his Amendment, particularly as no notice had been given of it."

The noble Earl (the Earl of Longford) thereupon withdrew his opposition, without giving the slightest intimation of his intention to renew it at a further stage. His noble Friend Lord Bessborough, on the strength of what had occurred, was not now present, and he believed several other noble Lords were also absent. Lord Lyveden, indeed, put the question to himself whether it was necessary for him to wait in town over to-night and support the Government in regard to this Bill, and his reply was that it was not at all necessary. Now, he did not deny that the noble Earl (the Earl of Longford) had a right to make this Motion; but he thought noble Lords opposite would feel that it would very much embarrass the future conduct of the House if it were pressed and carried. He ventured to appeal to the noble Earl opposite (the Earl of Malmesbury), who was not present on Tuesday, and he was sure that, had the noble and learned Lord (Lord Cairns) been in his place, he would confirm all that he had stated.

The Earl of MALMESBURY said, that, although he formerly occupied such a position as to have a certain degree of influence over noble Lords on his own side of the House, he must decline at this moment to assume any responsibility of that nature. He could only act for himself; and, moreover, he knew nothing of this matter, not having been in town on a former evening. He cursorily read the report of what occurred, and it struck him that the main point on which the question then turned was the statement that his noble Friend (the Earl of Longford) had given no notice. If that was the fact, and if his opinion had been asked, he should certainly have said that it would have been sharp practice to divide without giving notice. Since entering the House, however, he had been informed that his noble Friend had given notice of his present Motion.

Earl GRANVILLE: A private Notice, which I received late last night, when there was no time to take any action upon it.

The Earl of KIMBERLEY: There is no Notice on the Paper.

The Earl of MALMESBURY said, his noble Friend must explain why he did not give notice earlier, and whether he regarded it as a sufficient one. A private letter to the Leader of the Government was formerly deemed a fair Notice. He must remind the Government that this kind of difficulty arose from postponing business to the last moment. In the middle of the Session, or at any period when Peers resided in London, a few hours sooner or later made little difference: but he must say Her Majesty's Government had undertaken more than they should have done, and had thus thrown the business of the country upon this House in a very unfair manner at this period of the Session. He was told that on Monday a Bill of great importance, and which was a different Measure from that sent down to the House of Commons — the Scotch Education Bill would come before them. Almost the whole Peerage had left London; yet, within less than a week of the prorogation, a number of Bills were brought before the House. Now, when the Government had postponed important measures up to the last moment, it was impossible to expect that Peers would be so extremely scrupulous as under other circumstances they would be. For his own part, he should not vote either way on this question.

Earl BEAUCHAMP said, he thought some explanation ought to be given why the Bill, which was brought up on the 22nd of July, had been left without notice till the 30th. In the absence of such an explanation, the country would sustain the House in rejecting the Bill.

Lord LURGAN said, that the noble Earl (the Earl of Longford) had spoken of this Bill as a measure of persecution, directed against a certain political class. He did not agree with the noble Earl on that point; but he certainly thought that persecution had been applied to this Bill ever since it entered the House. He asked their Lordships to consider the effect which its rejection would have on the country. There had been a distinct Report by the Judge that corruption had extensively prevailed among the freemen, who were therefore placed in a false position, and surely ought to have an opportunity of clearing themselves. This was not, as it had been described, a Bill of Pains and Penalties, but simply one for inquiry.

The Duke of LEINSTER thought inquiry was necessary after the Report of the Judge, and hoped the House would pass the Bill.

Lord DUFFERIN thought it right, after the inquiry as to the delay in the second reading, and the suggestion that it was a lucky accident or management, to state exactly what had occurred. He was sorry to say that nobody had been to blame but himself; for, being very much engaged in business connected with the Government; and, having heard that the Bill had originally been introduced by a private Member, he did not at once pay that attention to it which he should have done had he known it to be a Government Bill. He hoped, however, that the House would not visit the Bill with a punishment for a fault which was solely his own.

EARL STANHOPE said, that while sure that the noble Earl (the Earl of Longford) had been unavoidably prevented from giving earlier notice, he regretted that it did not reach the noble Earl opposite in sufficient time to enable him to take any measures which it might seem to require. He attached much importance to this question of notice, and could not under the circumstances, with satisfaction to himself, vote against the Bill. He would suggest that the Bill should be postponed till Monday, in order that the objection to the Amendment, on the ground of inadequate notice, might be removed.

THE EARL OF LIMERICK said, he came down to the House yesterday, Wednesday, with a view to giving notice, but there being no Sitting for Public Business, and no clerk being in attendance, he sent a private Notice last night to Lord Bessborough, so that everything was done which could be done. In the interval between the first and second reading, many noble Lords returned to Ireland under the impression that it was not to be proceeded with, and he should, therefore, support the Amendment.

THE EARL OF LONGFORD disclaimed any intention of taking the House by surprise. He had not heard of any private intimation having been given to the Government that there would be no further opposition.

On Question, That ("now") stand part of the Motion? Resolved in the Affirmative. Bill read 3ª accordingly.

LORD REDESDALE said, he was glad the noble Earl (the Earl of Longford) had not pressed his Motion to a division, the usual notice not having been given; but he must strongly condemn the way in which the Bill had been conducted through their Lordships' House. It was all very well for the noble Lord (Lord Dufferin) to say that it was originally introduced by a private Member, but this was not the case.

LORD DUFFERIN said, that was his first impression. He believed it was Sir George Grey who first raised the question.

LORD REDESDALE: Sir George Grey, it was true, introduced a most improper measure for disfranchising the Dublin freemen; but that Bill was withdrawn, and this Bill introduced by the Attorney General for Ireland. Yet, though it was brought up to their Lordships' House on the 22nd of July, more than a week was allowed to pass before notice was given that the second reading would be moved on the 2nd of August. Under these circumstances, it was naturally considered that the Bill was not to be proceeded with. A large portion of their Lordships always left town at the close of the Session—unless it was known that business of importance was to be transacted; and, considering the command the Government had of obtaining the attendance of their supporters, and the number of noble Lords connected with the Government who were always present—as was shown by the division on Tuesday night, it was evident that if this mode of conducting public business was continued, the independence of the House would be gone, and it would become the mere slave of the Government, to pass whatever the Government might choose.

EARL GRANVILLE said, that after his noble Friend had explained the mistake which had been made, he was rather surprised at the language just addressed to their Lordships. It was perfectly true that this was not the Bill which Sir George Grey brought in; but it was thought to be a right and proper compromise on the subject, proposing to issue merely a Commission of Inquiry. With regard to the attendance in that House, he admitted that it was his duty, and those of his noble Colleagues behind him, to be there up to the very last day of the Session. But, even as an independent Member of the House, he had always felt it his duty to remain in town as long as Public Business of importance remained to be transacted, and he was quite sure that nothing would be more fatal to the character of the House than for their Lordships to allow it to be understood that their private affairs prevented their attendance until the prorogation. He was glad their Lordships had given a striking example of the duty which they ought to fulfil in this matter, for he believed that very nearly 70 Peers had voted in the division on this question. He protested against the language of the noble Earl (the Earl of Malmesbury), who complained that Her Majesty's Government had attempted so much more legislation this year than they could expect to carry; for their Lordships would remember that some half-dozen times noble Lords on both sides of the House had complained that the Government did not undertake very important legislation in addition to that which they had already in hand.

Bill passed, and sent to the Commons.

CREDITORS SEQUESTRATIONS BILL [H.L.]

A Bill to amend the Law relating to the Sequestration of Benefices in England and Wales—Was presented by The Earl of Harrowby; read 1ª. (No. 275.)

House adjourned at a quarter before Seven o'clock, till To-morrow, half past Ten o'clock.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, 5th August, 1869.

MINUTES.] — Select Committee—Second Report—Kitchen and Refreshment Rooms (House of Commons). [No. 398].

Public Bills — Second Reading — Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan [253]; Straits Settlements * [259]; Contagious Diseases * [255]; Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c. * [256]; Broughty Ferry Provisional Order Confirmation * [254].

Committee—Charity Commissioners * [239]—r.p.

Committee — Report — Bishops Resignation [241]; Government of India Act Amendment [158]; Governor General of India [89]; Habitual Criminals [73-264]; Millbank Prison* [258]; Prevention of Gaming (Scotland)* [248]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland) * [261].

Third Reading—Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) [238], and passed.

Withdrawn—Government Annuities, &c. * [70].

NAVY—PURE LIME JUICE.—QUESTION.

Mr. CANDLISH said, he wished to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty, If the Controller of the Victualling Department, or other Officer, has reported favourably on the use of lime juice without the addition of fifteen per cent of spirits; that pure lime juice has been sent to the tropics and returned in perfect condition; and that the addition of spirits reduces the antiscorbutic properties of lime juice; and, if he will lay any such Report or Reports upon the Table of the House?

Mr. BAXTER said, in reply, that three of the principal officers of the Victualling department of Deptford had reported favourably on the use of lime use without the addition of 15 per cent of spirits. Pure lime juice had also been sent to the Island of Ascension, and returned in excellent condition. He held in his hand the Report, and there was no objection to its production.

ARMY—POSSESSION OF BALL AMMUNITION.—QUESTION.

Mr. STACPOOLE said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for War, Whether his attention has been called to two recent instances of a Non-commissioned Officer, whilst in the execution of his duty, having been shot by a private Soldier; whether he is not of opinion that the perpetration of these crimes was facilitated by the custom of leaving ball ammunition in the possession of Soldiers; and, whether he considers that the efficiency of the Army would be impaired by the adoption of a system under which Soldiers would be in possession of ball ammunition only during the time when the duty they may be employed upon necessitates their being furnished with it?

Mr. CARDWELL: Sir, this question was raised last Session of Parliament, and the decision then taken was to adhere to the existing practice. I think, however, it is impossible to deny that the constant possession of ball cartridge does give facility in a time of excitement for the perpetration of those crimes which we have occasion to deplore. I shall lose no time in considering what regulations it may be expedient to adopt for the purpose of obviating this evil; and my hon. Friend may rest assured that those regulations will be framed in such a manner as not to impair the efficiency of the Army.

CANADA—PATENT LAW.—QUESTION.

Mr. BENTALL said, in the absence of his hon. Friend (Mr. J. Howard), he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, If his attention has been directed to the New Patent Law Act passed by the Senate and House of Representatives of Canada, and to which the Governor General gave his assent on the 22nd June last; if he is aware that by the terms of this Act the rights hitherto enjoyed by British subjects and Foreigners are abolished, and that unlike the Patent Laws of England and all other countries, the benefits of its provisions are limited to persons permanently resident in its own dominion; and, whether the Colonial Office is prepared to recommend the Government to advise Her Majesty to withhold or postpone her assent to the Bill, with a view to give an opportunity to the Canadian Legislature to re-consider its provisions?

MR. MONSELL said, in reply, that his attention had been directed to a copy of the Act given in a Canadian newspaper, but no copy had been sent over here officially. By the former Canadian Act, 22 Vict. c. 34, s. 3, a person to obtain a patent in Canada must have been a "subject of Her Majesty, and resident in the Province." By this new Act the residence must have been "for at least one year next before the application." In other words, the residence of the former Act had a minimum fixed of "one year at the least." The new Act was the same as the former Nova Scotia Act, c. 117. It differed from the New Brunswick Act, in which no such limitation was fixed. The subject of patents was essentially one with which the Dominion of Canada might deal, and this was evidenced by the terms of the 18th section of the Imperial Act, 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, in which it was specially provided that nothing in the Act should be deemed to give operation to any Letters Patent granted under the authority of the Act in any colony in which such or the like Letters Patent would be invalid by the law in force in the same colony for the time being.

MR. MACFIE said, that next Session he would call the attention of the House to the propriety of having at the Colonial Office a set of all the Acts of the Colonial Parliaments.

UNITED STATES—CONSULATE AT CHICAGO.—QUESTION.

MR. BOWRING said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, with reference to his recent statement in Committee of Supply respecting the abolition of the Consulate at Chicago, Whether Her Majesty's Government have resolved upon such abolition in pursuance of the Report of a Select Committee of this House; and, if so, in what year that Committee sat, and what precise recommendation was made by it on the subject?

MR. OTWAY said, in reply, that the Committee to which his hon. Friend referred was not, strictly speaking, a Committee of that House, although Members of Parliament sat on it, and it was presided over by a Cabinet Minister, Mr. Milner Gibson. It was known at the Foreign Office by the name of the Official Committee, and was appointed in 1858 to see how far effect could be given to some previous recommendations. The proceedings were laid before Parliament in 1860, and if they had not attracted the attention of his hon. Friend, he would venture to recommend them to his notice. The Report was precisely as he (Mr. Otway) stated the other night. It recommended the abolition of the Consulate at Chicago, Buffalo, and Elsinore. The Consul for Chicago resigned, and Lord Clarendon then determined upon the abolition of the Consulate.

CASE OF JAMES BELL.

QUESTION.

MR. MAGUIRE said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether his attention has been called to the case of a cattle-drover named James Bell, who, wrongfully convicted at the Middlesex Sessions of March 1868, on a charge of sheep stealing, was sentenced to five years' penal servitude; whether it is not the fact that his innocence of the alleged offence was fully proved after he had suffered six months of his sentence, and that the guilty parties were detected and punished; whether Bell has not Memorialized the Home Office, praying for an investigation into his case, and for the expenses incurred by his relatives in their prolonged efforts to prove his innocence, and bring the real culprits to justice; and also for some compensation for his own sufferings of mind and body during an imprisonment of six months, previous to his receiving a free pardon; whether the expenses of a Mr. Guerrier, who interested himself in Bell's case, have not been paid by the Crown; and, if so, on what ground were the expenses of Bell's relatives refused to be paid; and, whether the evidence which led to an innocent man's conviction was not that of three members of the police force?

MR. BRUCE said, in reply, that the case of James Bell had been decided by his predecessor. James Bell, a cattle-drover, was convicted at the Middlesex Sessions of March, 1868, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment, on the evidence of three policemen, who swore to his identity. There could be no doubt they were mistaken. The matter was taken up by Mr. Guerrier, a cattle salesman in London, who expended a large sum in investigating the case. The innocence of the man was proved to the satisfaction of his (Mr. Bruce's) predecessor, and a free pardon was granted. Mr. Guerrier's expenses were paid by the Government. He was not aware that any application was made by Bell's relatives for the payment of the expenses incurred by them; but, if so, they would have stood in the same position as Mr. Guerrier. With regard to compensation to Bell for his wrongful imprisonment, it belonged to a class of cases unhappily large and of a painful character. It had never been the practice of the Government to grant compensation to an unfortunate man for the result of a mistaken verdict. If the principle were applied to criminal cases it must be extended to civil cases where loss and suffering had been inflicted. Numerous applications of a similar character had been made to the Home Office and refused. The case of Barber was an exception to the general rule, as it was investigated by a Committee of the House of Commons, and a special Parliamentary Grant was made.

INDIA—BANK OF BENGAL.—QUESTION.

MR. GILPIN said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for India, Whether there has been any change in the agency of the Bank of Bengal at Bombay?

MR. GRANT DUFF said, in reply, that there had been no change whatever in the policy of the Government in this matter, as lately announced by himself in answer to the hon. Member for East Sussex (Mr. G. B. Gregory); and he might add that he thought it to the last degree improbable that there would be any change.

SCOTLAND—PUBLIC BUSINESS.

QUESTION.

MR. M'LAREN said, he would beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether the Government have considered the propriety of providing some additional means for the transaction of Public Business connected with Scotland?

MR. GLADSTONE: Sir, this subject, in consequence of the representations of many Scotch Members, has been for some time under the notice of the Government. I am sure it will be generally admitted that the business of Scotland has been conducted with great ability and efficiency for many years by the Lords Advocate, and by the present Lord Advocate, who brings so much learning and experience to the discharge of that office. But it has been represented by many Members connected with Scotland that there is a great deal of administrative business which is not of a legal character, and which, in their opinion, may be more appropriately lodged in hands not legal. In the second place, it has been represented to the Government that there are various establishments in Edinburgh in which it will be perfectly practicable to make improvements and economies in case the Parliamentary strength were increased so as to be available in this House for the management of Scotch affairs. These two principal allegations have been submitted to the Government. The second of these representations, it is quite evident, is the essential portion of the case. The course we propose to take is, during the Recess, by such administrative means as are at our command, to make inquiry into the establishments now existing at Edinburgh, which are available for Scotch business, with a view to ascertain how far economy in those establishments, by their abolition, reduction, and modification, may be rendered practicable in the event of the appointment of any new Parliamentary officer for the transaction of Scotch business. We will prosecute that inquiry as well as we can during the Recess. It is perfectly possible that when Parliament meets again, and the result of such an inquiry is presented, hon. Members may think that a Parliamentary Inquiry in furtherance and prosecution of the same purpose may be desirable. We will do the best we can, but if a further investigation by a Parliamentary Committee should be deemed desirable by those specially connected with Scotland, and interested in the effective transaction of its affairs, we shall be perfectly ready to lend ourselves also to the further inquiry.

MR. BOUVERIE: I should like to ask whether the proposed course of proceeding is taken by the Government in consequence of their being dissatisfied with the administration of Scotch affairs, or, whether it has been taken in consequence of representations made from without to the Government; and, if so, in what form and shape those representations have been made?

MR. GLADSTONE: The inquiry we are ready to make did not arise from any observations made by the Government themselves, but arose out of a variety of communications made to us by Scotch Members. My right hon. Friend will, I am quite sure, understand that we think it our duty to ascertain the whole facts of the case before the time comes when it will be proper for us to form or express any opinion on the subject. With regard to the character of the representations, they were entirely informal, and of the same nature as those which are happily always in progress between Members of the Government, and the Members of this House.

BISHOPS RESIGNATION BILL—[Lords.]

[BILL 241.] COMMITTEE.

Order for Committee read.

MR. GLADSTONE: This Bill relates to a subject of so much importance, that I should not be justified in moving that you, Sir, do now leave the Chair without explaining, in a few sentences, why such a Bill has been introduced and pressed on at the present period of the Session, although the occasion for such a measure is sufficiently notorious to dispense with any long explanation or defence of its provisions. In the early part of the Session representations were made to me respecting the unfortunate position in which some of the dioceses of the South of England were placed in consequence of the great age or infirmity of the Bishops charged with the care of those dioceses. I stated that the evil was undeniable, and required a remedy; but that it was very desirable that a matter of this kind should be considered in the first instance by the episcopal heads of the Church, and that the result of those counsels should be awaited by the Government. In harmony with that announcement, the Archbishop of Canterbury took measures to ascertain the sentiments of his episcopal brethren, and they came to the conclusion that it was necessary to pass, without delay, a general measure by which such cases might be met. The question then arose, what should be the scope and purport of that measure? In the framing of this Bill we had to take into consideration—for the Archbishop acted in concurrence with the Government—the very great difficulty of originating a comprehensive measure on this subject—a measure providing legislative enactments, under which, in every case where a Bishop was incapacitated either from mental or bodily infirmity, and quite independent of his will or choice, the appointment of an efficient episcopal superintendent might be secured. That, evidently, is the aim which Members both of this House and of the other House of Parliament have had in view. In the 3rd clause words have been introduced which, as the Bill now stands, would make it practicable to appoint a coadjutor, whether with the will or against the will of a Bishop who is incapacitated. And an hon. Member (Mr. Dickinson) has given notice of an Amendment going even further than that, and providing for a system of what may be called compulsory resignation. With respect to a Bill of so wide a scope as a Bill upon either of these bases would be, I would wish to point out that it is in our judgment wholly beyond the power of Parliament to grapple with it under present circumstances. Nor do I speak merely of the date which we have now reached —the first week in August; there has been no part of the present Session, crowded as it has been with most important business, when we could have undertaken in this House to go through the provisions of an Act involving a matter of such extreme delicacy as the power of removing against his will a great public officer — to call him nothing else—like the Bishop of a diocese, who is supposed to have fallen into a state of incapacity for the discharge of his duties. To pass such a measure would be a most arduous undertaking, since we have not taken the same course in the case of other functionaries enjoying great public emoluments. I am not saying that a time may not come when we might find it necessary to take some step of the kind; but I think it better that we should apply a remedy to present inconveniences and should stop short of questions so difficult and thorny as those we should have to encounter if we attempted to pass a law to enact, in certain cases, compulsory episcopal resignation. The leading provisions in the measure as introduced by the Archbishop of Canterbury in the other House of Parliament—and as I should propose that this House should agree to them—are two. It is proposed that any Archbishop or Bishop in England, being incapacitated by age or by some mental or physical infirmity — it may be well, perhaps, to insert the word "permanent" —so as to imply that he shall be really and permanently incapacitated from the discharge of episcopal duties — shall have adjusted for him certain terms on which he may resign; and, subject to the responsibility of the Ministry of the day, who will be bound to be satisfied that this is a legitimate transaction, and who will be accountable for it as well as for all their other acts, a certain pension may be assigned to him. And not only a pension, but if Her Majesty should see fit, under certain circumstances, particularly of great age, the episcopal residence which he has hitherto enjoyed may be likewise assigned to him. It is it not necessary now to enter into the precise pecuniary terms on which these resignations are arranged; but we endeavoured in framing the Bill to make as fair a division as we could of the income between the incoming and the outgoing Bishop, with reference to the respective needs of each. There is a proviso in a clause which relates to the case of a Bishop appointed before the year 1832. I was not aware of that proviso till the Bill reached this House. I presume it was to meet one particular case; and though there is much to be said in its favour, still an amendment in the proviso will be requisite, the reasons for which I shall state when we come to the clause in Committee. There is also a series of clauses, beginning with the third, which refers to the appointment of coadjutor Bishops. As far as the Government are concerned, I must beg the Committee, forming a judgment upon these clauses, to suppose that the Amendment which I have placed upon the Paper has been carried. The clause, as amended, would then run to this effect. When a Bishop is incapacitated by permanent mental infirmity, a coadjutor Bishop, with right of succession, may be appointed, and, subject to the conditions of the Act, may assume episcopal jurisdiction in the diocese. The clause as to resignation may be called wholly new; no such provision exists in our law at present. In 1856 an Act was passed to enable two particular Bishops to resign upon specified terms; but it was extensively felt that it was objectionable to appear to make such retirements a subject of pecuniary bargains with individuals, and that the proper method would be to lay down a general law applicable equally to all. With respect to the subject of the 3rd clause, the appointment of a substitute for a Bishop mentally incapacitated, this legislation is not altogether new; and I hope hon. Members will be good enough to consider this clause in conjunction with the provisions at present upon the statute book. Under an Act passed by the Government of Sir Robert Peel, if a Bishop is mentally incapacitated two things may be done. In the first place, an episcopal person—that is to say, a person who has received episcopal consecration, may be appointed to perform episcopal acts in his diocese, and in the second place, a non-episcopal person may be appointed to perform those acts of jurisdiction which do not require the episcopal character. What I would submit is, that this is a very unsatisfactory method of making provision for the oversight of a diocese, and that the 3rd clause makes a great practical improvement in the law. It is not the mere perfunctory discharge of certain duties, such as the institution to benefices or the correction of clerks, nor yet the more strictly episcopal acts of confirmation or the consecration of churches; it is not the mere mechanical performance of duties that you want, but the living influence of the man whose work it is to promote the work of the Church in the diocese standing in the public eye, subject to observation, to criticism, and to all the sense of responsibility attaching to a duly appointed Bishop. And our proposal is that, instead of these merely makeshift provisions, we should adopt a plan under which, speaking generally, the patronage of the Crown that would accrue in the see should be anticipated, and a man appointed at once, with restricted emoluments, and subject to a variety of conditions set out in the Act, but who, except as regards these conditions and restrictions as to emoluments, should be devoted to the diocese and bound to carry on his work, exactly as if he were a Bishop in full possession. These are the two leading propositions of the Bill, and it is on the basis of these two propositions that I trust the House will be disposed to entertain the measure. For certainly the practical evil that it aims to redress is a very serious one, and is felt by the inhabitants of no very inconsiderable portion of England. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Oxfordshire (Mr. Henley) the other night, in the course of the few words which he uttered, said it would be desirable to restrict the operation of this measure to a limited period of time; to that I cheerfully accede. I think it very desirable for two reasons. In the first place, it is sufficiently plain that this principle of resignation, although the need of it be more urgent in the case of Bishops, yet applies equally to parochial incumbents and to cathedral officers, subject to proper guards and checks, which will have to be carefully considered, remembering how large a proportion of clerical patronage is in private hands, and that some of it, as in the case of advowsons, may be classed as a marketable commodity. That is a reason why we shall do well not only to contemplate, but to secure a return of the attention of Parliament to this subject, in order, after the short experience which this Bill will give us,—after a couple of years,—that we may be in a position to judge how far its provisions are capable of extension to other members of the Church. It is also obvious that the remedy which we are now providing may not be altogether sufficient—it may not be the best which the particular circumstances of the case admit of, and in this view, accordingly, it will be very desirable that the matter should be further considered by Parliament. I hope I have sufficiently explained and vindicated the provisions of the third clause as they are proposed by the Government; but I would just say one word in justification of the view taken by the Government and the Archbishop of Canterbury when the Bill was introduced. The words at present in the clause enable a coadjutor to be appointed, not only in the case of mental but physical infirmity. We have, therefore, to contemplate, as a consequence of that provision, inteference in a diocese where the Bishop, being or being supposed to be, physically incapacitated from the discharge of his duties, is unwilling to resign. Consequently, this is to be a coercive process. And if it is to be coercive it is evident that it will require a set of provisions most carefully framed and most elaborately guarded to prevent the process being put into operation where it is not fully justified, or without due consideration of private rights. These provisions, which are supposed to refer merely to cases of mental incapacity, would not be adequate in any manner such as justice would demand if we were to contemplate, not the actual removal of the Bishop by coercion, but the virtual supplanting of the Bishop by placing all his ecclesiastical powers in the hands of a coadjutor Bishop. Another objection of a practical character that has been taken is this. I think it is conclusive. By the 3rd clause the power given in the case of a Bishop being physically incapacitated is not to be put in force unless he shall have failed adequately to provide for the performance of his duties. Everyone will see what would happen under this clause. It is not merely what the Bishop would do, but what the family of the Bishop would do. We should have a number of what are called stop-gap Bishops, makeshift Bishops, stray Bishops returned from the colonies or elsewhere, and we should have again that perfunctory and mechanical performance of the duties set up before the world which would be a blind and a delusion, but which at the same time would totally prevent the Archbishop from declaring that adequate provision had not been made for the discharge of the duties of the incapacitated Bishop. I think that the House will be satisfied that the attempt to extend this clause is unwise, and that if we are to seek to introduce coercive powers at all we must do so at a period when we have more time at our disposal in which to consider with care what safeguards shall be adopted in incorporating such a provision into our law. I think that is all I need now say, and therefore I beg to conclude by moving that you, Sir, do now leave the Chair.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair"—(Mr. W. E. Gladstone.)

Mr. DICKINSON said, he rose on this occasion with considerable reluctance, because this measure had come down from the other House with the authority of the Bishops and of the Government, and therefore it could not be said to be an ill-considered Bill. The Bill had been carefully considered during the early part of the Session, and the circumstances which had given rise to it had been long notorious. It was therefore to be expected that it would have at once commended itself to the good sense of the House, but he was sorry to say that it failed to do so. He did not think the measure took a proper view of episcopal duties and episcopal responsibilities. The Bill provided in a general way for filling up a bishopric when the existing Bishop was incapable of performing its duties. No doubt such a state of things as was contemplated by the Bill was a great evil and scandal, for which some remedy must be found, but while the evil was simple the remedy was equally simple. A Bishop should be treated in the same way as any other public functionary. A Bishop was a public functionary who received public pay for the performance of public duties, and when he was incapable of discharging those duties other provision should be made for their proper discharge, and the emoluments of the office should go to the person who discharged them. He admitted that there was a difficulty in dealing with freehold offices when they were called on to abolish them, because they were open to the argument that the incumbent was ready to go on performing his duties, but that was not the case here. The holder of every public office held it on the condition that he was at all times ready to perform its duties, and he had no right to take the pay of the State when he could no longer perform them. It was for the House to consider whether they would sanction a system of buying out incompetent officials. The question was a serious one as to whether they would extend the principle of giving large retiring allowances to people who, from age or other circumstances, were no longer able to perform their duties. No public officer who became incapacitated should be entitled to more than a fair superannuation allowance, and he approved of the principle that such allowance should be provided for out of the emoluments of the successor. In parts of this Bill there was a looseness to be condemned or a casuistry which was very suspicious. In one clause it provided for the resignation of a Bishop or Archbishop, who was incapacited by age, or mental or physical infirmity from the due performance of his duty; but, in the next or coercive clause, incapacity from age was entirely left out, so that a man who could not leave his bed might still continue to be a Bishop. His (Mr. Dickinson's) view was that when a Bishop was incapable he should cease to be a Bishop, and instead of having a coadjutor appointed to do his work, they should have the real article in the shape of another Bishop appointed in his place. An incapacitated Bishop ought not to retain his seat in the House of Lords, or they might have a lunatic Bishop sitting and voting on great questions of State policy. The 3rd clause of the Bill provided that there should be no power to turn a Bishop out of his office if he himself had made arrangements for the due performance of his duties. The 11th clause related to Archbishops, but it did not remove them for mere bodily infirmity, but only for mental infirmity; so that there was one law for a Bishop and another for an Archbishop. Instead of having a clear and simple cure for a clear and simple evil, there was to be this complicated state of affairs. And then the Bill, instead of being permanent, was only to be a temporary measure, which made it a great deal more objectionable. When the present cause of scandal was removed, probably nothing more would be heard of the subject until the next scandal arose. If a good and effectual reform could not be introduced, it would be better that the scandal should remain until a sound and complete measure could be framed. This was not a case in which tentative measures were necessary, because the nature of the evil for which a remedy ought to be applied was perfectly well known. Then, as to the question of resignation or deprivation, he was astonished at the mode in which the incomes of the Bishops were disposed of by the Bill. When a Bishop who was permanently incapacitated from the discharge of his duties retired into private clerical life, he should have only such an allowance as was sufficient for him in his altered position. The Archbishop of Canterbury had, he believed, £15,000 a year, and the Archbishop of York also had a very large annual income; but, in each of these cases, as in that of all the other Bishops, the income was given because of the dignity and responsibilities of the office, and not because the office was filled by a particular individual. Great demands were made upon them; and when a new Bishop took the place of one who retired from incapacity, he should surely have the means of performing all the accessories of the office in the shape of subscriptions to works of charity and usefulness. Now this Bill provided that if a Bishop resigned voluntarily he should receive one-third of his income, or £2,000 a year, whichever sum happened to be the larger; but the incapacitated Bishop who refused to resign was to be left in possession of his palace, and to receive the whole of his income, with the exception of the sum paid to the coadjutor who was appointed, and which, in the case of a Bishop, was £2,000 a year; in the case of the Archbishop of York, £3,000 a year; and in the case of the Archbishop of Canterbury, £4,000 a year. An incapacitated Archbishop of Canterbury, therefore, might receive £11,000 a year, while the person who did all the work would get only £4,000. If this had been a Motion for the second reading of the Bill, he should have moved its rejection; but, as it was, he hoped the House would be able to remedy its defects in Committee, and with that view he had given notice of several Amendments, to the effect that the person appointed to fill up a see, under the provisions of this Bill, should not be a Bishop coadjutor but a real Bishop, receiving the chief emoluments of the office.

MR. BERESFORD HOPE said, that the hon. and learned Member (Mr. Dickinson) had answered his whole speech by the first two or three words of it. In his first sentences the hon. and learned Gentleman said he could not see the difference between a Bishop and any other public functionary, and therefore he thought that a Bishop should have his pay only as long as he could perform his work. The civil office which was most analogous to the office of Bishop was that of Judge. A Judge had a nominal salary of £5,000 a year but an actual one of £4,500, as about £500 a year of his salary went in circuit expenses. A Judge after fifteen years' service might retire of his own free will on a retiring allowance of £3,500, though he might be in the full vigour of his mind, and quite as capable, if not more so, of performing his judicial functions as he was at the time of his elevation to the Bench. This retiring allowance of £3,500 was saddled on the Consolidated Fund; but under this Bill the Bishop who had to retire from mental incapacity, and who was in all probability very old, would have to share his pittance with the Bishop appointed to discharge the diocesan duties. The country was not saddled with any burden in the matter. The freehold office had to keep the new Bishop and the poor old retired clergyman. He believed that Bishops were something more than mere stipendiaries of the State, and he was anxious to see that view enforced, even though it might, as in this case, touch the pockets of the Bishops themselves; but assuming with the hon. and learned Gentleman that they were no more than episcopal servants of the State, ought they not to be treated as well as its judicial servants? He thought his right hon. Friend at the head of the Government was adopting a judicious course in confining legislation on the subject at present to the immediate wants of the case, and in leaving the general question of parochial as well as diocesan provision for another time. He hoped that the House would be allowed to go into Committee on the Bill.

MR. HADFIELD said, he rose to move that the House resolve itself into Committee on the Bill this day three months. Parliament had passed a Bill this Session depriving, after a certain time, the Irish Bishops of the right to sit in the House of Lords. That had been done for the purpose of establishing religious equality in Ireland; but he contended that the principle of religious equality was not fully established in this part of the United Kingdom so long as the English Prelates had seats in the Upper House, while at the same time the Nonconformists of England had no representatives, and indeed desired to have none, in the House of Lords, and Scotland had long dispensed with episcopal representation. The Churchmen in this country formed only half the population, and he had reason to believe that a majority of their body were desirous that Bishops should be removed from the House of Lords. That sentiment was constantly growing, and very shortly it would prevail. In the interest of the Church of England it was desirable that her Bishops should be relieved from the political services in which they were engaged, and should bestow their exclusive attention on the affairs of their dioceses. Had the Bishops, during the present Session, been faithful to Protestantism? Nine of them, forgetful of their professions of loyalty to Protestantism, for supporting which they received their pay, voted in favour of endowing the Catholic Church, to the indignation and grief of the members of the Church of England—they were, in fact, in favour of giving £2,000,000 as hush-money out of the funds of the Irish Church, if the members of that Church, on its disestablishment, were allowed to go off with £10,000,000. All Catholic Peers, in the House of Lords, on the part of their Catholic brethren, indignantly refused to accept hush-money from their natural foes. During the last thirty years an opinion had been growing in this country that the Bishops must leave the House of Lords. He should like to know what the First Minister thought of the conduct of the Bishops in the House of Lords. They had attacked the character of that right hon. Gentleman, whose name would go down to posterity as that of a man who had achieved probably the greatest work on record. He (Mr. Hadfield) would not be satisfied if this Bill were allowed to proceed. It was an unseasonable measure, and he hoped the First Minister would postpone it till another Session. Last year twenty-one Prelates voted against the Suspensory Bill, and this year all the Prelates voted against the Irish Church Bill, except one, who voted for it, but that Bishop having voted for it once, never did so again. There was an interest in another place inimical to the interests of the United Kingdom. A Notice was given in this House that the state of the Church in Wales should be considered next Session; and an hon. Member had intimated that he would try the question next Session whether Bishops should or should not retain their seats in the House of Lords. The noble Lord the Member for Liverpool (Viscount Sandon) was alarmed at the progress of Ritualism, and was resolved to bring forward the question, and had given notice of his intention to do so. All these things showed that there would be no rest for the Prime Minister until he eased the public mind as to the presence of those Gentlemen (the Bishops) in the other House. He should like to call attention at a future period to the history of the Bishops since the Revolution. [" Question."] He would say no more on that subject at present; his opinions on removing the Bishops from the House of Lords would be heard throughout the length and breadth of the country, and he would now move, as he had intimated, that the House will, upon this day three months, resolve itself into the said Committee.

MR. D. DALRYMPLE, in seconding the Motion of the hon. Member for Sheffield, said, he had no sympathy with that hon. Member's anti-episcopal view. The question of what was to be done with incapacitated Bishops and clergy generally was one of the most difficult and intricate subjects with which the Church and the country had to deal, and it had been repeatedly discussed at Church Congresses and elsewhere. This Bill was very imperfect in its character; it was very little known, and it had been very little discussed. It was brought forward at the fag-end of a fatiguing Session, and he objected to its being passed lest it should be taken as a precedent in determining the basis of future arrangements in reference to the clergy. Such a Bill ought to have more consideration than could possibly be given to this. The hon. Member for the University of Cambridge (Mr. Beresford Hope), who drew an analogy between Bishops and Judges of the land, forgot that the arrangement with respect to the Judges had been made by a House of Commons containing a good many lawyers; and he feared that this Bill was not the less objectionable that it had clearly on it the stamp of a House containing a good many Bishops.

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "this House will, upon this day three months, resolve itself into the said Committee,"—(Mr. Hadfield,)

—instead thereof.

MR. BOUVERIE: I am very sorry, Sir, to say, after the best consideration I can give to this important Bill, in the very limited time allowed for the consideration of it, I shall feel it my duty to vote with the hon. Member for Sheffield (Mr. Hadfield) if he goes to a division. As a permanent measure the Bill is admitted to be thoroughly defective; and that admission is made by the Amendment of the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Government for limiting the operation of the Bill to two years. The Bill deals with only one corner of a great subject. Perhaps the House is not aware that there is a prohibitory statute which renders it penal for the inferior clergy to resign under the circumstances in which this Bill will sanction the resignation of Bishops. That being the state of the law, I ask—Is it right that we should pass an Act of Parliament expressly providing for that step being taken by incapacitated Bishops which we have made it penal for the inferior clergy to take? I think that neither the Bishops who framed this Bill nor the Government can have given any attention to the state of the law upon the subject. In this respect alone, then, the Bill is most thoroughly deficient and incomplete, and as a permanent measure it cannot be defended for a moment. Therefore the First Minister is right in proposing to limit its operation to two years, and the ground is taken from under all argument based on the permanent advantages to be derived from the Bill. Regarding it, then, as a temporary measure, we know that it is designed to meet two or three particular cases referred to by the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Dickinson). One is that of the see of Winchester and another that of the see of Exeter. A more munificent Prelate than the Bishop of Winchester never adorned the Episcopal Bench; the generosity of spirit he has displayed on the Ecclesiastical Commission, and which I have had the opportunity of knowing, has been most exemplary. He has not been placed under the restrictive system established by the Church Commission Act; he holds the estates of the see under arrangements which come down from the time of the Reformation; and, if rumour speaks truly, the income derived from them in modern times is something like £16,000 or £18,000 a year. No one appreciates more highly than I do the eminent character of the right rev. Prelate; but are we really about to provide that he shall have a retiring pension of something like £6,000 a year? In point of wealth the bishopric of Exeter is far below that of Winchester. The see of Exeter, which is also held upon the old tenure and not under the Church Commission Act, is one of the poorest; and I believe the income is something less than £2,000 a year. For years the Bishop has been totally incapacitated for discharging the duties of the see, and it is proposed to pension him with £2,000 a year, a sum equivalent to the whole income of the bishopric. Of course, no one would wish to see a Prelate of such distinction and ability left to starve because he is incapable of discharging his duties; but what is the fact? It is well known that the Bishop enjoys one of the prebends of Durham Cathedral; his income from this source is supposed to be £5,000 or £6,000 a year, and the office is a sinecure, the only duty attaching to it being that of residence for a certain time in a beautiful cathedral town. Ought not that income to be sufficient for the Bishop of Exeter? Ought not he to feel that the duties of his episcopate are, as far as he is concerned, entirely neglected because he is unable to discharge them? The comparatively humble revenues of the Bishop of Exeter might surely be surrendered for the appointment of a Bishop to discharge those duties. As far as I know the facts of those two cases, I must say I think we are hardly justified in making the special arrangements provided by this Bill in order to meet them. I cannot help urging on the Government the propriety of dealing with the whole subject of the retirement of Bishops and clergy in a more general way. I admit that provision should be made for retiring allowances, but I contend that in these two particular instances about as little of a case has been made out as possibly could be made. I shall therefore vote for the Amendment.

Mr. MOWBRAY said, he had come down to the House to give his humble assistance to the Government in carrying through this measure, which was of a strictly remedial character. He thought they had some reason to complain of the manner in which opposition was offered to the Bill at its present stage. The second reading had been agreed to without cavil or debate on Monday night. [“No, no!”] He repeated that the Bill had been read a second time without any opposition having been offered to it, and he submitted that it was contrary to all the usage and practice of that House that an Amendment of this kind should be moved on going into Committee without notice being given. His observations did not apply to the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Dickinson) because he seemed to feel there was an obligation laid on him not to respond to the invitation made to him to move the rejection of the Bill. His observations applied to the Members for Kilmarnock (Mr. Bouverie), Bath (Mr. Dalrymple), and Sheffield (Mr. Hadfield). Perhaps the course taken by the hon. Member for Sheffield, with his well-known anti-episcopal views, should not excite much surprise, though even from him they had a right to expect some notice. But something different was to have been expected from the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Kilmarnock. That right hon. Gentleman was an Ecclesiastical Commissioner, and was intimately conversant with questions such as that under discussion. He was, moreover, the greatest stickler for the observance of the minutest rules and forms of the House, and was ever ready to call those to Order who transgressed them. For him, therefore, to put himself forward to lead the Opposition against the Bill at that stage was certainly a most extraordinary thing. The right hon. Member for Kilmarnock, possessing as he did a full knowledge of the ecclesiastical revenues, might, at least, in going into the case have given the House a statement more consistent with the real facts than the one he had submitted. He led the House to believe that the Bishop of Exeter had an income of between £5,000 and £6,000 a year from his prebendal stall at Durham.

Mr. BOUVERIE: I have no knowledge of the fact myself, but it is generally understood that such is the case.

Mr. MOWBRAY said, he wished to know whether the right hon. Gentleman meant to insinuate by that that he adopted the general understanding? Did he not from his position as an Ecclesiastical Commissioner know that the income of the Bishop referred to was only something between £3,000 and £4,000? [Ironical cheers.] Hon. Gentlemen might cheer, but he submitted that there was a great deal of difference between £3,000 and £5,000, and £4,000 and £6,000. When such a statement as that made by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Kilmarnock was made ad invidium against a right rev. Prelate, the House had a right to demand a precise knowledge of the facts. In what way did the right hon. Gentleman regard the question? First of all he started with a most extraordinary proposition. He urged the House not to pass this Bill as regarded the Bishops, because they would hereafter have to do something for the inferior clergy, That might or might not have been a good argument previous to the year 1856; but in that year Parliament passed Bills allowing the Bishop of London (Bishop Blomfield) and the Bishop of Durham (Bishop Maltby) to resign. It was, therefore, too late now to tell them that there was anything penal in the Bill. The right hon. Gentleman further said that this was not a permanent Bill but a temporary one, and that it only applied to two Bishops. He (Mr. Mowbray) submitted that that was not a fair way of putting the case. The right hon. Gentleman exaggerated the incomes of the Bishops in order to create a prejudice against the Bill. Looked at properly it would be found that the Bill was general in its provisions, and it could be made applicable during the two years it was to remain in force to other cases besides those of the two right rev. Prelates. He did not at that period of the Session wish to detain the House with anything like a speech. He wished merely to give his support to Her Majesty's Government in a measure which he considered both timely and seasonable. It was quite true that it had come up at rather a late period of the Session; but the Prime Minister had told them early in the Session that the subject was likely to become matter of legislation. The hon. Member for Sheffield was naturally triumphant that Parliament had disestablished one branch of the Church of England, and he grudged that Church even the small remedial measure under discussion. But if they remembered that the Church of England was identified with the State and was of course subject to legislation, this small remedy ought not to be withheld. He considered that the Bill was a practical remedy for a practical grievance, and that it had been brought forward at the proper time. Both the hon. Members for Bath and Stroud, while objecting to the Bill, admitted that some system of resignation for Bishops was absolutely necessary. With respect to the second portion of the Bill, he thought that the slightest consideration of the arguments urged by the Premier must prove that whatever questions might arise as to coadjutor Bishops, the Bill was an improvement upon the law as it at present existed under the Act of 1843. He would not follow the hon. Member for Sheffield through all his references to profane history and the voluntary system. But he must protest against one of his remarks. The hon. Member claimed that the Nonconformists constituted a majority of the people of England; but how far that was the case might be judged of by the fact that in 1861 the Dissenters in the House opposed Lord Palmerston and Sir George Cornewall Lewis and prevented a religious Census of the people of the kingdom being taken. The hon. Member, therefore, had no right to appeal to imaginary numbers.

MR. HADFIELD said, the right hon. Gentleman was quite wrong. The hon. Member for Leeds (Mr. Baines) proposed that an enumeration should be made throughout the kingdom.

MR. ACLAND said, he felt bound to bear his humble testimony to the urgent necessity in the South part of England for some practical measure of this kind being passed without delay. It was not necessary to go into details in answer to his right hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock (Mr. Bouverie). He would not discuss the question of the precise income of these two Bishops; but his right hon. Friend knew very well the constant inconvenience in the Ecclesiastical Commission of not being able to refer to a responsible Bishop, or to bring his personal and moral influence to bear on any part of his diocese. He urged the Government to lose no time in passing this measure as a practical remedy for a great and admitted evil. There was wisdom, he thought, in placing Parliament under the necessity of re-considering this matter in all its bearings, after a short experience in the working of this measure. He hoped the Government would not give way.

MR. KINNAIRD said, he had been most anxious the other night that this Bill should be explained, and it was only in consequence of the state of his right hon. Friend the First Minister's health that a full statement on the subject had not been given. He must say that the arguments used by his right hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock (Mr. Bouverie) had convinced him that it would not be desirable to proceed with the Bill. This was a very wide question, and he thought it unfair to legislate for the heads of the Church, who had very large incomes, while they provided no retirement for the humbler clergy, with far smaller incomes.

MR. M'LAREN wished to say a word respecting the conduct of the Dissenters at the last Census. He ventured to say that the statement made by the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Mowbray) was a very inaccurate statement indeed. The Dissenters merely objected to the Census being taken in a particular way. The Census of 1851 took an account of all who attended places of worship, and the results arrived at were most important; but under the Census of 1861 the Government proposed to ask each person to what denomination he belonged, and the great mass of inhabitants in large towns, who attended no place of worship at all, would have returned themselves as members of the Church of England. This led to statements which for statistical purposes were perfectly useless. If the present Bill had proposed to increase the number of Bishops in the House of Lords, he should have opposed it; but as it was only proposed for the purpose of re-placing in the diocesan work inefficient persons by efficient ones, he should support it.

MR. BOWRING said, that his constituents took great interest in this subject, in consequence of the unsatisfactory state of the diocese of Exeter for many years past. He should oppose the Amendment.

MR. GLADSTONE: Sir, I am desirous of saying a few words in reference to the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Perth (Mr. Kinnaird). It was undoubtedly perfectly competent for any or all the Members of this House to oppose the principle of this Bill upon the Motion for your leaving the Chair. There can be no question about that. For myself, I took it as a great courtesy and kindness on the part of the House to allow, as it did, the second reading of the Bill to pass without discussion. I am bound to say that I conceive it quite possible the hon. Member for Sheffield (Mr. Hadfield) may have waived putting any Amendment on the Paper when he saw the Notice of the hon. Member opposite (Mr. Collins) to move that the order for the second reading be discharged. With regard to the question itself, I think that the speeches we have heard from Gentlemen connected with the diocese of Exeter will weigh very greatly with this House, as well as the speeches made by Gentlemen opposite. It must be borne in mind that the Church of England is an Episcopal Church, and that it is presumed, whether rightly or wrongly, that a Bishop is of some use. But there happen, unfortunately, to be four or five dioceses of which it may almost be said that they have no Bishops, and all that we propose is to provide Bishops for them, provided the present holders of the sees are willing to cooperate with us. The hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Dickinson) says there is great difficulty connected with this question of retirement. I myself began by stating that if you are to frame an universal and compulsory system of retirement the matter would be most difficult. I, for one, should hesitate to set myself to such a work. But, as far as voluntary resignation goes, I venture to say that the difficulty is small. The resignation of Bishops is admitted by the ecclesiastical law; and so strongly did the House feel upon this matter of resignation in the year 1856, that it passed a Bill to enable two particular Bishops to retire. The real question is, whether or not we are prepared to apply a practical remedy to a very serious practical evil, and on that question I will now take the judgment of the House.

Question put, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

The House divided:—Ayes 112; Noes 26: Majority 86.

Mr. Gladstone

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," put, and agreed to.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 (Resignation of Bishop).

Mr. DICKINSON moved, in page 1, line 15, to leave out from "is" to "he" in line 16.

Mr. GLADSTONE said, he thought it would be better to retain these words, as they set forth that the Bill was to proceed merely upon the principle of voluntary resignation. He was not sure whether that system would prove to be altogether sufficient; but if it did not, they might then proceed in the direction suggested by the Amendment. He had no objection to the insertion of the word "permanent" before "physical infirmity," as their desire was not only to encourage resignation where it was necessary, but to discourage it where it was not.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Mr. DICKINSON then moved in line 16, after "or," to insert "permanent."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON said, the next Amendment of which he had given notice raised the question as to the amount of retiring allowances to Bishops and Archbishops. He could not admit the justice of the parallel sought to be established by the hon. Gentleman opposite (Mr. Beresford Hope). Judges came from a class in large and lucrative practice, and frequently sacrificed a large portion of their income on taking office. Bishops, on the contrary, came from a class not remarkable for large incomes; and the justification for the very high incomes which they received as Bishops was said to be that the emoluments were necessary for the office, not for the individual. A retired Bishop would have no social or public demands upon him calling for a large income; and during a long episcopacy he had many opportunities of providing for his family. The clause proposed that his allowance should amount to one-third of the income of the diocese, which he (Mr. Dickinson) thought was excessive. A larger portion of the revenues ought to remain with his successor, by whom the duties of the office were to be discharged. He further contended that there ought not to be different grades of retiring allowances for Bishops, but that they ought to be placed in the same category; they ought to have enough to maintain them in comfort, but not more. He should, therefore, move in line 27, to leave out from "such" to "pounds," in line 30, and insert "to the retiring Archbishop two thousand five hundred pounds, and to the retiring Bishop one thousand five hundred pounds." He first begged to move, in line 24, to leave out from "to" to "Bishop" in line 25.

MR. GLADSTONE said, that to give to this subject the full discussion which it might require would necessitate the introduction of a good deal of matter; but he would state shortly the view which the Government took, and he hoped it would commend itself to the Committee. Nothing was easier than to say that the Bishops, like the Apostles, ought to live according to evangelical poverty. Burke, however, had a very pregnant remark on that subject. He said, that undoubtedly all Bishops and clergy ought to have the mind of evangelical poverty, and to live in that spirit; but he added, although they might not be aware of it, that was equally the duty of the laity. And, certainly, throughout the New Testament, where the spirit of evangelical poverty was so strongly insisted upon, no clear distinction, that he had ever been able to find, was drawn between its application to the clergy and the laity. That, however, was one extreme view; the other was, that the Bishops should be treated as great Officers of State, the nearest analogy that could be found being that of a Judge. To the Judge, considering the relief which he gained from certain expenses, substantially three-fourths of his salary were given as a retiring allowance. According to the spirit of evangelical poverty, the Bishop, he supposed, ought to get no retiring allowance at all. But the line which the Government had drawn was one-third of his episcopal income. In framing a Bill of this kind it was absurd to leave out of sight all regard to the existing conditions of society. Parliament thought it desirable that there should be an Established Church, and also that very close relation should exist between the clergy and the rest of the community, with some relation also to rank. Further, it was justly thought of importance that there should be a married clergy, and hence the influence of the family upon the Bishop; and considerations of social status could not be excluded. The Government, accordingly, had taken the sum of £2,000 as that which would pretty fairly represent the minimum that would enable a person who had sat in the House of Lords to maintain his status with tolerable respectability; and they had introduced the provision as to one-third of the episcopal income as the general rule to which they wished this Bill to conform, being a very small allowance compared with that which was given to Judges. It might be perfectly true that the Archbishop of Canterbury, considered as a man, or considered as a gentleman, would be able to live upon the sum named in the Amendment. It must be remembered, however, that the Archbishop of Canterbury was the first subject after the Blood Royal, and that the Archbishop of York was the third. Under all the circumstances, he did not think the provision contemplated by the Bill for the members of the hierarchy could be regarded as extravagant, bearing in mind that many private gentlemen were in the enjoyment of fortunes of £20,000, £30,000, £40,000, £50,000, £60,000, and he knew not how many more thousands a year.

MR. WHITWELL asked whether the retiring allowance in the case of the Bishop of Winchester was to be calculated on the scale named in the Bill, or upon one-third of his former income, which amounted, he believed, to £15,000?

MR. GLADSTONE said, the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Kilmarnock (Mr. Bouverie) had stated that under the scale proposed the Bishop of Winchester would have a retiring allowance of £6,000 a year. He could not say he thought that an allowance of £6,000 a year was necessary for a gentleman who had occupied the position of a Bishop, but then it was not for the sake of individuals that this Bill had been brought forward. Its object was to get a see clear, in order that an efficient man might be put into it. Considering the subject from a pecuniary point of view, he might remark that he had not ascertained, as a fact, that the income of the Bishop of Winchester amounted to £18,000 a year; but, whatever it might be, he had no doubt that that excellent Prelate made a good use of it. Supposing the Bishop's income to be £18,000 a year, it was obvious that annual sum would become part of his private property as long as he lived and did not resign his see. Under this Bill, however, he would receive his pension of £6,000 a year. At the same time his successor would be paid the Parliamentary income of £7,000 a year, so that there would be an addition of £5,000 a year to the general funds of the Church applicable for incumbents. He trusted that this explanation would be satisfactory.

Mr. DICKINSON said, he was of opinion that the superannuation allowance ought not to be deducted from the income of the incoming Bishop.

Mr. BERESFORD HOPE said, that hon. Members should bear in mind that this was a measure to promote resignations; and, however anxious a Bishop might be to promote the welfare of his diocese, he could hardly be expected to reduce himself and his family to beggary. He knew that the Bishops, as a body of men, were torn to pieces by subscriptions. As the Prime Minister had truly remarked, the Church of England desired to have a married clergy; and how then was a Bishop or other clergyman who desired to devote a great portion of his income to charitable objects to make due provision for his family unless he insured his life? Probably, however, if his retiring allowance was made too small, he might be induced to let the insurance fall in, and thus his own family would be defrauded of their reasonable expectations. In a matter of this kind the highest generosity was the highest wisdom, and he trusted, therefore, that the Amendment would not be carried.

Mr. YOUNG asked whether it was intended that the outgoing Bishop should retain his seat in the House of Peers?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL explained that the Bill consisted of two parts. The first part had reference to the case of an absolute resignation, in which event the incoming Bishop would have full possession of the see, except that his revenues would be charged with the payment of his predecessor's pension. Of course, therefore, the retired Prelate would not continue to sit in the House of Lords. The second part related to the appointment of a coadjutor Bishop. In that case there would be two Bishops in the same see—one incapacitated, and the other doing the duty of the diocese. This was wholly different to the former case, because the coadjutor would not succeed to the see until the decease of the incapacitated Prelate.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. GLADSTONE said, he had now to propose an Amendment which would, he believed, meet the views of his hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Dickinson). If it were true that the Bishop of Winchester would, on resigning, be entitled to a pension of £6,000 a year, while the income of his successor would be only £7,000 a year, it would almost be an absurdity to make the pension payable out of the new Bishop's income. The House of Lords had accordingly provided that the £6,000 should be paid out of the common fund. But if the proviso became law the new Bishop of Winchester would, in the event of the present Bishop resigning, obtain his full salary without any charge upon it; whereas any person subsequently becoming Bishop of Winchester, would have his income charged with the payment of his predecessor's income. He, therefore, proposed that the proviso should be amended so as to run thus—

> "Provided that if in the case of the retirement of any Bishop appointed before the year 1832, such retiring allowance should exceed the sum of £2,000, the excess shall be paid by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners out of their common fund."

The result would be that in the event of the retirement of the Bishop of Winchester £7,000 would be saved to the Church.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON said, he desired to see sub-section 2, relating to episcopal residences, expunged from the clause. Every Bishop who resigned ceased to be a Bishop. ["No, no!"] It might not be so canonically, but, under this Bill, a Bishop who resigned was defunct as a Bishop. When a Bishop resigned, and a new Bishop was appointed, he maintained that the episcopal residence ought to go to the real Bishop, and not to be retained by the practically defunct one. Let them not seek to keep up the "sham" of having unreal as well as real Bishops. When a Bishop resigned he should retire into private life; and the episcopal residence attached to the see should pass to the actual Bishop who did the work of the diocese. He would, therefore, propose the omission of sub-section 2 from the clause.

MR. GLADSTONE said, he hoped the Amendment would not be pressed. It was not intended by that portion of the Bill to lay down as a general rule that the retiring Bishop was to keep the episcopal residence. What was asked was that confidence should be given to the Advisers of the Crown up to this point, that if in a particular case they thought it expedient to assign an episcopal residence they should have power to do so. They would be responsible for that exercise of discretion, and if they exercised it wrongly they would be called to account as in regard to other matters where they had discretionary powers. If it were said—"Why should there be such confidence given to the Advisers of the Crown?" it was sufficient to reply that there might be some cases where it was desirable. He would take the case of the late Bishop Blomfield, who had been far gone in paralysis as the result of his almost superhuman and certainly his most indefatigable and untiring labours through a long and honourable episcopate. To have removed him in that condition from Fulham would have been cruel; and, at the same time, the term of his natural life could not, in all human probability, have been prolonged for more than a year or two. It was in view of such a case as that that this power was now asked for.

MR. WHITWELL said, he hoped the Amendment would be accepted. It might be very difficult for the incoming Bishop to obtain a residence as convenient as the episcopal residence attached to the see; and the new Prelate would hardly be deemed to be a true and properly appointed Bishop, if he were not invested with the residence hitherto appertaining to the bishopric.

MR. ACLAND said, he regarded that as partly a question of social feeling and personal convenience, and partly a question of practical efficiency. It might be a hardship to ask an aged Prelate, who was suffering from nervous debility, to clear out of his private study. On the other hand, he could not see what great hardship it would be to the incoming Bishop if he were asked temporarily to provide himself with a plain unostentatious town residence in a hired house in the scene of his labours until a more comfortable residence could be prepared for him.

MR. BOWRING said, he was in favour of leaving the clause as it stood.

MR. O. MORGAN said, that the case of the Bishop of Exeter, which had been repeatedly referred to, was not in point, as the Bishop did not reside at the episcopal palace in the City of Exeter, but in a splendid palace which had been built out of his funds at Torbay.

MR. MONK said, he thought that if they were dealing with deans, canons, or incumbents they would not insert a provision allowing a retiring dean to retain the deanery close to the cathedral, or a retiring incumbent to retain the rectory house, and he did not see why a different rule should be applied to a retiring Bishop.

MR. DICKINSON said, he hoped they would not have any more cases in future of Bishops sticking to their bishoprics until they could not remove from their episcopal residences. At all events, if such a case occurred again, that matter should be left to the good feeling of the incoming Bishop. They ought not to make a rule for exceptional cases, and why were Bishops to be treated differently from other men?

MR. GLADSTONE suggested to insert after "Her Majesty may" the words "upon special grounds," as likely to meet the difficulties of the case.

Words inserted.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 3 (Proceedings to prove the incapacity of a Bishop).

MR. GLADSTONE proposed to strike out the word "any" in line 24, and insert the word "permanent."

Amendment agreed to.

MR. DICKINSON said, the clause read now "by reason of permanent mental infirmity." He proposed to introduce after "mental" the words "or physical," and to add after "infirmity" "or age." The Bill as it came down from the House of Lords provided for physical or mental infirmity, and, looking to what had occurred in certain dioceses, the House of Commons ought to proceed on that principle.

Mr. GLADSTONE said, that a great many Members had waived their objection to the Bill on the understanding that it should be limited to mental infirmity. His hon. Friend was asking the Government to undertake one of the most difficult tasks of legislation—namely, while maintaining that regard for existing interests, which was always observed in this country, to arrange and adjust a machinery for ejecting a number of distinguished persons who held freeholds from offices with incomes of from £4,000 to £15,000 a year. That would be wholly beyond the means of the Government, and would be fatal to any enactment of the kind at the present period.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. DICKINSON moved, at the end of the clause, to add "and such certificate shall be deemed to be a representation within the second section." His object was that in a case of mental infirmity there should be appointed a real instead of a coadjutor Bishop.

Amendment negatived.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

Clause 5 (Relative positions of Bishop and Bishop coadjutor).

Sir WILFRID LAWSON proposed, in line 6, after "privilege," to insert, "with the exception of a title to a seat in the House of Lords." If a Bishop was unfit for his episcopal duties, it was quite clear he was unfit for his legislative duties.

Mr. GLADSTONE said, he would not dispute that primâ facie the Amendment appeared reasonable and proper. But if the retiring Bishop was not to retain his seat in the House of Lords, was the seat to pass to the coadjutor Bishop? ["No."] Well, then, the hon. Baronet was opening a very large constitutional question, and he (Mr. Gladstone) should prefer its being raised broadly and directly. It was certainly an inconvenience and an anomaly that a person not in his right mind should have a seat in the House of Lords. But if Prelates afflicted with mental infirmity were to be turned out of the House of Lords, what was to be done with lay Peers similarly situated? Moreover, if this strict rule was adopted, a little legislation would be necessary for the House of Commons too, for upon one occasion an hon. Gentleman walked quietly out of a lunatic asylum, came down to the House, and gave his vote upon a question which involved the life and death of a Ministry, as the hon. Baronet would doubtless remember, for he was in the House at the time.

Sir WILFRID LAWSON said, he was sorry the recording of this vote against the right hon. Gentleman should affect his view of the question before the Committee.

Mr. GLADSTONE said, he remembered another case in which a Gentleman was brought in on the Liberal side of the House in 1841, and voted on a question of vital importance, having no mind at all.

Amendment negatived.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 10, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 11 (Application of the Act to Archbishops).

Mr. BERESFORD HOPE asked whether it was intended that in the case of an Archbishop the coadjutor would simply exercise the episcopal duty of the see attached to the archbishopric.

Mr. GLADSTONE answered in the affirmative.

Clause agreed to.

Remaining clauses agreed to.

House resumed.

Bill reported, with Amendments; as amended, to be considered To-morrow, and to be printed. [Bill 263.]

CANADA (RUPERT'S LAND) LOAN BILL.

[BILL 253.] SECOND READING.

(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

Order for the Second Reading, read.

Mr. STANSFELD, in moving that the Bill be now read a second time, said, that as he understood the Bill was about to be opposed by the hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Monk) he would shortly remind the House of the history of the negotiations that had taken place. These negotiations began in 1865, when four of the Canadian Ministers came to this country to discuss with the Government of the day various questions connected with the confederation of the North American Provinces, among which came up this question with regard to the transfer of Rupert's Land to the Dominion of Canada. The Canadian Ministers said they were willing to treat for the transfer on the ground of an indemnity to be paid to the Hudson's Bay Company, provided that the loan to be raised for this purpose should be covered by an Imperial guarantee. This was agreed to by the Government of the day, and his right hon. Friend the present Secretary for War, who was then Secretary for the Colonies, wrote a letter to the Governor General of Canada, in which he distinctly promised that if negotiations were entered upon for the transfer of Rupert's Land from the Hudson's Bay Company, and if those negotiations should be successful and a loan were required to be raised under the sanction of an Imperial guarantee, the Government would then apply to the Imperial Parliament to grant the required guarantee. This was in June, 1865. The next step took place in March of the present year, when Sir Frederick Rogers by direction of Earl Granville wrote to the Canadian Ministers, Sir George Cartier and Mr. M'Dougall, who had come over to this country as Canadian delegates to negotiate for the transfer, that if the negotiations were successful the Government would, on their part, be prepared to fulfil the expectations held out in Mr. Cardwell's despatch of the 17th of June, 1865, and would propose that the Imperial Parliament should guarantee a loan of £300,000 for the purpose of completing the transfer. There were two Acts of Parliament passed having reference to this matter, to which he must now refer. The one was the Act passed in 1867, and which was known as the Confederation Act. The other was an Act which was passed through both Houses without discussion last year, to enable the Hudson's Bay Company to transfer Rupert's Land to the Dominion of Canada. The third section of that Act had attracted the attention of his hon. Friend (Mr. Monk), and it was that on which he understood his hon. Friend mainly based his opposition to the second reading of the Bill. By that section the Government were empowered to negotiate with the Hudson's Bay Company the terms upon which the latter should surrender their rights and territories to the Dominion of Canada; and it was provided that those terms should not be accepted until they had been embodied in a deed of the company, and in an Address to the Crown from both Houses of the Legislature in the Dominion; and there was also a proviso that those terms of agreement should impose no charge on the Consolidated Fund. The question raised the other night was whether the effect of that section was not to estop and prohibit the Government from proposing to guarantee a loan that Canada was seeking to obtain in order to enable her to carry out the terms of the agreement with the Hudson's Bay Company, and to estop and prohibit Parliament—if one Parliament could estop and prohibit any other Parliament—from assenting to such a guarantee being given. He need scarcely say that such could not have been the intention of the parties concerned. At the time that the Act was passed negotiations were being conducted upon the understanding that the Government for the time being would propose to that House that such a guarantee should be given. The true meaning of the proviso was merely that Parliament should preserve its liberty of action in the matter. The intention was nothing more than this—that in the deed which embodied the terms of the surrender of the Hudson's Bay Company, and in the Address to the Crown from the two Houses of the Dominion which embodied the acceptance, there should be nothing which in any way decided the question of a guarantee; that it should be left free to the Government to propose and to the House to agree or not to agree to the guarantee as they might think proper. In accordance with that stipulation in the Act of last year neither the draft deed of surrender, nor the Canadian Address contained any allusion to an Imperial guarantee. He made this proposal to the House not as one of the terms which had been agreed on in those documents, but to carry out the old arrangement; even if the House were to think it expedient to reject this proposition of the Government, still it could not be denied that the Government were adhering to their old pledges and those of their predecessors, and that was his justification for making the proposition confidently to the House.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a second time."—(Mr. Stansfeld.)

Mr. MONK rose to move that the Bill be read a second time upon this day month. He regretted that the question was brought forward at this late period of the Session, and he must protest against the preliminary stages of measures of this importance being brought on—as had been the case with this Bill—at three o'clock in the morning or during the quarter-of-an-hour before six on a Wednesday afternoon, when it was impossible that they could be discussed. Under these circumstances, he did not think it necessary to apologize for taking the earliest opportunity that had offered itself of calling the attention of the House to this subject and of informing the British tax-payer of the nature of the additional financial burden which it was proposed by means of this measure to lay upon his shoulders. The sole ground upon which the right hon. Gentleman based this measure was, that in June 1865, a promise had been given by the Imperial Government to the Government of Canada that, in the event of the latter acquiring Rupert's Land by purchase from the Hudson's Bay Company, the former would propose to Parliament to guarantee a loan to enable that purchase to be carried into effect. He had two objections to offer to the Bill now before the House. In the first place, he objected altogether to the principle of guaranteeing loans to the colonies; and in the second place, he objected to this particular guarantee, which he believed to be opposed not only to the letter, but to the spirit, of the Rupert's Land Act of 1868. In objecting to the principle of guaranteeing loans to colonies, he claimed the support of the present Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, both of whom, at the time when the proposed loan for the Intercolonial Railway of Canada was before the House, had expressed strong objections to loans of that character. The Prime Minister said the general system of colonial guarantees had come into just discredit within the walls of Parliament, and that it was only in cases of the highest urgency that they should be granted. The Chancellor of the Exchequer went even further upon that occasion, and urged upon the House, if they were determined to grant the loan, to make at least some stringent provisions that the money should not be spent for other purposes—that it should not stick to the fingers of those who had to handle it. These were truly prophetic words. He wondered whether the Government was now satisfied, or whether the Law Officers of the Crown were satisfied with the temporary use made of that loan advanced for the Intercolonial Railway. His second objection was based on the words of the Rupert's Land Act, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 105. At the end of the third section there were these words—

> "Provided, further, that no charge shall be imposed by such Terms upon the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom."

These words were plain enough: yet, in the face of that proviso, it was now proposed to impose a charge on the Consolidated Fund for the purpose of making good the purchase of Rupert's Land. The negotiations which led to the purchase had been entered into in the present year, but he contended that the words in the Act of last Session ought to have prevented Her Majesty's Government from entering into such an arrangement as that to which this Bill was intended to give effect. He granted that the Government had only gone the length of making a promise, the fulfilment of which was subject to the pleasure of Parliament; but the promise so made must be fulfilled in spite of the words of the Act of last Session. It might be said that Parliament was at liberty to undo this year what it had done last, but he did not think that was a course which his right hon. Friend at the head of the Government would recommend. He hoped the House would have some further explanation of the matter. He begged to move, as an Amendment, that the Bill be read a second time upon that day month.

Sir CHARLES DILKE, in seconding the Amendment said, what he desired was that the House should have some general statement from the right hon. Gentleman at the head of the Government, as to the principle on which the Government intended to act in respect of colonial grants. He believed that his hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. Monk) did not mean to press his Amendment to a division if there was a clear and satisfactory understanding as to the policy which should guide the Government in future.

Amendment proposed, to leave out the word "now," and at the end of the Question to add the words "upon this day month."—(Mr. Monk.)

MR. GLADSTONE said, he had heard the speeches of his hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. Monk), and his hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea (Sir Charles Dilke) with great satisfaction. He thought it obvious that they might put out of their minds the question raised a short time ago with regard to the intermediate transactions under the Railway Loan Act. The only use they could make of it was to take care that in this Bill the provisions with regard to the appropriation were sufficient. The subject was only relevant to that extent. His hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester need not have been afraid that any complaint would be raised against him by the Government; but on behalf of the Government he had to say that they had introduced this Bill first, on the ground of faith, and, secondly, on the ground of policy. The ground of faith was sufficient to justify the Government in recommending the arrangement to the House; but he was far from saying that because the Government were bound in the matter, Parliament was bound in it also. He did not say that because the Executive Government had entered into an arrangement of this kind, Parliament ought, therefore, to sanction it. When the Government of this country entered into any arrangements of this nature, everyone knew that Parliament was supreme. All the Government could do was to undertake to make a representation to Parliament. It could not bind Parliament; but, at the same time, Parliament had always felt it was not desirable to needlessly call in question any discretion exercised by the Executive Government. Parliament had not been in the habit of calling in question the discretion of Government as to such matters, unless it appeared that there had been an absence of reason in the exercise of that discretion. Thinking now as he thought in 1865, he thought that the engagements entered into by the Government with Canada at that time were amply justified by reason and prudence. He did not recede from the expressions which had been referred to by his hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester. He was ready to repeat them. Before 1865 the practice had been growing up of giving guarantees to the colonies for local and secondary objects. He contended that such guarantees ought not to be given except for objects of broad Imperial policy; but the purposes in regard to which the Government of Lord Palmerston, of which he and his right hon. Friend (Mr. Cardwell) were Membest, entered into the engagement with Canada were, in the highest and strictest sense, Imperial purposes. No one knew better than his hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester that in former times the North American colonies were entangled in a vicious system of dependence on this country. The Government wished to engender in them a spirit of independence in financial matters. They wished to wind up the old system and see the North American colonies make a new start in colonial life; but we could not have extricated ourselves from the vicious system to which he had referred without paying for it. Neither in public nor in private life could one escape the consequences of former errors without some cost. To put an end to the old system once and for all, the Government made arrangements with Canada which bound them to ask Parliament to assist the North American Provinces with the Imperial credit for purposes well known to the House. That was not to be a beginning, but an end. The House would remember the great transition through which our loyal fellow-subjects in Canada were passing at the time. The proposal of the Government was based on grounds the sufficiency of which he hoped his hon. Friend who had moved the Amendment might be disposed to recognize. The Government were aware of their responsibility in the matter, but it was one which they felt themselves perfectly justified in assuming.

MR. SINCLAIR AYTOUN said, he objected to the Bill for two reasons. The first was that he believed it to be in contravention of the third section of the Rupert's Land Act, which had been read to the House. From a despatch, dated June 17, 1865, and sent by the present Secretary for War (Mr. Cardwell), who was then Colonial Secretary, to Viscount Monck, it appeared that, at a conference between four representatives of the Canadian Government and as many Members of our Government, the Canadian Ministers undertook to negotiate with the Hudson's Bay Company for the termination of their rights, on the condition that the indemnity, if any, should be paid by a loan to be raised by Canada under an Imperial guarantee—a proposal which was assented to on the part of the Crown; and, therefore, independently of the Rupert's Land Act, the Canadian Government had an assurance that the Government of Lord Palmerston would apply to Parliament to sanction a guarantee. In 1868 came the Rupert's Land Act, which empowered Her Majesty to receive the territory of the company, and hand it over to Canada, upon an Address from both Houses of the Canadian Legislature; and the Act contained words which secured us against any arrangement which could impose a burden upon the tax-payers of this country. The Act forbade such an arrangement, but the arrangement was made without it; and the Address of the Canadian Legislature expressed satisfaction that, in fulfilment of the expectation held out in the despatch of Mr. Cardwell, the English Government would be prepared to propose to Parliament an Imperial guarantee for the loan of £300,000 to be paid to the Company. It was perfectly clear that the letter of the Act was complied with, and its spirit departed from on a most vital point. It was clear the Canadian Government made the arrangement on the faith of the English proposing the guarantee; but if this guarantee were to be given, what confidence could be placed in the words of an Act of Parliament? The Act said an arrangement might be made to effect a certain object provided no charge was placed on the Consolidated Fund; and if such a charge were to be placed upon it Acts of Parliament would afford no security in the future. Some months ago a Gentleman, not now in the House, pointed out the clause, and said it was perfectly impossible that the guarantee could be given, and that was the impression it produced on all whose attention was called to it. The effect of it was to throw off their guard those who were opposed to guarantees, to prevent them from asking for Papers, and to deter them from calling attention to the subject. For these reasons he would support the hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Monk) if he went to a divison. There were other reasons which should induce the House to refuse the guarantee. If the territory ceded to Canada were really valuable, as it was represented to be, why should any charge be thrown upon us, and why should not the Canadian Government undertake the liability which the arrangement involved?

Mr. CARDWELL said, that having been a party to the arrangements of 1865, he felt bound to say a few words upon the subject. He shared to the utmost extent all the objections which were raised against colonial guarantees in general; but the question now was whether the arrangement of 1865, entered into for the purpose of bringing about a more wholesome state of things between us and our North American Provinces, was or was not an arrangement which the House would feel it expedient to ratify. In 1865 an intimation was received of that which had now become a reality—namely, the intention to form the Provinces of British North America into one great Confederation. This arrangement was made between four Canadian Ministers and those who represented the Government of that day, and the Report of it was then laid before Parliament, and the project of confederation was afterwards brought before Parliament by the Government of which Lord Carnarvon was Colonial Secretary in 1867. Parliament passed the Confederation Act, knowing the terms on which the Canadian Government had arranged to acquire the company's territory. Just before Parliament was dissolved, in 1868, the Rupert's Land Act was passed to supply a defect in the Confederation Act, which did not enable Her Majesty, without further statutory powers, to accept the surrender of the rights of the company and transfer them to Canada. He was cognizant of the proviso in the third clause when the Act was passing through Parliament, and he understood it was inserted with a purpose different from that suggested by the hon. Member who had just spoken. It was framed, as he understood, for the purpose of preventing anything being done under that Act which should commit Parliament. Having been most careful to carry out all that was involved in his own despatch, the Government felt that nothing ought to be done which could by implication fetter the freedom and discretion of Parliament. He believed that to have been the simple meaning of the clause; and he was fortified in that belief by other considerations. It was not in the power of Parliament to say that a future Parliament should be less free to do anything than their predecessors were. He held this to be the true and necessary construction of the proviso in the 3rd clause, and he did not think that anything of importance turned upon it. Coming back to the question of policy, he held that this arrangement, which was contemplated in 1865, and which the House was now asked to ratify, was an arrangement, not exclusively for the benefit and advantage of Canada, but was one which was largely beneficial to this country. We suffered from the inconvenience and disadvantage of exercising rights of sovereignty over one of the most inaccessible regions of the earth—the Hudson's Bay Territory. Continual embarrassment arose on account of the traversing of that extensive region by bodies of Indians, who entered from time to time the neighbouring American State of Minnesota; no settled Government was established there; and when he was Colonial Secretary there was a continual demand for creating the Hudson's Bay Territory into a Crown colony. A more undesirable proceeding on the part of the British Government there could not possibly be, for they had no advantage to expect from such an arrangement, which must necessarily have been attended with expense and risk; and, therefore, he was most happy to be a party to an arrangement by which—the sovereignty of this region remaining with the Crown—the rights which the Sovereign exercised were transferred to the Colonial Government. In return, all that we did was to give a guarantee for a loan of £300,000, and when the House went into Committee it would be seen that adequate security was taken in the Bill. He therefore recommended this measure to the House, not merely on the ground that the Government had pledged its faith in respect of the guarantee, for such a pledge would not bind Parliament—but on the ground of policy. As to pledges given by Government, he ventured to think that whenever Parliament thought the Government well advised in thus acting, it was good policy not to discredit the Crown and enfeeble the hands of the Executive Government by refusing to assent to that pledge. He did not put the case any higher with regard to the pledged faith of the Government, but he rested his support of this measure chiefly on the ground of policy. Canada had interests in this territory not possessed by ourselves, and in inducing her to undertake this duty, and thus relieving ourselves from a charge which in some form or other would have come upon us, he believed we had made an arrangement which was advantageous to the mother country—an arrangement cheaply purchased by the guarantee of a loan for so small a sum as £300,000.

COLONEL SYKES said, that these guarantees were decidedly injurious to our financial comfort, and we had ten or a dozen of them at this moment. Among the rest were the Greek Loan, the Sardinian Loan, the Russian-Dutch Loan, and several others, of which the tax-payers of this country were paying the interest, and of which they would have to pay the principal in the end. It was highly impolitic and injurious to the interests of the country that we should embark in these guarantees at all. The Prime Minister of the country had stated that the faith of the country was pledged to it; but the right hon. Gentleman who had just sat down modified that by saying that it did not bind a future Parliament. No doubt, technically, it did not bind a future Parliament; but any such pledge given to a foreign Government, or to one of our colonies, was morally binding; and, therefore, reluctant as he was to give his consent to any further guarantees, still, in this case, he thought we could not help ourselves, and he felt bound to give his consent to the guarantee.

Question put, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

The House divided:—Ayes 65; Noes 10: Majority 55.

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Bill read a second time, and committed for To-morrow.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS (LOANS) BILL.—[Bill 238.]

(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Goschen.)

THIRD READING. ADJOURNED DEBATE.

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Question [3rd August], "That the Bill be now read the third time."

Question again proposed.

Debate resumed.

Mr. W. M. TORRENS presented a Petition from the inhabitants of Bloomsbury in favour of a restriction being placed on the power of the Metropolitan Board of Works to sell more than one-twelfth of land to be taken from Finsbury Park.

Mr. W. H. SMITH said, that in rising to move that the Bill be re-committed, he had no wish to put an end to its progress. His object was to have the incidence of rating under Clause 22 defined more clearly. The sewers rate had been always regarded as a landlord's rate, and in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, the tenant had always deducted it from his rent. If, however, the Bill passed in its present form it might happen that the small occupiers who held their houses from year to year would be called upon to pay the new rate that was to be substituted for the old one which was paid by the landlord. He wished to insert the following proviso after the word "board" in line 8—

> "Provided always, That such first mentioned proportion shall be assessed and raised in like manner, and subject to the same provisons as the sewers rate, to be made under the Act of the eighteenth and nineteenth Victoria, chapter one hundred and twenty."

He therefore moved that the Bill be re-committed.

Amendment proposed,

> To leave out from the words "Bill be" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "re-committed to a Committee of the whole House in respect of a proviso to Clause 22, and a new Clause for restricting the sale of park lands,"—(Mr. William Henry Smith,)

—instead thereof.

Mr. W. M. TORRENS said, that if the Bill were re-committed, he should like to ask the opinion of the House on a proposal similar in object to, though somewhat different in terms from, that which he submitted to the Committee a few days ago. He desired to take from the Metropolitan Board of Works the power of selling or letting any greater portion than 1-12th part of the lands vested in the Board for the purposes of any park within the metropolis. The Committee decided by a majority of 6 that a clause to that effect should be introduced into the Bill; but that clause was subsequently struck out by a majority of 23. The supporters of the proposal had been told they were making a claim on behalf of particular metropolitan parishes to have a new tax imposed on the whole community for the benefit of local interests. That assertion had been strenuously denied, though the majority appeared to think that the allegation was well-founded. It should be borne in mind, however, that the preponderance of unofficial Members was in favour of the proposal, which was negatived by a majority comprising 26 hon. Gentlemen who held Office. Twelve metropolitan Members, including the two Members for Middlesex, voted in favour of his proposal, and but one solitary representative of the metropolis recorded his vote against it. Up to the present time there had not been a single indication, whether by Petition, public meeting, or remonstrance in the Press, that the inhabitants in the metropolis were adverse to the proposal. He might remark that the Act of 1857, which was promoted by the Board of Works itself, set forth in the Preamble that the plans, maps, and specifications of the lands about to be taken for the two parks at the East-end of the metropolis, at the north and south sides of the river respectively, had been lodged with the Clerk of the Peace for Middlesex, and had been approved by Her Majesty's Commissioners of Public Works. It was thus stated beforehand what the arrangements were to be, and the matter was not left to the mere discretion of the Board of Works. The 8th clause, indeed, stated the exact number of acres —250—purchased for the parks. The Act stated that when the purposes of the Act had been sufficiently accomplished, and the lands had been imparked, the Board of Works should be at liberty to dispose, at most, of one-twelfth part of the land it had acquired for the park. Let the House, then, hold the Board of Works to its bargain, and to the litera scripta of the Act which had been passed. Let it now enact by a clause that that Board should not have power at most to sell more than that proportion of the lands in their diminished area which it was not empowered by the Act of 1857 to sell out of the greater area. It was a mockery to tell the districts affected that they might bring in a private Bill next year. The part of the land which the Board of Works proposed to sell for building purposes, and which the President of the Poor Law Board argued the other night was worth £76,000, was the best part, the cream, in fact, of the whole. Parliament gave that to the people of the East-end of the metropolis. Let it keep it for them, and not tell them it was willing to sanction bad faith. It was not fair or just towards the inhabitants of those crowded districts to deprive them of almost their only means of obtaining healthful recreation and breathing space. He asked on their behalf for nothing unreasonable from the House. Never had a greater misrepresentation fallen from the lips of man than had fallen — unintentionally, of course—from those of the Prime Minister, when that subject was last under discussion. The right hon. Gentleman had been led most erroneously to believe he was justified in saying that that was a project to levy a new tax on the metropolis at large for the benefit of two localities. He denied in every sense which language permitted that the fact was so. Those two localities did not ask 1*s.* either from the public Treasury or from the metropolis at large. The Board of Works was the common trustee for the interests of the whole of London; it had taken its large powers under certain stipulations in an Act of Parliament; and it was not at liberty to go back from those stipulations now. Parliament had created the power of that Board, and was bound under the highest dictates of political honour to see those whom he represented out of that difficulty, and to show that it had just as much regard for their interests, although they might be comparatively powerless, as if they really composed one of the great parties or factions in the State. He therefore hoped the House would interpose its authority between the inhabitants of the East-end of London and an irresponsible body, and insist on inserting a clause in that Bill literally carrying out the stipulation of the Act of 1857, by which the Board of Works was not empowered to sell more than one-twelfth part of any land vested in it for the purpose of forming any public park in the metropolis.

MR. AYRTON said, his hon. Friend had, no doubt, exhibited great pertinacity in pressing his views on the consideration of the House, and he had not hitherto thought it necessary to enter into a discussion of the accuracy of the statements his hon. Friend had made to induce the House to adopt his conclusion. He had not done so because he regarded his hon. Friend's Motion as wholly inopportune, if not entirely irregular; for it was an attempt to introduce into a general measure a clause for the benefit of his hon. Friend's constituents—a proceeding contrary to the spirit of the Standing Orders of the House applicable to Public Business, and also of those applicable to local business, which declared that where they sought to alter the provisions of a local Act for the benefit of a particular locality they could do that only by private Bill, when they had to make their statements of fact before a Committee upstairs, which decided impartially. The speech they had just heard afforded an excellent illustration of the wisdom of that rule, and the necessity of adhering to it; because, otherwise, they would have an hon. Member, who himself knew nothing of the subject, inspired by anybody, by any of his constituents, by vestrymen and agitators, who gave him instructions, on which he was, of course, compelled to act without having the means of obtaining authentic information. That was the unfortunate position in which his hon. Friend had been placed. [MR. W. M. TORRENS: No!] Well, let them see what were the facts. The vestry of Islington, through their clerk, promoted a Bill to have a park, in which they proposed that the Government should make a grant of £50,000 or £60,000 in aid of their scheme. By that Bill they proposed to get 300 and odd acres of land, and gave to their own commissioner an unlimited power of selling any part of the land to be so taken. The House of Commons, in the most unmistakable manner, in a full House, by a very large majority, condemned that project, and no further progress in it was made. But the Metropolitan Board of Works introduced a Bill of a different kind, by which it was proposed that Board should have a discretionary power to make a park as large as they should think fit. [Mr. W. M. TORRENS: No!] He had the Bill there; his hon. Friend had not got the Bill, but only the Act, and probably he had never seen the Bill. The Bill proposed that the Metropolitan Board of Works should make a park as large as they might think fit, within the limits of their compulsory powers to take land, which went to the extent of 250 acres. Under that Bill the Metropolitan Board of Works proposed to sell eighty acres of the land. Therefore, when his hon. Friend set up his theory that the Metropolitan Board of Works adopted the principle in the face of the public that they would deal with only twenty acres out of 250, the fact was they proposed to deal with eighty acres, and that quantity they were to sell at their discretion out of the land they were to take, which was not to exceed 250 acres. His hon. Friend told the House there was a public engagement not to sell more than twenty acres. What happened was this—The landed proprietor appeared before the Committee, as he had a right to do, to oppose the Bill, and said—"You shall not compulsorily take my land from me to sell eighty acres again. You shall take only twenty acres more than you propose to make into a park, because you have no right to dispossess me of my land in order to speculate with it." He carried his opposition further, and got a clause introduced providing that the land which was re-sold should be re-sold to himself. So the compact was between the owner and the Board of Works, that they might take twenty acres more than they intended to use for the park, but that they should sell it back to him. And how? Why, ten years after the park was made, at the improved value it would then have acquired; so that they would then have a means of indemnifying themselves, in part at least, for the expense of making the park. His hon. Friend had represented that to be a compact between the Board of Works and the public that the Board should be allowed to sell only a twelfth part of the land. The Bill and the Act, as passed, gave the Board of Works a discretionary power to make a park as big or as little as they pleased within the limits of their compulsory authority to purchase. It was not a compulsory Bill as regarded the Board; it was only a permissive Bill enabling them to take the land. After the Board of Works had got the Bill it had to consult the opinions of the rate-payers of the metropolis, who were so adverse to embarking in the enterprize, that the Board for six years did nothing, and they were not bound to do anything at all. They had an absolute discretion in the matter; although, of course, being elected, they were responsible to their constituents, the rate-payers. At the end of six years they appointed a surveyor to consider what should best be done to carry out the Act. The surveyor investigated the value and convenience of properties in the north of London, and made a report—which he then held in his hand—suggesting that they should buy a certain property; and as an inducement to them to buy it the surveyor called their attention to the fact that they would be able to appropriate and sell twenty acres. That report gave the value of the twenty acres on the conditions under which they were likely to sell them; and the surveyor pointed that out as a source from which they would be recouped. The Metropolitan Board proceeded upon the faith of that report, and made the purchase. When the Metropolitan Board had done so, and spent the money of the rate-payers, his hon. Friend now said that the House ought not to proceed with this Bill unless the rate-payers of the metropolis would make a present of land to his constituents. [Mr. W. M. TORRENS: I never said anything of the sort.] Not in so many words, but it came to that. There could be no greater breach of faith than such a transaction would involve. Now, what was the solution of the difficulty? His hon. Friend's constituents were most anxious to have a larger park than the rate-payers were willing to give them, and therefore he wanted to alter the law in order that his constituents might get the benefit. But was the House to stop the progress of a Bill for the benefit of the inhabitants of the metropolis generally until this concession was made to his hon. Friend's constituents? His hon. Friend knew very well that the Metropolitan Local Government Act was passed on this principle, that the Metropolitan Board should alone regulate the expenditure to be paid by the rate-payers at large, because they are elected by the rate-payers at large; but if any district thought that a particular improvement was more for its own benefit than that of the metropolis it would have to pay for that improvement; but it might apply to the Metropolitan Board to know how much the district and how much the metropolis should pay. When an improvement was made in the City, for instance, it was usual for them to say to the Metropolitan Board—"We will pay two-thirds provided you pay one-third." That was constantly done. And now his hon. Friend had presented a Petition from his constituents, saying that they wanted a bigger park. By all means let them have it. They could buy the twenty acres from the Metropolitan Board, subject, of course, to the owner's right of pre-emption. As far as the Metropolitan Board were concerned, those who represented the district had only to say—"We want more land than the rate-payers are willing to give us, and we are ready to pay for it." That was the proper solution of the difficulty, and it was in the hands of the vestry which his hon. Friend represented. The parish of Islington was very rich, and its rates were very low. He submitted to the House that they would encourage the very worst principle if at the end of the Session, when Bills might be delayed, they were to recognize the right of Members to come down and ask for grants to their constituents out of the money of the rate-payers at large.

MR. MACFIE said, that Liverpool, with about one-sixth of the population of London, and not at all so wealthy, was expending about £1,000,000 on parks for the people, and the whole population were benefited, though these parks were distant about two miles from the central and more populous portion of the town. And now they were told by the hon. Member for the Tower Hamlets (Mr. Ayrton) that this park was for the benefit of the East-end of London. He had been accustomed to live near lakes, but what would lakes be if they were huddled behind great houses? Let not the Seven Sisters Road be shut out from the park by houses, but let the people there have a sight of the cheerful omnibuses and carriages passing by. He hoped that for once this Session the Government would be left in a minority.

COLONEL SYKES said, the accumulation of words had mystified the question very much. He had thought he had understood it, but he perceived he had something to learn. However, the question appeared to him to be this. It was thought it would be for the benefit of a certain crowded part of the metropolis noted for its poverty and wretchedness that a certain portion of land should be bought for a park—he cared not what the number of acres were or by what means they were to be got, they were to give fresh air, and the means of recreation for the people. An Act of Parliament was passed for the purpose, and had his hon. Friend the Member for Finsbury (Mr. W. M. Torrens) quoted rightly from the Act or not, that only one-twelfth of the land could be sold? If he had, and if the portion of land was only 120 acres, then the Metropolitan Board would have only ten acres to sell, and not twenty; but, honestly, if the land was bought for a park, it should be devoted to a park.

SIR WILLIAM TITE said, that the original Bill gave the Metropolitan Board power to buy 230 or 250 acres, he did not remember which; and for a long time they found it very difficult to get land at all. At last they obtained 120 acres. Originally the price was to be £500 an acre for 250 acres, but the Government were to find half the money ["No, no!"] He said "Yes." He heard Lord Palmerston, then standing in his place, say that the Government would pay £60,000; but the House did not allow him to carry his intention out. Well, the Metropolitan Board had to buy the land themselves, and they bought these 115 or 120 acres. And now they were going to sell twenty acres; the Act of Parliament did not empower them to sell more, and there were two plots—one fronting the road, the other fronting the railway, but the only point in dispute was as to ten acres abutting on the road. The parties who had opposed their buying it in the first instance had now purchased the land opposite and wanted to have the benefit of the frontage which the park gave. Therefore, they came and opposed this Bill. These persons said—"Don't take the frontage from us and prevent us from making a great deal of money by it. Don't sell it and don't build on it yourselves." Now, nobody in the world wanted the money more than the Metropolitan Board. And while his hon. Friend on the one hand said—"Don't increase the rates, and don't add another shilling to our burdens," he also said he would not let the Metropolitan Board have the means of recouping themselves to the extent of £70,000, which they might without doing harm to anybody. The Metropolitan Board had the power to sell the land, and had the right to sell it, and to interpose to prevent them would be most unfair.

MR. C. DENISON wished to say that, although he had voted with the hon. Member for Finsbury (Mr. W. M. Torrens) the other night, the explanation offered by the Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Ayrton) and the hon. Member for Bath had changed his opinion on the subject.

Question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question," put, and agreed to.

Main Question put, and agreed to.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

EAST INDIA REVENUE ACCOUNTS.

COMMITTEE. [Progress 3rd August.]

Considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Question again proposed,

"That it appears by the Accounts laid before this House that the total Revenue of India for the year ending the 31st day of March 1868 was £48,534,412; the total of the direct claims upon the Revenue, including charges of collection and cost of Salt and Opium was £8,957,464; the charges in India, including Interest on Debt, and Public Works ordinary, were £32,362,402; the value of Stores supplied from England was £970,926; the charges in England were £5,710,880; the Guaranteed Interest on the Capital of Railway and other Companies, in India and in England, deducting net Traffic Receipts, was £1,540,435, making a total charge for the same year of £49,542,107; and there was an excess of Expenditure over Income in that year amounting to £1,007,695; that the charge for Public Works extraordinary was £602,462, and that including that charge the excess of Expenditure over Income was £1,610,157."

MR. J. B. SMITH remarked upon the continued increase of expenditure in India, and complained that, although at the time money was wanted to make railways in India, it was promised that their construction would be followed by a reduction in the Army, the cost of the force was still £16,000,000, notwithstanding troops could now be transported from one end of the Empire to the other in as many days as it formerly took months. A very hard-hearted Chancellor of the Exchequer was wanted in India, and he hoped Sir Richard Temple would bring about a more satisfactory state of affairs than his predecessors had. He approved the principle laid down by the right hon. Member for Devonshire (Sir Stafford Northcote), that accounts relating to reproductive works should be kept distinct, and was glad to hear that future accounts would be framed on the principle of keeping ordinary and extraordinary expenditure separate. As it was now proposed to borrow upon these public works, he suggested that the loans should be called Public Works Loans, and that an effort should be made to raise the money or some portion of it in India. The people of India would see that the money was spent in works of great benefit to themselves, and he believed the investment would become popular among them. He had for years past advocated the construction of these works by borrowed money, and ventured to assert that India might be covered with every necessary public work without cost. The Erie Canal, one of the greatest works in the world, had been made without costing the State 1*s.*; it had been constructed for small vessels in the first place with borrowed money; the tolls had paid off the loan and enlarged the canal, and now it was proposed to make a ship canal of it; and all through the transaction, the policy of the State had been to attract traffic by a reduction of toll. Manchester, in like manner, had been supplied with water and gas without costing the people a ¼*d.* in taxation; and the whole of the Liverpool Docks had been constructed on the same principle. The advantages to the inhabitants in each case were, of course, immense; and India might be similarly benefited without cost to the tax-payers if public works were constructed with money borrowed on State credit and the security of tolls; for while the outlay on public works would be re-paid by the revenue derived from them, wealth would be 1,000 times increased by increased production. In the course of an interesting discussion a short time ago, by the Society of Engineers, upon irrigation in India and Spain, Mr. Allan Wilson, from the Madras Presidency, described the extraordinary magnitude of the works in that part of India before our conquest. It had been estimated there were in fourteen of the principal irrigated districts of the Madras Presidency, upwards of 43,000 tanks and channels in repair, besides about 10,000 out of repair, having probably 30,000 miles of embankments and 300,000 separate masonry works. Colonel Baird Smith stated that the Ponacry tank in Trichinopoly had an embankment of thirty miles long and an area of sixty to eighty square miles, and Mr. Wilson expressed surprise that the Government had neglected these great works, and allowed large rivers to flow into the sea unused for agricultural purposes. Besides the profit to the State in the way of increased commercial prosperity, canals were accounted valuable for sanitary purposes. Mr. Login, an engineer of the Ganges Canal, said the strong argument in favour of canals is, that they are calculated to prevent those awful visitations which sweep off hundreds of thousands by starvation. It was estimated that the Ganges Canal prevented the death of as many thousands as perished in Orissa, and in the next year, 1866-7, the canal repaid to the country more than its total cost, while it was the means of feeding little short of 2,500,000 of people. It appeared that the water in the canals in the Madras district was comparatively clear, and though the current was slight no great deposit was formed; but the water in the Ganges was full of mud, and a rapid current was there needed to prevent the accumulation of sediment. Now, it was proposed to make some of the Ganges Canal works on the same level as those of Madras; but it was the opinion of the engineers to whom he had just referred, among whom was that eminent authority, Mr. Hawksley, that such a course of proceeding would be altogether in error. He therefore trusted that the Indian Government would not spend £2,000,000 or £3,000,000 on such an important undertaking without making further inquiry. In proof of the benefits derived from irrigation he instanced the large profits yielded by several works of that kind, and he thought that such results ought to encourage the Indian Government to persevere in making works of irrigation. Sir A. Cotton said the opinion had been expressed that no great profit can be gained on works of irrigation for many years to come. His experience of profits were—

	Cost.	Profits.	Per cent.
Godavery ...	£337,000 ...	£160,000...	45
Kistreah ...	191,000 ...	29,000...	15
Upper Calleroon Anicut ...	24,000 ...	64,000...	270
Lower Calleroon	34,000 ...	52,000...	150

The total aggregate profits on the Madras works, over and above 4 per cent interest, was £2,820,000 on a total cost of £560,000, or five times the cost of the works after paying interest and cost of repairs. The Indian Government wanted revenue, and it was very clear that the most effectual mode of obtaining it was by irrigating their lands and thereby increasing their rental. Mr. Allan Wilson, contrasting the difference between dry and irrigated land, stated that of fourteen Ryotwaire districts of Madras, 2,000,000 acres irrigated yielded a revenue of £1,500,000; 25,000,000 acres of dry land only £2,000,000; while, if it had been irrigated, it would have produced upwards of £18,000,000. As regarded the gain to the cultivator, independently of the certainty of reaping a crop, irrigated lands yielded a crop of 20 rupees an acre; dry land, 6 rupees an acre. So that the ryot was better able to pay 3 rupees per acre for irrigated land than 1 rupee for dry land. If the Government wanted to increase the revenue and at the same time benefit the cultivator, they had only to promote irrigation. He was glad to learn that the Government of India were taking measures to promote the growth of forests in their territory, for the manure which ought to be used to enrich the land was to a great extent dried and used as fuel. In alluding to the growth of cotton, he observed that twenty-five years ago certain persons in the manufacturing districts of this country entertained great apprehensions in consequence of those districts being mainly dependent for the cotton they needed upon one source of supply. At that time 75 per cent of the raw cotton used in this country came from America, and at the time of the occurrence of the civil war the proportion supplied by America had increased to 85 per cent. In 1848 the present President of the Board of Trade moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the growth of cotton, and the Committee, after investigating the matter, were satisfied that a large quantity of excellent cotton could be obtained from India. In the following year his right hon. Friend moved that a Commission should be sent out to India further to inquire into the subject; but the East India Company refused to afford any assistance in prosecuting the inquiry. However, the manufacturers of Lancashire felt the importance of obtaining information on that head so greatly that the Manchester Chamber of Commerce sent out a commissioner of their own, who, though he unfortunately died, left behind him sufficient evidence to prove that the desired object of procuring supplies of cotton from India might be attained. It was represented to the Government from time to time that, without Government assistance, it was impossible for India to produce what was wanted—namely, a good quality of cotton; but the reply made to that representation was that it was contrary to the principles of political economy for the Government to interfere in such a matter, and that when there was a demand there would be a supply. That statement was true as regards most countries, but it did not apply to India. In America the cotton was produced by men of capital, but in India it was the production of a miserable set of ryots; and one might as well look for improvements in agriculture from Irish cottiers as expect improvements in the cultivation of cotton from the class of cultivators he had referred to. The Government said it was contrary to political economy to do anything in this matter. But there was as great a demand for tea as cotton, yet that demand brought no tea from India until the Government, acting upon the economical principle, wisely tried the experiment of planting tea gardens, and exhibiting to the natives the practicability of extensively growing it, and now they succeeded in growing tea of better quality than was grown in China. There was now a large growth of tea in India, and very probably it would be exceedingly extended. Then, there was the article of quinine. It fetched fabulous prices, but no one ever thought of growing it till, on the recommendation of the noble Lord the Member for King's Lynn (Lord Stanley), plants were introduced in large quantities, and now India not only supplied itself, but in all probability quinine would become an article of considerable export. If the Government could do all this, why not try experiments in the growth of cotton? But Government had always treated Lancashire people as merely seeking their own interests. Now, they did seek their own interests undoubtedly, but they could not do so without seeking also the interests of India. During the American War the total exports from India amounted to £67,000,000, and of that £34,000,000 consisted of cotton. The total exports now were £50,000,000, and he supposed they would have to pay some £30,000,000 this year for cotton. Was not India, then, interested in the growth of cotton, seeing that one-half of her exports consisted of that article? They had been imploring the Government for years, and at length they had got a Cotton Commissioner. They were very fortunate in his appointment, for the gentleman appointed had his heart in the work. He went to the province of Candeish and saw they were using a very inferior kind of seed. He imported seed from Berar, where the best cotton in India was grown. The very first year after sowing this seed the sowers obtained so much more for it as paid the price of their rent twice over. He said, then, that the Cotton Commissioner had been a great benefit to India. But he must warn the Indian Government that they would have competition to encounter. America would still grow cotton, and of a better quality than India, unless India bestirred herself. America was about to import large numbers of Chinese labourers, and India could not keep the valuable cotton trade she possessed unless she bestirred herself. The great disadvantage of India was that, while America grew 500 lb. per acre, India grew only 50 lb. per acre. India had also this disadvantage, that, for want of roads, the cotton had formerly to be carried on the backs of bullocks from Berar to Bombay for shipment, a distance of 500 miles. India had now railways and the finest rivers in the world. The expense of the conveyance of cotton from Berar to Bombay on bullocks was 2*d.* per lb., by railway 1*d.* per lb., and by the Godavery, which flowed through the centre of the best cotton-fields, half-a-farthing per lb. The Government of India must, therefore, bestir themselves. Not many years ago we were reproached with the charge that if we were driven from India the only memorial we should leave behind would be pyramids of empty beer-bottles. That reproach no longer existed. We should now leave behind us ever-enduring monuments of our greatness and beneficence in the magnificent public works already existing, which, with those the Government projected, would confer greater benefits on the people of India than were recorded of the conquerors of any age or nation. The late Mr. Cobden could never be persuaded to take part in Indian affairs; his answer always was we had no business there. Well, but we were there; we had taken upon ourselves a great responsibility, and it was our duty to face it; we had destroyed the established Governments of the country; and if we left India now, anarchy and confusion must be the result. The English Government was the best that India ever possessed, and life and property were never so secure as under our sway; nevertheless a foreign yoke was always hateful. Let us endeavour, by just and beneficent rule, to make our Government a blessing to our Indian fellow-subjects.

MR. BAZLEY said, he had listened with great interest to the very able speech of the Under Secretary for India on Tuesday last, but he must deplore that so much procrastination occurred in all that concerned India. He hoped that in future Sessions the Indian Budget would be brought forward earlier. No doubt the accounts quoted by the hon. Gentleman were accurate, but they should be more distinct. He agreed in the suggestion that there ought to be an investment account for reproductive public works, and indulged the hope that a permanent source of revenue would arise from judicious Government investments in railways, canals, and irrigation. The cost of these works should be the foundation of the proposed investment account. He believed it would be found that the increase in our Indian expenditure, since the period of the Mutiny, was little less than £20,000,000 per annum, and this amounted to a heavy burden on the people of India. He approved very much of the statements which had been made in "another place" with regard to public works, and was much pleased to find that an eminent authority had said that 30,000 miles of railway were necessary for India. That country had 4,000 miles of railway, constructed at a cost of £80,000,000 sterling; Great Britain had 14,000 miles of railway, which cost £600,000,000; while America had already 40,000 miles of railway, which cost £550,000,000; and there was a prospect that before long the railway investments in the United States would amount in value to £1,000,000,000. It was clear that India was still lamentably behind Great Britain in railway enterprize. He was glad to see that railways in that country would be constructed in future at the sole cost of the Indian Government, because he believed there would be great national economy in making railways a portion of public works. We spent £100,000,000 during the Crimean War, and why should not our capitalists, in the cause of peace and industry, raise £100,000,000 for Indian railways? The Government might as well engage in these works as depute a railway company to execute them. He would go further, and advise the Government to buy up the lines already opened in India, and establish one uniform public railway system for that country. He believed that if that course had been pursued in England the railways would have been more cheaply constructed, there would not have been so many duplicate lines, and there would have been greater convenience, combined with a lower rate of charge. He did not see why the public works should not become a source of permanent and enduring revenue. The establishment of an Agricultural Board would probably give a stimulus to the productions of India, which could send us three or four times her present amount of exports. Her coffee was of an improved quality, owing to the application of manure to which the soil of India had hitherto been a stranger. Her growth of cotton could be largely increased. Unhappily great distress existed at present among the cotton interests in the manufacturing districts, hence the necessity of still greatly increased supplies of raw cotton. He had every reason to believe that the losses on fixed investments in the cotton trade amounted to £30,000,000 sterling, and the losses on floating capital to an equal amount; so that by the disasters connected with the cotton trade that branch of industry had sustained a total loss equivalent to £60,000,000. A continuance of the present state of depression, coupled with the emigration of the operatives, would go far to remove the trade itself to some more prosperous country. He deplored the existence of the protective system in America; but, with all its evils, the manufacturers in America were able to keep their mills going, while we could only work ours for a very limited period. He gave the present Government full credit for endeavouring to bring about a healthier state of things as far as this could be accomplished by legislation. With that object in view he trusted they would persevere in their efforts to develop not only the cotton trade in India, but remunerative traffic in the various products of the soil.

MR. C. DENISON said, he regretted that the discussions upon Indian subjects were always deferred to so late a period of the Session that Members were utterly wearied and worn out, and unable to give to the matter in hand that attention which its importance demanded. If it were true that this year upwards of forty Members had come down to hear the statement of the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for India, he hoped that might be taken as an augury of good for the future; the subject only required to be popularized to become full of interest to Members. Some improvements had been made, but still he thought the accounts of Home expenditure, as placed upon the table this year, were not satisfactory or easily intelligible; it would be much better if they were classified, as was done with the Indian expenditure, under different heads. A separate Financial Statement and Budget for the public works would also, he thought, be highly desirable. The ordinary expenditure, as laid down by Sir Richard Temple—the permanent guaranteed interest on railway capital, and the extraordinary reproductive expenditure together made up £10,000,000, and it would surely be interesting to the House to know how these £10,000,000 were spent, and to what extent the works themselves were reproductive, With regard to the Customs, he hoped that the Government might before long see its way to a reduction of the export duty of almost every Indian product. The manner in which the salt duty was levied was far from satisfactory. It produced a net revenue of £5,500,000; but the proportion of that which fell to the Punjaub and the North-west Provinces was not more than £1,400,000. As regarded the revenue from opium, he hoped the hon. Baronet the Member for Carlisle (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) and those who thought with him would bring forward their objections in some shape admitting of the question being thoroughly talked out; he should then be prepared to meet them. On that point he fully agreed with Sir Richard Temple, who declared that—> "If the Chinese will have opium, they may as well have it first-rate from us as second-rate at home, and they may as well have it taxed as untaxed."

The Chinese would have opium: there was no doubt about that; and if that was the case, he did not see why a profitable article was not to be supplied to the Chinese market. At the present moment, however, it was idle to discuss the question; we simply could not do without the revenue from opium. If that stopped from any cause, all the expenditure upon public works must cease at the same moment. The postal service in India ought to be a source of revenue; but, at present, there was a deficit, and this could hardly be regarded as in process of diminution, for the Government had lately doubled the minimum weight of letters to be carried without increasing the tariff. The telegraph entailed a net expenditure of £200,000 and upwards, and he wished to ask the Government what portion of this outlay belonged to India proper, as this was not shown in the accounts? There was another item as to which explanation was desirable; £68,000 were put down for a small arms manufactory in this country. He wished to know where the machinery was erected for making the small arms ammunition for India, and also what was the total estimated cost of the gunboats for Bombay Harbour? The hon. Member for Stockport (Mr. J. B. Smith) had expressed his belief that matters might be so arranged that the public loans for the public works of India might become a favourite investment with the natives, but it was a remarkable fact that out of the £87,000,000 that had been subscribed for Indian railways, only £1,000,000 was held by the natives; and that out of the £100,000,000 of which the Indian public debt consisted, only £15,000,000 were held by them, scarcely any portion of that sum having been taken up since the Mutiny of 1856-7. There were two reasons explanatory of that fact. In the first place, the usual rate of interest in India was 12 per cent, or more than double that offered by the Government; and, in the second place, the confidence of the natives in Government securities had been shaken in consequence of the Government having confiscated that portion of their debt which was the property of the rebels. Upon the much-debated subject of Indian railway finance the hon. Member for London (Mr. Crawford) the other day had taken great pains to point out the great injustice that had been done the guaranteed railway companies by the recent despatch of the Indian Government, in which they were charged with mismanagement and extravagance. It appeared to him (Mr. C. Denison) that the East Indian Railway was well deserving of the confidence of the Government. It was, however, only fair to state that the despatch had not been drawn up for presentation to Parliament, or as an attack upon the railways, but had been merely intended to justify the Government in inaugurating the new system which was to be pursued with regard to them. In his opinion, however, that despatch did not show the existence of such a state of things as would justify the Indian Government in taking the whole control of the Indian railways into their own hands henceforth. He doubted, in the first place, the capability of the Government of India to undertake the management of these enormous works to anything like the extent which had been foreshadowed by the Secretary of State, and, beyond that, he had a great horror of the management of the existing lines and of the 10,000 miles of new railways which it was proposed to make being placed in the hands of one high central department. On the other hand, it might be most advantageous for the Government of India to take in hand certain railways, for the purpose of showing the companies what economy and good management might produce. But that was a very different thing from taking possession of lines of which 4,500 miles were open and 2,000 were in progress, and which gave employment to 3,000 Europeans and to 25,000 natives. They had had some experience of Government management in the case of the Ganges Canal, and that was not calculated to inspire confidence in their management of the railways. The Home Government, under the advice of the Governor General, had very wisely within the last few weeks authorized the Government of India to undertake the construction of about 800 miles of railway, and he should watch the progress of those lines with great interest. If the Government could bring down the cost of construction from £17,000 to £12,000 per mile, and could materially reduce the cost of the working expenses they would do much towards justifying the charges they had brought against the guaranteed companies. The Committee, however, should recollect that when these railways were first inaugurated the British people had but little confidence in public works in India as a remunerative investment for capital, and, therefore, by removing that distrust the guaranteed companies had amply served their purpose, however extravagant they might have been in their capital accounts, and however much they might have neglected economy in their working expenses. That there was a remarkable difference between the amount of the working expenses of the various lines was true; but that was largely accounted for by the fact that while some companies had coal in their own districts others had to import Welsh coal at the cost of 60*s*. or 70*s*. per ton. The Government would do well to persevere in the course they had indicated during the last month, which was to authorize the construction of a certain number of miles of railway under the superintendence of their own officers, and to encourage the old and new companies only on the understanding that the terms of their agreement should be altered so as to permit the Government, when there was extravagance in the capital account, to take the lines under their own control, while all surplus over the 5 per cent which was guaranteed was to be equally divided between the company and the Government. If that course were adopted he could not see what objection there could be to leaving the lines in the hands of the companies. He did not propose to enter deeply into the subject of the irrigation works, but he might observe that the Government of India proposed to expend in this very year not less than £2,500,000 upon them over and above the amount appropriated to the ordinary public works, a sum which, in fact, they could not spare in any one single year. Certainly, he would not encourage an unlimited expenditure on those works although they were reproductive. It had been found by experience that in India such works took a longer time to be reproductive than they did in this country. He believed that in India it took from ten to fifteen years for such works to recoup the capital expended on them. He thought those who urged an enormous expenditure were not really good friends to India, and he thought also that the Government of that country must always keep a firm control over its finances, otherwise the credit on which they were now so proud of borrowing at 4½ or 5 per cent, would soon disappear. He did not believe in the power of the Government to go on for a number of years borrowing money at 4½ per cent. He was sure that the noble Lord who now filled the post of Governor General and the Indian Government at home would make it their study to consider Indian subjects from an Indian point of view. They should do everything to encourage the flow of surplus capital into India, and he agreed with the hon. and gallant Member for Aberdeen (Colonel Sykes) that England had done more for India than India had done for England—that was to say, India had absorbed more, much more, of the precious metals from England than she had given back. The Under Secretary in his long and able review had taken occasion to say that, on the whole, he thought there was much reason for hope as to the progress of India. He concurred with the hon. Gentleman. He believed that the present improvement was only a beginning, and that, if an intelligent interest were taken in India, in twenty years to come the India of that time would no more be recognized as the India of to-day than the India of to-day could be recognized as the India of twenty years past. He would conclude by expressing his hope that in future the Government would be able to introduce the Indian Budget at an earlier period of the Session.

MR. PLATT said, that he felt great interest in the question, inasmuch as the prosperity of Lancashire depended, in a great degree, on the development of the resources of India. At one time it was said that Indian cotton would not be used in Lancashire. No doubt before the American War very little of that cotton was used; but since then the exports of cotton from India had risen from 125,000 lbs. to 30,000,000 lbs. per annum. He did not mean to say that some of those exports did not find their way to the Continent, but three-fourths of the Indian cotton was used in Lancashire. The town which he represented (Oldham) used, he believed, one-sixth of the cotton imported into this country, and three-fifths of the cotton it used was Indian cotton. Oldham was the first town to use Indian cotton, and by the use of such cotton it had been able to surmount the crisis caused by the civil war in America better than any other town in Lancashire. He did not go so far as to call on the Government to grow cotton in India, but he asked them to give facilities connected with it. The Government proposed to make railways on a large scale, and he would suggest that a preference should be given to railways that went through the cotton districts. The manufacturers of Lancashire had been pertinaciously pressing on the Government the question of roads to the cotton districts for many years past. Some ten years ago he was chairman of a cotton company in India, which came to grief in consequence of the want of roads. Lord Halifax, who was at that time Secretary of State for India, gave a promise that a railroad to Darwar and the cotton districts should be immediately commenced. Now, after a lapse of nine years, there was a prospect of the road being commenced, and he trusted that it would be made. India could produce more cotton without diminishing the quantity of land devoted to the production of the food of the people. The produce of cotton was only from 50 lb. to 70 lb. an acre. They did not ask for an increase in the acreage, but for an increase in the productiveness of the land which was now employed. He found that in the Southern States of America, by the employment of artificial manures and other means, the produce of the soil had been raised from 500 lb. to 700 lb. per acre, and if the same thing could be done in India there was a large margin for the further development of the cotton trade. He agreed with the hon. Member for Manchester (Mr. Bazley) that a Board of Agriculture, or else a Minister of Agriculture ought to be appointed in India, with agents and inspectors in all the subordinate districts. If this were done, it would turn out immensely to the advantage not of the revenues of India only, but also of its ryot population. There was no country in which information upon agricultural matters was so much needed as in India. This was well proved at the time of the war with Russia, from which country we had been accustomed to obtain our supplies of jute. It was soon discovered that the article could be grown in India, and from that time jute became a permanent export of India. Neither did he think India had any reason to fear the competition of America in the production of cotton. Much was said just now about the Chinese settling in the Southern States, but he believed that a great social battle would have to be fought before that could be accomplished. Lancashire could consume any amount of cotton from India. Indian cotton, when well selected, was quite equal to the middling cotton of America. There was another remark of the hon. Member for Manchester with respect to the advantages of America in manufacture which he could not endorse. It must be remembered that since the Americans had adopted a high tariff they had lost every neutral market in the world—even the market of China. This was so much the case that Mr. Wells, who had been sent over to this country to inquire into our system of Free Trade had recommended, on his return, a great relaxation of the American tariff. He hoped it would not be considered that Lancashire was importunate in pressing the Government as it did.

Sir DAVID WEDDERBURN said, he must complain of the great expenditure on barracks in India. The greater portion of that expenditure was worse than useless. He doubted whether, even by skilful organizations, we could reduce our Army of 64,000 European soldiers in India — soldiers who were very costly to us, and of whose value the highest opinions had been expressed by Runjeet Singh and Shere Ali. No class deserved more care and sympathy than those troops. Each man of them was really worth his weight in rupees; and, in spite of all the care that could be taken as to their clothing and lodging, their health and strength would gradually ebb away. But while the officers could go to the hills or get leave of absence to recruit their health, there was no such resource for the men, who gradually died off or were sent home invalided. He would urge that European soldiers might occupy healthy hill stations to a much larger extent than they had hitherto done. There were spots, such as Darjeeling, on the slopes of the Himalayas, the Neilgherries, and even the Western Ghauts, where the men could be kept in health and spirits as buoyant as at any station we possessed; but in these districts there were only a few detachments, while at Lucknow, Secunderabad, and Nawar, there were small armies stationed. It could scarcely be said in these days of railways and telegraphs that it was necessary to keep large bodies of European troops in close proximity to Gwalior and Hyderabad in order to overawe the natives of the semi-independent states, when far more healthy quarters could be found for them in the neighbouring hills. At Morar very large and extensive barracks had been built, sufficient for a brigade of European cavalry, besides infantry, though the spot was noted for its unhealthiness; and the 71st Highlanders, when quartered there, buried 10 per cent of their numbers in a few months. It would be presumptuous in him to say whether, instead of stationing our troops in unhealthy barracks, it would be possible to form military cantonments, where in time of peace our soldiers might be employed in industrial and agricultural pursuits. He ventured merely to direct attention to this point, which involved not merely the welfare of many thousands of our fellow-countrymen, but even the safety of our Indian Empire.

Mr. KINNAIRD said, that the people of India might suppose, judging from the tone of the present debate, that in the House of Commons India was looked upon either as a Manchester colony or as a military settlement. He protested against the postponement of all discussion on Indian subjects to the very end of the Session, when in one day the House was asked not only to discuss the Budget, but to pass two important measures relating to the future government of India. He certainly should do all he could to defeat these two measures. The late Government had promised a full inquiry into Indian affairs, and he could see no reason why the noble Duke (the Duke of Argyll), and his hon. Friend the Under Secretary for India, should seek to pledge the House without redeeming that promise, as no Committee on the affairs of India had sat for the last ten years, though the whole state of affairs in that country had changed more than man could conceive. He considered, therefore, that the House was being treated in the most supercilious way by the present Government. Was India, he asked, to be governed for her own welfare, or for the sake of Manchester? No doubt cotton was a good thing, and hon. Gentlemen of one idea might think that India was made for the purpose of supplying it, and of receiving Manchester goods. But he did not so deem it. He felt some sympathy for the 184,000,000 of natives of India, and his hon. Friend the Under Secretary, before he was in Office, had felt some sympathy for them too. He hoped that he should not be disappointed in his expectations from his hon. Friend. When he heard of his appointment he was rejoiced by it, because he thought that he did sympathize with the natives. There were two or three special points to which he would now call the attention of the House. One was the salt tax, which the Government of India ought to consider very seriously with a view to its modification. Salt was a necessary of life; the absence of it led to disease; and, in the interests of humanity, the tax should not be continued in its present form. If a poor ryot attempted to scrape a morsel of salt out of the mud of which his cottage was built, he subjected himself thereby to the severest penalties. Then there was the revenue derived from opium. It certainly was a most unhappy thing that the Government should so long have indirectly been encouraging a contraband trade with China. No doubt there was a lawful use of opium; but there was also a demoralizing use of it, and he could not withhold blame from the Indian Government in past years for having abetted the latter in order to fill the coffers of the Indian Treasury. He did hope that the Government would alter its course of procedure on this head, and, without throwing the trade open, separate itself from the responsibility of the trade itself. He appealed to his right hon. Friend (Mr. Bright) on this point. One of these days the opium trade might again lead us into war, and he hoped that his right hon. Friend, if he were still the man he once was, would unite with him in saying there should be an end to revenue derived from this demoralizing source. The third point he wished to allude to was the system of public works—and here he must express his regret that so very little encouragement was given to private enterprize, thereby limiting the introduction of English capital into India. He could not but think that the wiser course would have been to encourage its introduction as widely as possible; for, surely, there was scope enough in India both for the Government and for the English capitalist. He had given a Notice on the subject for next Session. The matter ought to be thoroughly gone into by a Committee next year, and then justice might be done to India on this point.

Mr. BRIGHT said, he would put it to the Committee whether, after the discussion of that evening, as well as on a previous occasion, it would not be desirable that his hon. Friend the Secretary for India should be allowed to proceed with the Bills relating to that country which were set down on the Notice Paper. Unless there were great objections to those measures, it would, it seemed to him, be a great pity at the end of the Session, when the changes which were proposed with respect to administration in India could not be much affected by anything which might be said in that House, that the Bills should not be allowed to pass. The speech of his hon. Friend who had just sat down was one of a very lively character, and he could assure him that so far as many of the points on which he had touched were concerned, he sympathized with him now as well as in past times, when he took a much more active part in the discussion of Indian affairs. It was not possible, however, on the present occasion to alter the duty on salt or to do anything with regard to the opium question, while it would be a great convenience to the Government and the House that the Bills relating to India should be proceeded with at once. If that were not done, the probability was that they would have to be abandoned for the Session, and the majority of the House would, he thought, be sorry that such should be the case.

Mr. DICKINSON said, he intended to enter into the general question raised by the financial statement of the Under Secretary for India, but at that late hour would refrain from doing so.

Mr. GRANT DUFF begged to add his entreaty to that of his right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, that the Bills in question should be permitted to be advanced a stage that evening. With the view of facilitating that course he trusted he would be pardoned if he did not reply to the speeches which had been made during the evening, as well as on a previous occasion, in the usual way.

Question put, and agreed to.

House resumed.

Resolution to be reported To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT AMENDMENT BILL—[Bill 150.]

[Lords.] COMMITTEE.

Order for Committee read.

Mr. KINNAIRD said, it was certainly understood by those Members who listened to the speech of the late Secretary for India (Sir Stafford Northcote) last Session that the whole question of the Government of India, which it was admitted required to be calmly considered and thoroughly discussed by Parliament, should be referred to a Select Committee of the House at the commencement of the present Session. The actual words used by the right hon. Gentleman were, as reported—

> "I think that the best plan would be, when the Bills are introduced next year, that they should be referred to a Select Committee, and under these circumstances I beg to move that the Order of the day for going into Committee upon the Bill should be read and discharged."

At the time when these words were spoken they were heartily responded to; and it was in the hope that the present Secretary of State for India would assent to the wise and judicious course of action proposed for adoption by his predecessor in Office that he had refrained from renewing the Notice he had placed upon the Paper in the last Parliament for the appointment of a Select Committee on Irrigation. And if, in July of last year, it was acknowledged that the appointment of a Committee upon this subject was desirable, he thought it could not be denied that the necessity for such an inquiry was greatly increased at the present moment, when one of the largest questions which could possibly arise, vitally affecting the interests both of this country and of India—namely, whether the construction of railways and of works of irrigation still so urgently required should be monopolized by the Government or thrown open to private enterprize—was now pressing hard for decision, and was reported to have been all but finally decided upon by the Council of India without that House having been consulted at all. Surely a question of such vast importance in its results to both countries, and so closely mixed up with the constitution of the Council of India, that one could not separate the two, ought not to be decided either one way or the other by any other tribunal than Parliament itself, to whom alone the solution of such a national problem could be satisfactorily intrusted. Up to the present moment no public discussion worthy of the name had been had on these momentous questions, and the minds of English statesmen had not been brought to bear upon them in a clear and distinct manner, and he was sure that not only would that House, but that portion of the public most interested in the matter, agree with him in saying that until a full, patient, and thoroughly sifting inquiry had been made by some such means as a Select Committee, no satisfactory result could be hoped for, or discussion had. That House had, in fact, no materials before it by which it could properly and with satisfaction to itself discuss and decide on a matter fraught with such immense results for good or evil to the Governments and people of both countries; and he therefore earnestly put it to the Under Secretary of State for India whether it was right to proceed at the fag-end of a Session with measures as to the merits of which that House was in almost total darkness, and whether it would not be an act of wisdom, which would be appreciated by all who took an interest in India, on the part of the Government to refer the two Bills now before the House to a Select Committee, and to agree that to the same Committee should be also referred the inquiry as to the best mode of constructing railways and other public works. His hon. Friend near him (Sir Charles Wingfield) had given notice of a Motion similar to his own, and he could assure the Government that the concession he asked for on their part would be received with the highest satisfaction out-of-doors, and be accepted as a convincing proof that they had the real interests of India at heart, and were not desirous of preventing a full discussion founded upon the best information that could be procured. He begged to move that both the Bill under discussion and the Governor General of India Bill be referred to a Select Committee next Session, and he should take the sense of the House on the question.

Sir CHARLES WINGFIELD said, the Motion of which he had given notice referred only to the Governor General of India Bill. He could see no reason why the Bill now under consideration should not be proceeded with.

Mr. C. DENISON said, he had formerly entertained the same opinion as the hon. Gentleman opposite (Mr. Kinnaird) that these Bills ought not to pass the House at so late a period of the Session, without their being referred to a Select Committee; but when those who were specially interested in the subject took counsel together they came to the conclusion that the first Bill might be allowed to pass upon condition that the objectionable clauses in the second Bill should be withdrawn for the present Session. He, therefore, could not divide with his hon. Friend.

Sir EDWARD COLEBROOKE said, that the Bill involved a principle of the utmost importance, and would make a fundamental alteration in the constitution of the Council of our vast Indian Empire, and the term for which the members of that Council were elected. It had, indeed, undergone partial discussion last year; but since then a clause had been introduced under which every member of the Council must be appointed by the Secretary of State for India. The House and the country were very much in the dark as to the manner in which the new Government of India had worked during the last ten years, and he was therefore of opinion that the subject ought to be thoroughly inquired into. In conclusion, he entered his protest against the hurried way in which it was proposed to discuss this important question.

Mr. AYRTON said, his hon. Friend (Mr. Kinnaird) was altogether wrong in supposing that he desired last Session to have these Bills referred to a Select Committee. On the contrary, he was extremely anxious that they should be discussed publicly in the House.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 1 (Vacancies to be filled up by Secretary of State).

Mr. R. N. FOWLER entered his protest against proceeding with a measure of this vast importance at so late an hour (12 40 A.M.)

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 (Members of the Council of India to be in future appointed for a term of ten years).

Mr. DICKINSON said, he entertained great objections to the system now so common of buying out by pensions officials who had become too old for their work. When competent men were constantly coming home from India they ought not to retain worn-out men in the Council. The hon. Gentleman moved in page 1, line 18, after "years" to leave out "and," and insert—

> "Determinable on his attaining sixty-five years of age; and every member of Council who has not served ten years before the passing of this Act shall continue in his office for a period of ten years from his appointment, and no such member of Council, whether appointed or continued, shall."

Mr. KINNAIRD said, he would support the Amendment. He protested altogether against that Indian Council. They ought to have a responsible Government. The Secretary of State for India and the Under Secretary, with a proper staff, ought to suffice without a Council of old individuals, whose age, according to the Returns, was marvellous. Some members of the Council were in India thirty years ago, since which period the greatest changes had occurred there, so that their knowledge of the country was quite antiquated. The House ought to be careful not to waste the money of the people of India in salaries and pensions for such a body.

SIR CHARLES WINGFIELD said, he hoped the House would not accede to the Amendment fixing the limit of age at sixty-five years. Judges and other public servants performed their duties satisfactorily at the age of seventy and upwards, and he did not see why it should be enacted that no man should sit in the Council of India after he was sixty-five years of age.

MR. GRANT DUFF begged the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Dickinson) carefully to remember that they were now dealing with councillors, and not with administrators. For the purposes of a Council men rather gained than lost by advancing years, provided they retained their faculties—and certainly many persons of active mind retained their faculties in perfect vigour when considerably over the age of sixty-five. That House was one of the very last Assemblies in the world in which they ought to speak of sixty-five as an age at which men ought to retire from active public life. A leading case was that of Lord Palmerston, and there were many others who showed great power after the age of sixty-five.

MR. KINNAIRD said, if he remembered rightly the intention was that there should be fresh blood in the Council of India. They did not want old gentlemen who lived in India twenty years ago, but men who were well acquainted with what was passing in India now. He regretted to see this retrograde policy of the Government.

SIR EDWARD COLEBROOKE said, the course of Her Majesty's Government in fixing one arbitrary line ought to be regarded as sufficient. He should object to a double check. The matter might be fairly left to those who were responsible, for they would not be likely to appoint unfit persons.

MR. DICKINSON said, he had no desire to press the Amendment as to age. His object was not to give annuities to those to whom they were not bound to give them.

Amendment proposed,

In page 1, line 18, after the word "and," to insert the words "every member of Council who has not served ten years before the passing of this Act shall continue in his office for a period of ten years from his appointment, and no such member of Council, whether appointed or continued, shall."—(Mr. Dickinson.)

Question put, "That those words be there inserted."

The Committee divided:—Ayes 11; Noes 70: Majority 59.

SIR EDWARD COLEBROOKE said, he would beg to move the omission of the words "except as herein-after provided," with a view to other Amendments removing that provision from the Bill which gave the Secretary of State the power of re-appointing members of the Council at the end of their term of service. He did not think members of the Council should be put into a position which obliged them to look to the Secretary of State for re-appointment.

SIR CHARLES WINGFIELD said, he would support the proposed Amendment. Some men might be tempted to ingratiate themselves with the Secretary of State in the hope of re-appointment. The first quality a Council should possess was independence; if the Secretary of State had councillors whose first object was to please him, the result would be to increase his power amazingly, while it diminished his responsibility. Earl Russell and the right hon. Member for Buckinghamshire (Mr. Disraeli) had strongly insisted upon the independence of the Council at the time it was formed.

SIR CHARLES DILKE said, he should support the clause as it stood. At the time the Council was appointed the idea was to curb the power of the Secretary of State. That feeling had passed away, and it was now recognized on all hands that the Council should be a consultative and not a controlling body. Neither of the hon. Members who had preceded him seemed to understand the full meaning of the provision they wished to amend. The Secretary of State could not appoint without good reason, and his reasons would have to be drawn up and laid before Parliament.

MR. GRANT DUFF said, it was a mistake to suppose that there would be a rivalry among the members of the Council to flatter the Secretary of State, for they could not be sure that any particular Secretary for India would remain long enough in Office to reward them for obsequiousness.

MR. COLLINS said, he thought it would be a very unwise thing for the Committee to declare that a man who had served in the Council for ten years, and had there earned distinction, should not be allowed to serve other five, should the Secretary of State believe he was capable of doing further good service.

Amendment negatived.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

Clause 5 (As to retiring pensions of existing members of Council).

Mr. GRANT DUFF moved that the following words be added:—

"And it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by warrant under her sign manual, countersigned by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to grant to any member so resigning, out of the revenues of India, if he shall have been elected or appointed before the passing of this Act, and if he shall have held the said office for the period of ten years and upwards at the date of such resignation, a retiring pension during life of five hundred pounds."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON proposed the following proviso:—

"Provided, That when and so often as a vacancy shall occur during the continuance of any pension under this section, the Secretary of State shall, by reducing temporarily the number or salary of newly-appointed Members of Council, arrange that the total charge for salaries of Members of Council and pensions under this section shall not exceed eighteen thousand pounds a year."

Amendment negatived.

Clause ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 6 (Appointment of ordinary members of the Governor General's Council and of the Presidencies).

Sir CHARLES WINGFIELD said, he objected to the clause, which would place the appointment of the members of the Governor General's Council in the hands of the Governor General. The object should be to give the Governor General honest, independent advice.

Mr. GRANT DUFF said, he thought it very undesirable that his Council should be any check on the Governor General. It should be rather a Cabinet to assist him.

Clause agreed to.

House resumed.

Bill reported, with Amendments; as amended, to be considered To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

Mr. Collins

GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA BILL.

[Bill 89]—(Lords)—COMMITTEE.

Order for Committtee read.

Mr. GRANT DUFF said, that this measure stood in a very different position from that which had just passed through Committee. That was of comparatively small importance, while the present Bill was the reverse. He felt, therefore, that it would be wrong to go on with it at the present period of the Session. There were, however, three clauses respecting which, he believed, no difference of opinion existed, and which were of considerable importance—namely Clauses 1 and 2, which corrected a clerical error in a former Act, and Clause 9, which enabled the Government of India and the Legislative Council to pass a Vagrant Act for India. These clauses he would ask the House to pass.

Sir CHARLES WINGFIELD said, he approved of the clauses in question.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 8 struck out.

Clause 9 amended, and agreed to.

Clause 10 struck out.

House resumed.

Bill reported, with Amendments, and an amended Title; as amended, to be considered To-morrow, at Two of the clock.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS BILL—[Bill 73.]

[Lords]—COMMITTEE.

Order for Committee read.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir GEORGE JENKINSON moved, after Clause 17, to insert the following clause:—

(Criminal after tenth conviction to be treated as an habitual criminal.)

"Provided always, That any person who shall have been convicted of repeated misdemeanours, may, after the tenth conviction, be deemed guilty of an aggravated misdemeanour, and such person shall be liable to the same punishment as if he were convicted of a felony, and shall be treated as an habitual criminal."

Mr. BRUCE said, the clause certainly deserved consideration, but he would oppose its insertion in the present Bill. As worded it would render any person who had been ten times convicted of drunkenness liable to be treated as an "habitual criminal."

Clause negatived.

Sir GEORGE JENKINSON then proposed another clause, imposing additional punishment for aggravated assaults on the police.

Mr. BRUCE said, he thought that cases of this kind were sufficiently provided for under the existing law.

Clause negatived.

House resumed.

Bill reported, with Amendments; as amended, to be considered To-morrow, at Two of the clock, and to be printed. [Bill 264.]

PHARMACY ACT (1868) AMENDMENT BILL.

Lords' Amendments considered.

Several agreed to; and one disagreed to.

Committee appointed, "to draw up Reasons to be assigned to the Lords for disagreeing to the Amendment to which this House hath disagreed:"—Mr. Secretary BRUCE, The LORD ADVOCATE, Mr. WILLIAM EDWARD FORSTER, Mr. AYRTON, Mr. ADAM, and Dr. BREWER:—To withdraw immediately; Three to be the quorum.

Reason for disagreeing to one of the Lords' Amendments reported, and agreed to.

To be communicated to the Lords.

House adjourned at a quarter after Three o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Friday, 6th August, 1869.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading— Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans)* (280).

Second Reading — Consolidated Fund (Appropriation); Warehousing of Wines and Spirits, &c. (272); Dividends on Public Stocks* (269); Harbour of Galle Loan* (266); East India Loan* (267); Inclosure of Lands* (270); Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment* (273); Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment* (271); Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act (1868) Amendment* (227).

*Committee—Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment (266).

*Committee—Report—Cursitor (County Palatine of Durham) (263); Expiring Laws Continuance* (262); Accounts, &c. Presentation* (253).

*Report—Seeds Adulteration (276); Nitro Glycerine* (277); Railways Abandonment* (249).

*Third Reading—Telegraphs (243); Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act (1863) Amendment* (256); Public Works (Ireland)* (255); Clerks of Assize* (248); Zanzibar (Jurisdiction of Consul)* (246); Fortifications (Provision for Expenses)* (251); Basses Lights, Ceylon,* (254); Criminal Lunatics* (247); Local Officers Superannuation (Ireland)* (249); Militia Pay*; Militia (Ireland)* (252); Volunteer Act (1863) Amendment* (257); Metropolitan Building Act (1855) Amendment* (232), and passed.

The House met; and having gone through the Business on the Paper, without debate—

House adjourned at a quarter before Six o'clock, till To-morrow, a quarter before Three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Friday, 6th August, 1869.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—*Committee—Parochial Schools (Scotland) [215]—R.P.; Charity Commissioners [239]—R.P.

*Committee—Report—Straits Settlements [259]; Contagious Diseases* [255]; Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c.* [256]; Broughty Ferry Provisional Order Confirmation* [254]; Parochial Schools (Scotland) (re-comm.) [215]; Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan [253]; Charity Commissioners* [239].

*Considered as amended—Third Reading—Government of India Act Amendment [150]; Governor General of India* [89]; Habitual Criminals* [73]; Millbank Prison* [258]; Bishops Resignation* [241], and passed.

Third Reading — Prevention of Gaming (Scotland)* [248]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* [261], and passed.

The House met at Two of the clock.

ARMY—HENRY-MARTINI RIFLE.

QUESTION.

Mr. MUNTZ said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for War, If it is intended to proceed with the manufacture of the Henry-Martini rifle otherwise than for trial; and, if he is aware that very grave doubts are entertained by competent parties as to the durability of the mechanism of the presumed improvement?

Captain VIVIAN, in reply, said, it was not intended to proceed with the manufacture of the Henry-Martini rifles till they had been tested in the hands of the troops; therefore 200 rifles would be distributed among small portions of the troops quartered in various parts of the world, so that the efficiency of the weapon might be tested in all ways and circumstances. As to the second part of the hon. Gentleman's Question, the authorities were not aware of any doubts as to the permanency of the weapon, and those whose duty it was to test it saw no reason to entertain such doubts.

LORD ELCHO said, he wished to ask if any test were to be used for the cartridge as well as for the rifle?

CAPTAIN VIVIAN said, that it was intended to apply further tests to the efficiency of the cartridge, so as to obtain the best possible cartridge for the rifle.

DAGENHAM DOCK COMPANY.

QUESTION.

VISCOUNT ENFIELD said, he would beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, If he could state the grounds upon which the Customs' License to land and store goods at Dagenham has been refused to the Dagenham (Thames) Dock Company, three Acts of Parliament having passed for the construction of these works, and the sum of £170,000 having been expended on the faith of these Acts; whether the late Commissioners of the Treasury did not decide to grant the Company's application, and why that decision has been reversed by the present Board of Treasury; and why the correspondence between the Company and the Commissioners of the Treasury and the Board of Trade respectively, ordered by the House to be printed on the 10th of June 1869, has been produced in an incomplete state, and why those omissions in the Correspondence have not hitherto been supplied?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, in reply, that the reasons why the Customs' License to land and store goods at Dagenham was refused were—1st, the remoteness of the locality, it being ten miles by railroad and more by water from the Custom House; 2dly, the want of adequate accommodation there for the trade; 3dly, the increased expense of sending officers to exercise supervision in such a place; 4thly, the risk to the revenue likely to arise on account of the lonely and retired nature of the place; 5thly, the necessity which would infallibly arise from a precedent established in this case of offering to other places the same advantage, and the absence of any additional accommodation to that offered by the existing dock companies. The right hon. Gentleman here read the following extract from the Customs' Report for this year relative to the contemplated dock:—

> "The frontage of the platform to the river is very limited, too much so to be fairly called a wharf. It is uncovered and completely exposed to the weather, affording no shelter for men or goods. On the line of the railway, not far from its junction with the Tilbury line, are two large sheds erected, as I was informed, about two years ago. On the left of the railway as it approaches the jetty, and in the midst of the land belonging to the Dagenham Dock Company, is a long piece of water known as Dagenham Lake. It is this lake which it is proposed to convert into a dock, but no works for that purpose have been commenced. On the river side of the barrier bank—which separates the river from the lake—some excavation has some time ago been made to form an entrance basin, but the action of the river has now nearly filled it up, and no further progress has been made on the bank of the river in the construction of wall, wharf, or entrance."

In respect to one part of the Question of the noble Lord, he must state that the late Government never positively acceded to the application of the company, but they made a Minute, and the matter was then referred to the Customs' Department for further inquiry, with a suggestion that the traders themselves should be left to judge whether or not the trade was likely to justify the grant of the concession of the privilege. From that view the present Treasury Board emphatically dissented, not thinking it right that the trade should decide whether the expense of sending Custom House Officers to places like that in question should be incurred. With regard to the last part of the Question, he was not aware of anything being incomplete in the Correspondence, but if the noble Lord would point out any omission it should be remedied.

MR. AYRTON said, that the Papers he had already laid on the table, contained the whole of the Correspondence with the exception of one letter.

RAILWAY SIGNALLING.—QUESTION.

MAJOR WALKER said, in the absence of his hon. Friend (Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson), he wished to ask the President of the Board of Trade, Whether he has been able to lay upon the Table of the House the replies, he promised, from the different Railway Companies to his Circular; and if not, whether he will lay them upon the Table of the House before the end of the Session?

MR. BRIGHT: Sir, the replies to the Circular which has been sent out by the Board of Trade are not all received, and are consequently at present imperfect. In the case of one of the most important railways, the London and North-Western Company, the Board of Trade has, with the consent of the company, directed an inquiry into a modification of the block system which they have proposed, and which, if it be approved of, they propose also to extend. Under these circumstances, as the Report will be so incorrect and incomplete if presented at the present time, it is thought better to delay laying the answers on the table of the House until the opening of next Session.

ASSIZE SENTENCES ON CRIMINALS.

QUESTION.

MR. J. LOWTHER said, in the absence of his hon. Friend (Sir George Jenkinson), he would beg to ask the Question which stood in the name of the hon. Baronet on the Notice Paper—namely, Whether the attention of the Secretary of State for the Home Department has been called to the great inequality of sentences frequently passed at Assizes on various criminals; for instance, the five following cases are reported in "The Times" of the 5th instant, under the head of "Assize Intelligence":—Case 1. Home Circuit, Crown Court, August 4, by Mr. Justice Mellor, a man named Simmons, convicted for feloniously killing his wife at Redhill. Details very revolting and brutal; guilty, but recommended to mercy; not concurred in by the Judge; sentence, five years' penal servitude. Case 2. Same Court, a man named Fyfield, convicted for feloniously cutting and wounding his wife with intent to murder her; details very bad; guilty; a bad case of unlawfully wounding; sentence, eighteen months' imprisonment. Case 3. Same Court, a man named Gore, for feloniously inflicting grievous bodily injury with intent to do so; he beat a man severely with his fists; sentence, fifteen years' penal servitude. Case 4. Midland Circuit, York, August 2nd, Crown Court, Mr. Justice Brett, three men, named John Brown, Henry Lock, and William Johnson, breaking into a bacon-house and stealing eight hams and two shoulders of bacon; sentence on Brown, seven years', and on Lock and Johnson, five years' penal servitude. Case 5. Western Circuit, Bodmin, August 2nd, Mr. Justice Keating, a man named William Rapson Oates, a "herbalist," obtaining £2 5*s*. by false pretences; guilty, recommended to mercy; sentence, five years' penal servitude. And, whether Her Majesty's Government contemplates taking any legislative steps to obtain greater uniformity in the sentences passed on criminals in the various Assize Courts? He thought it right to add that he had been unable to verify the cases cited by his hon. Friend.

MR. BRUCE said, that he, like the hon. Gentleman, had also been unable to verify the cases cited by the hon. Baronet; but he had no doubt that at the recent Assizes, as at previous Assizes, inequalities might be observed in the sentences. They might be accounted for partly by the fact that all the circumstances which dictated to the Judges the decisions to which they came were not reported, and partly by the different constitutions of the minds of the Judges. With regard to the substantial part of the Question—whether the Government intended to take any legislative steps to obtain greater uniformity in the sentences passed upon criminals? he was not prepared to answer the Question affirmatively.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) (re-committed) BILL—[BILL 215] (Lords.)

COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 24 (Act not to affect certain bequests).

LORD ELCHO moved that the Chairman do now leave the Chair.

MR. DISRAELI: I cannot allow this Motion to pass in silence. I think it the duty of every Member of this House at this period of the Session to give every possible support to the Government—consistently of course with their individual opinions—to wind up the business, and carry those measures which are thought, on the whole, necessary for the public good. But I must say that I am surprised at the position in which much of the Public Business is now placed—especially with reference to this particular measure of the Scotch Parochial Schools, which has had a very injurious effect upon the conduct of other Public Business. This is really a matter of importance, because I need not remind the Committee that it has been brought under the consideration of the House by a notice in Her Majesty's gracious Speech from the Throne; and no measure is ever noticed by a Minister in the Speech from the Throne unless it is decided by the Cabinet to be one of importance, and unless it is matured with the utmost study and judgment on the part of the Government. Under these circumstances, it seems to me much to be regretted that we should be called upon to discuss a Bill of considerable complication, on a subject of such importance, and introduced in the Speech from the Throne, at a moment when the Appropriation Bill is on the Table. And I cannot think that we ought to pass over without notice a combination of circumstances so unfortunate. Is it the fault of this House? Is it the fault of those who have felt it their duty to give some opposition to this measure? I cannot find that there is any fault to be fairly imputed to this House for this unfortunate state of affairs, or that it can for one moment be alleged that it arises from any vexatious opposition on on the part of Gentlemen on this side of the House. Some time ago this Bill came from the House of Lords with considerable Amendments, some of those Amendments being moved by one of Her Majesty's Ministers. On that occasion the Lord Advocate took a course which I observed with regret. It is possible it might be technically defensible; but I appeal to the candour of the Committee whether, when a Gentleman moves that we should go into a Committee pro formâ on a Bill in order that it may be re-printed, anyone could suppose that it was the object of the learned Lord to make the enormous changes which he on that occasion so successfully accomplished.

The LORD ADVOCATE: I beg the right hon. Gentleman's pardon. I stated the changes I proposed, and gave the reasons for moving to go into Committee on the Bill pro formâ.

Mr. DISRAELI: That may be so; but is it not a fact that no Gentleman in the House was aware of what was going on? ["No."] Well, I hope for the credit of the House that it is so, because I cannot conceive that a proposition of that kind could be made; and I should have thought that the hon. Gentlemen opposite me would have thought it decorous, by way of precedent, that notice should have been given by Government of the changes they intended to propose.

The LORD ADVOCATE: I must again rise to explain that I made a statement of considerable length, giving not only the changes we meant to introduce, but the reasons for so doing. I think the right hon. Gentleman, before he makes charges of this kind, should inform himself as to the facts.

Mr. DISRAELI: It is quite unnecessary for the learned Lord to interrupt me, because I was not going to insist upon the circumstance. It was disapproved by the House and regretted, but it was condoned; and consequently I declined to notice it — and the best defence for it is this—that it was a matter of exigency. The Government believed that this was a measure of primary importance, and that the course they took was the only way in which they could put their complete and matured views before the House and the Committee. And although I regretted that the practice should pass unnoticed, still I thought there was some defence and vindication for the course that had been pursued. But having placed their views before the House, have the Government adhered to them? Having struck out all these Amendments, and having deprived the House of the opportunity of considering the Amendments made in "another place," have the Government adhered to the views which they adopted, and their adherence to which could only have justified this summary proceeding? Nothing of the kind. To say that the conduct of the Government has been inconsistent would be an inadequate phrase. It has been incoherent. It has been not only capricious and vacillating, but diametrically opposed on most important points from night to night. I say, Sir, that this is not a proper way — at least, it is not a desirable way at any time of settling questions of importance; but if the Government change their opinions on matters of importance in the middle of a Session, there is an opportunity of discussing and considering their propositions, and of coming to a mature decision upon them. But it is highly undesirable that such a course should be taken by the Government at the fag-end of the Session. We have five prints of this Bill in our possession, and in many of their provisions they are diametrically opposed. We are now asked, with the Appropriation Bill on the table, to proceed with this legislation.

Now, Sir, I will not enter into any of the details of the clauses which have been so changed, and some of which are opposed to each other. The Scotch Members have a particular process of conducting their legislation through this House. They are satisfied with it; and, I think very unwisely on the part of this House, that system has not been challenged. I think it is not a desirable system, because one of the practical results is that the Scotch business is settled in a hole-and-corner, and the Scotch Members degrade themselves to the position of a select vestry. There is thus necessarily a deficiency of knowledge and sympathy with the Scotch Members which is not at all desirable. I know the influence of Scotch Members, and that if they are resolved upon a particular way of conducting their business, it will be impossible for us to resist it. But what I maintain is this—that anything connected with Scotch education is not merely a Scotch question, but one of national interest, and one on which the House ought to be fully acquainted with the proposals of the Government, and the motives which influence them. I heard during the course of these proceedings that when a difficulty arose, a compromise had been arrived at between the Government and the opponents of the Bill. You cannot carry on the affairs of the world without compromise, and I was not sorry to hear that the difficulty had been overcome. I know that Gentlemen who had opposed the Bill ceased to oppose it, and some even ceased to attend the House any longer. I was afterwards surprised when the Government informed us they did not intend to adhere to that compromise, but had made another arrangement contrary to it — an arrangement which was not made in the House, or in consequence of any debate in this House. That is a course of affairs to be deprecated. We must remember the circumstances under which the question was first brought before us. It was noticed by the Government in the Queen's Speech. It engaged the attention of their predecessors. It was a subject of magnitude—a question, in fact, of improved national education for Scotland. Well, Sir, we cannot legislate on a subject of that kind without sanctioning some principles and agreeing to some conditions which hereafter may be appealed to in vindication of a measure of English national education. It is a subject of general and universal interest, and one to which we ought to give our attention, in a manner becoming the question, and without the haste and precipitation which distinguish the present course of proceeding. I know it is said—and indeed it is the only argument in favour of the present course which I have heard—that if we do not pass a measure of this kind, a considerable proportion of the population of Scotland will be deprived of the advantages of education—some 90,000 children, as we were told the other night; but do you mean to say that because 90,000 children may be deprived of the advantages of education you are to pass an improper Bill at an improper time? There are more children proportionately in England who are deprived of these advantages than in Scotland, but no one will pretend that we ought to discuss and pass a Bill for national education in England when the Appropriation Bill is on the table. Now, Sir, I wish to assure the House and the Government that in making these observations I am only speaking what I think is for the interest of the country and of the House, and that I am merely maintaining those views which I have always supported. I will not quote anything that I have myself said, but I will refer to the course recommended by the present Prime Minister in 1856, and in which I supported him. What I am about to read is not a long paragraph, but it is characterized by all that ability and happiness of expression which might be expected from such a quarter. In his unfortunate absence it is a very great advantage that we should be guided by his experience and judgment. The right hon. Gentleman was alluding to the state of Public Business at the end of 1856, and he was also referring to the Bishops of London and Durham Retirement Bill. He said—

> "Now, Sir, as regards this measure, I do not hesitate to say that, quite independently of its particular provisions, I think we ought not, under any circumstances, to be called upon to pass such a measure at such a time. It is impossible at this period of the Session to give to a subject of this grave importance and of this extreme difficulty the consideration which it requires. Why, Sir, it is even impossible at this time fairly to collect the sense of the House upon such a question. It is only a fortnight ago since this House virtually rejected the Appellate Jurisdiction Bill. Within that fortnight the business of the country has been almost entirely wound up. We have passed the Appropriation Bill—that which we look upon as the natural termination of the important business of the Session; our functions in Committee of Supply have ended. It is not merely the date of the 23rd of July which we have to consider, though I must say that if Government continue the practice of introducing these most difficult Bills, these measures of such vast importance, when the Session is expiring, it will be necessary for this House, in self-defence, to resort to a measure which has been adopted in the other House, and to pass rules fixing positive dates after which they will not consent to entertain such measures. I am quite sure that the noble Lord at the head of the Government must feel that in expressing these opinions I am expressing the opinions generally entertained by the Members of this House. We have, in fact, come to a state of things in which some forty or forty-five persons holding Office under the Government virtually decide every question before the House. It is hardly possible that any combination of Members, or the union of any body of persons, whatever their position or views may be, can face so formidable an official phalanx."—[3 Hansard, cxliii. 1327.]

The right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Bright) has asked me for the book, and he will no doubt give us his version of the situation, although I believe he did not speak on that occasion. What I press upon the Committee is that the view which the Leader of the House took in 1856 was a sound and temperate one, and I do not understand why the Government should persist in pressing on this Bill when the Appropriation Bill is on the table, when the Committee of Supply is closed, and when there is no possibility that, either in this House or in "another place," there can be any of that matured discussion by which a right decision can alone be arrived at upon national education—a subject on which, of all subjects in the world, a right decision is surely the most desirable.

The LORD ADVOCATE: Unquestionably I agree with the right hon. Gentleman that this matter of Scotch education is a matter of interest, not only to that "select vestry" of Scotch Members which he has been kind enough to allude to, but to the House of Commons generally; and I am sure I only express the views and feelings of the Scotch Members when I say that it is with pleasure we see so distinguished a Member of this House taking an interest in the question, and that we should have been very glad if that interest had been developed a little earlier in the Session. It seems to me that if he had taken that course, he would not have fallen into the multiplicity of mistakes which has characterized the speech he has just made; and I cannot but regret that the right hon. Gentleman's interference in this interesting matter should have been confined to taking up a portion of that short time during which we might have made progress with this Bill. In regard to the history of the Bill, it is needless for me to go back upon it in detail, although the right hon. Gentleman has not heard it. Those hon. Members who have taken an interest in and attended to this matter as to a public duty are familiar with the facts. The Bill was introduced as the fruit of the Report of the Royal Commission, and it was introduced in "another place" early in the Session. That there were conflicting views upon the subject of the Bill we are perfectly well aware. Even before the Bill was introduced into the House of Lords the Commissioners had recommended a compromise. The House of Lords threw over the compromise, at least in one important particular, which is not without analogy or importance in the present discussion. The question in dispute related to the management of the parochial schools and the new schools. The compromise recommended by the Commissioners was to leave the parochial schools under the old management, and to place the new schools under the new Board about to be constituted. The Lords threw over the new management, and adhered to the management of the old parochial schools; and in a great many particulars the Bill was altered in their Lordships' House. When it came down here, the question was how to deal with the Amendments of the Lords, and I endeavoured at once to show to the House and to the country the real propositions of the Government, and the principles upon which they wished to take the opinion of this House. I know that, even as matters stand, in Scotland the real proposition of the Government has hardly yet been understood, not from want of information, but because the print with the Lords' Amendments sent down to Scotland has been up to this time believed in many quarters to be the Bill of the Government. The right hon. Gentleman has accused me of an offence which he says has been condoned. I was not aware that I had committed any offence, or that I stood in need of any pardon. I was at a loss to know how to deal with the Bill as it came from the Lords, and I consulted the best authorities I had access to. I allude to the clerks who sit at this table, and whose advice is generally resorted to; and I was advised, and I believe soundly advised, that there was nothing improper or out of Order—nothing but what was perfectly regular—in committing the Bill pro formâ for the purpose of introducing Amendments. I made a statement on the second reading which the right hon. Gentleman did not do me the honour to attend and listen to, and I then stated fully what the Government intended to take and what they intended to reject, and I terminated my speech purposely by saying that the Government would go into Committee pro formâ, for the purpose of re-printing the Bill with the Amendments the Government proposed. The House were at no loss to understand my statement, and it is unreasonable that I should now be told that I have followed a most unprecedented and improper course. So much for the history of the Bill. Now, it is said that this was a compromise. But there was no compromise in that sense of the word. The real matter is this—It has been a debated question from first to last whether parochial schools should be left under their present exclusive management, or whether the management should be rendered more liberal. That question was discussed in "another place;" and the hon. Member for Dumbartonshire (Mr. Orr Ewing) has had on the Paper in regard to this Bill a Resolution for the purpose of altering the constitution of the parochial schools ever since the Bill first came down here, but in the speech I made I unquestionably stated that, on the whole, the Government thought it better to adhere to the compromises suggested by the Commissioners. But that was a matter entirely open to debate; and, if the Government had been defeated on that point, it would have been quite open to accept the Amendments of the hon. Member for Dumbartonshire. We divided on the question whether the parish schools should remain as they were or not. We resolved to accept the Amendment, and I think my hon. Friends the Members of the "select vestry," who sat upon that side of the House, entirely concurred with me also. They thought it was rather late to call upon them to consider the matter. I am perfectly certain they do not sympathize with the Motion made by my noble Friend the Member for Haddingtonshire (Lord Elcho); and now what are we told? We are told that it is outrageous to go into Committee on a large Bill at this time of the Session. Sir, this is not the first time the House has done such a thing. I remember we sat one Session up to the 28th August—the year in which the Divorce Bill was introduced. I say there is no more urgent subject than a subject of this nature, and I trust the right hon. Gentleman, having relieved his own mind by the expression of his opinion, will neither create nor encourage any delay.

MR. HENLEY said, that anyone who had been unfortunate enough to have been in this House during the last ten days as many hours as he had could not fail to have been struck with two remarkable things. One was that they were now setting an extraordinary precedent for future legislation in the way in which measures had been got through during the last few days. He thought they were going a pretty good pace to bring legislation into contempt, and if legislation was brought into contempt, he did not know that contempt of law would not follow. The other point was this—he gave no opinion as to the changes which were about to take place in the measure which had stopped the way for so many days, but there were 200 Amendments to the Bill, and they were told this morning that the Lord Advocate had assented to seventy of them. That was a pretty good sweep, and he supposed it would make a pretty considerable alteration in the Bill, so that when the measure went back to "another place" it was very likely to give rise to considerable discussion. He gave no opinion on the matter. He did not understand whether the change was right or wrong; but he had a very strong opinion that if the Government thought it right to make such extensive changes, those changes ought to have been made ten days ago, when all the time which had been wasted in fruitless discussion would have been saved, and then it would have been possible for the alterations to have received that amount of consideration when they went back to "another place" which they were entitled to. These were points which had struck him very forcibly. He confessed he should be very sorry to see the course which had been pursued with regard to this Bill set up as a precedent for the future mode of doing business in that House. He thought it inconvenient, and as he said before, he believed it would tend to bring legislation into contempt; and he could not conceive any inconvenience in a measure or two standing over for another year, which would be greater than the giving rise to a belief that at the end of a Session a mass of legislation was got through without receiving the consideration which it deserved, and without giving time to the "other place" to which all Bills must go, for dealing properly with them, instead of shuffling them over in the way in which a good many Bills had been shuffled over during the last few days.

Mr. COLLINS said, he must protest against the course which had been adopted with regard to this Bill. This House had never seen the Bill as it left the Lords at all, for it was committed pro formâ, and when it came on for discussion it was virtually a new Bill. The whole explanation made upon it on going in Committee pro formâ did not last three minutes, and it consisted of a sotto voce conversation between the Speaker and the Lord Advocate, and—he did not know whether the reporters had "struck" at that period or not—not a line of it appeared in the newspapers. The going into Committee on that occasion took place between two and three o'clock in the morning, and the people of Scotland, unable to obtain any information of it through the daily journals must have been in a state of complete mystification about it. He objected to the Bill going forward now, lest it might be made into a precedent for England. The Bill sought to alter the whole taxation of Scotland, and the whole mode of regulating the schools; and they did not even know yet whether the clause for denominational schools might not be struck out by the Liberal Members for Scotland. He trusted the Bill would not be allowed to proceed further this Session.

Mr. CANDLISH said, it seemed to him that if hon. Members had only discussed the Bill instead of wasting time over preliminary questions, the measure would have left the House long since; but the policy of the Opposition had been to discuss over and over again whether they should proceed with it or not. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Bucks objected to proceed with the Bill on the ground that at such a time of the year it would be supported by the votes of thirty or forty Members of the Government. But a night or two ago, in a House of something like 150 Members, upwards of 100 voted in favour of proceeding with it. The question was, was Scotland in favour of the measure? Well, interpreting the will of Scotland by the representatives of Scotland in that House, he thought it clear that it was the desire of the people of Scotland that the Bill should pass. The present Session had not been a long one compared with some recent Sessions. In 1867, the House sat until the 23rd of August, and long before the 23rd of August this year this Bill could be fairly considered by both Houses of Parliament.

Major WALKER remarked that a large number of Scotch Members were absent from the House at the present period, and he presumed that it might, therefore, be concluded that they were not very anxious on the score of this Bill. He was supplied by the Lord Advocate with a good argument for voting in favour of the Motion that the Chairman leave the Chair, for the right hon. and learned Lord had made the admission that the Bill was not understood by the people of Scotland. He trusted that the Government would see fit to withdraw the measure.

Mr. BRIGHT: Sir, I could conceive circumstances in which the objection which has been made by the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Disraeli) should be held to be valid; that is, if the question was one of great difficulty, and if its principle was contested. But judging from what has taken place on this side of the House, and from what we have seen on several occasions on the other side, there is really no considerable difference of opinion in regard to the Bill itself. If we were a month earlier in the Session, nearly all the arguments which are now used against the Bill could not be used, and the Bill would stand generally supported by the great majority of Members on both sides of the House. I have heard it said from this Bench that hon. Members opposite have opposed the Bill as if they did not believe that it was a bad Bill, or as if they believed that a Bill of this kind should not be opposed. If we are agreed on that, what reason is there that a Bill of this kind should not be passed now? If you believed that the Bill was bad and embraced principles which, if carried out in Scotland, might be held to be wrong for the rest of the Kingdom, then you might vote against the Bill and decide to reject it. But the fact is quite contrary; and no one can doubt the importance of the Bill itself and the question it is intended to settle. Everyone knows that we have had during the whole Session a succession of deputations from Scotland to represent to the Government the importance of this question. I believe there is no Member of the Government—no Member of the Cabinet, certainly—who has not had interviews with several deputations from Scotland in connection with this Bill; and we have had them constantly in the Lobby. It shows that there is a very great interest in the question, and the object of the Government has been to meet, as far as it was possible in one Bill, the general views of the people of Scotland in regard to this question. Now, the right hon. Gentleman says the Lord Advocate has not adhered to the general principles of this Bill. But he is the last man that should say that, for he, of all Ministers that I have ever seen, was the most pliant in regard to the great measure of which he had the conduct some time ago. And it was only because he was pliant, and because he acted on the theory—which he has promulgated to-day, not for the first time, that compromise was necessary, that he was enabled to pass one of the most important measures that is now on the statute-book of this country. The Government, doing the best they could under the circumstances, have conducted the plan and brought the Bill to its present position. And now, if it was left to the Scotch Members on this side of the House, you might count on the fingers of one hand the number of Scotch Members who would oppose this Scotch Bill. It would be carried all but unanimously by the Scotch Members—and more than that, it would be carried unanimously by the English Members on this side of the House—and if hon. Members opposite would only act on their opinions, they also would pass the Bill. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Oxfordshire (Mr. Henley) says we are bringing legislation into contempt. The fact is, that this House is so numerous, that unless three-fourths of the Members went away at the end of the Session we should not pass any measures—because there are so many Members, all representing earnest constituents, and there is so much to be debated, that it is only when the House is thin that measures of this nature and the general run of legislation can pass through. What has taken place this Session is what has happened in previous Sessions. I know it depends very much on the character of the Administration what measures shall pass at this period of the Session; but my own opinion is that this is one of the Bills in passing which at this period of the Session the country will say the Government has done its duty. Look at the difficulty of passing any Bill at all. See what difficulties there have been this Session. See what difficulties there will be next Session, with a number of important Bills, as we hope, coming forward; and would it not be beneficial that the House should clear away, for a time at least, the great question of Scotch education? The right hon. Gentlemen has referred to the 90,000 children in Scotland, and he says there are many more in England. That may be true. But surely if we delay this Bill now, and it is to come on again next Session, it will block the way of the measure which is to meet the wants and difficulties of the people of this country. I appeal then, to hon. Members to let this Bill pass. The Government is not interested in the Bill any more than other Members. Our object is to make the legislation of this Session as advantageous as possible, and I believe if this Bill were to pass it would make this Session much more valuable. The House of Lords understands this question thoroughly. They will not require to discuss it from beginning to end. There are Lords enough now to discuss it; and there can be no doubt that, seeing they have had it under consideration before, they will not object to the Bill going up now. We have done the best we could during one of the heaviest Sessions the House of Commons ever had, and I do appeal to hon. Gentlemen opposite not to give it a vexatious and party opposition. [LORD ELCHO: Not party.] Well, I will withdraw "party," and will say opposition against a measure which is supported by this side of the House, and which receives all but the unanimous support of the people of Scotland; and I believe, if they look at what the interests of the country require, they will allow the Bill to proceed and the clauses to be got through, which may be done within the next hour or hour and a-half.

Sir GRAHAM MONTGOMERY said, he was sure that the right hon. Gentleman opposite would acquit him of having shown any hostility to the Bill. There was a great deal of good in it, but, at the same time, the course which had been followed by Government, though technically correct, was not the usual one. The right hon. Gentleman committed the Bill pro formâ, and then re-printed it. But surely it would have been better for him to have placed on the Paper the alterations which he proposed to make. Three or four weeks after the Bill was re-printed, the right hon. Gentleman, in consequence of the remonstrances from all sides of the House, as to the difficulty of understanding the position in which the Bill was, had his Amendments re-printed separately. He ought to have taken that course in the first instance. The result was that the people of Scotland had had no opportunity of seeing the Amendments on the Bill, and did not know in what position it now stood. As to the attempt that had been made to cast the blame of delay on his side of the House, to that he demurred entirely. The opposition to the Bill proceeded from the Government side of the House below the Gangway, and to cast the blame on this side was most unjust. He had listened attentively to this discussion, but he had failed to see that any hon. Gentleman on the other side of the House had taken up the challenge of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Buckinghamshire, who quoted the speech of the right hon. Gentleman the First Minister of the Crown as to the procedure on the part of the Government in attempting to pass a Bill of this importance after the Appropriation Bill had been laid on the table, and no hon. Member had attempted to reply. If this Bill had been pushed with vigour, he believed it might have been passed through the House; but it could not be expected that they would allow a measure of this importance, affecting the whole of Scotland, to pass in this hurried manner.

Mr. J. LOWTHER said, that the President of the Board of Trade had admitted that if this Bill introduced any principle with respect to education for Scotland which would be objected to for England he should regard the opposition to this measure as entirely justifiable. Now, he (Mr. Lowther) would take his stand on the 59th clause, which authorized school committees to impose assessments upon lands and heritages to maintain new national schools. Now, he (Mr. Lowther) most decidedly and entirely objected to an educational rate for England, and therefore he strongly objected to such a precedent being established in a Bill brought into that House at the very end of the Session. The Prime Minister had pledged the Government not to propose or agree to any increase of local burdens until the entire question of local taxation had been brought before the House, and this was a question of local taxation. Many of the Members for Scotland were favourable to a compulsory rate, which was a first step towards compulsory education. Now, in England, with few exceptions, there was a strong repugnance to compulsory education on the part of the great mass of the people. As the Bill introduced a precedent for Scotland which many hon. Members would oppose for England, a case had been made out, on the right hon. Gentleman's own showing, why the House ought not to pass the Bill this Session.

Lord ELCHO was sorry to interfere between the Committee and the division, but having moved that the Chairman leave the Chair, he thought it right to explain his reasons. As the learned Lord Advocate well knew, no one had worked more heartily with him in the cause of education than he had done fourteen years ago. The Bill which his hon. and learned Friend attempted to pass in 1854 was a far better measure, much sounder in principle, more liberal and comprehensive, and founded upon a better system than the Bill before the House. The Bill of 1855 was a national measure. It embraced the old parochial schools, and established new schools for all Presbyterians. By the compromise which was made the other night, and which was a compromise between what the supporters of the Government wished and what the Government itself was pledged to, the parochial schools were taken entirely out of the Bill, and new schools were to be maintained out of the rates, practically for those who were not members of the Established Church, but belonged to the Presbyterian faith. They were to remain untouched, except that the management was liberalized to a certain extent. In addition to that, a provision was made, which he admitted was perfectly reasonable, for the education of Roman Catholics and Episcopalians, whose faith and feelings would not allow them to attend the parochial or district schools. He should be most inclined to take his stand on the question of the incidence of taxation proposed in this Bill. Let property be rated to the full amount necessary for the purposes of education, but let the taxation be just. Let it fall on all who were interested in education—and he maintained that the whole population were interested in the question — and not merely those who were the owners of heritable property. Personal property ought to be rated as much as heritable and landed property for this purpose. This Bill did not do that. It extended the area of taxation, but it left the burden where it originally stood—on the owners of real property. He believed that one of the causes of the anxiety of the Secretary of State for the Home Department to get the measure passed was to get in the thin end of the wedge, and get Parliament to sanction by legislation the principle of rating real property and not personal property for the purpose of education. English Members had better look to this. He (Lord Elcho) had never taken a factious course in that House, and he had only moved to report Progress because he held that there was a large principle at stake in this matter, much more important than even the Education Bill itself. That question was the mode of conducting Public Business in this House. As a Scotch Member, he protested against the mode of conducting Scotch business adopted in this case—namely, that measures of the utmost importance should be chopped and changed about to suit the feelings and views of the thick-and-thin supporters of the Government; and he objected altogether to Scotch measures—measures of vital importance—being brought forward at a period of the Session when they had only a few hours to discuss them. He had simply done what he deemed to be his duty in the Motion he had made, for he did not think it right that measures of this kind, about which they were told the Scotch people knew nothing, should be hurried through the House as was now proposed. He entered his protest against such a course, and should press his Motion to a division.

Motion made, and Question put, "That the Chairman do now leave the Chair." —(Lord Elcho.)

The Committee divided: — Ayes 27; Noes 99: Majority 72.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 25 struck out.

Clauses 26 to 33, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 34 (Ratepayers or town council refusing to elect school committee).

On the Motion of Mr. M'LAREN, clause amended by inserting a provision respecting the election of the school committee by the town councils.

LORD ELCHO said, that the word "secretary" occurred in line 30, and he wished to remind the Committee that the question arose the other day as to whether the secretary should or should not be a clergyman. Through a misunderstanding on his part, he was then unable to press that question, and the clause which enabled them to put it passed without their being able to elicit a definite answer on the subject. To speak plain upon this matter, he had to state that a rumour was in circulation that a certain rev. gentleman who had been extremely useful to the Government at the last election had a promise of this secretaryship. Considering that the Board was to be undenominational in its character, and that they were about to establish an undenominational system of education for Scotland, he did not think a greater mistake could be made than to appoint to the office of secretary the representative of any sect in Scotland. He hoped therefore that when his right hon. Friend the Lord Advocate came to give a definite answer as to the constitution of the Board, he would be able to give an equally definite answer in regard to the question whether or not the secretary was to be a clergyman.

MR. M'LAREN said, this question had been more than once before the House, and he must enter his protest against the attempt to put in one man by knocking down the reputation and ability of another man. Such a rule laid down in that House would be an implied censure on every clergyman in Scotland; and he altogether objected to the principle of saying that 3,000 or 4,000 ministers should all be held to be disqualified from filling an office of this kind. He held that an office of this kind would be exceedingly well filled by a person who had received the special training of a clergyman. As to the particular minister, he was not aware that he had interfered in any election whatever. He maintained that the Government ought to find the best man they could for the office, irrespective of where he was or what he was.

Mr. DALRYMPLE said, he agreed with the sentiments expressed by the noble Lord the Member for Haddingtonshire. He (Mr. Dalrymple) spoke in the interest of no man; but he distinctly said that it would be a most unfortunate circumstance if any but a layman should be appointed to this office.

Mr. GRAHAM said, he could not hear any allusion made implying a stigma on the ministers of Scotland, and remain silent. This was a revival of the cry made the other day casually, and afterwards disowned by the gentleman who made it, that all the ministers were, in fact, firebrands. He trusted the Government would not consent to give any pledge whereby ministers of religion would be shut out from appointments in connection with education.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 35 to 43, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 44 (Examiners to hold the office for two years, but may be re-appointed).

Mr. HENLEY said, that this and the subsequent clause opened up a question which was not confined to Scotland, although it referred to the superior kind of education which was intended to be conferred upon the people of Scotland. It opened up an examination to the nobleman's son if he chose to avail himself of it, as well as to the child of the humblest person. When they came to a later clause he should ask some Member of the Government to explain the estimated cost which the public might be called upon in two or three years to provide, and to tell the Committee what would be the relative cost of these examinations of masters by University Professors, as compared with the examination by the Inspectors of the Privy Council. The further question then arose whether the Government would undertake to hold out the same liberal hand to the people of England and Ireland which the Bill held out to the people of Scotland. Would the same liberal scale of education paid for at the same rate be secured to the rest of the Kingdom? It would not be right that a very costly system of examination should be established in one part of the country, without a full understanding that the Government, assisted by the Scotch Members, would provide an equally liberal scale of education for the whole of the United Kingdom. It would, he imagined, require a grant of something like £200,000 a year to carry out this system of examination in London alone. He gave great credit to his Scotch friends for their shrewdness in these matters, remembering as he did that they had obtained for themselves, at the public expense, an ordnance map of six or seven inches to the square mile, which we had never yet been able to obtain in England. Before the Bill went out of Committee, some Cabinet Minister would, he hoped, give a public assurance that an equal measure of liberality should be dealt out to England and Ireland, when measures of national education were framed for those countries.

Mr. M'LAREN objected to the proposed establishment of four independent Boards of examiners, one for each University of Scotland. He apprehended that the effect of this competition would be to reduce the standard of qualification until it became almost nominal. He regretted that the Bill departed from the system of examination by the Inspectors of the Privy Council, which was almost perfect and cost nothing; whereas the system now proposed was unsatisfactory, and would cost a great deal.

Mr. W. E. FORSTER, in reply to the right hon. Member for Oxfordshire, said, it was the duty of his Department to ascertain whether the mode of examination by University Professors would impose a larger charge than that conducted by Inspectors from the Privy Council. There was reason to believe that it would not. The present inspecting staff of the Education Office was fully worked, and as under the Bill there would be at least 400 more persons to be examined every year, an increase in the number of Inspectors would be required fully equal to the cost of the University examiners. When the right hon. Gentleman asked that the same measure of liberality should be extended to England and Ireland that would be carried out by this Bill for Scotland, he must remind him that the present conditions of education in the former countries were different from those established by this Bill for Scotland. In Ireland three-fourths at least of the education expenditure were paid out of the Consolidated Fund. In England a larger proportion was raised by voluntary contribution, but there was no educational rate, such as was proposed to be levied in Scotland under this Bill. Where people rated themselves for an object they usually expected to have their share out of the taxes, and to have a voice in the management. No precedent, therefore, could be drawn from Scotland by England and Ireland under the different conditions of their present educational system.

MR. HENLEY wished to know whether the Committee were to understand that the right hon. Gentleman, on the part of the Government, stated that in no case should an education rate be adopted in England? He did not grudge the people of Scotland their educational advantages, but he protested against the inference of the right hon. Gentleman that because there was some difference between the education systems of England and Scotland, the people of England were not to have equal help.

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, he had not made any statement or conveyed any impression in regard to the intentions of the Government upon the English Bill, as to whether it would or would not include an education rate. It was equally beyond his power and his province to give any assurance upon the matter one way or the other, or to give any idea as to what the intentions of the Government might be when they came to consider the subject.

SIR EDWARD COLEBROOKE said, he intended to ask for some information as to the financial working of this Bill. He feared that the right hon. Gentleman's calculations were altogether unsound, and that the effect of this examination would be to make a larger demand upon the public purse than the right hon. Gentleman anticipated. The examination by Inspectors of mixed teachers was much superior to that by Professors, especially in the case of women teachers.

DR. LYON PLAYFAIR reminded the Committee that the training of the teachers in Scotland had hitherto been at the Universities—the training and normal schools being new to them—and expressed his belief that nothing could be more unpopular in Scotland than the taking away of the power which it was proposed to give by this Bill with respect to the examination of the teachers by University Examiners. The whole training of teachers in Scotland had been carried on in the Universities, training schools and normal schools being very modern contrivances; and nothing would be more unpopular in Scotland than to take away the power intended to be given by the Bill. He approved of the Amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Edinburgh.

THE LORD ADVOCATE suggested that the hon. Member for Edinburgh should bring up his question on the Report, when there would be in the hands of the Government fuller information in regard to the expense.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 45 and 46 agreed to.

Clause 47 postponed.

Clause 48 agreed to.

House resumed.

Committee report Progress; to sit again this day.

TRANSIT OF VENUS (1874).

COMMITTEE.

Considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

MR. CHILDERS said, that in the year 1874 the transit of Venus would give the opportunity of carrying out one of the most remarkable investigations that could be made in connection with astronomy. The only method of ascertaining the distance between the sun and the earth, or, more correctly speaking, the horizontal parallax, was to observe the transit of Venus over the sun's disc, which would occur in 1874, for the first time after the transit observed by Captain Cook during the last century. The Admiralty had taken pains to ascertain the expense of observing this transit of Venus wherever it might be visible in various parts of the world, and they had come to the conclusion that it would be desirable to ask for a sum of £10,500, and to spread it over the next five years. The object of this Resolution was that the Admiralty might begin at once to take the necessary steps, and as this was a matter of prospective expenditure, the Government thought it desirable to obtain the leave of the House before undertaking outlay which would be spread over a considerable time. The amount was small, while the object was of great scientific value. He moved that an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will be graciously pleased to give directions for the carrying out of the arrangements necessary for observing the Transit of Venus which will take place in the year 1874; and to assure Her Majesty that this House will make good any expense that may be incurred thereby.

In answer to Mr. SCLATER-BOOTH,

MR. CHILDERS said, that £2,200 would be spent next year, and the remainder of the sum of £10,500 would be spread over the rest of the five years.

Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying Her Majesty that She will be graciously pleased to give directions for the carrying out of the arrangements necessary for observing the Transit of Venus which will take place in the year 1874; and to assure Her Majesty that this House will make good any expense that may be incurred thereby.

House resumed.

Resolution to be reported To-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House will, at the rising of the House this day, adjourn till Monday next."—(Mr. Ayrton.)

MARRIAGE LAWS.

OBSERVATIONS.—QUESTION.

SIR ROUNDELL PALMER: Sir, I rise to call the attention of the House to the Report of the Marriage Law Commissioners, and to inquire whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government, in the next Session of Parliament, to introduce a Bill for the purpose of establishing a Marriage Law as nearly as possible uniform for all parts of the United Kingdom, upon principles of equality as between all Churches and religious denominations. At an earlier period I have been unwilling to press on Her Majesty's Government the question of the marriage laws of the United Kingdom, because I was well aware that the business they had in hand was of so great magnitude as to make it unreasonable to expect that they should undertake another subject of great magnitude and importance in the present Session. But when I remember that among the subjects intimately connected with the Irish Church question now settled was this one, which was distinctly promised to be made the subject of legislation in the very next Session of Parliament—the relation borne by the Church now disestablished to the marriage law of that part of the United Kingdom—the effect of what has been done being to produce, as soon as that Act comes into operation, an absolute dead-lock with regard to the marriage law affecting a very large class of Her Majesty's subjects in that part of the United Kingdom, and not only affecting those belonging to the Church of England in Ireland, but also in a great measure the marriage law affecting all classes of Her Majesty's subjects in that part of the United Kingdom who were expected by law to take advantage of the arrangement made, with reference more especially to the position of the Established Church, it is impossible, in these circumstances, that legislation on the subject of the marriage laws can be deferred to a later period than the very next Session of Parliament, and I am most anxious in that state of things to take advantage of the opportunity so offered to impress on the Government the importance of at once dealing with the entire question, and now making a uniform and consistent marriage law on principles of religious equality for every part of the United Kingdom. The House will permit me to remind them both of the circumstances under which the Commission of 1865 was appointed on the subject and the nature of the Report made by the Commission. There had been several Bills introduced in order to mitigate the inequalities and inconveniences of the extraordinary state of law as to marriage now prevailing in Ireland. There had also been brought very prominently before the attention of the public a succession of cases of a very singular description from Scotland, illustrating what are there called irregular marriages. One of these cases — the Yelverton case—attained very great notoriety, in which, first of all, a lady took advantage of an action by a tradesman against her alleged husband, to raise the question of her being married in Ireland. She had been married there by a Roman Catholic priest, but the husband was a Protestant. She persuaded an Irish jury that she was married. The question was afterwards raised in Scotland. There was a great difference of opinion on the Bench, and it was ultimately decided by the House of Lords that she was not married. That and other remarkable trials called attention to the singular law prevailing in Scotland, and to the great scandal of there being in this highly civilized United Kingdom such a great mass and variety of marriage laws which no Government had yet attempted to reduce to consistent and uniform principles. Under these circumstances a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into the laws in force in different parts of the United Kingdom with respect to the constitution and proof of the contract of marriage and registration and other means of preserving evidence thereof, and also into the state and operation of the laws of the United Kingdom in relation to the marriages of European British subjects in India and the colonies—a much less important, but not unimportant subject. The Commission was composed of many persons of very considerable eminence in the law, and of representatives well selected, I think, from all parts of the United Kingdom. Its Report received the entire concurrence of three Noblemen, who now, or formerly filled the Office of Lord Chancellor—Lord Chelmsford, Lord Cairns, and Lord Hatherley; and the mention of those three names as entirely and without qualification concurring in the Report must go along way to recommend to the favourable consideration of the House the propositions which have their united sanction. Besides these eminent men there were on the Commission the Judge of the Divorce Court, Lord Penzance, who entirely concurred in their recommendation; the Queen's Advocate, Sir Travers Twiss, who, with some trifling modifications, concurred in the Report; Mr. Walpole, the right hon. Member for the University of Cambridge; Lord Lyveden; Mr. Monsell, the Under Secretary for the Colonies, and the Lord Chancellor of Ireland—both able and worthy representatives of of the Roman Catholic portion of the community. From Scotland, entirely concurring in the recommendation of the Report, were the Solicitor General for Scotland (Mr. G. Young), and Mr. Murray Dunlop, formerly M.P. for Greenock, and who, I believe, I am not wrong in saying is connected with the Free Church. These gentlemen—entirely and without qualification, except in the case of one of their number, an immaterial qualification on a small point of detail, the rest without any qualification—concurred in the Report to which I shall now invite the attention of the House. There was one other Commissioner—the head of the Court of Session, Lord President Inglis—who did not concur in the recommendations affecting Scotland. With that exception we have the Scotch Commissioners representing the feeling of the Presbyterians; the Irish Commissioners representing the Roman Catholics; and the English Commissioners representing the legal science, as well as, to a great degree, the general intelligence of the country. The state of the law which the Commission had to examine and report upon exhibits probably as extraordinary a condition of the law as it is possible to imagine in a country so highly civilized as ours. I will take, in the first place, the marriage law of England, which, perhaps, of the three presents the smallest amount of anomaly. The law of England draws a very sharp line at the outset between members of the Established Church and all the other members of the community. As regards members of the Established Church, in its desire to guard against clandestine marriages the law recognizes two modes of doing so. One, the process of marriage by banns, appears by the evidence to be perfectly useless in the only cases in which, at first sight, it would appear to be of importance. Persons who are desirous of evading the law go to populous places where they are not known, and where the long bead-roll of names is called over in such a way as not only to constitute in itself a somewhat indecorous interruption of Divine service, but to defeat altogether the object of publicity. I really believe that if any hon. Member of this House had a member of his family desirous of being married without his knowledge the most effectual method of accomplishing this would be by having the banns published either in London or in Manchester in the very church attended by the other members of the family. The names would probably not be heard at all, or, if heard, would not be recognized; and, accordingly, the publication of banns has been found to be a useless formality. In some small rural parishes, it is true, the publication of banns may be useful, but then the same object would be accomplished by the mere personal knowledge of the clergyman. As to the license a very small sum—a sum small to us, at least, though, perhaps, not small to everybody—will procure what is practically a dispensation from all precautions whatever. A person may get the license and be married the same day. The inquiries made are purely formal, and if everything that is said in answer is absolutely false it will make no difference whatever in the ultimate results. In the Established Church marriages no civil registrar is required to be present, or to have any notice given to him. On the other hand with regard to all bodies of Nonconformists the presence of a civil registrar is required, and notice has to be given in his office. In many respects the particulars required are well conceived; but the difficulty is to explain why, whatever is good for one class as far as notice is concerned is not equally good for the other. The House, generally speaking, would probably be disposed to agree that if we could provide a uniform law applicable on the same principle to all it would be a great improvement. The Jews and the Quakers have also separate laws for themselves; I do not know that any great inconveniences arises from this, but it is possible that there may be questions of a theological character which would invalidate marriages. In all those forms of English marriages the law may be invalidated by a non-compliance with any of the requirements of the law, although these, in themselves, for the most part do not seem so important as that a marriage once solemnized should be voided on the mere ground of error or accident. For instance, if the place where the marriage is celebrated is not properly consecrated or set apart, or if the marriage is effected in some other locality than where the banns have been called, or if any other error affecting time or place is made by the parties, that entirely invalidates the marriage, although, upon other grounds, there may be no objection whatever to it. These are criticisms which, in Scotland, are thought to be solid and sound against the English marriage law. The Commissioners thought them well deserving of attention; and while it would be a great thing to get a uniform system for all parts of the United Kingdom, they considered that this was to be gained by applying principles of amendment to every part of the United Kingdom, and not by endeavouring to force the law of England upon Scotland or Ireland, or the law of either of these countries upon England. Then I come to Ireland, where the state of the law is very much worse. To reduce it to a minimum, there are at least five different methods of marriage. First of all, in the Established Church, or what was lately the Established Church, there is no material difference from the system prevailing in England, though there are some differences of detail — with which I will not trouble the House — which seem to exist only for the purpose of increasing the anomalies. Then we come to the Roman Catholics. As to them, there is absolutely no marriage law at all; it is left under the old canon law — and nothing but the presence of a priest is necessary in order to make a complete and good marriage between Roman Catholics in Ireland. But if a Roman Catholic priest should presume to celebrate a marriage between a Roman Catholic and Protestant, or even between a Roman Catholic and a person who had been a Protestant within a year of the marriage, till comparatively a recent time, that was a capital offence; and, even now, it is a criminal offence of a very high order, and the marriage is absolutely void. That has not been so in England. A Roman Catholic priest, in a place duly registered, might solemnize a marriage, even between two Protestants; and so might a Dissenting minister. But in Ireland, the marriage law is denominational to a most extraordinary degree. There is one law for the Episcopalian Anglicans; another —and the loosest of all, except that of Scotland—for the Roman Catholics; a third law for the Presbyterians, who have a special system of their own, rather like that of the lately Established Church, but not the same; and for all the other bodies a fourth system. Lastly, there is the system of civil registry. I do not fatigue the House by going into all the diversities of forms and ceremonies, differing in each case; it is enough to say that there has been a most ingenious system of inventing differences and distinctions, where the object ought to have been to get rid of them—these differences and distinctions turning almost entirely on sectarian and denominational grounds. Then, in Scotland, we have a state of things entirely different from both the other countries. Till 1834, this state of things existed; there were several laws in force, and there were also irregular marriages, subjecting the parties to fine. I do not know whether they were subject to imprisonment also; at all events, they were subject to punishment at the hands of the civil magistrate, but the marriages themselves were recognized as valid. The regular marriages were those in which banns were asked, and marriages celebrated by a minister of religion; but the regular marriages were only permitted to be celebrated by ministers of the Established Church. The consequence was that a very considerable proportion of the marriages in Scotland were solemnized irregularly, and parties used to go before the magistrates and get themselves convicted of the crime of an irregular marriage, and so procure—if not a marriage license in another form—at all events, some legal recognition of the fact. In 1834, Lord Russell, then in this House, introduced a measure to do away with these religious distinctions, enabling ministers of other religious denominations to solemnize marriages in all respects as lawful as those of the Established Church. He left—I do not know whether by accident or not—one single remnant of the old system—namely, a requirement that the banns should be in all cases called in the Established Church; and a very odd operation that regulation is attended with. Strictly speaking, the banns should be called on three successive Sundays, so that a long time ought to elapse before the marriage can be effected; but, practically, on the payment of a fee, the session clerk will call over the three sets of banns altogether. That is a remnant of the old system, and I suppose the small fee has operated very mildly, for it has not been got rid of; but the effect of the change has been that irregular marriages have disappeared very largely from the general social system of the country. Irregular marriages still occur here and there; but all the witnesses from Scotland say that the enormously preponderating proportion of marriages in Scotland are solemnized in the presence of a minister of religion, and therefore the wants and habits of the people no longer oppose themselves, as they formerly did, to such an assimilation of the law of the countries as would get rid of irregular marriages altogether. I may mention that a material step towards that end was taken by Lord Brougham, fourteen or fifteen years ago, when he introduced an Act to abolish Gretna Green marriages—a system of irregular marriages, of which advantage was taken by people in England, for the most part living just over the Border. But that Act abolished these marriages by requiring fourteen days' residence in Scotland. No public excitement followed. From that time Gretna Green marriages have ceased, and the time has now become ripe for dealing with the subject of the marriage law of Scotland in a manner consistent with preponderance of opinion not only of those who bring ecclesiastical minds to bear upon the question, but those who look at it from an Imperial point of view, of whom there are many in Scotland as well as elsewhere. The system of irregular marriage in Scotland is a very startling thing to those whose minds are not thoroughly accustomed to it. Those marriages are contracted in two different ways. Suppose any Gentleman in this House visited a house in Scotland where a young lady happened to be staying, and that he and the young lady took a walk together, and in the course of the walk he took a piece of paper out of his pocket on which they wrote down a mutual promise to marry; though the piece of paper might be simply put back again into his pocket, though nothing might be said to anybody about the writing, and though nobody else might be there at the time, if the persons afterwards lived in a certain way together, that would be a valid marriage, although nobody might know of the fact of the marriage for years afterwards. No mere promise will constitute a marriage unless it be in writing, and unless subsequente copulâ. A promise so given and so followed constitutes a good marriage, however long it may be kept secret. There is another even more extraordinary mode, in which no writing at all is necessary, and that is where the promise is made not de futuro but de presenti—where the woman says—"I take you, John, for my husband," and where the man says—"I take you, Mary, for my wife," before witnesses. A promise of that kind being brought up at any future period, even although the people have never lived together, will hold good, and will be sufficient to overturn any perfectly honourable and reputable marriage that either of the parties may have subsequently entered into, and this actually occurred in the celebrated Dalrymple case. I think that, after all, it is only right that we should endeavour to have a just and uniform marriage law, founded upon unsectarian and reasonable principles. Having already overturned a material portion of the marriage law of Ireland, I venture to suggest that the Report of the Commission to which I have referred is entitled to the favourable consideration of Her Majesty's Government. I do not ask them to pledge themselves to all the recommendations of that Report, some of which, referring to the preliminaries of marriages, and others to the notice to be given, may admit of a difference of opinion, and improvement; but most of them will, I think, be approved by the House generally. I will state the most important of the recommendations which I think may be adopted with advantage. The Commissioners think that our object should be to secure uniformity of the marriage laws, if possible, throughout the United Kingdom; to secure, as far as possible, without throwing needless impediments in the way of marriage, the authentication of the fact of the marriage having occurred, so that a man and woman may know with certainty whether they are married or not, and other people may have the same certainty on the point; and, while taking precautions against hasty and precipitate marriages, to endeavour to secure the greatest freedom in the matter of marriage. How do the Commissioners propose to effect those objects? Of course the Commissioners had to consider whether it was desirable to adopt the Continental system, under which the parties merely enter into a civil contract before civil officers. While admitting the simplicity of that system the Commissioners did not recommend its adoption for two reasons; the first being that it would be impossible to reconcile the public mind of these kingdoms to a purely secular system of marriage; and the second being that they could attain their object by making every religious minister, of whatever denomination, a civil officer, for the purpose of seeing that the requirements of the law are satisfied, and of reporting to the registrar that the marriage has been solemnized. This latter system they have embodied in their recommendations, under which all religious denominations are to be placed upon an equal footing—all ministers of religion of every Church and denomination, and the civil registrars also, being recognized as competent legal official witnesses of marriage in all parts of the United Kingdom; all persons to have the option of being married by either of these classes, while in each case substantially the same notice and preliminaries are to be adopted. Of course, they propose to sweep away all incapacity of persons on account of their religion to be married by a Roman Catholic or any other minister. The Commission was appointed in March, 1865, and they did not make their Report until July, 1868; and therefore it is evident that they have not drawn up these recommendations without having carefully considered the subject. I will not further occupy the time of the House, but will conclude by asking the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government, in the next Session of Parliament, to introduce a Bill for the purpose of establishing a Marriage Law as nearly as possible uniform for all parts of the United Kingdom, upon principles of equality as between all Churches and religious denominations?

Mr. MONK said, that both the House and the Government were alike deeply indebted to the hon. and learned Member for Richmond (Sir Roundell Palmer) for calling their attention, by his able, interesting, and exhaustive speech, to this subject, even on an occasion like the present, when it could not be discussed at the length its importance demanded. The Report of the Commissioners had now been in the hands of Members for eight or nine months, and he thought the Session should not be allowed to pass away without the opinion of the Government upon it being elicited. He must join the hon. and learned Member in expressing a hope that during the Recess Her Majesty's Government would feel it incumbent upon them to prepare a measure based upon the recommendations contained in the Report, which was signed by the present Lord Chancellor and by his two immediate predecessors. That Report recommended that the law of marriage in the three Kingdoms should be rendered uniform, and he believed that that proposal would be approved by all sects and religious communities in the country. He rose chiefly for the purpose of adverting to two of the recommendations of the Commissioners, the first of which related to the presence of the civil registrar at the solemnization of marriages in places of worship other than those belonging to the Church of England — a regulation that had occasioned painful feelings among those who were subject to it. He was glad to find that the Commissioners recommended that that cause of irritation should be removed, and he trusted that under any future measure which might be introduced on this subject, ministers of all denominations would be placed on an equal footing, and that they would be allowed to register marriages without the presence of a civil registrar. The other recommendation to which he wished to refer was that which related to the publication of the banns, which, by the Marriage Act of Lord Hardwicke, was directed to be made after the Second Lesson, whereas some clergymen, ignoring the statute law as running counter to one of the Rubrics, thought fit to publish them after reading the Nicene Creed, according to the law as it stood before the passing of Lord Hardwicke's Act. Upon this point he wished to remark that the proper time for the publication of the banns should be clearly fixed by law. The only other point to which he desired to call the attention of the Government was with reference to marriage licenses, and he would call attention to the suggestion made by the learned Queen's Advocate General, Sir Travers Twiss, that the license should not be granted by the same spiritual person who was subsequently to celebrate the marriage. By extending the power of granting marriage licenses to every incumbent of a parish—who would be the same person that had to solemnize the marriage—you would take away the greatest check against irregular marriages which the present system of licenses provided; you would abolish the power of entering a caveat, which has been the means of preventing many a clandestine and bigamous marriage, and you would bring back some of the worst evils of the old system of Fleet marriages, which were put a stop to by Lord Hardwicke's Act.

MR. BRUCE: Sir, even at this advanced period of the Session, when exhausted nature finds it difficult to arouse itself to an interest in anything, I must express the pleasure and admiration with which I heard the statement of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond (Sir Roundell Palmer) on this tangled subject. I think he has clearly made out that it is a great scandal to have our marriage laws in their present position, while he has also shown that the remedy for the evil is clear and simple, and based on the strictest principles of religious equality. My hon. and learned Friend has shown that by either of two different systems you might bring about the same result. One is the Continental system of having in the first instance a civil marriage in all cases, leaving it to the parties themselves to have a religious ceremony performed afterwards. The other is, that of having recourse in the first place to a religious ceremony, making it incumbent on the minister who performs the ceremony to register the marriage, or, at all events, in some way to furnish legal proof of it. I may say at once that this subject has not been overlooked by Her Majesty's Government. Indeed, it has engaged the especial attention of the Lord Chancellor, who sat on the same Commission with my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond. During the present Session, however, we have not only not been able to bring forward a measure on the subject of the marriage laws, but even to mature our views as to the precise mode of dealing with the question. My hon. and learned Friend said it will be impossible for this or any other Government to avoid bringing forward next Session a measure to meet the change in the law created by the disestablishment of the Irish Church, and he very truly added that, as some legislation was necessary on the subject, there would manifestly be a great advantage in dealing with the question as a whole, and upon principles which would equally apply to the three Kingdoms. In those opinions it is impossible for any reasonable man not to concur; but I cannot absolutely undertake to pledge the Government, already deeply pledged, to the introduction of a general measure in the course of the next Session. In the course of the present Session we have found it necessary to postpone legislation on the three pressing questions of international law, —namely, the law of naturalization, the law of extradition, and the law of foreign enlistment. All these subjects—subjects of great difficulty—are awaiting legislative solution. Then the Government are pledged to bring in an Irish Land Bill and a Bill on the subject of Education, not to mention minor, but still important, subjects. It would, therefore, be impossible for me to give an absolute pledge that this question of the marriage laws will be dealt with in its entirety next Session; but I can honestly assure my hon. and learned Friend that it is the desire of the Government to deal with the question at the earliest possible moment, and deal with it once and for all, and to deal with it on the broad and liberal principles laid down in the Report of the Commissioners. Without binding myself as to details I may say that the measure will be not less broad and comprehensive than the scheme which my hon. and learned Friend, as the organ of the Commission, has recommended in his speech this evening. I hope that under the circumstances of the case my hon. and learned Friend will be satisfied with that assurance.

Mr. HINDE PALMER said, he hoped that when dealing with the marriage laws the Government would consider the subject of marriage with a deceased wife's sister, with the view of arriving at a settlement on that much disputed question.

THE GOLD COINAGE.

OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. J. B. SMITH said, he rose to call the attention of the House to the Report of the Master of the Mint on our Gold Coinage, and to inquire of Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer in reference to an International Gold Coinage. It appeared that a very large portion of our gold coinage was now worn and deteriorated in value. There were upwards 31,000,000 of gold pieces in circulation, of which about the value of 25,000,000 were deteriorated, and were no longer legal coin of the value which they were supposed to represent. In fact they had become mere tokens. Under these circumstances, it would be necessary to recoin them, and the question arose — a question which he wished to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer—who was to bear the loss, which would be a very serious one? In this country the Mint made no charge for converting bullion into coin. In every other country a charge was made for coining. Was our Mint to be the only manufactory in the world which sold the manufactured article at the same price as the raw material? In our own possessions in Australia there was a charge of 1 per cent for coining gold. In India there was a charge of 1 per cent for gold and 2 per cent for silver, and in the United States of America there was a charge of 1 per cent for gold. In 1865, France, Belgium, Switzerland, and Italy entered into a Convention to establish international coinage in those dominions, and great convenience had arisen from that Convention. Gentlemen who had visited those countries since 1865 must know that to be the case. When, twenty-five years ago, he went to Italy through France and other countries he had to change his money fourteen times. Recently he went to Italy, and he had only to change it once. These countries had also an international system of weights and measures, which gave them a great advantage in trading with each other. In 1867 the French Government invited a Conference of nations to consider the question of international coinage. About twenty nations attended the Conference, which was held at Paris, and after several days' sitting they resolved on adopting —first, a single standard of gold; second, nine-tenths proportion of fine gold in the coin. Some other nations had since recognized the Convention; Greece, Austria, Rome, and, he believed, Sweden had since coined 10 franc pieces. Our representatives at the Conference had made a Report, which was referred to a Royal Commission which sat last year. That Report was signed by the Master of the Mint and Mr. Wilson. The Royal Commission of last year said we entertain no doubt that a uniform system of coins as well as a uniform system of weights and measures would be productive of great general advantage, and also recommended another general international Conference, and that led him to the next Question he had to ask of the right hon. Gentleman, whether the Government proposed to recommend any measure extending to this country a system of international coinage, as recommended by the International Coinage Convention of December, 1865? The matter was of great importance to the United States as well as to England, being the two largest gold producing countries in the world; although America was saddled with an enormous debt, and had nobly resolved to pay it off, principal and interest, in gold, they would prefer the advantages of an international coinage, notwithstanding the temporary inconvenience that would result to themselves. To England it would be no inconvenience whatever, for it happened that by the mere alteration of the charge of about 1 per cent upon the mintage our coin would then be equivalent to a 25 franc gold piece; and the Master of the Mint had demonstrated in his Report that if we were to return to the old coinage of the time of Edward III., when 100 pence made a noble and ten pence made a franc, we should then be in exact unison with France. What was wanted was a common identical unit of account known to all the world, in the same way as notes representing musical sound could be interpreted by any musician, no matter what his nationality. It was desirable that this country should take the lead in a matter of such great importance as that of international coinage, and he hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would be able to give an answer worthy of an enlightened country and the age in which we live.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, it would perhaps be convenient if he interposed before the Chancellor of the Exchequer replied to the Questions put to him, and asked for some further explanation than had been given by the Secretary of the Treasury the other evening respecting the new appointment to the office of distributor of stamps for the county of Ayr, consequent on the resignation of Mr. Oswald. In former times it was the custom to appoint to the office of county distributor of stamps gentlemen of position, at salaries ranging between £1,500 and £3,000 a year, not so much because of their competence for the duties they had to discharge—for their office might be described as a sinecure—but because they were able to find adequate security for the proper discharge of those duties. But as in process of time postal communication became more easy and safe, and the Board of Inland Revenue extended its ramifications throughout the country, it was found unnecessary to fill these offices, and by a Treasury Minute following certain correspondence between the Board of Inland Revenue and the Treasury, it was determined some twelve or fourteen years ago that in future no fresh appointment should be made to them. This Minute had been acted on in the case of many vacancies which had since occurred — in point of fact, the vacancies had not been filled up. Independently of the saving which would result from the discharge of the duties of county distributor direct from Somerset House, the case of the new appointment he referred to demanded an explanation, because he believed it was not in accordance with modern practice to appoint persons not regularly in the Civil Service to offices under the Board of Inland Revenue. In answer to a Question of his noble Friend the Member for Wigtonshire (Lord Garlies), the House heard from the Secretary to the Treasury that the office of stamp distributor for the county of Ayr had become vacant, and that a re-appointment had been made, subject only to some revision in the matter of salary. No doubt Mr. Brown, to whom the post had been given, was a very respectable and proper person for the office, if it were necessary to maintain it; but he was not a civil servant of the Crown, and had no special qualifications beyond that he was resident in Ayrshire. Now he (Mr. Sclater-Booth), when at the Treasury last autumn, made inquiries in anticipation of a vacancy occurring, because of the late distributor having succeeded to a very large estate by the death of his brother, and he came to the conclusion that the circumstances of Ayrshire offered no sufficient reason for deviating from the rule set forth by the Treasury Minute to which he had referred. The office was unquestionably a sinecure office in Ayrshire, because the duties had for many years been discharged by deputy; and the appointment made, being that of a near relation of the gentleman who had resigned, whose resignation had been expected for more than a twelvemonth previously, had caused such a stir in the county as made it most desirable the right hon. Gentleman should give the explanation he was no doubt fully able to give for the course that had been taken in filling up the appointment. He proposed to move for the original Correspondence which occurred between the Board of Inland Revenue and the Treasury upon the subject, ending in the Treasury Minute stating that such appointments should not be filled up; for a Return of the vacancies which had occurred in the office of county distributor of stamps, showing what provision had been made for the discharge of the duties in each case; and for the Correspondence between the Board of Inland Revenue and the Treasury, showing the reasons which induced the appointment of a gentleman unconnected with the Civil Service to do duties which, in other cases, it was found quite easy to discharge by the ordinary machinery at the command of Somerset House without such an officer.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: I believe the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Sclater-Booth) has stated the practice in these cases quite correctly—that is, that it is now the practice, whenever we get the opportunity, to amalgamate the two offices of distributor of stamps and collector of Excise, and, as we wish to amalgamate the two departments, I think the practice is a proper one. In this particular case Mr. Oswald was distributor of stamps in the town of Ayr, and he resigned the office in January last. There was not in the town of Ayr any collector of Excise to whom the office could be given; the nearest collector was too far off—namely at Greenock, where the same person discharged the duties of collector of Excise and distributor of stamps; and therefore, contrary to the ordinary practice, and, as it seems to me, under the pressure of clear necessity, the office of distributor of stamps was filled up without being given to a collector of Excise, just because there was no collector of Excise within reach. This is a simple explanation of the fact why the particular gentleman referred to was appointed; and whether there was anyone else whom the hon. Member would rather have had selected I really do not know. The Government seem to have taken every precaution in an exceptional case, and have done only that justified by the necessity of the case. They have entered into an agreement with this gentleman that his appointment shall be liable to revision both as to the amount of his salary and the transference of his duties, if necessary, at any time, so that he holds his office without any claim, even if it should be taken from him. The salary was reduced from £1,150 a year to £800 a year, and, besides that, we required him to give security for £5,000, so, as there was no person in the place connected with the Excise to whom the appointment could be given, as far as I can judge, the Government have taken every reasonable precaution. They have in no way fettered themselves, but they have left the matter so that at any future time, if it be thought desirable, the salary of this gentleman can be reduced, or he can be deprived of his appointment and it can be given to another person. With all these safeguards I really do not know what more could be required. There being no necessity that this appointment should be given to a person who was already in the Civil service, and it being impossible in this case to combine the office with that of collector of Excise, it appears to me to be a perfectly defensible and reasonable appointment. I now turn to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. J. B. Smith), who has introduced to us a very interesting subject, and one which might very well, at a time of less pressure, occupy the attention of the House —namely, the subject of our coinage. The coinage of this country is in a most unsatisfactory state; there is no doubt of that. The waste with which it is carried on is enormous. The possession of a gold and silver coinage I do not look upon myself as a necessity, but rather as a luxury, and as an indulgence to a popular taste—which, by the way, is a very expensive taste—but as it is the taste of the people of the country, I suppose it will continue to be gratified. It is quite necessary that the coinage of this country should correspond with gold and silver; but I am not aware there is any necessity it should actually consist of those metals. Since the year 1850, according to the calculations of Professor Jevons, who has looked deeply into the subject and has brought great ability to bear upon it, and whose conclusions are adopted by the Master of the Mint, Colonel Smith, and other authorities, we have coined 98,000,000 of sovereigns, and of these 98,000,000 about 44,000,000 have disappeared altogether. Either they have been exported from the country and have not returned to it, or they have been melted down. We have thus had the satisfaction of bestowing a great deal of labour and ingenuity and cost in the manufacture of an article of great merit and neatness in our gold coinage, which has formed a sort of quarry out of which other countries make gold coinage for their own use. The reason of this is not far to seek. As my hon. Friend has said, we, almost alone of the nations of the world who make coin, give to the person who brings us gold the same weight of gold in coin, upon which we have bestowed labour, as we receive from him in a rude unwrought state. We give him our coinage at less than its cost; we give back weight for weight a manufactured article in exchange for the raw material out of which that article is made. It necessarily follows that, as we choose to circulate our coinage at less than its value, so, as coin, it commands less than its value, and is worth less than it really ought to be. It is impossible to make all sovereigns of the same weight; at least, if possible, it can only be done by a minuteness of machinery and a carefulness of labour which make it not a paying thing to do; the consequence is that, within certain limits, sovereigns are heavier one than the other. These sovereigns having no value given to them in respect of the manufacture, the material coin is so much bullion, and is treated as such; and persons take out the heaviest sovereigns and melt them down—a process by which they make a halfpenny for each. London was for many years the seat of this manufacture, which was carried on close to the Mint, where the sovereigns were made, so that the two establishments were side by side, one coining money, and the other melting it down. Then the manufacture went to Paris, where it flourished many years; and now it is carried on at Brussels. While this goes on upon the Continent, there is another cause for the sovereign being put into circulation at the price or value of so much bullion. From the fact that the State charges nothing for the labour expended in the manufacture of it, and that it has no more exchangeable value than the bullion out of which it is made, the sovereign is liable to be exported as bullion, and there are great inducements to export it, because it is bullion already assayed and the weight of which is ascertained. All persons know pretty nearly what the weight of the sovereign is, and therefore it is bullion in the most convenient form for export. The consequence is that, whenever the rate of exchange is against us, and there is an export of bullion from this country, it is very convenient, besides exporting bullion in the unmanufactured state, to export it in the manufactured state, in sovereigns, and by that means to cause a violent and sudden contraction of our currency, which would not otherwise occur. Those are some of the evils that arise from our present system, but they are not all the evils. Although we give our currency to the public for nothing, the Government undertaking the business of an unremunerative manufacture, we take not the slightest precaution, when we have issued that currency, that it shall maintain its value. The original weight of the sovereign ought to be about 123·274 grains of gold, and when the sovereign is so worn that it has lost three-fourths of a grain in value —when it has got below 122½ grains in value, it ceases to be a legal tender. The legal life of a sovereign is about eighteen years, it having in that time, from wear and tear, fallen below its original value. We take no trouble to call in this coin, and do nothing to save the public from the accident of taking light coin; and the consequence is that, after all our expense and trouble, 31½ per cent of our sovereigns and 47 per cent of our half-sovereigns are not a legal tender, because they are light weight; and that, for a country which prides itself above all things upon keeping up its gold standard, and upon having a circulation above all doubt and suspicion, is not only a very great and serious evil, but a great reproach and discredit. I must add that it is an evil which will assume a practical form, because, under these circumstances, a re-coinage will be speedily called for. Something must be done to call in this light coin, and it is assumed that somewhere about £400,000 will be required to re-coin the loss in the weight of our coinage. We are going upon the plan at present of giving out a sovereign, which passes from hand to hand until some unfortunate person finds that it is not a legal tender, and is obliged to sell it for what it is worth for bullion. While we are very liberal in respect of giving our labour for nothing, we seem to be very careless and remiss in taking steps to keep up the integrity and standard of our money.

That is as nearly as I can state it the condition of things with regard to the currency of this country. Well, what is the remedy for this grievance? It is perfectly obvious that it is to be remedied by a natural, simple, and ordinary proceeding; in short, that in manufacturing money we should do as other manufacturers do and take pay for our labour. In effect we sell money to those who bring us gold; for an ounce of gold we give in exchange £3 17*s.* 10½*d.*, and that is the exact weight of an ounce of gold. It appears to me that, while as manufacturers we are absurdly liberal in this respect, we should be much more wise to follow the example of all other countries and impose a mintage, brassage, or seignorage, or whatever it might be called, so as to indemnify ourselves for the expense of maintaining our currency. The practice of this country has been the contrary ever since the reign of Charles II. The opinion that it is right there should be a mintage for the coining of money has been held by almost every considerable writer on political economy. And I will cite one or two instances. Sir Dudley North says—

> "The free coinage is a perpetual motion found out, whereby to melt and coin without ceasing, and so to feed goldsmiths and coiners at the public charge."

Adam Smith says—

> "When the tax upon a commodity is so moderate as not to encourage smuggling, the merchant who deals in it, though he advances, does not properly pay the tax, as he gets it back in the price of the commodity. The tax is finally paid by the last purchaser or consumer. But money is a commodity with regard to which every man is a merchant. Nobody buys it but in order to sell it again, and with regard to it there is in ordinary cases no last purchaser or consumer. When the tax upon coinage, therefore, is so moderate as not to encourage false coining, though everybody advances the tax, nobody finally pays it, because everybody gets it back in the advanced value of the coin."

Therefore, according to Adam Smith, we actually throw away this money we pay for coinage, because it is quite possible for us to get it back at nobody's expense. Another passage to the same effect from Adam Smith is as follows:—

> "The Government, when it defrays the expense of coinage, not only incurs some small expense, but loses some small revenue, which it might get by a proper duty; and neither the Bank nor any other private persons are in the smallest degree benefited by this useless piece of public generosity."

That is the highest authority, and his arguments are of force sufficient to convince anyone that the course we are taking is no more warranted by abstract principles than it is successful in the results that it produces. The same opinion is held by M'Culloch. He says—

> "Coins charged with a seignorage equal to the expense of coinage do not pass at a higher value than what naturally belongs to them, but at that precise value; whereas, if the expense of coinage be defrayed by the State, coins pass at less than their real value. A sovereign is of greater utility and value than a piece of pure unfashioned gold bullion of the same weight; because, while it is as well fitted as bullion for being used in the arts, it is, owing to the coinage, better adapted for being used as money, or in the exchange of commodities. On what principle, then, should Government decline to charge a seignorage or duty on coins, equal to the expense of coinage —that is, to the value which it adds to the coins?"

That being the case, then, I think the authorities fairly establish for us that there ought to be some seignorage charged upon coin.

But the question still remains—what seignorage? This question is answered in a Paper which some time ago I laid on the table of the House, and which I dare say has attracted the attention of hon. Members — a Paper signed by the Master of the Mint and Colonel Smith, the former Master of the Mint at Calcutta—two of the highest authorities that could give an opinion on the subject. In that Paper they say that it is the duty of the State to require such a seignorage as would indemnify it for the expense of coinage in the first place, for re-coinage when worn out, and also for the wear and tear, or for the bullion that would be required in restoring the coin to the state in which it was when first issued. They argue this matter in the most clear and conclusive manner, and the conclusion they come to is that a charge of £1 8*s.* 1½*d.* for every 100 sovereigns would be sufficient not only to indemnify the State for coining and re-coining, but also for the wear and tear the coin might undergo. They propose that every year the sovereigns coined eighteen years before should be called in and re-coined, and they prove that by a moderate charge of this kind, amounting to about 1 2-5ths per cent, the coinage of the country could be maintained in its integrity. The question of mintage at this time I shall not push further; though it seems to me that the arguments in favour of the course I have explained are exceedingly strong and convincing. But I am bound to say that there is an argument against it which must be considered, though I have never seen it brought forward in any essay. It has been assumed that if the State gives the coinage for nothing, or manufactures the bullion that is brought to the Mint, making a charge for the labour, the result is exactly the same and the coin is of the same value. No one is more opposed than I am to any attempt to tamper with the current value of the sovereign. Anything which would alter the current value of the sovereign — that is, the value of the sovereign wherever it is legal tender—and oblige a man to make calculations how much more he should pay or receive for the sovereign than he is accustomed to pay or receive, would be impossible to enforce in this country. Now if you charge a mintage for the sovereign, you raise its current value. At present we sell the sovereign as a manufactured article for bullion of the same weight, and a certain number of sovereigns for a fixed amount of bullion having just the weight of these sovereigns. But suppose we ask more for the sovereign than we do now—suppose we require 1 or 2 per cent more, it is quite evident that nobody will come to exchange bullion for sovereigns until the sovereigns have risen to a value that will make it worth his while to do so—that is, till they have risen to the value of the extra percentage demanded. It must be remembered that sovereigns are perpetually being destroyed. They are lost in ships, they are melted down, they cease to circulate, and if the supply of them by Government be arrested by an impediment placed in their way, such as an extra price, of course no more sovereigns will be coined until they become so raised in value as to come up to the price that the Government demands for them. The effect of a seignorage in raising the value of the coin is thus described by Adam Smith—

> "Were the private people who carry their gold and silver to the Mint to pay themselves for the coinage, it would add to the value of those metals in the same manner as the fashion does to that of plate. Coined gold and silver would be more valuable than uncoined. The seignorage, if it was not exorbitant, would add to the bullion the whole value of the duty; because the Government having everywhere the exclusive privilege of coining, no coin can come to market cheaper than they think proper to afford it."

Ricardo expresses a similar opinion, as follows:—

> "It appears, then, that although a given weight of bullion can never exceed in value a given weight of coin, a given weight of coin may exceed in value a given weight of bullion by the whole expense of seignorage, however great that seignorage may be, provided that there was effectual security against the increase of money through the imitation of the coins by illegal means."

And the following passage occurs in Mr. Mill's Principles of Political Economy:—

> "If Government, however, throws the expense of coinage, as is reasonable, upon the holder, by making a charge to cover the expense (which is done by giving back rather less in coin than has been received in bullion, and is called levying a seignorage), the coin will rise to the extent of the seignorage above the value of the bullion. If the Mint kept back 1 per cent to pay the expense of coinage, it would be against the interest of the holders of bullion to have it coined until the coin was more valuable than the bullion by at least that fraction. The coin, therefore, would be kept 1 per cent higher in value, which could only be by keeping it 1 per cent less in quantity, than if its coinage were gratuitous."

And Mr. M'Culloch says—

> "A small seignorage or duty upon the coinage of both gold and silver would probably increase still more the superiority of those metals in coin above an equal quantity of either of them in bullion. The coinage would, in this case, increase the value of the metal coined in proportion to the extent of this small duty; for the same reason that the fashion increases the value of plate in proportion to the price of that fashion. The superiority of coin above bullion would prevent > the melting down of the coin, and would discourage its exportation. If upon any public exigency it should become necessary to export the coin the greater part of it would soon return again of its own accord. Abroad it could sell only for its weight in bullion. At home it would buy more than that weight. There would be a profit, therefore, in bringing it home again."

Therefore, if the Government were to demand a seignorage of 1 per cent, it would really raise the sovereign to a value of 1 per cent beyond its present value; and everybody who owed money would pay 1 per cent more than he bargained for, and everyone who received money would receive 1 per cent more than he had a right to expect. That is the conclusion which Mr. M'Culloch has come to, and he states it as an argument against the imposition of a mintage. I think the difficulty might be perfectly well met by deducting the payment from the sovereign, instead of requiring 1 per cent to be paid in money at the Mint; for it is no matter how you take it, whether by a money payment of 1 per cent, or 2*d.* for one sovereign, or by giving 122¼ grains of gold instead of 123¼. Whether you take it from the sovereign or take it in the shape of money payment, it does not matter to the State; but the difference is that, in the first case, the sovereign will be worth 2*d.* more than it is now; in the second case, the 2*d.* will be deducted from the metal of which the sovereign is made, and it will retain its present value. If there be a seignorage we must make up our minds to a deduction from the value of the sovereign to the amount of the seignorage we charge, and that not with the view of altering but retaining the value of the sovereign. Unless you take something from its value the effect must necessarily be to raise the coin beyond the value of the bullion for which it is given in exchange. I apologize for going into these matters, but really they are of great practical interest. I am not even proposing anything to the House new, but I merely wish to ventilate the subject, and give hon. Gentlemen and the public at large the means of thinking over this matter, and forming a judgment on a very curious question and one of great interest. There is another side to the transaction, and that relates to the question of an international coinage, to which the hon. Gentleman has called my attention. Well, the French Government have put themselves into communication with us. They have written to me on the subject of international coinage, and wish to know what steps the Government of England are willing to take in the matter. I was in no condition to give any definite answer. The Chancellor of the Exchequer can speak with no other breath than that of the House of Commons, and until I knew the feeling of the House of Commons I could not venture to give any opinion; but in my answer I ventured to go thus far. There are two things perfectly plain — the one that, under any circumstances, we could not have any hope of establishing an international coinage — on the chance of which I do not wish to dilate now—with a country that has two standards. France has a gold and a silver standard. A gold and a silver standard is not a double, but an alternate standard. The two metals are always fluctuating in their relations to each other; it is in the nature of things for the cheaper metal for the time being to drive out the dearer. Therefore, when the silver standard drives the gold coin out of circulation, it leaves us nothing to compare our international coin with except the silver standard, to which it would have no exact relation. And so I ventured to say, in answer to the question, that it would be impossible to hold out hopes of assimilation until France made up her mind to give up the silver standard and have only a gold standard; and I am happy to say that France is favourable to the abandonment of her silver standard, as I gather from the Report of a Commission on the subject which I have received. Again, it seems to me, on abstract principles, that we should never have an international coinage, unless the coin were identical in weight and fineness, and unless the seignorage charged on it were identical in both countries; because, if I am right in my view, that the value of coin is affected by the terms on which it is put into circulation—that is, the amount of mintage charged for it—then, on the supposition of having different mintages, we should have coin put into circulation having different values. People would take their gold to be coined where the thing could be done most cheaply, and thus the coin for which the higher mintage was paid would be reduced in value by the more abundant produce of the cheaper mint. That is all I have ventured to say in reference to the matter to the French Government, and I trust that I have not gone beyond the proper limit in saying it. The conditions which I have mentioned are really elementary conditions of the whole question. But I wish here to point out that I believe it is possible for England and France, if they can make up their minds to give up a little of their prejudices for the sake of the great advantage of having an international coinage, to obtain that object, and I will just show the House how that could be done. The French are proposing to coin a 25-franc gold piece, 5 francs more than the Napoleon. That would be less in value than the sovereign by 22 centimes, or about 2*d.* If we were about to impose a seignorage of about 1 per cent, or ·993 of a grain, and take gold to that amount from the coin, our sovereign would be identical with the 25-franc piece. It would still remain as a current coin in this country of exactly the same value as now, and it would have the additional advantage that it would be identical in value with the 25-franc piece. But, in order that that might be done, France would have to make a sacrifice on her part. I forget the mintage she charges; I believe it is between a fifth and a quarter per cent. If she could be prevailed upon to make it 1 per cent, we should have solved the problem as far as England and France are concerned, of an international coinage. The operation would be performed by modifications of the same principle—France would, as now, take the payment in money, England would deduct from her coin, and thus equality would be obtained. It is singular to remark what a number of coins in the world approach one another in value. The Spanish doubloon, the Prussian Frederick, the half-eagle of America, approach exceedingly near in value to each other, and I think it very possible, if France would meet us in this way—should Parliament be induced to look at the matter from the point of view I have put it—we might come to some arrangement by which we should get the blessing of one coinage throughout Europe, a great step in civilization. These are the remarks I had to make to the House. They are not given with any great confidence in my own opinion. All I am anxious to do before we separate is to give to hon. Gentlemen and the country at large a subject for consideration. It appears to me that the subject is not so difficult as might be supposed; and that by a single measure we may secure to ourselves the great benefit of saving all the expense incurred on our own gold coinage, without imposing those expenses on anyone else, and at the same time of striking a coin which would have the advantage of an international circulation.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, the right hon. Gentleman had not stated whether he would grant the Papers he had asked for.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said, the hon. Gentleman had not stated what were the Papers he asked for. It was not usual to give the correspondence between Departments of the Government. At present, he really did not know what were the Papers for which the hon. Gentleman moved; but if the hon. Gentleman would put himself in communication with the Government they would give him all the Papers they could. Of course the hon. Gentleman was quite aware that he could not move for their production on that Motion, and therefore he would lose nothing by acceding to his suggestion.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH said, he had stated in his speech what Papers he wished to move for, and the Secretary of the Treasury had just promised to give them.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER thought in that case it was hardly worth the right hon. Gentleman's while to ask him again for them.

IRELAND—FENIAN CONVICT O'DONOVAN ROSSA.—OBSERVATIONS.

MR. G. H. MOORE said, that on the 4th of June last the following Question was put to the Home Secretary by the hon. Member for Kilkenny (Sir John Gray):—

> "If his attention has been directed to the statement published in one of the Irish newspapers, apparently on authority, to the effect that the prison authorities so secured the hands of one of the political prisoners by manacles behind his back, that he could neither dress nor undress, or raise food to his mouth, and continued this cruelty for thirty-three days; and if the statement be true, was the circumstance reported to the Home Office, and is there any objection to place the Report before the House, with a statement as to whether the officer guilty of this cruelty was reprimanded or otherwise dealt with, and how?"—[3 Hansard, cxcvi. 1238-9.]

To that Question, the Home Secretary replied—

"I am obliged to my hon. Friend for making this inquiry, for it is clear that the statement he has just made, if true, ought to be explained; if not true, it ought to be contradicted."—[Ibid. 1239.]

The Home Secretary went on to describe various acts of violence committed by the prisoner while in confinement, and then proceeded to say that the facts were these—

"The prisoner having committed these acts of violence, and being a very powerful man—so powerful that it required three or four warders to master him—was for a while manacled with his hands behind his back. But, so far from being kept in this condition thirty-five days, he was only so for a part of a day; but when he took his meals the handcuffs were placed in front, so that he was able to take his meals without difficulty. The punishment of manacling a man with his hands behind his back is never inflicted except when prisoners are so violent that they cannot be restrained in any other way. Rossa's handcuffs were never on at night."—[Ibid. 1241.]

That was reported in The Times in the first person—a test of care and accuracy in reporting; and in a leading article on the following day in The Times, this version of the right hon. Gentleman's speech was given—

"It is quite true that the prisoner's hands were tied behind his back as an indispensable precaution, but only for a few hours."

About three weeks after that he himself received a letter from a solicitor in London, enclosing a statement purporting to have been made by a warder employed in Chatham Prison at the time that cruelty was alleged to have been perpetrated. And, although not then aware how far he was empowered to use the name or the deposition of the writer, he lost no time in informing the right hon. Gentleman that he had received a formal contradiction of the statement he had made in the House, in order to give him an opportunity of again referring to the authorities of the prison and verifying the statement. When he subsequently read in the House the deposition of which he had given the Home Secretary notice, the right hon. Gentleman, with something less than his usual courtesy and fairness, objected to the course he had taken in not giving him previous notice of the name of his informant, and that taunt from the right hon. Gentleman was received with those peculiar cheers which were always heard on those (the Government) Benches whenever by any accident a Minister of State made use of an unjust or ungenerous expression. The right hon. Gentleman seemed to think that the whole matter involved in the statement originally made, in the contradiction which the right hon. Gentleman gave to that statement, and in the contradiction which he himself had read of the right hon. Gentleman's contradiction resolved itself into a question of the comparative credibility of a dismissed warder and the authorities of Chatham Prison. But since then two Members of that House had seen the prisoner, who, in their presence, and in the presence of the deputy governor of Chatham Prison, distinctly and solemnly averred that he had been manacled, as originally stated, for thirty-five days, from five o'clock in the morning to seven in the evening. [Mr. BRUCE: The original statement was that he was manacled day and night.] He raised no dispute whatever as to whether the punishment inflicted on the prisoner was proper or not—a point altogether wide of the question now before them. He believed that no man in the House was more inclined to treat these unfortunate persons with clemency and kindness than the right hon. Gentleman; but the question at issue was one of a more important character than the offence committed by the prisoner or the punishment inflicted on him; it was whether a Minister of State had been induced by the representations of the authorities of the prison to make in that House a statement which was directly opposed to the facts of the case. He was sure that neither the House, nor public opinion, nor the right hon. Gentleman himself would allow that to remain a moot question. If it were true that that prisoner was manacled for only a day, or part of a day, or for a few hours more or less, then, of course, whether through aberration of mind or otherwise, the man was utterly unworthy to be believed on his word. But if it was substantially true that he was manacled for thirty-five days, as had been stated, then the governor of Chatham Prison had conveyed as deliberate an untruth as had ever been conveyed to a Secretary of State. He trusted that the right hon. Gentleman would take care that such an investigation of that matter was made as would satisfy the public mind on the facts of the case one way or the other; and no kind of investigation would satisfy the public mind unless the prisoner was allowed to be represented by some professional man of character and ability.

MR. BLAKE said, as he was one of the Members alluded to by the hon. Member for Mayo (Mr. G. H. Moore) as having visited Chatham Convict Prison, to inquire into the truth of the statements made respecting the manacling, for a long period, of O'Donovan Rossa, he begged to give the House a short detail of what he heard and the impression made on him. His hon. Friend the Member for Cork County, (Mr. Downing) was desirous that he should accompany him when he went to ascertain whether the allegations contained in the Irishman newspaper were true respecting the treatment of the prisoner. He (Mr. Blake) accordingly applied to the Secretary of State for the Home Department for permission to visit the prison and interrogate O'Donovan on the subject. This was freely granted, the Secretary of State expressing a strong desire that the truth should be ascertained. On Friday last he and his hon. Friend went. In accordance with the order of the Secretary of State the prisoner, O'Donovan Rossa, was produced. His statement was to the effect that about fifteen months ago—soon after he was transported to Chatham, in consequence of charges of breaches of discipline, and especially the assault on the governor—his hands were manacled behind his back for thirty-five days, from five in the morning until seven in the evening, except at meal times, when he was handcuffed in front, to enable him to take his food with a spoon. The deputy governor, Major Farquharson, who was present, positively contradicted this statement, saying it was impossible that it could be; but the prisoner as strongly re-asserted it. He (Mr. Blake) and the hon. Member for Cork then went to the office, where they met the other deputy governor; they repeated the statement of the prisoner. He, too, said it was impossible, and that the records of the prison would prove that no convict had been placed in irons in the manner described for so long a time. He retired to consult the records; on his return he said he did not deem himself at liberty, without authority, to produce or state what was on the records of the prison. Accordingly, he and his hon. Friend were left without any information as to what the records would really prove. Against the resolute assertion of the prisoner there was nothing opposed except the ipsi dixit of two gentlemen, neither of whom were officers of the prison when the alleged occurrence took place. The governor, who might have thrown more light on the matter, was absent. These and other circumstances inclined him and the hon. Member for Cork to believe that the statement of the prisoner was true. With respect to the violence of O'Donovan, especially his outrage on the governor—and a very disgraceful outrage it certainly was, if the perpetrator could be regarded as being in a state of mind which rendered him an accountable being—he wished to observe that, from the extraordinary things the prisoner was said to have done at the time, the frenzy he appeared to have been in, and other circumstances which were stated, he came to the conclusion that O'Donovan must have been deranged at the time that the deplorable occurrence had taken place with respect to the governor. The prisoner himself stated that on his arrival from Milbank—no other political prisoner being then at Chatham—he was put to work with nine ordinary convicts; that he suffered many annoyances from them, disliked their association, and requested to be put to any labour apart from them; that, on this being refused, he became exasperated, and then begun those acts of insubordination for which he states he was so severely punished. They subsequently saw Richard Burke, who well deserved the high terms in which the Secretary of State had spoken of him when the subject was last before the House; he was, indeed, as the Secretary of State said "bearing his fate like a man." He disdained to make any complaint about himself, but made some representations on behalf of his companions. He looked delicate and emaciated; and it was only when he (Mr. Blake) and the hon. Member for Cork pressed him as to the cause of his looking so ill, that he said he was unable, owing to an intestinal complaint, to use the gruel for breakfast and supper, and had consequently been obliged to use bread and water for these two meals for some months. Still, he wished it to be understood that he did not urge this as a complaint, as he was resolved to bear with everything without a murmur. Anyone who saw this man, let him even condemn the course he took, could not but feel admiration for the fortitude he displayed. They would also feel it hard to believe that one who seemed to care so little about himself, and yet showed such kindly solicitude for others, could have been a party to running the risk of the loss of many lives in order to secure a benefit for himself. Indeed, at last, it was being admitted that even those who were known to be engaged in the attempt to rescue him never contemplated that such a fearful catastrophe would have happened—the best proof of which was, that some of themselves perished in it. The food given to the prisoners, as shown to them, appeared to be good, but the quantity for breakfast deficient by four ounces of bread. The report that had got out, that, after the hon. Member for Mayo's speech, some of the prisoners were put out of hospital and sent to hard labour, was incorrect. None of them had been in hospital for some time, except Halpin, a few months ago, and none of those at Chatham were at present at hard labour. On his return the same night from Chatham, he (Mr. Blake) sought out the Home Secretary, and made a strong representation to him as to the necessity of at once directing that Richard Burke should get nourishing food that he could make use of, or that otherwise he would be likely to fall into consumption. The right hon. Gentleman listened to his representations with the greatest attention, and promised at once to have the prisoner's case inquired into, with a view of having whatever diet given to him that was necessary for the preservation of his health. In common justice he must say that he believed there never was a man in his position possessed of stronger feelings of justice and humanity than the Home Secretary. He had no doubt that he had done everything in his power consistently with the law and what he considered his duty, to mitigate the lot of the political prisoners. It was not the Home Secretary's fault that the law subjected them to the same punishment as criminals convicted of the worst offences. He therefore had the greater confidence in appealing to him to go a step farther, and recommend Her Majesty to set these men free. They had suffered a great deal. To anyone, no matter what privations and hardships they might have been accustomed to outside, the fate of a convict was a dreadful one. The iron discipline, enforced silence, utter solitude for many hours, absence of interesting occupation, and separation from home and friends, rendered the punishment even to the most hardened terrible to endure; but to men like many of the political prisoners, well educated and accustomed to refinement and comfort, the horror of their situation was difficult to realize. Public opinion was now strongly inclining to the feeling that men for political offences ought not to be subjected to the same degrading punishment as those who had been guilty of heinous crimes. It seemed, indeed, hard that a man who violated the law in the assertion of a political opinion he entertained, no matter how erroneous it might be, should be classed and treated like a common robber. He had too good an opinion of the Home Secretary's enlightenment and high-mindedness to think that he would subscribe to such a doctrine. Whatever the political offences of these men might be, they had paid a terrible penalty. This ought to be considered, as well as the present peaceable state of Ireland and the strong feeling which had existed there in favour of an amnesty. The Government could not be blamed for imprisoning those who opposed it as those men had done; but sound policy, as well as humanity, dictated that when they had gone through so much, and when there was no longer danger to be apprehended, mercy should be extended to them. The remedial measure which Government had lately passed and what was expected from the land question would go far to restore peace and prosperity in Ireland. It was the true way to make the people grateful and loyal; and the House might rely that no act would be felt more gracious, or gratify the majority of the country more, than to set free those on whose behalf he had, he feared, but feebly pleaded.

Mr. BRUCE said, that as this was a question affecting the character of public servants, he hoped that by the indulgence of the House he might be allowed to address them again on the Motion for adjournment. He was anxious, first of all, it should be clearly understood that this punishment, whether excessive or otherwise, was inflicted upon Rossa for an act of insubordination only, and not in consequence of his being a Fenian prisoner. The complaint was, that he had had his hands tied behind his back for thirty-five days, and it was added in an Irish newspaper that he had been manacled night and day, so that at meal times he had to lap up food like a dog. The answer he (Mr. Bruce) gave was, that this was not true; that the prisoner had to be manacled for an act of insubordination, but was manacled only during a portion of the day, and not at all at night or when he had his meals. In consequence, however, of the statement made by his hon. Friend (Mr. G. H. Moore), he had ordered an inquiry by one of the Directors of Prisons. Major Farquharson, the deputy governor who was present at the interview between his hon. Friend (Mr. Blake) and the prisoner, stated to the Director that the latter gave a somewhat different account to that given by his hon. Friend. Major Farquharson said—

"The prisoner stated that he had had his hands handcuffed behind his back the greater portion of thirty-five days, and that he had frequently had to eat his meals on his belly like a dog, and he gave the exact dates. Mr. Blake and Mr. Downing then expressed themselves satisfied with everything concerning the prisoner's treatment, with the exception of this one point—namely, the mode and duration of his being handcuffed."

The governor was then called upon to explain what had actually occurred, and what was really the punishment inflicted on this man. He would read the questions and answers—

"'Did you give an order that the convict O'D. Rossa should be placed in handcuffs after he committed the assault on the 16th of June, 1868? If so, state the circumstances under which it was given.'—'The day after the assault was committed I went on leave for three days, giving over charge to Captain Harvey, who requested to know, before I left, whether I would authorize his placing convict O'D. Rossa in handcuffs with his hands behind him, the prisoner being then in such an excited state that some severe measure of restraint seemed requisite. I authorized his doing so, provided they were taken off at night.' 'Do you remember how long he was restrained, he being handcuffed behind his back?'—'As I was absent on leave I cannot exactly say, but on being called upon to state in May last the length of time passed by Rossa with his hands behind him, I sent for the warder who had been doing duty in the separate cells, who stated that, to the best of his belief, it was only for one day. To convince myself of the truth of his statement, I desired him to bring me his separate cell-book, which confirmed his statement. I also sent for the chief warder's occurrence-book, which corroborated the entry in the separate cell-book. I then felt no further doubt on the subject, and considered the evidence thus produced quite conclusive.' 'On subsequent visits after the assault was the prisoner handcuffed behind his back?'—'I have no recollection of ever having seen him with his handcuffs behind his back. No other order was given by me for him to be handcuffed behind his back between the 16th of June and the 23rd of July, 1868, nor has he ever been so restrained more than a few hours at a time, except on the occasion above referred to.'"

The chief warder was asked—

"'Were you in charge of the separate cells on the 16th of June, 1868, when convict O'D. Rossa was confined for assaulting the governor?'—'Yes.' 'Was he placed in irons on reception at the separate cells?'—'To the best of my belief he was not.' 'Was he ever handcuffed with his hands behind his back?—'He was.' 'How often, and when?'—'Cannot exactly say; but whenever the governor's order was given for the use of handcuffs it was invariably entered in the separate cell-book. It is so long ago that I cannot exactly say how long he was handcuffed behind.' 'Was he handcuffed behind for so long a period as one month?'—'Oh, no. I doubt whether the period extended to three days.' 'Were the handcuffs invariably removed at meal times and at night?'—'Yes.' 'Do you remember the prisoner being placed in handcuffs on the morning of the 17th of June, 1868, and who gave you the order?'—'I can't give the exact date, but it was on the morning the governor went on leave after the assault. Captain Harvey gave me a verbal order personally, but I cannot remember whether he specified the hands being behind the back or not.' 'Would you place the handcuffs behind without an order to that effect?'—'No.' 'Is it customary to record in the separate cell-book all cases of prisoners handcuffed behind?'—'Yes, in all cases.' 'You cannot state the exact time the prisoner was kept in handcuffs behind; do you think it could have been a week, of course, assuming that they were removed at night?'—'I do not.'"

Captain Hardy, the deputy governor, was asked—

"'Were you on duty as deputy governor on the 16th of June, 1868, at this prison, and do you remember convict O'D. Rossa being under punishment in separate cells for an assault on the governor?'—'I was on duty on the 17th and 18th, and remember the occurrence. I think I visited the prisoner in the separate cells on the 18th.' 'Was O'D. Rossa then in handcuffs?'—'Yes, with his hands behind his back.' 'Did you visit him daily after that?'—'Not daily, but alternately, day by day, with Captain Harvey.' 'Did you see him more than once with his hands behind his back?' —'Not more than once, and that was on the 18th.' 'After the third day following the assault can you say with confidence whether the prisoner had his hands behind his back during the remaining portion of his punishment?'—'I am confident he had not.' 'During the time the prisoner was handcuffed behind, were the handcuffs ever removed?'—Yes, at night and at meal times.'"

He admitted that some doubt existed as to the length of time during which the prisoner had been handcuffed—whether that period was, not thirty-five, but one, two, or three days. Then came the evidence of Dr. Burns, the medical officer, who was asked—

> "'Did you visit the prisoner daily while under confinement?'—Answer, 'I did.' When you visited him was he handcuffed?' — 'He was.' 'How was he handcuffed — with his hands behind his back or in front?'—'Part of the time in front, part of the time behind his back.'—'Did you often see him handcuffed behind his back?'—Answer, "No.' —'How often did you see him so handcuffed?'—'Three days.' 'Did the three days you speak of follow immediately after the assault?' — 'Yes.' 'How was he handcuffed for the remaining portion of the time?'—'With his hands in front.'—'Do you think that as a means of restraint it was necessary to handcuff him behind?'—Answer, 'Yes; he was in an excited state for some time.'"

There was also the evidence of Chief Warder Turner, who, being asked whether he ever saw the prisoner handcuffed behind, answered in the affirmative, adding, in reply, to the question, "How often?" "I cannot say the exact time, whether one, two, or three days. There is only one entry of the prisoner being handcuffed behind, and that was on the 17th of June, the day after the assault." Then there was the following note of Captain Stopford, the Director who conducted the examination:—

> "The books are examined, and I find only one entry of the prisoner being handcuffed behind, and that was on the 17th of June, 1868. There are other entries of his having been handcuffed, but not behind. It appears to be the invariable practice to enter all prisoners handcuffed behind as a measure of restraint in this book."

Now, it was perfectly true that the Warder Kaye, to whom the hon. Member for Mayo referred, did make a different statement, and inquiry had been made as to the character and trustworthiness of that witness. He found that he had—

> "Joined the service on the 4th of April, 1865; that in June, 1868, he was placed on second probation of three months for making a frivolous and unsubstantial report against another officer, having during the whole of his service been reported very frequently for neglect and irregularities. While so under probation he was several times reported for neglect, irregularity, and insubordination, and consequently was dismissed the service in 1868. The governor reports that this officer never was in charge of the treason-felony prisoners, and could not have communicated with them except by talking through the doors of their cells on one or two occasions when he was patrolling the hall where they were while the regular officer was absent at dinner. The governor considered him to be a man whose word could not be relied on entirely."

The statement of Kaye was supported by another man named Douglas, but that witness was also regarded as being untrustworthy. It appeared that during the last five years he had been reported five or six times every year, and that this year he had been reported five times, once for telling a falsehood as to the finding of clandestine correspondence on a prisoner, and making a false statement against another officer which he afterwards denied. Those were the two persons on whose evidence the statement was made in support of the prisoner's own statement; but, in opposition to that evidence, there was the evidence of the medical man, supported by the evidence of the officers and warders. There was, besides, the evidence of the two deputy governors who visited the prisoner repeatedly, and the evidence of the entry in the book itself, which had been examined by Captain Stopford. Therefore, although there was, he admitted, a certain amount of doubt as to the exact length of time during which the prisoner was handcuffed behind, yet hon. Members would, he thought, be disposed to think that the evidence of the entry in the book, as well as of the persons more immediately in charge of the prisoner, was on the whole the most trustworthy. He was, at all events, quite satisfied that the information which had been given by the governor had been given on evidence which seemed to be sufficient, and not without careful inquiry from those whom he believed to be fully informed on the subject. As to the prisoner Burke, it was true that he was not able to eat the gruel which was provided for the other prisoners. The medical officer, however, stated that in his opinion it was fancy on the part of the prisoner, and that he doubted whether it would disagree with him. But, be that as it might, orders had been issued by the medical officer to supply him with food which would give him sufficient nutriment.

Mr. MAGUIRE said, he was glad the subject had been brought under the consideration of the House, and he would take the opportunity of making an appeal to the Government as to the wisdom and expediency of extending the clemency of the Crown to all the political prisoners in Ireland, declaring it to be his solemn belief that no possible injury, but great advantage, would be the result to the peace and welfare of the country.

MR. STACPOOLE made a similar appeal to the Government.

RAILWAY GUARDS AND PASSENGERS COMMUNICATION.

QUESTION. OBSERVATIONS.

MR. H. B. SHERIDAN said, he wished to ask the President of the Board of Trade, Whether he was enabled to inform the House whether any and what steps had been taken to carry into effect the provisions of the Act of Parliament for securing the means of communication between the passengers and the guards on railways? There had been a delay of eight months in taking the necessary measures with that object, and something in the shape of a temporary method had, he understood, been adopted in some instances, a rope being extended from carriage to carriage. A letter had appeared in The Times within the last two or three days which gave reason to believe that the railway companies had not done all that was required of them in the matter. On the whole, he was led to the belief that the railway companies had not, as a general rule, established any uniform or efficient means of communication between the passengers and guard. Consequently, numerous letters of complaint had been sent to the public Press, and various newspapers had drawn attention to the subject. The result of the twelve months' delay had been that the railway companies proposed to establish a cord communication. He trusted, therefore, that the right hon. Gentleman would state his opinion whether a cord or rope communication was the most efficient that could be provided. The South Eastern Railway had been fitted up with Mr. Deacon's apparatus, and the result had been that in 500 cases there had been only three failures, and in another 714 cases only seven failures, and these even had been accounted for. Colonel Yolland, in his valuable Report on this subject, had strongly condemned the cord system. He would now read to the House the opinion expressed by Mr. Martin. ["No, no!" and "Agreed!"] At all events, as this was a matter affecting the safety of railway travellers, he hoped the House would permit him to state the objections which had been urged by scientific and practical men against the adoption of the rope system. Communication by means of a rope placed outside the carriage would certainly not be efficient. Ladies and infirm old gentlemen could not put their heads out of the window to pull the rope, while the amount of slack was so great that it would require considerable strength to communicate with the guard. It had likewise been urged that in winter time the frost and snow would prevent the rope system from acting, and that, indeed, its adoption was a compliance with the letter but not with the spirit of the statute. In conclusion, he asked the right hon. Gentleman whether any railway companies had neglected to comply with the provisions of the Act; and, if so, whether they had assigned any reasons for such non-compliance?

LIABILITIES OF RAILWAY COMPANIES.

OBSERVATIONS.

MR. C. DENISON rose to call attention to a case which was not at all confined in its principle and legal bearings to the interests of railway companies and proprietors, but which equally affected the liability of every associated company, every private individual who owned a warehouse or manufactory, and every professional man who had an office for daily business. In thus trespassing upon the House, he had no wish or intention to invite expression of opinion on the merits of the case itself, or on the settlement, which was now beyond litigation or dispute. Therefore, after citing the bare facts, it would not be necessary for him to allude either to plaintiff or defendant. The circumstances were as follows:—On the 17th of February, 1868, a lady professor of dancing travelled in a third-class carriage by an early train from Boston to Spalding; distance, seventeen miles, fare 1*s.* 6*d.* On alighting at Spalding she went into the ladies' waiting-room, and in turning to pass out she caught her foot in the seam of the carpet, which, as she stated in evidence, had become unsewn, the thread having worn away. She fell, and in so falling caused, as she alleged, a serious injury to the lower portion of her spine, which incapacitated her afterwards from following her profession for many months. She claimed at first £1,000 damages, which (for technical reasons) were subsequently increased by Judge's order to £10,000. The railway company pleaded non-liability and absence of all negligence or default. The learned Judge, he believed, at an early stage of the inquiry, before medical witnesses were called and after they had been called, ruled unhesitatingly that the company were liable. There remained, then, only the question of compensation, which was settled by consent at £1,500, because it was deemed inadvisable to press the case. This, no doubt, was a very extreme case, a very unusual case; and were it not for fear of giving offence, where it was least his intention to do so, he should say that it was an exaggerated view almost amounting to burlesque upon reasonable liability. As well might it be ruled that if one stone in a paved courtyard of a station was rougher than another or an inch higher than its neighbour, and a passenger tripped over the offending stone, that the proprietor was liable for costly damages. He was not a lawyer, and was perhaps incapable of appreciating those subtle refinements which went to make up the legal view of liability; but he put it to anyone who was the proprietor of any office what his notion would be if anybody in passing from his premises met with an accident, went away, and successfully claimed excessive damages. Where railway companies or directors were concerned every small injury or wrong assumed exaggerated proportions. The plaintiff, the witnesses, and the professional men all took an exaggerated view, and verdicts were given not with reference to the injury sustained, but to the ability of the railway companies to pay. He asked the attention of the House to this subject on public grounds alone; and the broad proposition he laid down was this —It was not the interest of the public to relieve railway companies from liability in proven cases of negligence and neglect, but neither was it the interest of the public to hold them liable for injuries in such a case as he had detailed. If courts of justice were to act as insurance arbitrators in every case of accident between the public and railway companies, then railway companies ought to have the powers of insurance companies and charge a special rate in proportion to the risk they ran. Railway companies did not ask to be relieved of general liability; they only asked that damages should be apportioned to the fare received and the distance run. He hoped when he brought this subject forward next Session he should have the sympathy and assistance of the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. BRIGHT: The answer I shall give to the Question of the hon. Member for Dudley (Mr. H. B. Sheridan) will be very short and simple. As the House is aware an Act was passed last year for the purpose of compelling railway companies to establish some mode of communication between passengers, guards, and drivers. The management of the affair was, to a certain extent, placed in the hands of the Board of Trade, and after the Act was passed there were offered to the Board—I believe that I should be within the mark if I said—many scores of plans. I believe from first to last 200 or 300 plans were offered to them, by which such a communication could be established. We have many sagacious men connected with the Board of Trade, and I say nothing to their discredit when I admit that they could not decide absolutely what was to be done. The course taken was to communicate with the leading men that manage the great railways of the country, and ask their opinion, for they have just as much interest as the public in preventing accidents and saving the lives of their passengers. The companies formed a committee of their ablest managers, and I need not say that some of the very ablest men in the country are connected with the management of the railways. The result was that they suggested — after having examined all the plans—that a particular plan should be adopted. The Board of Trade thought it was infinitely better for the public that they should act in this matter along with the intelligent managers of the companies rather than sanction or determine upon any particular plan of their own. Now, the plan that was sanctioned was that to which my hon. Friend referred in terms, I thought, almost of contempt. The Act fixed the 1st of April, as the date at which this communication was to be established; but the interval allowed was too short, because it took some months to determine how it was to be done, and then necessarily it would take some months more to fit up the rolling stock of the companies. The Board of Trade exercising the power given to them, extended the time to the 1st of August, and, so far as I know, the Act has been complied with. The hon. Gentleman says, or supposes, or suspects, for of his own knowledge he knows nothing—he does not tell the House that he has been spending his time since the 1st of August in inspecting the various railways—that no communications have been established. He has read in a paper that in certain trains on the Great Western Railway the communication was not in a condition to work with success. I have had a communication from the management, and the explanation given is this—that with all their efforts they had not been able to fit up all the carriages composing the rolling stock of the company, but had fitted as many carriages as were necessary for the ordinary traffic; but during the last few months everyone that could run away—not being a Member of Parliament—was leaving London, and the Great Western Railway Company found it necessary for the convenience of passengers to bring into use the whole power of their rolling stock, and they had to use certain carriages to which the band of connection had not been attached, and the consequence was that the mechanical contrivance was not accurately fixed, and the thing for the moment was a failure. The manager says—"I have every reason to believe that in the course of a few days the whole of the company's stock will be fitted up, and the system will be in full operation." Wherever the rope system has been sanctioned by the Board of Trade we have found that the rope is attached, and, as we have reason to believe, it is in successful operation. The hon. Member has referred to the South Western Railway, where a different system has been operation for two or three years. The directors thought that it worked sufficiently well for them, and the Board of Trade sanctioned that system upon that line; but on the lines of the North they have sanctioned the rope system, and it is in operation. I will undertake to say that if the Board of Trade had sanctioned any other system some hon. Member would have have been found to put a similar question to me, and would probably have been able to bring as many arguments against that other system as the hon. Member has urged against the system which the Board of Trade has sanctioned. We have done the best we could, on consultation with able men connected with the railways, and the plan sanctioned is in operation, and I say it is not fair to the railways—within four days of the time fixed for bringing the plan of communication into effect—[Mr. H. B. Sheridan: Four months after the time allowed by the Act.]—The Act no doubt said the 1st of April; but the Board of Trade finding the time insufficient, extended the period to the 1st of August. But even if a longer time had been necessary, what then? We are not endeavouring to entrap the railways, but to deal generously and fairly by them as with the public. We have endeavoured to do so. But to get up—and without speaking from his own knowledge—from his having travelled on the railways—[Mr. H. B. Sheridan said, he had travelled on the lines]. I did not understand the hon. Gentleman to say so in his speech—to get up within four or five days of the time allowed for bringing the plan into operation and bring a general charge against the railway companies after the plan had been adopted by so many competent men, and assume that nothing had been done and no effort made to promote the safety of the public, was hardly fair to the railways. I will say nothing about the Board of Trade, for we are not thin-skinned, and we do not suffer much from such criticism. As to the case referred to by the hon. Member for Yorkshire (Mr. C. Denison) it has been before a court. It may be that the Judge's ruling was entirely wrong, and the jury's verdict contrary both to law and fact. I know nothing about it. But this I know, and I will give my own opinion. I thought it one of the most monstrous cases I had ever heard of in connection with questions of compensation. My opinion is that the whole law with regard to compensation for accidents as now worked with regard to railways, is one of very serious injustice, and deserves the examination and consideration of the House. It was only the other day that I read in the newspapers of a man brought into the court on a stretcher to show the jury what a deplorable condition he was in. The Judge said that was not a wise thing to do in the case of a man so near death's door; but the man, after receiving his compensation money, was found in two or three weeks following his former avocation in perfect health.

Another similar case was mentioned where the man was going about on crutches—[An hon. MEMBER: It was the same man]—and in a few weeks after he got compensation he was following his ordinary occupation. There are, no doubt, instances from time to time of neglect and carelessness on the part of railway companies, for which they ought to suffer. But there is also a system which I consider to be no better than swindling practised upon railway companies. And if the hon. Gentleman at the beginning of next Session moves in this House for a Select Committee to inquire into this question thoroughly, with a view to justice to the companies, as well as to the general public, I think I am empowered to say that the Government will make no objection to the appointment of such a Committee, and I should be very glad if from it there should come a Report which should enable Parliament to establish a more satisfactory condition of the law than that which prevails at present.

MR. H. B. SHERIDAN rose, and was about to address the House, when there arose cries of "Order!" The hon. Member said, I move the adjournment of the House.

MR. SPEAKER said, that having already spoken the hon. Member could not make such a Motion.

MR. H. B. SHERIDAN said, that he only wished to correct a statement of the right hon. Gentleman.

MR. SPEAKER said, the hon. Member could make an explanation, but could not make a reply.

MR. H. B. SHERIDAN said, the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade had charged him with bringing forward this question only five days after the Bill came into operation; but it was not known that the time had been extended.

MR. SPEAKER: That is not explanation.

MR. BRIGHT: I have stated in this House on more than one occasion that the time had been extended to the 1st of August.

MR. HENLEY said, that no one could object to the appointment of the Committee which the right hon. Gentleman had suggested. It was, however, to be wished that the right hon. Gentleman had not expressed himself so strongly, for the phrases which he employed—injustice, and so forth—led to the conclusion that he himself had prejudged the question.

CANADIAN BOUNDARIES.

QUESTION. OBSERVATIONS.

VISCOUNT MILTON, in putting to the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs the Question of which he had given notice upon this subject, said, that the information which he desired to obtain on a former occasion had been refused, however, courteously. This was not the only instance of a similar refusal. It was a singular fact that every Paper he had asked for on this subject had been refused. This made him think that there were other reasons than a simple desire to refuse that lay at the bottom of these denials. He was well aware of the importance of this question. He had watched it for years, and he had come to the conclusion that there was an intention on the part of the Government to give up some part of our possessions in America in compensation for the Alabama claims. He therefore felt that he should hardly be doing his duty if he did not ask what were the intentions of the Government? and he asked that question now, because if he delayed till next Session he knew he should probably be told that it would be better not to disturb the negotiations that were going on. But now no negotiations were going on. He wished, therefore, to know what was going to be done by the British Government with the island of San Juan and the group of islands connected with it? He desired to receive from the Under Secretary of State an explicit assurance that no concessions would be made as to the water boundary, which so vitally affected, not only Vancouver's Island and British Columbia, but the future of Canada as a whole. The information hitherto put before the House as to the correspondence was very much in the nature of cooked accounts, for the very Papers which he had asked for two years ago, and which were then refused to the House of Commons, were now in the possession of Congress. 350 pages of printed matter would not contain all the correspondence which had passed between the two Governments on this boundary question; whereas, during the last ten years, not fifty pages of printed matter relating to it had been vouchsafed to Parliament. The noble Viscount concluded by asking the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, whether he will afford an assurance to the House that no arrangements will be entered into by the Government which can in any way prejudge the question of the land or water boundaries between the British possessions and the United States, until the whole correspondence upon these subjects has been laid upon the table of the House.

MR. OTWAY said, that the House had not unwisely signified more than once its desire that there should be no discussion at the present moment of questions in controversy between the Government of this country and that of the United States; but he hoped, by a very few words, to relieve the anxiety felt by his noble Friend. There was no mystery in this matter, as he supposed; it was one of extreme simplicity. The land boundary and the water boundary formed not one, but two distinct questions occupying different positions. The land boundary question was settled. Mr. Campbell, on the part of the United States, and Colonel Hawkins, a distinguished officer of Engineers, on the part of this country, had traced the line of that boundary, the maps had been drawn up, compared, and certified, and that question was at an end. As to the water boundary, a difference of opinion had arisen between the Commissioners, as his noble Friend was aware. In 1860, Lord Russell, then Foreign Minister for this country, proposed that the matter, if it could not be settled in any other way, should be referred to arbitration; and the United States agreed to that proposition. The civil war, however, supervened, and no effect was given to that agreement, nor were further steps taken till October of last year. The noble Lord the Member for King's Lynn (Lord Stanley) signed a Protocol under which the subject was to be referred to arbitration, and that Protocol Lord Clarendon converted into a Convention, which was now awaiting the ratification of the Senate, which would meet in December next. Under these circumstances, it was impossible for him to give the assurance asked for by the noble Viscount, because the matter had passed for the present out of the hands of the British Government, and rested entirely in those of the Senate of the United States.

Motion, "That this House will, at the rising of the House this day, adjourn till Monday next," by leave, withdrawn.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) (re-committed) BILL—[Lords.]—[BILL 215.]

COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clauses 49 to 58 inclusive, as amended, agreed to, with Amendments.

Clause 59 (CLAUSE E—School committees to impose assessment upon lands and heritages to maintain new national schools).

MR. J. LOWTHER said, he should at the proper time, move that this clause be omitted. He was aware that the principle of an educational rate had to a certain extent been recognized in Scotland for many years; he would not, therefore, weary the Committee with attempting to describe that which was much more familiar to many hon. Gentlemen than to himself — namely, the educational rating system of Scotland. But he should not be open to contradiction if he said that this clause amplified that principle to a considerable extent. The right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Trade had remarked that morning, upon the Motion that the Chairman do leave the Chair, that English Members had a perfect right to take exception to the introduction of principles which might be held to be precedents for legislation in regard to other parts of the United Kingdom. Now, he thought that neither the right hon. Gentleman nor any other hon. Member would feel disposed to contradict him when he said that the principle involved in this clause was likely to be made a precedent for legislation to be proposed next year. He believed that the Vice President of the Committee of Council looked upon this clause as affording a valuable groundwork for his English measure of next year. He thought the House should not allow itself to be hastily led to accept a principle so important as that which was involved in this clause. It was a principle to which he entertained an unmistakeable aversion—namely, that of a local educational rate — and he should feel it his duty to afford the Committee an opportunity of expressing an opinion in regard to it.

Mr. CRAUFURD said, the clause proposed to take away the rating power from those who at present possessed it, and to vest it in an entirely new body. In burghs, the Town Council was the body which alone had the power of making a rate; but the proposal here was to deprive the Town Council of all control over these particular rates, and to hand it over to a School Committee, upon which only three members of the Town Council at the outside could sit. He trusted that the power of levying rates would be allowed to remain with the Town Council, and with that object he moved, after the word "or" in the first line, to insert "Town Council in any burgh."

The LORD ADVOCATE said, he did not quite appreciate the objection of the hon. Gentleman to the clause, as the Town Council was to have the appointment of the School Commitee. There was nothing unconstitutional in allowing the School Committee, appointed by the Town Council, to make the assessment.

Mr. M'LAREN, in reply to the remarks of the hon. Member for York (Mr. J. Lowther), said, that if there was to be no extension of assessment, there would be no extension of education, and the 90,000 children, of whom they had heard so much, must still go without school instruction; because if there was to be no assessment, where were they to get the money to educate those children? To take it out of the Consolidated Fund would be unjust to the people of England and the people of Ireland, who would be paying £90,000 out of the £100,000 required, while Scotland herself would be paying only £10,000.

Mr. COLLINS concurred with his hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Lowther). He did not think there would be any use in his hon. Friend pressing his proposed Amendment, because the House was at this period composed principally of supporters of the Government. The national schools in Ireland were maintained out of the Consolidated Fund, to which Scotland contributed. His own opinion was that in the three countries national education should be paid for partly by local rates and partly by grants out of the Consolidated Fund. The first object was to induce parents to fulfil the obligations they were under to educate their children, and it should be only a last resort to provide for the interference of the State on the disregard of parental responsibility. This first object could best be attained by an extension of the voluntary system, assisted by children's pence on the one hand and State grants on the other. He protested against the system which was being adopted in this Bill being hereafter quoted as a precedent for adoption in England. It was impossible to divide against it, because the measure came before them so late in the Session. They had reached the 7th of August, for the clock pointed to a quarter to one, and many hon. Members had left town.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Mr. BERESFORD HOPE added his protest against the adoption of the system; and if, any time in the future, he heard this Bill quoted as a precedent for England, he would repudiate it.

Mr. SCLATER-BOOTH said, he also desired to protest against the principle of the clause, and would divide against it if the hon. Member for York led the way. He had a very strong objection to an educational rate upon visible property only.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL for SCOTLAND (Mr. Young) said, the rate was not laid upon the owners exclusively. It was laid upon the owners and occupiers of visible property, and, like the poor rate, was laid upon the owners and occupiers of all lands and hereditaments, and in their lands and hereditaments were included all houses down to a rental of £4. This rate was laid upon the owners and occupiers of all property, and therefore it was a mistake to say that it was laid upon the owners of visible property only. [Mr. Sclater-Booth: The real point is that personal property is not levied upon.] Under the Poor Law Act of Scotland, passed in 1845, an option was given to lay the assessment upon the inhabitants of parishes according to "means and substance," but that was so universally distasteful that he believed it was repudiated, and the present mode of testing the ability of persons to pay was adopted.

Dr. BREWER desired to remind the Committee that in England rates were now devoted to education, as in the case of pauper children.

Lord ELCHO hoped his hon. Friend would not press his Motion to a division, because, if he were to succeed in striking out this clause, there would be no means of carrying out education in Scotland. The question was a very simple one. The Solicitor General had given the explanation—for which the Committee was greatly indebted to him—that occupiers would be rated as well as owners. Even taking him upon his own ground, everyone knew that the rating occupiers meant that the burden that was paid by the occupier ultimately fell on the owner. They were about to extend a principle which he believed to be sound—the principle of rating for schools. But was it right that this burden should be borne alone by property of one description? If a school, for instance, was necessary in Edinburgh, and if a rate should happen to be levied for the purpose, the question is whether the hon. Member (Mr. M'Laren) ought to pay upon the actual value of the premises and land on which his warehouses stand, or on the income which he derived from the warehouses? It was much more equitable and much more just that taxation should extend to other descriptions of property and not to real property only. His opinion was they would have to come back to "means and substance" after all. He ventured to say to his right hon. Friend the Vice President of the Council (Mr. W. E. Forster) that if he wished to have an Education Bill next year for England he had better get the Prime Minister to bring in a Bill rating personal property.

MR. J. LOWTHER remarked on the ominous silence of Her Majesty's Government. Question after question had been put them, but the Vice President of the Committee of Council had very wisely abstained from entering into the subject. He would withdraw his Motion, because he should not be justified in asking the House to divide.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 60 to 64, inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 65 (CLAUSE L—One third the sum required to enlarge, rebuild, or erect any national school shall be paid by the Committee of Council out of parliamentary grant.

MR. MILLER moved, after "any," to insert the word "national."

Amendment proposed, in page 26, line 4, after the word "any" to insert the word "national."—(Mr. Miller.)

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, he could not understand the meaning of the proposition. The clause included any school open to inspection, and allowed the Privy Council to deal with any such schools.

MR. MILLER asked if parish schools were included in this clause?

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Yes; and schools of all denominations.

MR. MILLER said, that in that case he would withdraw his Amendment.

MR. CRAUFURD objected to the Amendment being withdrawn.

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, that as the Bill now stood parochial schools were not to be liable to be converted, and it would not be right to limit it as proposed in the Amendment.

Question put, "That the word 'national' be there inserted."

The Committee divided: — Ayes 3; Noes 79; Majority 76.

Amendment negatived.

Clause amended, and agreed to.

Clause 66 (Grant for maintenance).

MR. CRAUFURD said, that this clause should be restored to the form in which it stood in the original Bill, and by which the Committee of Council were only allowed to make grants to schools where the same were national schools. In order to raise the question, he moved the insertion of the word "national" in line 5.

THE LORD ADVOCATE suggested that it was unnecessary again to divide on precisely the same point, and that the important question could be raised on the whole clause.

MR. CRAUFURD said, that there were many hon. Gentlemen who voted against him on the previous occasion who would probably give a reverse vote upon this Amendment. He did not want to give up the important point whether this was to be a national or denominational system. What he wanted was to strike out the special power to be left in the hands of the Council to say whether denominational grants were to be made or not. It would be unfair to place on this Board the enormous demand which would be made upon its discretion in this question of giving grants to denominational schools. Let them lay down a broad principle by Act of Parliament, and let the Board carry that out. As the clause now stood they were going to delegate to another body the power of disposing of this Parliamentary grant, and putting its hands into the public Exchequer upon a basis utterly contrary to the whole scope and intention of this Bill. He would move the omission of the words at the end of the clause, in order to insert the words—

> "It shall not be lawful for the said Committee to make any such grant aforesaid to any school not being a national school within the meaning of this Act."

Amendment proposed, in page 26, line 22, to leave out from the words "national school," to the end of the Clause."—(Mr. Craufurd.)

Mr. MACFIE said, he did not object to the maintenance of any such denominational schools as now existed, but he distinctly objected to introduce a wedge which might split up Scotland into sects, and encourage Episcopal or Popish proselytism in every parish in Scotland. To concede that the Roman Catholics and Episcopalians might have separate schools supported by State grants was to admit that the system about to be established was national in nothing except in name.

Mr. COLLINS protested against the intolerant language which they had just heard from the hon. Member, that Roman Catholic and Episcopalian children were not to be educated. He should like to know upon what principle of toleration and justice Roman Catholics and Episcopalians, who paid their share of taxation, should be refused education?

Mr. BRIGHT appealed to his hon. Friend the Member for Leith (Mr. Macfie). It was impossible that in a case like the present one everyone could exactly have his own will. The Government had endeavoured to do the best they could; the House had shown a great disposition to meet the Government in arranging this Bill, and he hoped that his hon. Friend, with that good sense which he generally showed, would not think it necessary to take exception to an arrangement which seemed to be absolutely necessary.

Mr. MACFIE explained that he did not object to the maintenance of the present schools, but to the introduction of a system which would bring a system of proselytizing into every parish.

Mr. SINCLAIR AYTOUN said, that the Government had forced through the Bill in such manner that they had not been able to discuss the one clause of vital importance in the Bill. The Lord Advocate had told them that this was to be an undenominational Bill; but he (Mr. Aytoun) said that with this clause it would be a denominational Bill. It gave unlimited power to the Board to report to the Privy Council whether there should or should not be denominational schools; and looking at the conduct of the Government it was perfectly clear that this system would be entirely denominational. This question was not understood in Scotland, as the Lord Advocate had admitted; but at this period of the morning he must content himself with protesting against that clause, unless it was amended as proposed by the hon. Member for Ayr.

The LORD ADVOCATE said, he desired, before the division was taken, to explain in a sentence or two the nature of this clause. His hon. Friend (Mr. Aytoun) had said that he had admitted that in Scotland this Bill was not understood. Now, what he (the Lord Advocate) said was this—that by the course taken the Amendments which the Lords had made had in some of the remoter parts of the country been taken to be the propositions of the Government. It certainly had never occurred to him that there were two hon. Members who had so little apprehension of the real nature of this Bill as the hon. Members for Ayr and Kirkcaldy as to say that this was a denominational Bill. This was the only attempt that had been made not to limit, but rather to destroy, the denominational system. He would first explain what it was that the Bill did. The parish schools were not denominational schools, although the management was more restricted than could be wished. The other denominational schools receiving grants were by this Bill to continue to be put under undenominational inspection, and subjected to a Conscience Clause; and a machinery was provided for grafting them on to the national system. Undenominational inspection itself was a great advantage. The next question was what was to be the constitution of these national schools? These schools were to be founded by the Council, and were to be paid from the rates. Now, who could say that is the denominational system? Where was it proposed that the denominational schools were to be paid out of the rates? The provision was that these schools were to be put down by the Board, and were to be managed by an undenominational committee chosen by the rate-payers of all denominations. It was a grievous misrepresentation to say that this was a denominational system. There was nothing denominational about it. It was as purely a national system as it could be. Then came the question what was to be done with the fragmentary but important portion of the population that did not belong to the Presbyterian Church—those belonging to the Roman Catholic persuasion. It was true the Scotch schools—strict and austere as the people were in their religious opinions—had always been conducted as though under a stringent Conscience Clause, and children of all persuasions could sit upon the same bench. But that was not enough. They knew, as a matter of fact, that Roman Catholic children would not attend Protestant schools. While in this clause, therefore, they prohibited denominational grants, or rather grants in addition to voluntary effort, they left it open to the Board, where they find a population suited to that special exception, where they are satisfied that the children will not otherwise be educated, to certify that such is the case to the Privy Council, in order that the voluntary effort may be supplemented. But that did not give a denominational aspect to the fabric they were erecting.

MR. CRAUFURD said, the learned Lord Advocate had not explained why the Government had changed their opinion on this matter. He denounced the clause, for it tended to the establishment of denominationalism, and that in its very worst form.

Question put, "That the words 'erected or established more than two years,' stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes 74; Noes 4: Majority 70.

Clause amended, and agreed to.

Remaining clauses agreed to.

Postponed clauses 23 to 47 agreed to.

New Clause—

(Vote for schoolmasters in old National Schools.)

"Section twenty-two of the Act of the forty-third year of George III., chapter 54, is hereby repealed, and all owners of land in the parish whose rental appears in the Land tax valuation books, and who are liable to be assessed on their valued rent for payment of schoolmasters' salary, shall be entitled to vote in the appointment of schoolmasters in old National Schools."—(The Lord Advocate.)

Clause added.

Other new clauses added; others moved and negatived.

New Clause—

(Certain occupiers of land to act with heritors in the matters of Parochial Schools, and disqualifying ministers from so acting.)

"It shall be lawful for all occupiers of land who are liable to be assessed for payment of parochial schoolmasters' salary under the Acts 43rd of the reign of His Majesty King George III., chapter 54, and the 24th and 25th of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter 107, to attend and vote at all meetings for the election of a parochial schoolmaster, and for any other matter held by the heritors pursuant to the two Acts here recited and this Act. It shall not be lawful for any parish minister ex officio to vote at any such meetings."—(Mr. Miller.)

Clause brought up, and read the first time.

Motion made, and Question put, "That the Clause be read a second time."

The Committee divided:—Ayes 9; Noes 51: Majority 42.

House resumed.

Bill reported, with Amendments; as amended, to be considered To-morrow.

House adjourned at a quarter before Four o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Saturday, 7th August, 1869.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—First Reading—Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland)* (279); Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan* (285).

Second Reading—Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans)* (280).

Committee—Report—Consolidated Fund (Appropriation); Warehousing of Wines and Spirits, &c. (272); Dividends on Public Stocks* (269); Harbour of Galle Loan* (266); East India Loan* (267); Inclosure of Lands* (270); Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment* (273); Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment* (271); Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act (1868) Amendment* (227).

Report—Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment* (266).

Third Reading—Seeds Adulteration* (276); Cursitor (County Palatine of Durham)* (263); Expiring Laws Continuance* (262); Nitro Glycerine* (277); Railways Abandonment* (249); Accounts, &c. Presentation* (253), and passed.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

QUESTION.

Lord REDESDALE said, he had expected that this Bill would come back from the Commons to-day. He wished to know when it would come up, and what course it was proposed to take with regard to it? He could not imagine that at so late a period of the Session it would be proceeded with.

Earl GRANVILLE said, he also had anticipated that the Bill would come back to their Lordships to-day. He now understood that it would do so on Monday, and his noble Friend (the Duke of Argyll) would on Tuesday ask their Lordships to assent to the Commons' Amendments.

Lord REDESDALE said, the Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill was to be read the third time on Monday, and he protested against a Bill of such importance as the Parochial Schools Bill being considered after the passing of the Appropriation Bill — especially as almost every clause had been altered since it left this House. It would be impossible to deal with it satisfactorily on Tuesday. He would not say more now, as he hoped the Government, on due consideration, would see the necessity of not proceeding further with it this Session; but in order that there might be no surprise, he begged to give notice that on its coming up he should move that the Commons' Amendments be considered that day month.

Earl GRANVILLE said, he did not wish to discuss the matter now, as his noble Friend (the Duke of Argyll) would on Tuesday explain the nature of the Amendments, and would show the desirability of settling the question this Session.

House adjourned at a quarter before Four o'clock, to Monday next, a quarter before Four o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Saturday, 7th August, 1869.

MINUTES.] — Public Bills — Considered as amended—Parochial Schools (Scotland) [215-265]; Charity Commissioners* [239].

Considered as amended—Third Reading—Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan* [253]; Contagious Diseases* [255]; Broughty Ferry Provisional Order Confirmation* [254]; Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c.* [256], and passed.

Third Reading—Straits Settlements* [259], and passed.

Withdrawn — Endowed Schools (No. 2) (re-comm.) [154].

The House met at Twelve of the clock.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) (re-committed) BILL.—(Lords)—[Bill 215.]

CONSIDERATION.

Bill, as amended, considered.

The LORD ADVOCATE moved to insert, after Clause 5, the following clause:—

> "The Board shall hold their meetings in public on the following occasions:—The half-yearly meetings; meetings for the cognizance of offences under this Act; meetings for the purpose of considering orders relative to the establishment of new national schools; orders relative to the building and enlargement of school buildings or schoolmasters' houses; meetings for considering certificates to the Committee of Council for special grants from the same."

Motion agreed to.

Clause added to the Bill.

On the Motion of Mr. C. Dalrymple, Clauses (Regulations as to examination for certificates of competency) added to the Bill.

Mr. HENLEY asked the hon. and learned Lord Advocate for a statement of the gross expense that would be entailed by carrying out the provisions of the Bill.

Sir EDWARD COLEBROOKE desired some explanation with regard to the 5th clause. Considerable anxiety was felt in Scotland with regard to the effect of the Schedule on the action of the Bill. He need not say how important it was to have some understanding on the subject of the financial effect of the Bill, because if it should happen that a rate of 3*d.* in the pound should be exacted, the whole thing might break down, and they would have to fall back upon the voluntary system after all. Moreover, it would raise some of those difficulties about the incidence of taxation which were touched upon last night. He thought, therefore, that with regard to the financial action of the Bill they should have a clear understanding on the points to which he had alluded. As to the burden of taxation, the Government had made a proposition in the Bill which was a very liberal one with regard to Scotland, and in respect to which he did not wish to offer any opposition: but, at the same time, he thought it important that they should know clearly how it would act. He should regret above all things if the tendency should be to supersede that large amount of private and individual agency by which the education of the country was to so great an extent carried on. He knew that in regard to his own county a large portion of the schools were supported by voluntary agency, by means of a system under which those who were engaged in public works were required by the owners of those works to make a certain payment. The result was to lead to the compulsory attendance of the children, which was the dream of many hon. Members. He thought it was highly to be deprecated if this Bill were to have the effect of inducing any persons to cease their efforts, and throw the schools upon the rates. In one of the populous districts of Lanarkshire the means of education were supplied by the parochial schools, which educated a large number, and further provision was made by private means for 4,800 more. If the action of the Bill should be to throw these private subscriptions on the rates the whole arrangement must break down. Unless a satisfactory explanation could be given he thought it would be improper that the Schedule should be passed in the form in which it was proposed.

THE LORD ADVOCATE said, the speech of his hon. Friend, he rather thought, went against the whole principle of the work that they had been doing in Committee for the last two or three days. His hon. Friend's view was, that it was better to have the denominational than the national system. That was really what it came to. He said he was afraid of the Bill interfering with voluntary exertion, and that it was better, in the first instance, to trust to the voluntary exertions of the people than to trust to a national system. He (the Lord Advocate) entirely and absolutely differed from him, and he was perfectly certain that the whole feeling of Scotland was wholly the other way. If the principles contended for by his hon. Friend were to be acted upon, the whole principle of the parochial schools would be upset, and they would only introduce a national system to supplement the deficiencies of voluntary contributions. His hon. Friend resided in a county of great wealth, and he formed judgment upon what he saw being done there; but he would find that in other places voluntary exertions had not done the work fully. There was, on the other hand, not the least fear that the work would ever be so done as to render voluntary efforts useless. He trusted that his hon. Friend would not insist on any change being introduced at this the last stage of the Bill.

MR. W. E. FORSTER fully believed, as far as he was able to form a judgment from the figures and facts on which the Commissioners based their Report, that, supposing the rate system succeeded to the fullest expectation of those who were in favour of it, a rate of 2*d.* in the pound would be abundantly sufficient. With regard to the cost of the new system, the right hon. Member for Oxfordshire would not probably expect at the present moment a definite estimate. He could now only give a general idea of what was likely to be the result. It was hoped that all the children in Scotland not at present at school would gradually be drawn into them, and in that case the aid given by the State would be increased in the aggregate amount, but to an expenditure so produced he imagined nobody would object. Supposing the most Utopian result to follow, and that the 510,000 children who ought to be on the rolls of the schools—not deducting the children of the upper classes and those who went to private schools—received per head the same amount of grant as that given in England—namely, 10*s.* per head, the expenditure on that score would be £250,000, or £260,000 at the very utmost. But that was a result not to be expected for many years to come. Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman might be under the impression that the Scotch Members desired more money per child than was given in England, but he believed that what the Scotch Members wanted from alterations in the Revised Code was not more money per child for Scotland, as against England, but that the money should be distributed according to Scotch views in reference to education, rather than according to English views. At the present moment, however, England was getting more per child than Scotland. The children were divided into three classes—agricultural, non-agricultural, and mixed; and in the year ending on August 31, 1868, the average was 9*s.* 2*d.* in the agricultural division for England, and 8*s.* 8*d.* for Scotland. In the non-agricultural division the average was 9*s.* 2¾*d.* for England, 7*s.* 7¾*d.* for Scotland. In the mixed division the average was 9*s.* 3¼*d.* in England and 8*s.* 6*d.* in Scotland. The result was very much owing to the Minute of his right hon. predecessor in Office (Mr. Corry) being in operation in England and not in Scotland, and he was glad of this opportunity to correct a mistake he made on a previous occasion in not giving so much credit as he intended to the action of that Minute. The proposition contained in the Schedule of the Bill would practically give to Scotland what was given to England. Another thing which caused increased expense was that it was deemed inconsistent with the principle of a rate that Article 4 of the Revised Code, relating to aid given to any child engaged in manual labour, should be insisted on. He did not think, however, that that would make much practical difference. The only other point on which there could be more expense had reference to special grants to special districts. He would not go into a detail of the reasons for the special grants, but would content himself with remarking that it would be quite vain to hope to extend education to the Hebrides and to remote districts in the Highlands without the aid of these grants. As far as he was able to make out, the amount which the Treasury might be called on to supply for this increase in the annual grants would be from £6,000 to £7,000, and he should be putting it down at the very utmost if he said £10,000. There was a small item under the head of building grants, but it must be remembered that the total of the building grants in the Hebrides from 1844 to 1864 had amounted only to £1,753. The only other point he had to notice was the provision to re-place the present mode of examination by examiners appointed by the University. He stated yesterday that there would be no loss on that head, and, in fact, he believed that there would be a considerable saving. His right hon. Friend thought it safe to put down the expense of this examination at £600; but as there would be a large number of young men to be examined under the present Bill, two or three additional Inspectors would be required if they were to trust only to the present system of inspection; and the cost of an Inspector's remuneration for the first year of service might be reckoned at £600. Independently, however, of the economical advantages of having the examination conducted by the University, it was not desirable for the central department to have a great amount of detailed work.

Mr. CRAUFURD said, he had to move an Amendment, to insert after "parish" the words "or in any burgh." He thought there might be cases of burghs in which the 3*d.* rate would not give 16*s.* per head, and the object of his Amendment was to enable burghs in that position to have their 3*d.* rate supplemented out of the grants of the Privy Council in the same way as was proposed in respect to landward parishes.

Mr. HENLEY said, as he had read the Bill, whatever money was raised by rate must be met with an equal amount by the Treasury.

Mr. W. E. FORSTER said, he was afraid it would be impossible for the Government to accede to the suggestion of the hon. and learned Member for Ayr, that the burghs should be put in the same position as landward parishes. The ground for the exception made in the case of landward parishes was the peculiar circumstances of these parishes, and not merely the comparative poverty of the district — though that was a strong reason. Generally speaking, the population was so sparse that even with the same amount of property per head it was more difficult to found a school. Taking these two things into consideration, the Government had thought it right to give this exceptional favour to these special districts. But it would be impossible for the Government to make that a ground for increasing the rate throughout the country.

Dr. LYON PLAYFAIR said, there was a general impression that the 16*s.* which was given in the Highland districts was a very large amount as compared with what would be won in England by a child under the most favourable circumstances. But this was not the case. Under the Revised Code at present 15*s.* might be won, whereas, in these exceptional Highland districts, where there was a great difficulty of obtaining education, 16*s*. was the utmost, and the amount would be quite inappreciable as a charge upon the Exchequer. They had taken advantage of all denominational efforts in Scotland, and all the denominational schools would continue under the Bill as at present. In the burghs, where they were rich, a large amount of denominational zeal was in operation, and a considerable number of schools had been formed. The 3*d*. rate was in addition to all that, and in all probability would be quite sufficient. It would certainly be ample when they considered that the 66th clause applied to those large burghs where there were numbers of Roman Catholics and Episcopalians who did not go to the general schools. Those burghs were amply provided with denominational schools by the 66th clause, and under those circumstances he did not see any ground for the exception. The denominational schools were only of use where there was a rich population to support them.

SIR EDWARD COLEBROOKE said, he thought the hon. Gentleman had misunderstood the points he had wished to make. He feared that the bonus of Government would tend to withdraw subscriptions, and to throw so many of these schools on the public rates that the system would break down. He therefore put it distinctly to the Government as to the possibility of making a distinction between town and country. It was important that in working this Bill out Government should not destroy this voluntary agency.

MR. MACFIE said, the Bill permitted denominationalism, but did not require it; and he did not think it even encouraged it. As to the comparative smallness of the amount with which the burghs were to be remunerated, he had no fear of that, for the reason that it would encourage the burghs to unite their schools, and they would thus get rid of the last vestiges of denominationalism.

Amendment negatived.

MR. CAMERON moved the insertion of the words "or when the same has not been levied, but would if levied yield." That would enable grants to be made in those parishes where the 3*d*. rate had not been levied.

MR. W. E. FORSTER opposed the Amendment, which, if adopted, would do away with the provision of the Schedule altogether.

Amendment negatived.

LORD ELCHO moved to leave out the words "beyond the sum fixed by," in order to insert "under" in line 37 of the Schedule, the effect of the Amendment being to make all sums derived from the legal assessment of the heritors of any parish under the minimum sum fixed by the Parochial and Burghs Schoolmasters' Scotland Act, 1861, available as local contribution for the purpose of the Act. In 1863, the present Chancellor of the Exchequer, who was then Vice President of the Council, expressed an opinion to the effect that the amount which the heritors were bound to pay could not be considered in the light of an endowment, but was more in the nature of a charitable contribution. But as the Bill stood, a new and unfair principle had been introduced, the Privy Council giving nothing to any parochial schools which had local contributions up to £35, and giving grants to the other schools whether they raised £1, £35, or £100.

Amendment proposed, in Schedule (A), page 28, lines 37 and 38, to leave out the words "beyond the minimum sum fixed by," in order to insert the word "under," — (Lord Elcho,) — instead thereof.

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Bill."

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, the Government must object to the Amendment, because it would lead to a new demand upon the Imperial purse, and it would alter all the arrangements with regard to the conditions on which aid should be given in Scotland. It would be unreasonable to do that at the last moment—especially as the question had been very carefully considered as to what change should be made, and in what respects more money should be given. There was another ground on which he objected to the Amendment, and that was, that no interference whatever had been made with the mode in which parochial schools were paid for; and he did not think it would be wise now to make any change with regard to it. As to the schoolmasters, he was glad to find, whatever might be said against the old parochial schools system of Scotland, that the result of the system had been to produce, upon the whole, a better paid body of schoolmasters than in any other part of the three Kingdoms. The Schedule was the result of an arrangement which was considered satisfactory by those who took an interest in the matter. He thought the question was one that ought to be considered by the Government, but he could not mislead the House by holding out the hope that an arrangement which had been carefully considered would be annulled.

Lord ELCHO said, he would withdraw the proposition for the present; but he gave notice that he would bring it forward on the third reading, as everyone who had spoken upon it had thought it an equitable proposition.

Amendment withdrawn.

Sir GRAHAM MONTGOMERY moved the insertion of the following words, after the word "Scotland" in line 17 of the Preamble "including religious education according to use and wont."

Amendment proposed, in the Preamble, page 1, line 17, after the word "Scotland," to insert the words "including religious education according to use and wont."—(Sir Graham Montgomery.)

Question proposed, "That those words be there inserted."

Mr. HENLEY remarked that the Bill in its present state reminded him of what Sir Robert Inglis had said of an Irish Education Bill—namely, that it was "a gigantic scheme of godless education." He believed that religion was only twice referred to in the Bill, and then only in a negative form, once in a clause which said that the Inspector should not make inquiry into religious matters, and again in the Conscience Clause. These were the only two places in which there was any allusion to the existence of such a thing as religion or religious feeling, and he thought it unfortunate that it should be so.

Mr. GRAHAM said, there was a large number of persons in Scotland—he was one of them — who objected to any legislation which would make the teaching of religion compulsory. The religious element in Scotch education must be a matter of conviction and not of compulsion.

Dr. LYON PLAYFAIR: I hope that the hon. Member for Peebles and Selkirk will not press his Amendment. I agree with him, and with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Oxfordshire, that the Scotch people have no desire for mere secular education in their schools. From the time that the Church of Scotland became the successor of Papacy and Episcopacy, as a Church of the State, she has been ardent in the cause of education, and has infused into it religious teaching. This was so thoroughly understood that there is nothing provided to that effect in the Act of 1696, when the management of the schools passed over from the Church to the lay heritors. The Church will not forget her old traditions now, though the area of taxation is enlarged and rate-payers are substituted for heritors. The Free Church, which, since its formation in 1843, has spent £600,000 on schools, is not likely to be less zealous in the cause of religion, although, confiding in a national system, she may no longer continue to create new schools. The large body of United Presbyterians have always taken a distinctive and enlightened view of the duties of a Church in the religious education of the people. The great bulk of the Scottish people have one Bible, one Catechism, one Confession of Faith. It is no doubt the earnest desire of the Scottish people to use these in what their old divines called "the godly upbringing of their youth." All the Churches will join in this pious act with fervid zeal, provided you entrust to them the duties of a common Christianity which they all profess, and do not raise up denominational jealousies to keep them asunder. I object to the insertion of these words, not because they introduce religion into Scotch schools, for that is desired by the people, but because they are unnecessary, and tend to perpetuate sectarian bitterness, which it is the object of this measure to allay. The "use and wont" for which the hon. Members contend is objected to on very different grounds by three Churches in Scotland. The United Presbyterians object to it on the principle that the Church and the parents should deal with religion, and the school with secular education. Episcopalians dislike it, because "use and wont" mean the Catechism of the Church of Scotland and the Westminster Confession of Faith.

Roman Catholics cannot consent to it, for the tenets of the Presbyterian Church are essentially different from their own. The terms "use and wont" introduced into the Bill necessarily limit its nationality, and restrict its application. Besides, no security for the future religious character of a nation can be given by the insertion of a few words in an Act of Parliament. A far more lasting security subsists in the past and present religious character of the people. Scotland rested on that security, when, in 1696, it established the national system, without any statutory provisions of a religious kind. Let us rest on it now in the assured conviction that the religion, morality, and knowledge of the community will be best promoted by the confidence which we repose in the religious sense of the people.

MR. M'LAREN wished to say a word in reference to what had fallen from the hon. Member for the University of Edinburgh. The hon. Gentleman had stated in substance that the Church of Scotland always took care of the religious teaching of the schools. This was an error. The Act of George III. which regulated the schools provided that the heritors should decide upon those branches of education which were to be taught; and, having done this, they were to appoint the teacher, and send him to the presbytery to be examined respecting his ability to teach these branches; but beyond this the Church had nothing to do with the matter. The feeling of the people was that religion should be taught, and, as far as he knew, very few persons objected to this; but very many would object to anything like a provision to compel that to be done which had always been done by tacit assent. With regard to what had been said by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Oxfordshire as to there being nothing in the Bill about religion, and as to its being "a gigantic scheme of godless education," he could only say that it was the same scheme that had existed for centuries in Scotland, and he had never before heard it termed a scheme of godless education. On the contrary, this Bill did more than any Act that had ever been passed to recognize religion, because it said there should be a Conscience Clause. Now, did not this imply that religion was expected to be taught; otherwise, why should a Conscience Clause be needed? Another provision in the Bill said that the Inspector should not inquire respecting the religious teaching. Did not this also imply that there was to be religious teaching? If not, why should they prohibit the Inspector from inquiring into it? Therefore, in place of the Bill being one for reducing the system of education in Scotland to what the right hon. Gentleman called a godless system, he held that there was a stronger recognition of religious teaching in the Bill than in any of the Acts which had yet been passed respecting parish schools in Scotland.

MR. C. S. PARKER said, he was of opinion that it was the duty of the Legislature to provide for the religious education of the people, but he concurred with the hon. Gentleman the Member for Edinburgh in thinking that in this Bill the Legislature had provided for the religious education of the people by placing the responsibility in such hands as would secure a good religious education. He hoped, therefore, that this would not be called a godless Bill. The particular question was whether they should put a recognition of religious teaching in the front of the Bill by inserting the words suggested in the Preamble of the Bill. As a matter of choice he would prefer that it should be so; but if the Amendment were pressed to a division, he should vote for it.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be read the third time upon Monday."

MR. C. DALRYMPLE moved that the Bill be re-committed, in order to raise the question as to the appointment of the Secretary to the Board. Whether the Bill was a godless Bill or not, it was boasted to be an undenominational Bill. What was proposed to be done was to stamp it as a Bill of an unsectarian character. Now, he desired to see this principle carried out in the appointment of the Secretary to the Board; indeed, he would go still further, and say that, in his opinion, not only ought the Secretary to be a layman, but the members of the Board ought to be laymen also. He would not, however, propose this now. He hoped the Government would see that it would not be fitting to propose any minister of religion as Secretary, and he trusted also that if any minister of religion was placed upon the Board, he would be selected only on the ground of his services to the cause of education, and that he would not be associated in the minds of the people with distinct sectarian opinions.

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the words "Bill be" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "re-committed to a Committee of the whole House,"—(Mr. Charles Dalrymple,)

—instead thereof.

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

SIR ROBERT ANSTRUTHER thought it would be in the highest degree unwise to appoint a clerical Secretary. In saying this he did not in the faintest degree imply a slur on any minister. It was simply urged in deference to the fact that, unfortunately, Scotland was broken into sects and parties of Churchmen, and to appoint any clergyman, however distinguished, would, he thought, be very unwise.

MR. STAPLETON said, he could not part with the Bill without expressing a hope that this was the last time important social questions affecting Scotland would be settled by a Scotch Parliament, sitting in a committee room upstairs. When he first came into the House, then a long time ago, he was told that this was done to save time. It did not save time now. There had been no Bill before the House that Session—whether from England or from Ireland—on which more time had been wasted than on that Bill. Though the Bill had never been properly discussed on its principles, the time of the House had been wasted in unprofitable wrangles on almost every occasion on which the Bill had to make a step in its progress through that House. There were questions coming on in Scotland of great social importance. The question of hypothec—by which the rights of landlord and tenant not only in this Empire, but through all Europe might be affected—those of the Game Laws and the Poor Laws; and, lastly, that of education itself, which was sure to be raised again, were all of the deepest social importance. They could not be settled by Scotchmen for Scotland alone. The whole Empire would be affected by what happened in Scotland. He, for one, would not consent that, whilst a social revolution was brewing in Scotland, English Members should sit still, without taking any part in the discussion, without attempting to check or to control it, until it overflowed the Border and they were submerged.

COLONEL SYKES said, he could not concur in several portions of the Bill, particularly that portion which related to the establishment of the Board. He objected to the Board on the grounds that it would increase patronage, that it would increase expense, and diminish efficiency. If the Vice President of the Council of Education could manage a Department relating to a population several times more numerous than that of Scotland, he thought a single Commissioner would be sufficient for Scotland. With regard to the question whether the Secretary should or should not be a clergyman, he thought the Government would exercise a sound discretion in the matter, and that to prescribe a certain line for the Government to follow would not only be invidious, but very unwise.

MR. BOUVERIE protested against Members of the House taking possession of the appointment of Secretary, and saying who was or was not to be appointed. The Bill proposed to place the responsibility of the selection upon the Government. If the House thought the Government unfit to be entrusted with this responsibility, they were also unfit to sit on the Treasury Bench.

MR. CRAUFURD said, he thought it was not too much to ask the Government for a pledge that the Secretary should be a layman.

MR. BRUCE said, that the Government had listened with great respect to all the suggestions that had been made, both in public and private, with regard to the appointment of Secretary to the Board; but in their opinion they would not be justified in pledging themselves to exclude any class of persons from a title to the appointment. At the same time, they would give the most careful consideration to any suggestion that might be made; and of course they were most anxious to make such an appointment as would be likely to command general support. The hon. and gallant Member for Aberdeen (Colonel Sykes) had said that if the Vice President of the Committee of Council could administer the Office intrusted to him, why could they not trust one man in the case of Scotland. He (Mr. Bruce) would not say that one man could not do it, but there were other considerations to be regarded. It was essential that the Board should be a representative body, and that persons representing various opinions should be upon it. He could not sit down without thanking the House for the patience with which they had conducted the protracted discussion on this Bill, and he must give his tribute to the perfect fairness with which the hon. Gentlemen opposite had conducted those discussions under circumstances which he quite admitted were open to expostulation. He hoped on Monday to be able to state the names of the Commissioners and of the Secretary.

SIR EDWARD COLEBROOKE said, that if it was proper that the Secretary should be a clergyman, the members of the Board should be clergymen also. There was no doubt that the Government would see that the Board should be so constituted as to be an impartial one. There were many clerically-minded persons among the laity, and the question was not so much one of the profession of those who might be appointed as of the liberality of their views.

LORD ELCHO said, he had yesterday mentioned that there was a rumour afloat, that a certain minister in Scotland who had taken a very active part for the Government in the elections had been promised the appointment of Secretary. The right hon. Member for Kilmarnock had taken to task those who endeavoured to get the Government to give a pledge on this subject. He (Lord Elcho) agreed with his hon. Friend near him, that, in the case of a Bill the object of which to be undenominational, one of the worst things that they could do would be to give a denominational character to the measure by appointing a clerical gentlemen to the office of Secretary. The majority on that (the Opposition) side of the House were perfectly agreed that the office should not be filled by a clergyman.

THE LORD ADVOCATE thought it a pity that the noble Lord should have mingled with a question, what it was quite fair to consider, observations or allusions to an individual. The Government would endeavour to make appointments which would fairly represent the feelings of the people of Scotland, and they would not be led into a discussion upon an individual question which his noble Friend had, he thought, with questionable taste, introduced.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Bill to be read the third time upon Monday, and to be printed. [Bill 265.]

ENDOWED SCHOOLS (No. 2) (re-committed) BILL—[BILL 154.]—COMMITTEE.

(Mr. W. E. Forster, Mr. Secretary Bruce.)

Order for Committee read.

MR. W. E. FORSTER, in moving that the Order for the House to resolve into Committee on this Bill be discharged, stated that it was a Bill to provide for the examination and registry of teachers in endowed schools and others, and for the examination of scholars, and it had formed part of a Bill which he brought in at an early period of the Session, and a great portion of which had become law. It was thought advisable by the Select Committee to which the measure as originally introduced was referred that it should be divided into two parts, the first to consist of a plan for the reform and organization of endowed schools, and the second of a scheme to provide for the examination of scholars and the certificating and registering of teachers. He found that there was a general expression of opinion in the House in favour of the principle of the Bill, though some doubts were entertained as to the mode in which it should be carried out. In consequence, it had been suggested that it would be advisable to allow the Bill to be circulated through the country, especially as it was hopeless in the present state of Public Business to endeavour to pass it into law in the present year; and he trusted that it would during the Recess receive consideration from all parties interested in the matter. The Bill would establish a council independent of the Government, and the duty of that council would be to provide for the examination of the teachers and scholars of endowed schools, and for the registration of the teachers, as well as to offer to private schools the same opportunities for examination and to give to the teachers in them the same means of obtaining certificates of competence. It was thought by the Government that the measure passed for the reform of endowed schools would not be sufficient to secure by itself the good working of the schools for the future, and that there ought to be some means by which the standard of teaching could be kept up. It was also a great point to determine, though it was not for the Government to decide the matter, what should be that standard; and, therefore, a council most likely to have the confidence of the scholastic profession, being partly composed of members of the Universities, and partly of members nominated by the Crown, including persons having experience in teaching, was devised. In proposing this council one great object was that it should have the confidence not only of the masters of endowed schools and of the parents of the children educated therein, but also the confidence of the masters of private schools, on whom reliance must to a great extent be placed for the spread of secondary education. He thought that the public, after considering the Bill, would feel that some measure of this kind would tend to raise the profession of teaching throughout the country, and give a security to parents that they would obtain good instruction for their children in exchange for their money. The measure had been hailed with pleasure by many of the best masters both of private and public schools as a means of enabling the profession to acquire and maintain its proper position in this country.

Mr. ACLAND said, that the course proposed to be taken by the right hon. Gentleman would give satisfaction to the country. He wished to know whether the Bill was intended to apply to public schools not regulated by the Act recently passed as well as to endowed schools?

Mr. W. E. FORSTER replied that the seven great schools for which the House legislated last year were excluded from the Bill as originally introduced in the present year, it being felt that, inasmuch as they were re-organized last year, they could not be included in the reform of this year; but there were really no reasons why they should not be subjected to the same conditions as to examinations as the other endowed schools, and, though there might have been some advantages in legislating last year for those schools by themselves, there was a disadvantage in creating a distinction between them and other endowed schools. There was no reason to suppose that the examinations, if good for one set, would not be good for the other set, and, therefore, the measure which he proposed to circulate through the country applied just as much to the schools legislated for last year as to those which were regulated in the present year.

Motion agreed to.

Order discharged; Bill withdrawn.

House adjourned at half after Two o'clock, till Monday.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Monday, 9th August, 1869.

MINUTES.]—Public Bills—Second Reading—Committee Negatived — Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland) * (279); Broughty Ferry Provisional Order Confirmation * (294); Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan * (285).

Committee — Report — Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) * (280).

Third Reading—Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) ; Warehousing of Wines and Spirits, &c. (272); Dividends on Public Stocks * (269); Harbour of Galle Loan * (268); Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment * (266); East India Loan * (267); Inclosure of Lands * (270); Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment * (273); Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment * (271); Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act (1868) Amendment * (227). and passed.

Royal Assent—Fortifications (Provision for Expenses) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 76]; Savings Banks and Post Office Savings Banks [32 & 33 Vict. c. 59]; Public Schools Act (1868) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 58]; Imprisonment for Debt [32 & 33 Vict. c. 62]; Civil Offices (Pensions) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 60]; Trades Unions (Protection of Funds) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 61]; Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 63]; Valuation of Property (Metropolis) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 67]; Evidence Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 68]; Jamaica Loans [32 & 33 Vict. c. 69]; Contagious Diseases (Animals) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 70]; Bankruptcy [32 & 33 Vict. c. 71]; Land Tax Commissioners Names [32 & 33 Vict. c. 64]; Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal [32 & 33 Vict. c. 83]; Telegraphs [32 & 33 Vict. c. 73]; Public Works (Ireland) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 74]; Zanzibar (Jurisdiction of Consul) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 75]; Basses Lights, Ceylon, [32 & 33 Vict. c. 77]; Criminal Lunatics [32 & 33 Vict. c. 78]; Local Officers Superannuation (Ireland) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 79]; Militia Pay [32 & 33 Vict. c. 66]; Militia (Ireland) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 80]; Volunteer Act (1863) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 81]; Metropolitan Building Act (1855) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 82]; Cursitor (County Palatine of Durham)

[32 & 33 Vict. c. 84]; Expiring Laws Continuance [32 & 33 Vict. c. 85]; Accounts, &c. Presentation [32 & 33 Vict. c. 86]; Prevention of Gaming (Scotland) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 87]; Straits Settlements [32 & 33 Vict. c. 88]; Clerks of Assize [32 & 33 Vict c. 89]; Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act (1863) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 72]; Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. [32 & 33 Vict. c. 90]; Courts of Justice Salaries and Funds [32 & 33 Vict. c. 91]; Dublin Freemen Commission [32 & 33 Vict. c. 65]; Fisheries (Ireland) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 92]; Local Government Supplemental (No. 2) [32 & 33 Vict. c. cxxiv.]; Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Supplemental (No. 2) [32 & 33 Vict. c. cxlix.]

BISHOPS RESIGNATION BILL—(No. 201.)

COMMONS' AMENDMENTS.

Commons' Amendments considered (according to Order).

THE LORD CHANCELLOR, in the absence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, moved that the Amendments made by the Commons in this Bill be agreed to. The principal alterations made by the other House were, that they had struck out the reference to "bodily infirmity," which was inserted in the Bill on the Motion of the Duke of Somerset, and had limited the operation of the Bill to two years and to the end of the then next Session; a further Amendment, however, would be necessary, which he would now propose, providing that arrangements made during that period should continue to be valid.

Commons' Amendments agreed to, with an Amendment; and Bill, with the Amendments, returned to the Commons.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS BILL—(No. 41.)

COMMONS' AMENDMENTS.

Commons' Amendments considered (according to Order).

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY moved to agree to the Amendments made by the Commons in this Bill. He believed they were on the whole improvements, and would not interfere with the general principle of the measure. The Bill, as amended, provided that the Act should extend to Scotland and Ireland; that the conditions on which tickets of leave were granted should be laid before Parliament; that the registration should apply to all classes of criminals included in the Bill; that the supervision should be limited to convictions on indictments, and that it should be at the discretion of the Judge who passed the sentence whether that supervision should in all cases be imposed. The clause subjecting persons thrice convicted of certain offences to supervision for life had been struck out, it being felt that this would exclude them from all hope of returning to honest courses, and such supervision was therefore to be limited, as in other cases, to seven years. The clause making it obligatory on Judges to pass a sentence of seven years' penal servitude for the third offence had also been struck out, it being desirable that Judges should have a discretionary power. The clause regarding receivers of stolen goods had likewise been modified A Schedule had been inserted defining the offences in Scotland to which the Bill was to apply. He believed the Bill as now settled would prove a useful addition to our legislation on this subject.

Commons' Amendments agreed to.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

(NO. 119.) COMMONS' AMENDMENTS.

Bill, returned from the Commons, agreed to, with Amendments.

Moved, That the Commons' Amendments be considered To-Morrow.—(The Duke of Argyll.)

LORD REDESDALE said, he should like to ask the noble Earl (the Secretary for the Colonies) if the Government really intended to seriously propose going on with the Bill at this late period of the Session? He intended to move that they do not go on with it; but he would rather let the Government have the opportunity of voluntarily withdrawing it than that they should be compelled to do so by an adverse vote. The noble Earl must himself be conscious that after the Appropriation Bill had been passed, it was not fair to ask their Lordships to proceed with a Bill which involved such controversy as this did. It was the duty of the Government to afford their Lordships a full and fair opportunity to reconsider the Bill when it came back again from the Commons, and he (Lord Redesdale) said they could not do anything of the kind, now that they were within a couple of days of the close of the Session. He trusted it would not be necessary for him to move the Motion of which he had given notice.

Earl GRANVILLE said, he stated on Saturday that it was the intention of Government to propose to proceed with the Bill to-morrow, and he was glad to see such a large attendance of their Lordships on this occasion. He knew that some of their Lordships entirely objected to this measure; but there were other Members of the House who thought it a measure of very great importance; and therefore the Government thought it their duty to ask their Lordships to go on with the Bill, in order that it might become law this Session.

Viscount MELVILLE asked how it was possible to consider such a Bill as this two days before the end of the Session? He moreover understood the Bill to which the House of Commons had agreed was one entirely different from that which was sent down to them by their Lordships, and therefore the Bill must necessarily give rise to considerable discussion. Under these circumstances it would be a most unjustifiable course if the Government persisted in forcing the Bill forward. All the other important business of the Session had been disposed of, and many of the Members of the House had left town, and it would be a most culpable thing for the Government to ask the House to discuss the Bill on its merits or demerits, when it was simply impossible to consider the Amendments made by the other House.

Lord REDESDALE said, that the answer given by the noble Earl (Earl Granville) only left one course consistent with the duty which he owed to himself and to their Lordships, and that was to move as an Amendment to the Motion of the noble Duke (the Duke of Argyll), that the Amendments made by the Commons in the Bill be taken into consideration this day three months. He should like to know what were supposed to be the duties of their Lordships with regard to Public Business, and how they ought to act in regard to important measures such as this? This was a Bill of sixty clauses, and there would be a great many Amendments to the clauses if the Bill were proceeded with. He wanted to ask how they were properly to consider all this when the Session was virtually over? Besides, would it be fair for the Government to propose certain clauses now which they knew very well if they had submitted them to their Lordships six weeks ago they would have had no chance of acceptance? The Bill, which had been read a third time that day and passed in the Commons, would not be delivered to their Lordships until to-morrow; and it was promised that Parliament should be prorogued on Wednesday, or, at latest, on Thursday. How would it be possible, when they only got the Bill back on Tuesday, to carefully consider it before Wednesday or Thursday? How would it be possible for one Peer to communicate with another as to what Amendments it might be desirable to accept and what ought to be rejected? There would be no opportunity whatever. There would be no time for communication with parties in Scotland, and no time to do anything but to accept just what Government proposed without inquiry and without deliberation. He submitted it would not be right for their Lordships to yield to Government in this matter. Let the noble Duke (the Duke of Argyll) make ever so clear a statement to-morrow of the character of the Amendments which had been made in the other House, their Lordships would still require time to consider for themselves what the effect of these Amendments might be. He said that if their Lordships should proceed in such a manner as that proposed by Government with regard to public legislation, there was an end to the dignity and reputation of their Lordships' House, and they would, in fact, become merely the register of anything which came from the other House. Now, he did not think the other House had any reason to be hard upon them if they declined to take the Bill further into their consideration this Session; because they themselves had hardly shown that alacrity to deal with the subject which some might have supposed they would have done. The measure was sent down to them on the 14th of June, and was fixed for second reading on the 21st of that month, but it was then deferred till the 28th, next to the 5th of July, and again to the 12th, when it was read a second time, so that there was no less than a month consumed in postponements. It was ordered for committal the next day, but this turned out to be only a committal pro formâ for the purpose of altering the entire character of the Bill and restoring it very much to its shape when originally introduced by the Government into this House.

Thus the Commons never had the Bill sent down by their Lordships fairly submitted to them — a proceeding against which their Lordships had a right to protest. After having been committed pro formâ, the Committee was more than once postponed, and it was not till the 27th of July that the Commons began to consider its clauses, the proceedings being then adjourned to the 2nd of August. The Appropriation Bill had passed the House, and they were told that they were within two days of the close of the Session, yet the Government press on us to re-open the discussion on such an important measure as this. He said that if their Lordships agreed to such a proposition it would be a mere mockery of legislation. Noble Lords opposite might like to know the opinion of the Prime Minister on proceeding with important Bills at the very close of the Session. On the 23rd of July, 1856, a Bill relating to the resignation of the Bishops of London and Durham having been sent down to the Commons, the right hon. Gentleman said—

> "The business of the country has been almost entirely wound up. We have passed the Appropriation Bill—that which we look upon as the natural termination of the important business of the Session; our functions in Committee of Supply have ended. It is not merely the date of the 23rd of July which we have to consider, though I must say that if Government continue the practice of introducing these most difficult Bills, these measures of such vast importance, when the Session is expiring, it will be necessary for this House, in self-defence, to resort to a measure which has been adopted in the other House, and to pass rules fixing positive dates, after which they will not consent to entertain such measures. . . . We have, in fact, come to a state of things in which some forty or forty-five persons holding office under the Government virtually decide every question before the House."—[3 Hansard, cxliii. 1327.]

The practice of proceeding with important measures at a period when the larger number of the Members of the House had conceived that their duties were over, and that they might retire to the country, was a practice that required to be checked if the House wished to preserve its privileges. A short time since it was understood that to-morrow was to be the date of the prorogation, and accordingly many noble Lords left town, in the belief that the business of the Session had virtually been concluded. It was not till last week that the date was extended to Wednesday or Thursday; and if Thursday was the day there would be no time for communication with the House of Commons, to arrange which of the Amendments might be accepted. Their Lordships were aware that he had always attended to this matter not at all as a party question, but with the view of watching the privileges of the House and securing fair deliberation. At one time, indeed, he induced their Lordships to take the course referred to by Mr. Gladstone in the speech he had quoted—namely, to resolve that after a certain day no Bill should be read a second time; and though in deference to a feeling of jealousy on the part of the Commons he gave up pressing for that Order, he did so on the understanding that the principle of it would be adhered to by the Governments of the day.

Amendment moved, to leave out ("To-morrow") and insert ("this day three months.")—(The Lord Redesdale.)

The Duke of ARGYLL: My Lords, before I refer to the early part of my noble Friend's speech, I must remark that it is unquestionably a fact that there are two or three Members of this House who have from the very beginning been hostile to the principle of this Bill. They have opposed it on all occasions, and they have expressed extreme regret that the noble and learned Lord (Lord Cairns) supported it on the second reading. In Committee they supported every Amendment for altering the principle of the Bill, or which was damaging to it. Some of these noble Lords may be now present; and I do not at all complain of the course which they will probably take in supporting the Amendment of my noble Friend (Lord Redesdale). It is perfectly legitimate for them, entertaining as they do a conscientious objection to the principle of the Bill, to take advantage of any technical means of securing their object. But I would appeal to a great number of Lords opposite, who had no objection to the third reading, and who thought it, on the whole, a valuable Bill—I would earnestly appeal to them to hear what I have to say in regard to the point of Order, and to the question whether your Lordships ought or ought not to proceed to the consideration of the Amendments made by the Commons—for I beg your Lordships to observe that the Amendment of my noble Friend is that you should not even consider the Amendments made by the Commons. My noble Friend said that these Amendments entirely alter the structure and character of the Bill. Now, I venture to affirm the contrary. I venture to say that those Amendments do not alter the structure and character of the Bill. But, before I enter into the question, I must be allowed to refer to another point—one connected with our procedure. The Amendment now before the House professes to be founded solely on a question of procedure, and, therefore, before I say anything with regard to the Amendments, I wish to direct attention to that point. Ever since I became a Member of this House I have had a great desire to maintain its authority. When I was an independent Member unconnected with the Government I often felt the justice of the complaint that important business was put off to a very late period of the Session, and I well remember the late Lord Aberdeen saying, in answer to a question, that though he had been upwards of fifty years in the House, he could remember no time when that complaint was not made. It appears to me in the nature of things, considering the relative position of the two Houses, that important business should come up at a late period of the Session. What is one of the causes of that? Why, it is that the House of Lords has been becoming less and less a House for the initiation of legislation. Measures of an important kind are generally brought into the House of Commons, and every Ministry has felt the advantage of having the support of a majority of the House of Commons in bringing a measure before your Lordships. Therefore it is that this House has been becoming less and less a House in which important measures are initiated. Now, I beg to remind your Lordships that so far from the Government having been unmindful of the position of this House, or indifferent to maintaining its influence in legislation, they took the unusual course of introducing this Bill in your Lordships' House, and desired that it should be considered by your Lordships in the first instance. That course was especially unusual considering the character of this Bill, because it is, to a very large extent, a Bill involving the question of rates. Rating is not merely an incident of the Bill, but it is an essential part of it. I say, then, that the Government gave every possible proof of their desire that the opinion of this House should be consulted in due time in this question of education in Scotland. Let me remind your Lordships that it was at the request of the noble Lords opposite, as well as of some noble Lords near me, that I consented more than once to a postponement of legislation that made the discussion on the Bill take place considerably later than it would otherwise have been the case. One cause of delay was the natural desire to consult the Commissioners of Supply in Scotland. I have the greatest possible respect for the Commissioners, but I say that this question of education is now ripe for legislation, that Parliament ought to legislate on its own authority, and that it was inexpedient for the Members of the other House to consult local bodies of that kind, or for this House to postpone legislation with a view of obtaining their opinions. On two occasions I have, in deference to the opinion of noble Lords opposite, postponed the measure to a dangerously late period of the Session—dangerously late, considering the occupation of the time of the House of Commons, and the great importance of the measures with which they were occupied. My Lords, there has never been a Session when the time of the House has been more occupied or engrossed with more important measures. I have great respect for the opinion of my noble Friend (Lord Redesdale). I believe no man is more anxious than he is to maintain the reputation and authority of this House, and I know his thorough honesty of purpose; but I would venture to ask him, as well as your Lordships generally, whether it can be conducive to the honour and reputation of this House that, when a measure of this kind, initiated in this House, has been sent down to the House of Commons and amended by them, your Lordships should refuse even to consider the Amendments which have been made. I must say that that appears to me almost a monstrous course. As regards the lateness of the Session, the lateness is the same to the House of Commons as to the House of Lords. The time of the House of Commons has been more engrossed than that of your Lordships, and the labour of the Members of that House been infinitely more severe. I really believe that for every ten hours that we have sat in this House something like forty or fifty have been occupied by the labours of the House of Commons. I ask is it for the reputation of this House, is it for the honour of this House, that we should say to the House of Commons, who were ready to consider our Amendments up to the second week in August—"We are unwilling now to consider Amendments you have made in a measure initiated by us?" I think that under the peculiar circumstances of the case the argument of my noble Friend will not hold for a single moment with regard to the lateness of the period in the House of Commons. I repeatedly urged upon my Colleagues the importance of this Bill being taken into consideration by the other House at an earlier period, and it was nothing but the urgency and importance of Public Business which prevented that from being done. The Members of the House of Commons have not thought it too late to consider your Lordships' Amendments, which were large and important. Those Amendments were considered even up to the end of last week, and I cannot help expressing on the present occasion, on behalf of the Government, our earnest gratitude to the Members of the House of Commons, and especially to those connected with Scotland, for the patriotic course which they have pursued with regard to this Bill. They have felt quite as much as your Lordships have done the unfortunate circumstances of this Bill having been so long postponed, but they have, nevertheless, proceeded to consider it with the greatest possible deliberation; and it is within my personal knowledge that many of the Members sacrificed, to a large extent, their individual opinions on points of detail in order to meet the views of Government and of all parties in Scotland, so as to secure the passing of a measure which would be for the advantage of the country. I say, then, that it will not be for the honour or credit of this House, but far from it, if, in the case of a measure initiated in this House, altered largely and re-considered by the House of Commons during last week, we should refuse to take Amendments into consideration, even though it be almost the last day of the Session. And now with regard to the assertion of my noble Friend (Lord Redesdale). I do not blame him, because he knows nothing about the question of education in Scotland, and probably cares less—but I say he is wholly mistaken with regard to the character of the Amendments made in this Bill. Let me recall to the recollection of the House a few questions. Very great stress was made by noble Lords opposite—indeed, what appeared to me undue stress—upon the constitution of the Central Board. The Bill returns to this House in that respect precisely in the form in which it was amended by those noble Lords. Noble Lords opposite insisted that that Board should be a small body—a wholly paid body—and that the payment should be sufficient to secure the attendance of the members. On that great question, which was made a testing question, Amendments of this House had been accepted by the Commons. Again, as the Bill was introduced, denominational grants were absolutely prohibited. That feature of the Bill was opposed in this House on behalf of Episcopalians and Presbyterians, and also on behalf of Roman Catholics. I myself was always in favour of a compromise on that point, and the House of Commons have adopted a compromise — they have given up the absolute prohibition of denominational grants, and have consented to grants being made under special circumstances. I say that on these great questions the Amendments made by the House of Commons do not in the slightest degree affect the principle of the Bill, and I say that the Government have a right to call upon the House of Lords at least to consider the Amendments of the House of Commons. I need not go further to show that the Bill as it comes up from the House of Commons is rather in favour of than adverse to the views of noble Lords opposite. Let me take one example. There is no part of this Bill which has been more opposed by the clergy and members of the Established Church, and by those who represent the Established Church, than those clauses which provided for conversion of parish schools. They said—and, I cannot deny, with some reason—"Let us see the effect of the new system on the new ground before you alter the constitution and management of those old schools which have worked so well." As the Bill returns from the House of Commons, it is provided that the parish schools shall remain as they are till Parliament shall have otherwise provided. I say, again, on this great question, which is one of the most important connected with the Bill, the opinion of the House of Commons has been, to an unexpected dgree, in accordance with that of the noble Lords opposite. Under these circumstances, to affirm that the Bill before us is wholly different from that which was sent down to the other House, is a mere excuse for getting rid of the Bill altogether. A noble Lord, who has now left the House, and, I believe, left town, asked me the other day—"What is the great hurry of passing this Bill?" I say there is a great hurry about passing any Bill on education which has arrived at this stage through both Houses of Parliament. We know that the subject has been surrounded with difficulties for many years, and we know that it has been a source of satisfaction to those who are connected with this Bill, and to others, that the question has arrived so near a solution. Next year we shall probably have as full a bill of fare as we have had this year, and it may be complicated by the introduction of the question of education in England and Ireland. I say here, on behalf of Scotland, that we have a right to consideration on our own merits, and with reference to the circumstances of our own country, and we ought not to allow any Bill to be sacrificed in deference to the prejudices of England or the difficulties of Ireland. There is another reason why we ought not to delay the passing of this Bill. The Royal Commission have reported that upwards of 90,000 children are without education in the large towns of Scotland, and we must remember that in every year of unnecessary delay thousands of the young are passing from the hands of those by whom alone they can be redeemed from the ranks of ignorance and vice. I rejoice that Government have determined that they will have no share in the responsibility of another year's delay on this great question. I rejoice that the House of Commons have determined — the Members for Scotland almost with one unanimous voice—that they will have no share in that responsibility, and I adjure your Lordships not to allow it to be said that the House of Lords has taken an obstructive course in regard to legislation on this question.

The Earl of SELKIRK said, that he had given much study to the original Bill, but he now found it so completely altered that it required a new study in order to comprehend the changes which had been made in the other House of Parliament, and he thought it unreasonable that their Lordships should be asked to take this new proposal into consideration at so late a period of the Session.

Lord COLONSAY said, he sympathized with what had just been said by his noble Friend (the Earl of Selkirk). He had not had much experience with regard to the termination of Sessions, otherwise he should perhaps have viewed with some alarm what had taken place with regard to this Bill. During the last ten days the torrent of legislation had been rushing on with almost unprecedented force. The only security they could have for sound legislation—that kind of legislation which the people had a right to expect — was that measures should have deliberate consideration in both Houses of Parliament in their various stages, so that there might be an opportunity of ascertaining that the measure was sound in principle, effective in machinery, and couched in language adapted to the purpose for which it was framed. Now, this measure had not received this sort of consideration. It was brought in on an early day — and he certainly felt indebted to his noble Friend (the Duke of Argyll) for the opportunity which he afforded for its being considered in Scotland before it was proceeded with in this House. He did not agree with him in thinking that this had anything to do with the delay, because the House of Commons had, according to his own showing, been so engaged with a very important measure that it would not possibly have proceeded with this Bill. The Bill, however, was sent down to the other House, where its progress was long deferred; and when it did come back to their Lordships' House it came back so different from its former self, so altered in shape, so changed in countenance, that he ventured to think that those whose names were placed at the back of it could scarcely recognize it as the Bill they sent forth. Their Lordships were now called on at the very last moment to consider these Amendments. The Bill having passed through Committee in the other House pro formâ, it was taken in hand by the Lord Advocate, who applied his acute mind to it, and gave to it what was called in Parliamentary language "a respectful consideration." At least twenty clauses were subjected to that kind of operation to the extent of forty Amendments, and the Bill came out of the furnace a very different Bill from what it was when it went in. The Bill sent down from this House never was, in fact, considered by the other House. It underwent a transforming and obliterating process before it was submitted for consideration. He (Lord Colonsay) did not think that course was at all a usual one; on the contrary, he believed it was almost unprecedented in reference to an important measure, and he hoped their Lordships would bear that in mind in dealing with the question now before them. The altered Bill having come to be considered various important changes were made in it. It was true, as the noble Duke had said, that the question of the Central Board was ultimately retained very much in the form in which it was amended in this House; but there were various other important alterations made in the Bill, both in principle and detail. The parochial schools were left under the management of those who at present manage them; but an option was given to bring them under the new constitution which this Bill was to provide. No doubt there was a want of additional schools in some places, and power was given under this Bill to the Board to select places where schools should be planted, and those schools were to be upheld by a new rate that was to be imposed. Those who had the management of the parochial schools had the option of transferring the schools to the new management, and the Bill provided that in case they did so the persons liable for the cost of the parochial schools should be relieved from that expense, and the schools put upon the rates. But as this Bill was now framed those who were at present liable for the burden of the parochial schools were to retain the burden upon themselves, and the maximum rate that was fixed by this Bill as sufficient to defray the expense of both present parochial schools and the schools to be adopted or newly-created, was retained in the Bill, and power was given to a local committee to assess the whole land of Scotland to the full amount of that maximum rate, while the heritors would be still bound to support the existing parochial schools. That was an important alteration; but that was not all. Those who had the management of the parochial schools under an Act passed upwards of sixty years ago, were no longer to have the management of them, and a new and a very large body was to be infused into the management. And who were to be on the local committee? Why, every proprietor of lands or houses in the parish under £4 a year was to have a voice in the selection of a school committee, which school committee was to have the power of assessment. He thought their Lordships would not consider it satisfactory—certainly those who were interested in the cause of education would not think it satisfactory; and he was satisfied still more that those who outside take an interest in the regularity and propriety of legislation would not consider it satisfactory — that they should now be called upon to deal with a measure of this kind.

EARL GRANVILLE said, it had been stated by the noble and learned Lord (Lord Colonsay) that no explanation had been made to the other House with regard to the character of the Amendments made in the Bill by this House. The noble and learned Lord, however, was misinformed upon that point, for a full statement, lasting half-an-hour, was made to the other House by the right hon. and learned Lord who had charge of the Bill. Then it was said that it was unreasonable to give their Lordships only one night in which to consider these Amendments. But the House would remember that, when they went before into Committee on the Bill, although it was then much changed from its original form, they went through the Bill in one evening — exactly the time which their Lordships would now have for considering the Commons' Amendments.

LORD REDESDALE would remind their Lordships that on the occasion referred to by the noble Earl all the Amendments were printed and in the hands of their Lordships many days before they were considered. They had been told by the noble Duke (the Duke of Argyll) that it would be an ungracious thing for their Lordships having sent a Bill down to the Commons, to refuse to consider the Amendments made by the Commons when the Bill was returned to their Lordships. But it was small encouragement to their Lordships to originate measures if, because those measures had been altered in this House, contrary to the views of the Government who commanded a majority in the other House, the Government were entirely to alter the Bill in the other House and only return it to this House when the attendance was so thin that it was impossible to secure a proper consideration of Amendments. Such a course would be practically making this House merely the obedient servant of the Government of the day in dealing with measures of this kind.

On Question, That ("To-morrow") stand part of the Motion?—Their Lordships divided:—Contents 43; Not-Contents 55: Majority 12.

CONTENTS.

Hatherley, L. (L. Chancellor.)

Cleveland, D.
Saint Albans, D.

Ailesbury, M.
Lansdowne, M.
Normanby, M.

Camperdown, E.
Clarendon, E.
De Grey, E.
Essex, E.
Granville, E.
Kimberley, E.
Morley, E.

Falmouth, V.
Leinster, V. (D. Leinster.)
Sydney, V.

Audley, L.
Boyle, L. (E. Cork and Orrery.)
Camoys, L.
Carrington, L.
Chesham, L.
Churchill, L.
Clandeboye, L. (L. Dufferin and Claneboye.)
Crewe, L.
De Tabley, L.
Ebury, L.
Foley, L. [Teller.]
Keane, L.
Leigh, L.
Lurgan, L.
Methuen, L.
Monck, L. (V. Monck.)
Northbrook, L.
Ponsonby, L. (E. Bessborough.) [Teller.]
Saye and Sele, L.
Seaton, L.
Stanley of Alderley, L.
Stratheden, L.
Sudeley, L.
Suffield, L.
Sundridge, L. (D. Argyll.)
Truro, L.
Wentworth, L.

NOT-CONTENTS.

Beaufort, D.
Manchester, D.
Norfolk, D.
Northumberland, D.

Abercorn, M. (D. Abercorn.)
Bristol, M.
Exeter, M.

Amherst, E.
Beauchamp, E.
Denbigh, E.
Gainsborough, E.
Kellie, E.
Leven and Melville, E.
Lucan, E.
Mansfield, E.
Mount Edgcumbe, E.
Romney, E.
Rosslyn, E.
Selkirk, E.
Stradbroke, E.
Tankerville, E.
Westmorland, E.
Winchilsea and Nottingham, E.

De Vesci, V.
Hawarden, V.
Hood, V.
Melville, V.

Rochester, Bp.

Abinger, L. [Teller.]
Bagot, L.
Blantyre, L.
Churston, L.
Colchester, L.
Colonsay, L.
Denman, L.
Digby, L.
Fitzwalter, L.
Foxford, L. (E. Limerick.)
Gage, L. (V. Gage.)
Hartismere, L. (L. Henniker.)
Heytesbury, L.
Hylton, L.
O'Neill, L.
Ormathwaite, L.
Penrhyn, L.
Redesdale, L. [Teller.]
Rivers, L.
Saltersford, L. (E. Courtown.)
Saltoun, L.
Sheffield, L. (E. Sheffield.)
Silchester, L. (E. Longford.)
Southampton, L.
Stewart of Garlies, L. (E. Galloway.)
Tredegar, L.
Wynford, L.

Resolved in the Negative, and Amendments to be considered this day three months.

THE CANNING STATUE.—QUESTION.

LORD STRATHEDEN asked, Whether the Government had come to any determination with regard to restoring the statue of Canning to its original place?

EARL GRANVILLE said, the Government had come to no positive determination, and he regretted that no member of the Canning family was present to state his wishes in the matter. For his own part, he had been brought up with the greatest admiration for Mr. Canning, both as a statesman and a man. He was a personal friend of his (Earl Granville's) father, and for his son, as the House was aware, he entertained the greatest regard. His own opinion was, though he should be sorry to act upon it contrary to the wishes of any member of the Canning family—that the present site was not a disadvantageous one for a public testimonial of the admiration felt for Mr. Canning's memory, and he saw in it some advantages which the former site did not possess.

House adjourned at Seven o'clock,
'till To-morrow, three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, 9th August, 1869.

MINUTES.]—NEW WRIT ISSUED—For Caithnessshire, v. George Traill, esquire, Manor of Northstead.

PUBLIC BILLS—Resolution in Committee—Ordered—First Reading—Merchant Shipping and Navigation [267].

Ordered — First Reading — Compulsory Church Rates Abolition (Scotland) * [266].

Committee — Report — Parochial Schools (Scotland) [265].

Considered as amended—Third Reading—Charity Commissioners * [239]; Parochial Schools (Scotland) [265], and passed.

Withdrawn—Queen Anne's Bounty (Superannuation Allowances) * [243]; Steam Boilers Inspection * [64].

The House met at Three of the clock.

PARLIAMENT—PRIVATE BILLS—STANDING ORDERS.

MR. DODSON said, he had to ask the House to adopt two new Standing Orders in relation to Private Business. The first of these was simply an Order substituted for the 35th section of the Act of last Session for the regulation of railways. It was found inconvenient to have the rules embodied in that clause stereotyped in an Act of Parliament, which could not, like Standing Orders, be dispensed with in any peculiar case; and, therefore, with the concurrence of the noble Chairman of Committees in the other House, an Act had been passed this Session which repealed the 35th section of the Act of last year, on the understanding that, when the Private Bills of this Session had been disposed of, a Standing Order should be proposed to the same effect as the repealed clause. It related to the meetings of incorporated railway companies, and the approval by such meetings of Bills and certificates for conferring additional powers on those companies; and the new Standing Order was substantially the same as the clause, with this modification—that the Standing Order required that a statement of the number of the votes should be deposited at the Private Bill Office, instead of being laid before Parliament or the Board of Trade.

Ordered, That every Bill originating in this House and conferring additional powers on the Promoters thereof, being a Company already constituted by Act of Parliament, shall after the first reading thereof be referred to the Examiners, who shall report as to compliance or non-compliance with the following Order:—

The Bill, subsequently to the deposit of the Petition for the same, shall be submitted to the Proprietors of such Company at a meeting held specially for that purpose.

Such meeting shall be called by advertisement inserted once in each of two consecutive weeks in a morning newspaper published in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin, as the case may be, and in a newspaper of the county or counties in which the principal office or offices of the Company is or are situate; and also by a circular addressed to each proprietor at his last known or usual address, and sent by post, or delivered at such address, not less than ten days before the holding of such meeting, enclosing a blank form of proxy, with proper instructions for the use of the same; and the same form of proxy and the same instructions, and none other, shall be sent to every such proprietor, and shall be addressed to each proprietor on the back of the form of proxy; but no such form of proxy shall be stamped before it is sent out, nor shall the funds of the Company be used for the stamping any proxies, nor shall intimation be sent as to any person in whose favour the proxy may be granted, and no other circular or form of proxy relating to such meeting shall be sent to any proprietor from the office of the Company, or by any director or officer of the Company so describing himself.

Such meeting shall be held not earlier than the seventh day after the last insertion of such advertisement, and may be held on the same day as an ordinary general meeting of the Company.

At such meeting the said Bill shall be submitted to the proprietors aforesaid then present, and approved of by proprietors, present in person or by proxy, holding at least three-fourths of the paid-up capital of the Company represented at such meeting, such proprietors being qualified to vote at all ordinary meetings of the Company in right of such capital. The votes of proprietors of any paid-up shares or stock other than debenture stock, not qualified to vote at ordinary meetings, whose interests may be affected by the Bill, if tendered at the meeting shall be recorded separately.

There shall be deposited at the Private Bill Office a statement of the number of votes if a poll was taken, and of the number of votes recorded separately.

Ordered, That the said Order be a Standing Order of this House [to follow Standing Order 70].

Standing Order 70 was read, and repealed.

Ordered, That in the case of every Bill brought from the House of Lords in which provisions shall have been inserted in that House, empowering the promoters thereof being a Company already constituted by Act of Parliament to execute, undertake, or contribute towards any work other than that for which it was originally established, or to sell or lease their undertaking, or any part thereof, or to amalgamate the same, or any part thereof, with any other undertaking, or to abandon their undertaking, or any part thereof, or to dissolve the said Company, or in which any such provisions originally contained in the Bill shall have been materially altered in that House, or by which any such powers are conferred on any Company not being the Promoters of the Bill, the Examiner shall report as to compliance or non-compliance with the following Order:—

The Bill, as introduced or proposed to be introduced into this House, shall be submitted to the proprietors of such promoting Company and of any other Company on which such powers are so conferred, at a meeting held specially for that purpose.

Such meeting shall be called by advertisement inserted once in each of two consecutive weeks in a morning newspaper published in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin, as the case may be, and in a newspaper of the county or counties in which the principal office or offices of the Company is or are situate; and also by a circular addressed to each proprietor at his last known or usual address, and sent by post, or delivered at such address, not less than ten days before the holding of such meeting, enclosing a blank form of proxy, with proper instructions for the use of the same; and the same form of proxy and the same instructions, and none other, shall be sent to every such proprietor, and shall be addressed to each proprietor on the back of the form of proxy; but no such form of proxy shall be stamped before it is sent out, nor shall the funds of the Company be used for the stamping any proxies, nor shall intimation be sent as to any person in whose favour the proxy may be granted, and no other circular or form of proxy relating to such meeting shall be sent to any proprietor from the office of the Company, or by any director or officer of the Company so describing himself.

Such meeting shall be held not earlier than the seventh day after the last insertion of such advertisement, and may be held on the same day as an ordinary general meeting of the Company.

At such meeting the said Bill shall be submitted to the proprietors aforesaid then present, and approved of by proprietors, present in person or by proxy, holding at least three-fourths of the paid-up capital of the Company represented at such meeting, such proprietors being qualified to vote at all ordinary meetings of the Company in right of such capital. The votes of proprietors of any paid-up shares or stock other than debenture stock, not qualified to vote at ordinary meetings, whose interests may be affected by the Bill, if tendered at the meeting shall be recorded separately.

There shall be deposited at the Private Bill Office a statement of the number of votes if a poll was taken, and of the number of votes recorded separately.

Ordered, That the said Order be a Standing Order of this House [in place of Standing Order 70, repealed].

Standing Order 77 was read and amended, by leaving out in line 4, the word "or," and inserting after "71," the words "or 72."

Ordered, That the said Orders be Standing Orders of this House.—(Mr. Dodson.)

APPOINTMENT OF REVISING BARRISTERS.—QUESTION.

COLONEL FRENCH said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If there is any foundation for the statement which appeared in the "Morning Star" newspaper on Wednesday the 4th of August last, that the Lord Chief Baron called a meeting of the Revising Barristers for the Home Circuit at Lewes, and informed them that the Judges had agreed that the appointment to their offices should be considered temporary, and that in future a preference should always be shown to the sons and relatives of Judges in selecting individuals for these offices? If this were true it was the extension to England of a practice long pursued in Ireland.

MR. BRUCE: Sir, I am satisfied that my hon. and gallant Friend, in putting this Question, did not believe the statement to be true, and did not think the circumstances alleged in it were in the remotest degree probable; but he wished to give to me, or rather to the learned Judge, an opportunity of denying a statement which tends to reflect discredit on him and upon the whole Bench. The best answer I can give to the question is to read a letter I received from the Lord Chief Baron this morning. It is as follows—

"The statement in a newspaper to which Colonel French's Notice refers must be founded upon some unaccountable mistake, or is a mere fiction. I never informed the Revising Barristers for the Home Circuit, or anybody else, 'that the Judges had agreed that the appointment to their offices should be considered temporary, and that in future a preference should always be shown to the sons and relatives of Judges;' nor have the Judges ever so agreed. These appointments are, as you are aware, made under an Act of Parliament, and the Judges have no power to make them permanent or temporary at their pleasure, or otherwise than merely for the revision next ensuing the date of the appointment. I lately called together at Lewes the gentlemen whom I intended to appoint, in order that they might assist me in arranging the districts in which they were respectively to act, and inform me of the addition to their number which they thought would be required. I have since appointed them according to the statute, ten in number, and for the approaching revision only. One of them is the son of a Judge, another the grandson of a former Lord Chancellor, and the remaining eight are the Revising Barristers of last year, whom I simply re-appointed, and who are, as far as I know, unconnected with the Bench. All are unquestionably competent, and I believe among the ablest and the best who could have been selected. This is all the information I am able to give in relation to the Colonel's question."

NAVY—CORRUPTION IN THE ADMIRALTY DEPARTMENTS.—QUESTION.

LORD ELCHO said, in the absence of his hon. Friend (Mr. W. H. Smith) and at his request, he would beg leave to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty, If any further steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to punish the officers of the Admiralty departments who are officially accused of having been engaged in an extensive system of corruption both at Somerset House and at the Dockyards, with a view to the complete exoneration of those gentlemen upon whom no such imputation rests; if any representations have been made by the officers at Somerset House to the Admiralty on the subject; and, if there will be any objection to lay the Correspondence upon the Table of the House?

MR. CHILDERS: In reply, Sir, to my noble Friend I have to state that the words of his Question do not accurately represent what was said in this House by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Admiralty. My hon. Friend stated that there had been corruption both at Somerset House and at the dockyards in connection with certain contracts, as there had notoriously been in public companies; that he hoped the country would set its face against these transactions; and that it had been his and his Colleagues' endeavour to detect and punish these practices. But my hon. Friend did not either name or point at individuals whom it was possible to prosecute, and so exonerate others. Answering, then, the second Question first, I may say that a letter was addressed to the Admiralty by some of the clerks in Somerset House on this subject. It was in our power to decline to account outside the House of Commons, and especially to subordinates, for words spoken in Parliament; but we thought that, under the circumstances, it was better to make an exception to the rule, and a reply was given to these gentlemen very much to the effect of the answer which I shall presently make to the first Question, and I believe that it has been satisfactory to them. But, as the words complained of were spoken in Parliament, and as I am giving the explanation in the same place, I think it would be inexpedient to publish the letters. I beg, then, to say, in reply to the first Question, that my hon. Friend and his Colleagues would much regret that anything said by him should be misunderstood, and especially that he should be thought by the House to cast unmerited reflection on any officers of the Department whose honour I—and I am sure he—feel it my duty to protect. But there is no doubt that corruption did for some time exist in connection with naval stores; and the papers found on Mr. Rumbold and Mr. Gambier, and information received before and since, leave it beyond a doubt that the particular offence for which they were punished was not an isolated one. I would further say that it must be evident to everyone that these matters are not easy to detect, as both the giver and the receiver are, or imagine themselves, interested in complete secresy, and there is usually no one else privy to the transaction. But I have no hesitation in adding that the great body of the service, and of the branches especially referred to, even while these transactions were going on, was entirely free from the slightest taint of dishonesty, and that should occasion arise for their assistance in detecting and punishing any case which we may hereafter be able to follow up we should unhesitatingly appeal to them for it. Beyond that I decline to give any promise, and I hope that the House will give us credit for determination to do what is, in our opinion, for the public benefit in this matter, and will trust us as to the best means of carrying out this end.

INDIA—TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION.—QUESTION.

MR. CRAWFORD said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for India, Whether, having regard to the probability of the early establishment of independent direct telegraphic communication between this country and India, by the way of Gibraltar, Malta, Suez, and Aden, it may not be desirable to use for other purposes than the extension of the Persian Gulf line the Submarine Cable now on its way to Bombay in the ships "Calcutta" and "Tweed"; and, if he will state the length of the Cable in question, its cost, and the expense of its transport, all charges for freight, demurrage, or otherwise included?

MR. GRANT DUFF: With reference to my hon. Friend's first Question, I have to say that we do not intend to make any change in the destination of the cable to which he alludes. With reference to his second Question, I have to say that the length of the cable is 520 miles. Its original cost, delivered on board, was £87,067. The insurance of the cable in dock, and fittings for the Calcutta and Tweed, will cost, it is believed, about £6,000 more. The hire of the two ships to Bombay, including demurrage and all other charges so far as they are at present known, will amount to about £33,000, and there are further undecided claims. Nearly £8,000 out of this £33,000 is the estimated cost for repairing the damage done by the accident to the Calcutta, which, as my hon. Friend knows, was all but lost in the Channel, with a large part of the cable on board. After arrival at Bombay the Calcutta and Tweed will cost respectively 15*s*. and 20*s*. per ton per month during the operation of laying the cable.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) BILL—CONVEYANCE OF CATTLE.

QUESTION.

MR. C. S. PARKER said, in the absence of his hon. Friend (Sir Robert Anstruther), he would beg to ask the Vice President of the Council, Whether he can inform the House what steps the Government intend to take in the exercise of the powers entrusted to the Privy Council by the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Bill for the protection of animals carried by railway or in steamers from unnecessary suffering?

MR. W. E. FORSTER: Sir, the powers entrusted to us by Parliament by the Bill now speedily to become law, for the protection of animals carried by railway and in steamers from unnecessary suffering, shall have the best attention of Earl De Grey and myself, and it is a matter which each of us has much at heart. However, on considering the question, we found it would be impossible to use those powers without obtaining full information with regard to the present conditions of both railway and steamboat traffic as far as regards the carriage of animals. It was necessary to find out what was the present state of things before we could make up our minds as to the alterations to be made. Earl De Grey and myself have, therefore, appointed a Committee, consisting of gentlemen in our own Department, with a gentleman from the Board of Trade and another from the Customs, to look into the matter and make as early a Report as the nature of the inquiry will admit of. In the meantime we have seen the managers of the principal railways, and it is only justice to them to state that they have expressed great willingness to meet us in this matter. We are addressing to them a letter asking them to inform us, by an early date, at what stations they already supply water, and at what other stations they will by that time have made arrangements to supply it. When we have thus ascertained what the railways will do of themselves, it will be more easy for us to consider the serious question in what way we shall use our powers in relation to railways and steamboats.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) BILL—SLAUGHTER OF CATTLE.

QUESTION.

MR. C. S. PARKER said, he wished to ask the Vice President of the Council, Whether he can inform the House what steps the Government intend to take in the exercise of the powers entrusted to the Privy Council by the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Bill for the slaughter of fat cattle coming from infected countries at the ports of entry?

MR. W. E. FORSTER said, in reply, that if the Bill to which he had just alluded became law, foreign animals coming from an infected country would be required, as now, to be killed at the port of entry. On Tuesday, or as soon as possible after the passing of the Act, a Council would be held to determine what countries were to be considered infected; and it would not be becoming in him to anticipate the Order to be issued; but they were exceedingly anxious to frame the Order in a way that should be satisfactory. If they were to lean on either side, they must lean on the side of care and caution to prevent the introduction of diseases. He would take that opportunity of correcting a mistake he had unfortunately made in reply to a Question of the hon Member for West Essex (Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson), in which he had said that foot and mouth disease was prevalent in Ireland as well as England. He found that this was a mistake into which he had fallen from having been led to suppose that information respecting pleuro-pneumonia, which he regretted to be compelled to believe existed in Ireland, applied to foot and mouth disease. With regard to foot and mouth disease, he wished to state the course the Government intended to take to meet present circumstances. With regard to cattle coming in from suspected countries, they would, whether affected with foot and mouth disease or not, be killed at the port of entry, after the issue of the Order in Council he alluded to, as at present; but with regard to cattle coming in from countries not suspected, directions would be given to the Customs' officers for the present to take care that should there be in a cargo of such cattle any cattle affected with foot and mouth disease, not only those animals should be slaughtered, but the cattle which had come with them should be put under the same conditions of slaughter as if they had come from suspected countries.

THE COLNE FISHERY.—QUESTION.

DR. BREWER said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If during the Recess he will take into his consideration the subject-matter of two Petitions presented to this House from the Freemen Burgesses of Colchester, praying for such effective restoration of their rights and privileges to the Colne Fishery, and certain corporate estates known as "The Severalls and Chantry," as were vested in them by ancient customs and Royal Charters?

MR. BRUCE said, in reply, that he had not had time to consider the Petitions sufficiently to enable him to give the slightest indication of the course the Government might feel it advisable to to take in the matter.

ARMY—WIMBLEDON REVIEW.

QUESTION.

In answer to Lord ELCHO,

CAPTAIN VIVIAN promised to lay on table a Letter of His Royal Highness Commanding-in-Chief respecting the recent Wimbledon Review.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

[BILL 265.] [Lords.] THIRD READING.

Order for Third Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read the third time."

LORD ELCHO moved the Amendment of which he had given notice—namely, that the Bill be re-committed for the purpose of leaving out, in schedule A, the words "beyond the minimum sum fixed by the Parochial and Burgh Schoolmasters (Scotland) Act (1861)." Before making any remarks on the Motion, he wished to congratulate the Lord Advocate on being so near the goal of his long labours in the cause of education, and on the prospect of a Bill for the improvement of education in Scotland becoming law during the present Session. The Bill was by no means a perfect Bill, and there was probably scarcely a Member in the House who was thoroughly satisfied with its provisions. It excluded the parochial schools entirely from its operation. It made no provision for religious teaching; and yet, by the enactment of a Conscience Clause, it implied the existence of religious teaching. Still, on the whole, he thought it was desirable that the Bill should pass. The opposition to it in this House had originated mainly on two grounds. In the first place, he regarded the incidence of taxation proposed in the Bill as unjust; and, in the second place, he entirely disapproved of the manner in which Government had attempted to force the Bill through the House. He still adhered to the opinions which he had expressed on these points, and he ventured to say that no Government, however strong, and no matter how many "thick and thin" supporters they had at their back, would again attempt to force a measure of this kind through the House in the same way. He wished to call the attention of the Lord Advocate to the provisions in the Bill relative to the change in the heritors, with whom the management of the parochial schools rested. Under this Bill, the management, instead of being confined to the heritors who were valued at £100 Scots, would be given to all who were rated in the old Scots valuation, and would include, he believed, even feuars—although he was aware that his right hon. Friend would not admit that. The effect of the alteration would be very absurd in many cases. In Haddington the amount paid by the present eleven heritors would be reduced by the vast sum of 8*s.* Some of the new heritors would pay 2½*d.* each, yet these would have an equal share in the management. In Lismahago, heritors who paid 1*d.* each would have the same power as the Duke of Hamilton. This was really carrying the principle of taxation and representation to an absurd point. He had now come to the Amendment, the effect of which he would explain. Hitherto the £35, which was the minimum statutory salary of a parochial schoolmaster, had not been considered as entitling the parish heritors to any portion of the Privy Council grant. The 5th clause in the Bill, however, laid down the principle that all assessments raised in support of the new national schools should be treated as a voluntary contribution in allocating the Privy Council grant; and he therefore saw no reason why the £35 minimum salary to the parochial schoolmaster should be excepted. When he submitted this proposal in Committee, everybody spoke in favour of it but the Gentlemen on the Treasury Bench. He hoped that the Government would consent to allow this Amendment on the Bill before it finally passed.

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the words "Bill be" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "re-committed to a Committee of the whole House, in respect of an Amendment to Schedule (A),"—(Lord Elcho,)

—instead thereof.

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

The LORD ADVOCATE, in the first place, begged to thank his noble Friend for the manner in which he had spoken of the Bill, and for the observations which he had made in its favour. It was a great gratification to him, if he might be allowed to speak of himself, that after a great many years of labour and a great many years of difficulty they should at last have arrived close to the goal. Whether they were destined to reach it would be decided in a few hours; but he hoped they might entertain the hope that, whatever may be the materials of which this Bill was composed, it would in one shape or other be sufficiently solid and substantial to form a fabric for erecting again the fabric of Scottish education, and preserving for many generations the traditional reputation of Scotland. He wished, however, to take the opportunity of correcting a misunderstanding which had occurred in reference to what he said on a former occasion. He was represented to have said that even in Scotland the provisions of this Bill were not understood. He had never said so—he never meant to say so. What he did say was, that it would be very difficult to convey to the people of Scotland the proposals and the recommendations of the Government in reference to a measure which had been so completely altered in "another place;" and what he meant to say was, that if the Bill had not been reprinted, it never would have been possible for the people to have understood what the proposals of the Government were. In illustration of that, he had said he found that, notwithstanding their having re-printed the Bill, there were in some quarters still difficulty in knowing what their proposals were. Everybody knew that had the Amendments of the Government only been placed on the Paper, and the Bill had not been reprinted, it would have been impossible for many of the people in Scotland to have become acquainted with the views of the Government. In regard to the proposition which his noble Friend (Lord Elcho) had made, that the heritors' contribution of the minimum salary should stand in the Privy Council administration as a voluntary contribution—that matter had been considered by the Government, and he was glad to consider that that obstacle might be removed out of the way. Having considered the matter, the Government thought that the whole of the heritors' contributions should be reckoned in the sum which was to be received from the Privy Council. With that observation he could only trust that they might cherish the expectation that before many hours were past this Bill would become law.

Dr. BREWER wished to ask what amount of additional expense to the Consolidated Fund this concession to the heritors would occasion? He looked upon the question as affecting England as well as Scotland; and it was quite clear that before the question was done with the country would certainly have reason to complain of the enormous expense to which it would be put. No doubt education was a necessity; but the public were becoming rather tired of the great increase of local and imperial taxation.

Mr. ANDERSON wished to call attention to one or two inconsistencies which appeared to remain in the Bill—probably in consequence of the great haste with which the Government alterations had been made, and, in particular, of the large change in throwing the parochial schools out of the Bill. In Clause 23, for the maintenance and repair of the national schools, notwithstanding that the parochial schools were entirely thrown out of the Bill, the Board seemed still to retain the power of altering school houses, and the right of recovering from the heritors of the parish the expense of doing so. That appeared to him to be inconsistent with the fact of the parochial schools being out of the Bill. By Clause 37 the Board had also the power to dismiss parochial schoolmasters, not only for faults, but even for incapacity from old age. He did not mean to find fault with that power, because he thought it was a good power; but he wished to call attention to the inconsistency of not providing a retiring allowance for schoolmasters so dealt with. As the Bill at present stood, the school committee were absolutely prohibited from giving a retiring allowance, except in the case of national schools; and, if the parochial schoolmaster was dismissed from mere old age, there was no one to confer upon him a retiring allowance. He had not made these remarks with the view of impeding the progress of the Bill. He desired it to pass; because, although it was not a large and comprehensive measure, it was a very good Bill as far as it went. But he wished to point out the necessity of not considering this the final measure, but that it was a measure to which they must look forward to considerably extending in some future Session.

The LORD ADVOCATE said, that in order to cure some of the defects referred to, he would propose that the Bill should be re-committed, in order that certain Amendments might be inserted in Clauses 13, 16, 21, 23, 28, and 65, and the Schedule.

Amendment and Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

Moved, That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. J. LOWTHER said, before the Bill was re-committed he wished to say a few words. The Lord Advocate had taken exception to some words which were used the other day on that side of the House. The hon. and learned Lord was under the impression that the words used were "that Scotch education might wait, but that the House of Lords could not wait." But this was a misapprehension. Without venturing to express any opinion on the course that might be adopted by the other House, he would say that there was one thing which he thought the Government would find could not and would not wait, and that was the resolute determination of the rate-payers of this country no longer to submit to that grinding burden of local taxation which never seemed to decrease. The right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer had the other day commended to the hon. Members during the Recess the consideration of the subject of coinage. He (Mr. Lowther) would venture to suggest for the consideration of those who wished during the Recess to consider matters which would have to be brought before Parliament, the amount of opposition which would be offered to any scheme of education which would be likely to involve any addition to the present local burdens.

Mr. BRUCE accepted the statement of the hon. Gentleman as notice that he would oppose any English Education Bill founded upon rating. He was hardly justified, however, in attacking the present Bill, for among all the representations from Scotland which had reached hon. Members on the subject, there were not any which had reference to the extension of rating.

Mr. J. LOWTHER said, the right hon. Gentleman had misunderstood him. He did not say he would oppose any Bill founded on rating; but he warned the Government that any addition to local burdens, until some adjustment had been made of local taxation, would meet with the most determined opposition.

Lord ELCHO expressed a hope that the Government would bear in mind, when they came to consider the question the incidence of taxation, that this was not a rich man's question, but much more a poor man's question.

Motion agreed to.

Order for Third Reading discharged.

Bill re-committed in respect of Clauses 13, 16, 21, 23, 28, 65, and the Schedule."—(The Lord Advocate.)

Considered in Committee, and reported, with Amendments; as amended, considered.

Moved, That the Bill be now read a third time.

Mr. BRUCE expressed his regret that he was not able to fulfil the undertaking he had entered into on Saturday to mention to the House the names of the members of the new Board. He was unable to do so for this reason—It would be easily understood that the matter was one of very great difficulty and considerable complexity, and the number being so limited it was necessary to take into consideration many circumstances, and a variety of interests which were involved. The Government had the matter under consideration for some time, but they had considerable doubt as to the manner in which the Board should be framed. It was found impossible to name the Commissioners to the House, there not having been sufficient time to select them and submit their names to Her Majesty. He was glad, however, for the satisfaction of the House, to state that in appointing the Secretary to the Board the Government had determined on appointing a layman.

Motion agreed to.

Bill read the third time and passed, with Amendments.

MERCHANT SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION BILL.

LEAVE. FIRST READING.

Acts read; considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. SHAW LEFEVRE, in rising to move that the Chairman be directed to move the House, that leave be given to bring in a Bill to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to Merchant Shipping and Navigation, said, that on an early day in the present Session his right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave a pledge that before the close of it he would lay on the table of the House the long promised Merchant Shipping Bill. When the present Government came into Office they found that very little advance had been made with it; in the interval incessant work had been applied to it at the Board of Trade, and the result was that they were now able to redeem that pledge, and the Bill, the size of which, he feared, would alarm many Members, would shortly be in circulation. At the same time his right hon. Friend had thought that it would not be right to the great interests concerned that they should present such a Bill to the House without some explanation of the changes proposed in it; it would be waste of labour for anyone without some guide to travel through the 800 clauses of the Bill, and, by comparison with the existing law, to ascertain those changes; he had, therefore, permitted him (Mr. Shaw Lefevre) to make a statement with reference to them, which he promised should be as short as possible. Before doing so, however, he should wish to say a few words upon the present condition of our merchant shipping compared with what it was when last this great subject was before the House in 1854. In 1854 the registered tonnage of this country and her possessions was 5,155,000. It was now 7,232,000 tons, of which 5,700,000 belonged to the United Kingdom, showing an increase of 41 per cent. The real increase, however, had been even greater, for in 1854 the Register was in a very bad state, and was encumbered by a very large number of vessels which did not exist; great pains had since been taken to clear that Register of these non-existing vessels, and it now represented within a few thousand tons the actual number and tonnage of vessels. Another return of the vessels belonging to and actually employed in the United Kingdom showed the increase since 1854 to be over 50 per cent. He believed, therefore, he might take the increase of British shipping at 50 per cent. His right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade took occasion recently to state in public that he believed that at the present time the sea-going shipping under the British flag was equal, if not superior, to that of all the rest of the world. Exception was taken to this statement in the papers, but he believed it to have been substantially correct. The aggregate tonnage of all other countries as given in their most recent returns was 9,794,000 tons; but from this very great reductions had to be made in order to compare it with our own. The United States return included her river and lake tonnage, amounting to considerably over 2,000,000 tons. The registers of most of the Continental States included many thousands of fishing boats and small craft of all kinds down to canal boats. Making these and other deductions which seemed proper for the purpose of comparing with our own figures, he could not take the aggregate of sea-going foreign tonnage to be more than 7,150,000, against 7,230,000 of this country and her possessions. When they looked at the materials of which it was composed the difference was still greater. He did not hesitate to affirm that the tonnage of our sea-going steamers was more than double that of all other countries put together. These proportions were more favourable to us than at any previous period. While our tonnage had increased 50 per cent in the last fourteen years, the tonnage of France had remained nearly stationary, and had actually diminished the last ten years by 3 per cent. Dutch tonnage had decreased 13 per cent. The sea-going vessels of the United States had diminished 50 per cent in the last ten years. Much of this last was, doubtless, due to the destruction of their commerce during their great war; but it was also due in great part to the commercial policy since the war. A very large number of vessels were during the war transferred under simulated papers to our flag; but at the close of the war Congress passed an Act prohibiting the re-registration of these vessels as American, on the ground that having fled the flag during the time of danger, they were not entitled to share in its advantages in time of peace. They had also adopted a tariff which had almost put an end to their shipbuilding trade. He would take again the shipbuilding trade as a test of progress. The tonnage built in this country had increased from 196,000 tons in 1854 to 379,000 tons in 1868, a year of much depression, as compared with two or three previous years. During the same period the tonnage built in France had diminished from 94,000 tons to 81,000 tons; in Holland from 55,000 to 25,000. In the United States the building of sea-going vessels had almost been extinguished. In Norway alone was there any increase —namely, from 29,000 to 43,000. One further illustration he might give. In 1854, of an aggregate of 18,669,000 tons entering and clearing our ports for foreign trade, 10,744,000 tons were British, 7,924,000 under foreign flags—a proportion of 57 per cent British to 43 per cent foreign. In 1868, out of 33,680,000 tons, 22,660,000 were British, and 11,020,000 foreign, showing an increase of 120 per cent for British against 37 per cent foreign, the new proportion being 67 per cent British to 33 per cent foreign. Having described the progress of shipping, he must say a few words of their crews. While the tonnage of the United Kingdom had increased 50 per cent, the number of seamen had increased since 1854 from 162,400 to 197,500, or 21 per cent. Of these 8 per cent were foreigners in 1854, and 12 per cent in 1868, showing an increased proportion of foreigners, although by no means an alarming one. The proportion of men to tonnage in our coasting trade had remained about the same; but in our sailing vessels employed in the foreign trade the proportion of men had fallen from 3·97 per 100 tons in 1854 to 2·90 in 1868, and for steamers from 7·69 to 5 men per 100 tons. Taking the whole force of merchant vessels there had been a reduction of one man for every 100 tons. In other words, if the same number of men were now required to man these vessels as in 1854 we should want 55,000 more sailors. This reduction had been due, in some respects, to the increased average size of our vessels; but it was also due to greater economy of all kinds in working them, to the use of machinery, and to the adoption of double topsails, patent block, steam windlass, and other means of economizing labour in our sailing vessels. As an illustration of this economy, he had been able to procure the actual number of men employed on twenty-two large sailing vessels at three different periods. In 1849, the crews of these vessels numbered 463, of whom 227 were able seamen. In 1859, their crews were 417, of whom 188 were able seamen; and, in 1869, the crews of the same vessels, making very much the same voyages, were 348, of whom 153 were able seamen; showing a reduction of 25 per cent since 1849. Had this economy of labour tended to increased risk? He found it difficult to answer the question. Accurate information on the relative proportion of casualties was not to be had; till lately the wreck returns were badly kept. From the information, however, he had received from Lloyds, he believed it was safe to say that there had been a reduction in the premiums for insurance on the principal voyages of vessels engaged in the long sea trade; but it was also stated that much of this reduction was due to increased competition among underwriters. It would, however, be satisfactory if the ratio of losses remained the same; because that would shew that the economy effected in the number of the crew had not increased risks, and had not, therefore, been effected without reason. He had quoted these figures in no spirit of boasting, but with the view of showing how vast were the interests affected by the Bill he proposed. They showed how idle were the fears of those who dreaded the repeal of the Navigation Laws, and they were also, on the whole, testimony to the general well working of modern legislation affecting shipping. That legislation might be said to have commenced in 1850, when the late Lord Taunton, then Mr. Labouchere, first provided for the examination of masters and mates of foreign-going vessels, established shipping offices for the protection of seamen, and provided for inquiries into wrecks. The next great change was in 1853-4, when his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for War, then at the Board of Trade, placed the Trinity House under the control of the Board of Trade, and threw open our coasting trade to foreign vessels, and, lastly, consolidated all previous legislation in the great Act of 1854, which had since been the groundwork of our shipping laws. In the course of this he provided for a complete revision of the ship registry, for a new system of measuring tonnage, and for a limitation of the liability of owners in cases of collision. Since that time not a year had passed without additions or amendments to that Act. In 1856 seamen's savings-banks and money orders were established. In 1862 Mr. Milner Gibson extended examinations to engineers, laid down rules as to lights, and provided summary proceedings in salvage cases. In 1864, the Anchors and Chain Cables Act was passed. In 1868, Admiralty jurisdiction was given to County Courts, and this year an important Act was passed with reference to colonial merchant shipping. In the same time shipping had been relieved from a variety of local charges, passing dues and charitable charges; exemptions in favour of particular vessels and differential dues against foreign vessels had been disposed of. He had mentioned but a few of the changes, but, in fact, seventeen or eighteen Acts had been passed since 1854 regulating the business of shipowners, and interlacing one with the other in such a manner that on a subject in which, above all others, it was important there should be clearness and certainty, so that he who sailed might read, there was so much complexity and uncertainty that only experts could say what was the law. Consolidation, in fact, was almost as much needed now as it was in 1854, and although there was not so much field for improvement, there was still much to be done in detail. It was proposed, then, in the Bill which he should ask leave to introduce, to consolidate all these Acts, and include one great branch which was omitted in 1854 — namely, the Acts relating to harbours and the protection of navigation, the working of which had since been placed under the Board of Trade, and to take this opportunity of introducing a number of Amendments which the experience of the last few years had shown to be desirable. In doing this they had the advantage of the aid of Mr. Farrer, the Permanent Secretary of the Board of Trade, who assisted in the preparation of the Act of 1854, and all subsequent Acts, and who had been concerned in their good administration. In describing the proposed changes, he thought it would be most convenient to the House that he should advert to them in the order in which they appeared in the Bill. He should be able to do little more than indicate them, without going at length into the reasons which had induced them to adopt them. The first item related to the registry and measurement of ships. It was proposed in future to make more stringent rules against the change of the name of a ship. A clause in the Act of 1854 was aimed at this, but as it only affected British ships, and did not prevent the registration of foreign ships under any name coming into the hands of British owners, advantage was taken of this and vessels had not unfrequently been sold under simulated bills of sale to foreigners, and resold for registration under new names, and thus vessels had been able to get rid of a character and underwriters and the public had been taken in. This would be prohibited in the future. It was also proposed to give greater facilities for the registration of ships in foreign ports. A fine would be substituted for confiscation in the case of vessels improperly sailing under the British flag. With respect to the measurement of tonnage, on which the important question of port dues and other charges depended, there was no intention to alter the system under which the gross tonnage of vessels was ascertained by measuring their actual cubical contents. It had given great satisfaction, and had been adopted by nearly all other countries. The deductions, however, allowed to steamers in respect of their engine rooms and coal bunkers had been calculated on a system of percentages, which had given rise to inequalities, and vessels were sometimes built to avail themselves of the greatest amount of deduction. He believed that in some few cases steamers had been proved to be of a minus quantity of tonnage. It was proposed therefore to measure these deductions in the future on the same principle by which the gross tonnage was ascertained. Another point dealt with under this head arose out of the question of deck cargoes. Complaints had been made, and particularly in the Baltic trade, that vessels had been overloaded with deck cargoes; and the Board of Trade had been pressed from time to time to prohibit the carrying of deck cargoes. They had, however, objected to this on the ground that for certain trades and for certain seasons it was not unreasonable or improper to carry deck cargoes, and that to prohibit them altogether would unnecessarily interfere with trade; but it had seemed to them that if such cargoes were carried, port and other dues ought to be paid in respect of it, and, accordingly, they had provided that vessels might be registered to carry deck cargo, a proportionate tonnage being added for that purpose; but if when not so registered they carried deck cargo, they would have to pay double tonnage dues. The next part of the Bill had relation to masters and seamen. It was proposed that in future the examiners of masters and other officers should be placed directly under the Board of Trade, instead of as now under the Local Marine Boards; it was believed that greater uniformity or a higher average standard of qualification would be maintained by the adoption of this course. Already great good had resulted from these examinations, but there was room for improvement among the masters of the smaller class of foreign-going vessels. As to seamen, coasters were to be exempted altogether in future from the obligation to have written agreements. Foreign-going ships were to be allowed to have running agreements, so that they did not extend over more than a year. And during that time they might engage men and discharge men at any port at home or abroad on complying with the other provisions of the Act. Another change had in view the protection of seamen from crimps. He found that one of the greatest evils the seamen suffered from was that, on the termination of the voyage at our great seaports, they were generally discharged or left their ship immediately on arrival, but they were seldom paid their wages till four or five days afterwards. In the meantime they had to hang about the port without money. They fell into the hands of the crimps and other bad characters who haunted the purlieus of the docks, who advanced them money and tempted them into debauchery. The seamen often did not get out of the hands of these persons till they had lost everything, and had pledged their future wages by advance notes, going on board again ill-clothed and often suffering from disease and the effects of drink. He believed that few things would do more good than some provision which would enable the seamen at once to proceed to their homes after arrival in dock. It was provided in the Act of 1854 that the seamen should be paid one-fourth of the wages due to them on discharge from the vessel. This, however, was rarely carried out. It was proposed that the discharge at the shipping office should be not later than one day after the arrival of the vessel or the termination of the agreement, or, if not, that the wages should run on until such discharge. This would give a great inducements to owners to pay the men at once. Facilities would, at the same time, be given to seamen to authorize the shipping officers to receive and remit their wages for them, so that they might leave the neighbourhood on arrival. Other minor provisions were directed against the crimps, with whom the Board of Trade had waged a constant warfare. The next point he had to deal with was that of distressed seamen abroad. The House would recollect that the hon. Member for Liverpool (Mr.

Graves), a few nights since, raised a question on this point on the Vote for distressed seamen, on the ground that the Vote was yearly increasing; he complained also on behalf of the owners of steam vessels who were compelled to bring home these distressed seamen at considerable expense. The question was one of considerable difficulty. A large proportion of the seamen relieved and sent home in this way were the crews of vessels wrecked abroad, in respect of whom no one could raise a complaint. Others were colonial seamen, for whom they thought the colonies in future should pay; but others were men who had been discharged from their ships, or had deserted in foreign ports, and who had afterwards been found destitute and unable to find a berth in a ship. The obligation to return these men to their homes was one which they owed to the country in which they were found. It was like the case of the removal of paupers to the parish bound to support them, and the question was at whose expense ought this to be carried out. In old times any voyage was presumed to be out and home, and no voyages were terminated in a foreign port. Now, however, it was different; voyages were often seeking voyages; many vessels were sent out for sale. The Bill they proposed would give facilities for the engagement and discharge of men in any part of the world. But they still thought, on the whole, that the principle of the Act of 1854 should not be departed from, and that the ship taking men out to a foreign port and there discharging them should be liable to the expense of bringing them home again if they were unable to find other employment, or if they were destitute there. The clauses of the Act, however, were ambiguous, and they only applied to foreign ports, and not to colonial ports. It was proposed to simplify them, to extend them to colonial ports, and to provide that no seaman should be left abroad without a discharge from some functionary, with whom the wages or a sum sufficient to bring the man home should be deposited. As between the Government and the shipowner, the ship was to be liable for expenses incurred on behalf of the man, except in cases of proved desertion. As between the seaman and the ship, the ship was only to be liable when the man was discharged without fault on his part, but not otherwise. Another change to be noted here was one due to his right hon. Friend at the head of the Admiralty. Under the present law any seaman might leave his ship for the purpose of entering the Royal Navy, and for that purpose might demand his clothes and wages without regard to the convenience of the owner or master of the ship he left. This privilege had at times been abused, and had caused great complaints from shipowners. Though the practice had been much less frequent of late years, the practice of hanging out the red shirt in presence of a ship of war was still occasionally resorted to. But his right hon. Friend had consented to forego this privilege of the Navy except in time of war. The next part of the Act had relation to safety and provision against accidents at sea. The present law contained numerous minute regulations as to the number of boats, the use of lifebelts, the safety valves of engines, compasses, and other such like matters. It was proposed to simplify these and to leave it to the Board of Trade to decide what in the case of passenger ships should be the actual requirements. A provision would be inserted empowering the master to throw overboard dangerous goods if they had been sent on board without his consent. At present the master might refuse to receive such goods, but once on board he was bound to carry them. Another change had reference to the inquiries into wrecks and the misconduct of officers. It would be admitted by everyone that there was no more legitimate and proper function of Government than to inquire into these cases of loss. He believed they had done much good in bringing home responsibility to owners and masters. As at present constituted, the courts of inquiry combined two functions—the one to inquire into the cause of the loss of the vessel, the other to determine the innocence or neglect of the master and officers; and, as the latter was followed, by most serious consequences — namely, the loss of their certificates and ruin in their profession —the inquiries were too apt to be conducted as if they were penal proceedings against the officers, instead of being inquests before which everything should be brought out bearing upon the loss of the vessel. It was proposed, therefore, in the new Bill to separate these two inquiries, and to hold an inquiry or inquest on the loss of the vessel, on which there should be a general report of the Board of Trade; and, if there were sufficient cause, to hold a separate inquiry into the conduct of the officers. A complaint was made that in such cases the Board of Trade were at once prosecutors and judges, appointing the assessors; it was proposed that in future the assessors should be appointed by the Admiralty Court. With respect to wrecks which happened on our coasts, they had carefully revised the Bill with a view of strengthening the law against the robberies which too often occurred. He need hardly remind the House of the scandalous cases which had been reported to it within the last three or four years arising out of the wrecks of the North, the Kit Karson and the Olivia. These and some other cases which had occurred to foreign vessels had given us a very bad reputation abroad, and no efforts should be spared to prevent a recurrence of them. They proposed that where wrecks had occurred, and property was found in possession of persons in the neighbourhood presumedly taken from them, the onus should be thrown upon the holders of showing that they came honestly by it. He trusted that, with some other amendments, and with a more careful administration of existing laws, which the Board of Trade had lately arranged, they would be able to put a check upon these scandalous cases. He might here mention another change due to his right hon. Friend at the Admiralty with reference to naval salvage. At present salvage in respect of merchant vessels might be claimed by officers and men in the Royal Navy, and proceedings might be taken by them against the ship in any Admiralty Court. Before final adjudication, however, the consent of the Admiralty must be given. His right hon. Friend proposed that in future such claims should only be made by the Admiralty itself; and the owner would be relieved from having his vessel taken into port and detained by the local Admiralty Court pending proceedings. The number of claims of this kind was already very small, and it was believed that this proposal would further reduce them, and prevent any claim being set up except in cases where there was substantial cause for some recompense for services rendered. He now came to the last subject which he had to mention—the vexed question of pilotage. There were, no doubt, very strong arguments against the compulsory pilotage. It was alleged, with truth, he believed, that where pilotage was not compulsory, pilots were as numerous and as experienced. On the other hand, there was a very strong desire to maintain it in some parts of the country with a view to insure the supply of competent men. The Government thought that even if it were desirable to put an end to compulsion it would not be well to raise the question on a Consolidation Bill. There were, however, anomalies in the existing law which the Government thought ought to be amended. Great injustice and absurdity had arisen from the law which exempted a ship from liability for damage when in charge of a compulsory pilot. The chief question in many, if not most, recent cases had been not which ship was to blame, but was either of the ships in charge of a compulsory pilot. The consequent refinements, absurdities, and injustice was very remarkable. To meet this it was proposed that where ships were not otherwise exempted from compulsory pilotage they should pay for a pilot, but should not be bound to employ him or to be placed under his charge. The money would be paid, where a pilot offered and was not employed, to the pilotage authorities, to be devoted to the pilot fund, as they might determine. The Government proposed, also, that the exemptions from pilotage which now existed in the Thames and the outports should be extended to other pilotage districts; and further that the recovery of pilotage rates should be by civil process, and not, as at present, by criminal proceedings. They proposed also to give the Trinity House power to license pilots for the seas surrounding Great Britain outside the present pilotage districts, but not in any way to make their employment compulsory. It was also intended to take more stringent powers to compel local authorities to keep their lights in a satisfactory condition, and, if they failed in doing so, to enable the general lighthouse authorities to take them in hand. Power would be given to the Board of Trade to prevent injury to navigation by throwing ballast into navigable waters or by taking shingle from the shores. Power also would be given to local authorities to remove wrecks which were an obstruction to navigation, and to charge the expense on the property. The Government also proposed to give the Board of Trade power to prepare provisional orders dealing with those cases of local charges upon shipping or passing dues which still existed, and which only survived because of the expense of applying for local Acts. He had now gone through the details on which the Government proposed changes. There were numerous other amendments, having for their object greater simplicity or more perfect remedies, which it was unnecessary to notice. The House would perceive that the tendency of the amendments proposed was not in the direction of more minute regulations or further inspection. The experience of the Board of Trade was not favourable to such legislation. It tended to shift the responsibility from the shipbuilder or shipowner to some inspecting officer, and in some cases had certainly retarded improvements. The Bill he asked leave to introduce had been prepared by the Board of Trade out of the materials and experience at its hand; but he by no means wished to exclude the possibility of further amendments. The object of presenting it at this period of the Session was to give full time to those who were interested in this great subject to examine it during the Recess, and the Government would gladly receive from them their criticism and suggestions. He hoped they would recollect, however, that it was the duty of the Board of Trade, in considering these suggestions, to hold the balance between the various conflicting interests, and to regard them from the point of view of the public interest. In conclusion, he could not express a better hope than that the Bill, when it passed into law, might be succeeded by a period in which the extension of British shipping would be as great in proportion as in the period which had preceded it. The hon. Gentleman concluded by moving the Resolution.

Mr. CANDLISH said, he desired to express his satisfaction with the general purposes of the Board of Trade in the introduction of this measure, it being manifestly for the advantage of shipping that the law affecting so large a section of the trading community should be embraced within the four corners of one statute, instead of being spread over numberless Acts of Parliament. The Act of 1854 did much in the way of consolidation; but since then one or two Acts had been passed every year, so that at the present moment the Mercantile Marine was under seventeen or eighteen different Acts of Parliament. It was better for a Department to wait its opportunity and delay legislation for two or even for five years than to pass immature legislation in an inconvenient form. The great consolidating Poor Law Act passed in 1834; but it still left on the statute book 100 Acts affecting the administration of poor relief. Since 1834, at least three Acts a year had been passed affecting this subject, directly or indirectly, so that there were about 200 statutes governing and constituting the Poor Law system. The result was that there was no single man in the country—neither the President, the Secretary, nor any of the able officials of that Department—who was able to speak with confidence as to his knowledge of the whole of the Poor Law. He regretted very much to hear the statement of his hon. Friend as to compulsory pilotage being retained. No system would be permanent and final which did not establish perfect free trade in pilotage. His hon. Friend was perfectly aware of the pinch that was felt as the law now stood. A ship, value £50,000, navigating the same waters as a ship value £1,000, or value £50, might be free to take a pilot or not, as she thought proper, while the ship of smaller value was bound to take and to pay for a pilot. What his hon. Friend proposed to do would not much improve matters. Was it to be seriously propounded to the House of Commons at this time of day that the trade of this country was to be compelled to pay for services which it did not require and would not accept? No trade should be subjected by Act of Parliament to anything so unfair; and he hoped, therefore, that this provision would disappear from the Bill next year. There was another matter also which he thought very objectionable, and that was that the Board of Trade should supersede the local management of harbour lights; because it was proposed that when the Board of Trade were not satisfied with the way in which the lights were kept, they might make provisions of their own for their maintenance. In his opinion, the tendency of legislation should be in an entirely opposite direction. He hoped his hon. Friend would put all the legislation that would be operative for the government of our shipping trade into the statute, and not make the Board of Trade a legislative Department. The House of Commons ought not to delegate any of its authority to an executive body. There was very much legislation at present in the hands of the Board of Trade, and it would be a great advantage to the public at large if it were denuded of that power. Another thing which he hoped would be aimed at was to minimize legislation. Let them not intrude by legislation where it was possible to avoid such intrusion. The more that was left to the free action of man and man, and to open bargain in the open market, the better for all parties. As to the measuring of steamers, the greatest absurdities prevailed at present. The mode of allowing for engine space and other things was such that in some cases the deductions had amounted to more than the whole gross tonnage of the ships themselves, which, therefore, were not charged tonnage rates at all. While he was not prepared to support the prohibition of deck cargoes altogether, he agreed in the necessity of discouraging them as much as possible.

SIR JOHN HAY said, that the question of deck loads and the stowage of cargo deserved the attention of the Board of Trade. The latter subject had been investigated with great care and advantage by the Institution of Naval Architects, and if the Board of Trade should put itself into communication with that body they would receive some exceedingly valuable information. It was well known that from carelessness or a desire to carry large cargoes, great weights were often put at the extremities or in other parts of the ship where it could not be safely carried, the consequence of which was that the ships became strained and unmanageable, and frequent losses occurred. It should be made legally binding that in each section of the ship only a given maximum weight should be carried, a matter also of great interest to underwriters and insurance offices. With respect to the payment of merchant seamen's wages, he was not quite sure what course was indicated by his hon. Friend; but it had been found in the Navy that great advantage both to discipline and morality had arisen from the fact that payment was made through the Post Office at the place to which the man belonged, so that his family got the benefit of his wages rather than crimps and such persons. If some such measure were adopted by the Board of Trade in the case of the merchant seamen, the greatest benefit would be found to result. With reference to the total abrogation of the powers of naval officers to avail themselves of the services of men volunteering from the merchant service, he did not think it would be advantageous. War vessels on foreign stations often lost numbers of men through the bad climate. To deprive a merchant ship entirely of the means of navigation would be unfair; but in many parts of the world Lascars, Malays, and Chinese and other foreigners might be found who would be able to do all that was necessary for the safe navigation of the merchantman. As our Navy was sent to different parts of the world for the purpose of protecting our trade, he hoped his hon. Friend would not make imperative the total abrogation of the powers of naval officers to accept the services of volunteers from the merchant service. Notwithstanding that some hardships had occasionally arisen in consequence of salvage being claimed by the officers and crews of Her Majesty's ships, he thought the power should be left to the Admiralty to decide whether any and what compensation should be awarded to Her Majesty's seamen for services rendered to vessels in distress. He was glad to hear that compulsory pilotage was not to be abolished; but he could not agree with the Board of Trade upon the subject of the rule of the road at sea, and he could only hope that the number of accidents that would occur during the ensuing autumn, in consequence of Regulation No. 14, might not be such as to open the eyes of the hon. Member to the danger of the present system.

MR. WATKIN WILLIAMS said, he differed from the hon. Member for Sunderland (Mr. Candlish) with respect to compulsory pilotage, but the law on that subject was in considerable confusion. Compulsory pilotage was derived from the laws of Oleron, and was first established in this country by Richard I., in 1195, with the view of keeping our home navigation secret from foreigners. The chief argument in its favour in these days was that it secured an efficient staff of pilots; and he thought that a shipowner should not be at liberty, from a false notion of economy, to refuse to avail himself of the services of skilled navigators. At the same time, the owner's responsibility in the case of his ship running down another ought not to be superseded by the pilot, and he entirely concurred in the provisions of the Bill upon this point.

Mr. HENLEY said, he hoped that next Session a continuous Return would be published showing the proportion of wrecks to voyages during the last three or four years, that they might see whether their lodging the management of shipping to so large an extent in the hands of the Government had resulted in more or fewer wrecks.

Mr. STEVENSON said, they had never had compulsory pilotage on the North-eastern coast, yet they had never experienced any want of properly qualified pilots. He regretted that the measure did not propose to go to the root of the evil at once, and abolish compulsory pilotage altogether. He also thought that light dues should be put an end to. At all events, he hoped the extraordinary anomalies in the mode of charging them would be remedied. He was glad to understand that an inquiry would be instituted by the Government into the cause of every wreck that occurred—whether culpability on the part of the master or mate was or was not alleged.

Mr. CHILDERS said, he had been asked a question by his hon. and gallant Friend opposite (Sir John Hay), who had left the House, with respect to the power of merchant seamen to volunteer into the Navy in spite of their engagements. It was not intended wholly to repeal that power, but only to abandon its exercise in time of peace. The effect of the Bill would be that during such times and for such places as Her Majesty, by proclamation, might appoint, this power, in circumstances of urgency, might be enforced. With regard to compulsory pilotage the Government had arrived at no decision. The Bill did not alter the law on that subject; but it was the intention of the Board of Trade to consider the subject during the Recess, and it would depend upon the result of that inquiry whether they would abolish it or not.

Mr. GOURLEY said, he was strongly of opinion that if shipowners were to be compelled to pay for pilotage, pilots should be made responsible for damage done to ships when under their charge. There were many anomalies in our pilotage system. It should either be done away with altogether, or the scale of charges should be so arranged as to make them less burdensome to the London shipowners. He objected to the examination of masters and mates by the Board of Trade, considering that the local Marine Boards had done their work well, and better than it could have been done by the Board of Trade.

Mr. MACFIE said, he thought that the action of the Board of Trade in this subject entitled it to the thanks of the shipping interest. There would be no harm in preventing vessels from going to sea until they had undergone some kind of inspection, as a means of protecting the lives of the seamen. It was worthy of consideration whether there should not be some limit to the number of foreign seamen on board. There should be uniformity in the various ports, both as to the charges and the number of times the vessels were to be charged port dues, according to the number of voyages.

Mr. BOWRING said, he thought it a serious objection to the Bill that it consisted of 800 clauses. If the suggestions now made were adopted it might easily be extended to 1,000 clauses. It was already about six times as long as the Bankruptcy Bill, which was the longest measure of the Session. Many of the clauses might be made rules of court, in which case they might be struck out, and the Board of Trade left to make the necessary regulations.

Mr. BENTALL said, he hoped that the Board of Trade would give some consideration to the present practice of charging the whole of the light dues upon a ship whether she possessed a full cargo or not—a practice which was a great hindrance to trade. He lived in a port in the South of England, to which coals were brought, and the merchants there were constantly requiring to send back small quantities of cargo; but they could only send them upon the condition of being subject to very heavy dues, which was a great grievance.

Mr. SHAW LEFEVRE said, the question of local dues would be considered and re-adjusted. He wished to explain that there was no imputation cast upon the local Marine Boards; but it was desired to have greater uniformity in the examination. The statistics alluded to by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Oxfordshire (Mr. Henley) should be laid upon the table of the House at the commencement of next Session, together with a great quantity of other statistical matter. He thanked the House for the manner in which the Bill had been received.

Resolved, That the Chairman be directed to move the House, that leave be given to bring in a Bill to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to Merchant Shipping and Navigation.

House resumed.

Resolution reported:—Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. Dodson, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, and Mr. John Bright.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 267.]

COAL MINE ACCIDENTS.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Lord ELCHO, in rising to call attention to a Memorial signed on behalf of 30,000 Miners, praying for a special inquiry into the recent accidents in Coal Mines that have resulted in great loss of life, and to move for Papers on the subject, said, the public journals continually furnished their readers with the accounts of accidents in mines, which were attended with great loss of life. On one occasion 350 men were suddenly hurried into eternity, and in July and June last two explosions were attended with the death of something like sixty men on each occasion. Knowing that the men engaged in these mines attributed the constant recurrence of these accidents to the absence of proper inspection, he had some short time since asked his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he would not, even at that late period of the Session, introduce a measure which would have the effect of making the working in mines more safe than it now was, and whether he would not in any case exercise the powers vested in him to order the inspection of such mines. In supposing that the minds of these men would be greatly excited by these accidents he was not wrong, because a meeting was held only the other day at Manchester, which was attended by 120 delegates, representing a body of 30,000 men in Lancashire. He had had the honour of presenting to the Secretary of State for the Home Department a Memorial signed by these 120 delegates, and they had likewise signed a Petition which he had that day presented to that House. In that Petition they urged that they were very much alarmed at the frequent occurrence of accidents, which they believed might be guarded against; they were not satisfied with having inquiries before coroners' juries, and they prayed that that House would present an Address to Her Majesty praying for the institution of a sufficient inquiry by scientific men into these explosions. He should be very glad if his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department would accede to this request. He believed that these accidents might be frequently prevented by proper precautions. At all events, they might he believed, be more guarded against; because a Committee of that House, which sat for two Sessions on the question, had reported in favour of the amendment of the existing acts on mines, and the Home Secretary had brought in a Bill to render the working of these mines more secure than it was at present. The very fact of a Bill having been brought in by the right hon. Gentleman appeared to admit that the position taken up by these men was a sound one. He did not know to what extent inspection existed in Saxony; but he observed that a lamentable explosion had taken place there by which 420 persons had been hurried into eternity; and the correspondent of The Times stated that the grossest possible carelessness prevailed there as to uncovered lights; the men, too, being allowed to go about smoking. It was not, therefore, surprising that there should be such a holocaust of victims to such reprehensible carelessness. He regretted that pressure of business had prevented the right hon. Gentleman from persevering with his Bill, because he thought it might have been passed without difficulty. No doubt there were a great many Amendments put down in reference to that Bill; but there had been two meetings, one at his own house and another in a committee room, which had been attended by mine owners and the representatives of miners, and also by some of the most influential men in that House, and after what had occurred at those meetings he thought that portion of the Bill which related to the measures to be taken for the security of life and prevention of accidents might have been got through without difficulty. He regretted that his right hon. Friend did not try to press the measure through the House. But that Bill having been brought in, containing such clauses, was some justification for these men feeling so strongly as they did that their interests had not been sufficiently looked after—a measure of that importance not being pressed earnestly on the consideration of Parliament. Those men believed that until a more searching inquiry was made into the accidents that occurred they would not get at the root of the evil, and he should be very glad if his right hon. Friend would do what they wanted, which was to cause special scientific inquiry to be made into this matter. They thought a mine might be made so secure that even with an uncovered light in the working part of it there would be no risk of explosion. The way in which mines were inspected was not such as to give the security required. The view taken by his right hon. Friend was that they could not have personal, actual, ocular inspection of all mines in the United Kingdom—they could only appoint a certain number of Inspectors, who, if they had reason to believe there was anything wrong, or if an accident occurred in their district, should go and inquire into it and report what had passed. The memorialists held that this was practically no inspection at all. If they looked to other countries inspection there meant actual inspection. If this question arose in America thorough and complete inspection would be given. There were no inflammatory gases in the American mines, but there was a great deal of timbering. They had actual inspection in America, and the way it was accomplished was this—once every year every mine had to be inspected to see that there was a proper supply of timbering to the shafts, &c., and the owner of the mine paid so much — 10 cents, he believed — upon every yard inspected during the year. It had been said on behalf of the Government that the inspection of mines should be like that of railways, and that those inspections were only had after some accident or complaint; but there was no analogy between railways and mines. A railway was perfectly made, and there it was; but mines were being continually made. No doubt it would be necessary greatly to increase the number of Inspectors if they had actual inspection, but he understood that one of the Inspectors had admitted that there ought to be more Inspectors. [Mr. Bruce: No!] He knew his right hon. Friend would say it would take away responsibility from the mine owner if they had more inspection; but he thought there should be sub-Inspectors reporting to the Chief inspectors, which would not interfere with the working of the mine. He hoped his right hon. Friend would take this matter into his serious consideration, with a view to legislation, and that in the meantime he would not turn a deaf ear to the Petition of these miners, praying for a scientific inquiry into these accidents, for he must say, of all working men these were the most hardworking and industrious, on whom, to a great extent, depended the material wealth and the prosperity of the country.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, that She will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House, a Copy of the Memorial presented to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, praying for special inquiry into the recent Accidents in Coal Mines."—(Lord Elcho.)

Mr. BRUCE said, he was certainly not prepared by the Notice which the noble Lord had given for a discussion on the general subject of mine inspection; nor did he think the present a fitting opportunity for it. His noble Friend requested that he should accede to the Memorial of a large number of miners in Lancashire and send down a number of scientific men to inquire into the cause of two recent accidents. He told his noble Friend some time ago that if any application were made from the locality he would take care that the inquiry should be duly attended by scientific men on the part of the Government. The Inspector of the district attended the inquiry as a matter of course; but he applied for assistance, and, in consequence, one of the ablest of the Inspectors, Mr. Dickenson, was sent down to assist, and he believed every step had been taken that could serve to trace the cause of this most deplorable calamity. Since he had received the Memorial he had communicated with these two Inspectors, and asked them whether, in their opinion, any further scientific investigation was necessary in order to arrive at the cause of this accident? If the causes of such accidents could not be discovered by the Inspectors at the inquests which were held, it would be quite proper that a scientific inquiry should be made. The two main causes of accidents were defective ventilation and the negligence of the agents and the workmen themselves. Defective ventilation could, no doubt, be removed by stringent legislation; but many accidents were owing to the neglect of the agents and of the men themselves, and this was, of course, beyond the control of Parliament. Had he been able to pass the Mines Regulation Bill through Parliament during the present Session, he would gladly have done so. Notice of important Amendments extending over twelve pages of the Notice Paper, had been given, and he thought his noble Friend did not properly estimate the length and gravity of the discussions which would have arisen on the measure if it had been proceeded with. It was a Consolidation Bill, and, consequently, would have opened up de novo a great many old as well as new questions. With respect to the number of Inspectors, his noble Friend had quoted the original Act of 1820 for the inspection of mines, and had argued from that Act that the Legislature intended there should be a complete and continuous inspection of mines. He thought, however, that the intention of that Act was clearly shown by the action of the Government immediately after it became law, when only six Inspectors were appointed for the whole country. If it had been intended that there should be a personal inspection of all the mines in Great Britain it would have been absurd to appoint so small a number of Inspectors as six. In his opinion, efficient ventilation and efficient precautions against accident could only be obtained by the active co-operation of the masters, agents, and workmen. Some of the worst accidents had happened from causes which had only been in operation a few days, against which, therefore, mere occasional inspection would have given no security. That at the Oaks Colliery arose from the accumulation of gas for a week. If his noble Friend would refer to the Reports of last year, he would find in the Report of one of the Inspectors an account by Mr. Dalgleish of the system pursued in the North of England. There the workmen formed themselves into a kind of committee for the purpose of daily inspecting every part of the collieries. The masters listened to and acted upon any suggestions they might make, and the result was a system of inspection incomparably superior to any other which could be devised or effected by Government. It was natural that the workmen, whose lives were constantly threatened, should look to the Government for protection from dangers, and, within proper limits, the Government ought to grant them that protection; but at the same time the workmen ought themselves to co-operate. Their occupation was attended by peculiar dangers, from which no Government could wholly exempt them. By the co-operation of the men those dangers might be much lessened; but, in the absence of such co-operation, he altogether despaired of seeing a reduction in the number of lives lost in consequence of accidents in mines. The Government ought to have in every locality a certain number of competent men to receive complaints, to examine mines which they had reason to believe to be in a dangerous condition, to listen to and to act upon every warning and rumour of danger; but it was no part of their duty to examine personally into the state of every colliery. He should only be deceiving the House and the colliers themselves if he held out on the part of the Government any promise of a largely extended system of inspection. That in other respects, however, fresh legislation might be advantageous he did not deny; and he hoped that early next Session the House would have an opportunity of re-considering the Mines Regulation Bill, amended as it would be in consequence of the suggestions he had received from the noble Lord and from other quarters, and that everything which legislation could effect would be done to promote the security of collieries.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

COMPULSORY CHURCH RATES ABOLITION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

On Motion of Mr. M'LAREN, Bill for the abolition of Compulsory Church Rates in Scotland, ordered to be brought in by Mr. M'LAREN and Mr. CRAUFURD.

Bill presented, and read the first time. [Bill 266.]

House adjourned at a quarter after Seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Tuesday, 10*th August,* 1869.

MINUTES.]—PUBLIC BILLS—Third Reading—Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland) * (279); Broughty Ferry Provisional Order Confirmation * (294); Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan * (285); Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) * (280), and passed.

THE NEW COURTS OF JUSTICE.

REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE.

LORD DENMAN rose to call attention to the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the new Law Courts. It seemed to be supposed that the concentration of the Law Courts would be a great public advantage; but that he held to be a great mistake. The consequence of that idea was that great expense had been incurred in obtaining a new site. Notwithstanding the pledge given to Parliament that the expense of obtaining and clearing away the new site should not exceed £750,000 that had already been exceeded, and before the approaches were made the expense would amount to a good deal more. He thought they would have cause to regret it if they acted upon the principle of concentrating all the Courts into one place. It was said of the new site proposed on the bank of the river that it had "the three R's" in its favour, for it was approached by road, by river, and by rail; but he begged to say that the Courts at Guildhall were as convenient for City men, and as easily approached, as any site on the banks of the river would be. The project of concentration was advocated to save lawyers the trouble of walking far from their chambers to the Law Courts, and to allow the seniors to hold briefs in more than one court at a time—thus effectually cutting off all chance of the juniors rising. He (Lord Denman), on the other hand, thought it would be of great advantage to have causes tried in various parts of this great metropolis. This opinion, he was happy to say, was shared by an eminent Member of their Lordships' House, who had himself been at the Bar. He thought the Carey Street site was preferable to that of the restricted site on the river; but he hoped their Lordships would pause before they committed themselves to either of them.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

REPRINT OF BILL.

LORD REDESDALE moved that this Bill, as amended by the Commons, be reprinted, with a view of showing how materially it differed from the measure sent down by their Lordships, and of placing on record the proceedings of both Houses for reference in a future Session.

Motion agreed to.

LORD REDESDALE wished to mention, in proof that the division last night was not a party one, but was due to the determination of the House to retain its due influence in legislation, that not a single Member of the late Cabinet took part in it. He received last night a telegram from Lord Derby, who expected that the question would not have been discussed till to-day, stating his readiness and desire to come up to town that he might be present.

LORD DENMAN said, that he was ready to have stayed in London a sufficient time to consider the alterations; but, as the Prorogation was fixed for the 11th, he voted as he did. He regretted that the vigour and determination shown in the division last night had not been exhibited in reference to the Irish Church Bill. Every Irishman he had met with was unwilling to return to his home in consequence of the present aspect of affairs.

OFFICE OF THE CLERK OF THE PARLIAMENTS AND OFFICE OF THE GENTLEMAN USHER OF THE BLACK ROD.

Report from the Select Committee considered (according to order), and agreed to.

House adjourned at a quarter past Five o'clock, 'till To-morrow, a quarter before Two o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Tuesday, 10*th August,* 1869.

CLERKS IN THE CUSTOMS.—QUESTION.

MR. WHITWELL said, in the absence of his hon. Friend (Mr. H. B. Sheridan), he would beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, If the Government is prepared (now that the reorganization of the Customs is under the consideration of the Lords of the Treasury) to consider the case of those twenty extra clerks in the Customs Service who are at present excluded from all promotion or appointment to the "establishment" by the retrospective action of Treasury Orders issued in 1853 and 1856; and, whether the case will be considered with a view to amalgamation or establishing these extra clerks and placing them upon a footing with the established clerks with regard to pay, prospect of promotion, sick leave, and superannuation, or otherwise providing for them in some just and satisfactory manner?

MR. AYRTON said, in reply, that it appeared that sometimes extra clerks of good character had been eligible to appointments on the permanent establishment. At the same time, there was a proviso that no extra clerk should be appointed to the establishment, unless when first employed he were within the age prescribed for establishment clerks. That age was twenty-five years. It would seem that these twenty gentlemen were above the age of twenty-five when they were first employed, and could not be admitted to the establishment. His hon. Friend wished to know whether the case would be considered with a view to amalgamation or establishing these extra clerks and placing them on a footing with the established clerks with regard to pay, &c. But it was impossible to depart from the regulations adopted for the general management of the service. The extra clerks, however, appeared to have received some increase of pay; but he was afraid it was impossible to hold out to them any expectation of further consideration. Nor could they be put on the same footing with established clerks for superannuation or otherwise. It was true that the case had been inquired into by the Committee appointed some time ago to investigate the condition of the Customs; but the recommendations of that Committee had not been carried into effect, and they were the subject now of further inquiry.

ITALY—ARREST OF MR. NATHAN.

QUESTION.

MR. P. A. TAYLOR said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether his attention has been called to the arrest of a young man, Mr. Nathan, a British subject, at Milan in April last, and to his continued incarceration to this time without trial, bail being refused; and, whether he will state what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in the matter?

MR. OTWAY said, he had to say, in answer to the Question of his hon. Friend, that his attention had been called to the arrest of this young gentleman, Mr. Nathan, at Milan. It appeared that he was a mere boy, he believed of nineteen years of age, and the first intimation that the British Minister at Florence had of his arrest was on the 19th of July, when the brother of Mr. Nathan called at the Legation and informed Sir Augustus Paget of the circumstance. Sir Augustus Paget reported the fact to the Foreign Office on the 21st of July, and Lord Clarendon directed instructions to be sent to Sir Augustus Paget on the 3rd of August, desiring that all the information he could obtain should be forwarded, requesting that the young man might be admitted to bail, and that in the meantime he should not be sent to Naples.

NAVY—ADMIRALTY ACCOUNTS.

QUESTION.

MR. SEELY said, he would beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty, Whether he intends to carry out the recommendations of the Select Committee on Admiralty Monies and Accounts as regards the form of the Navy Estimates, the Savings and Deficiencies, the Navy Ships' Accounts, and the Manufacturing Accounts?

MR. CHILDERS said, in reply, that it was the intention of the Admiralty to carry out the recommendations of the Select Committee of the House of Commons with respect to the form of the Estimates, the Savings and Deficiencies, and the Navy Ship and Manufacturing Accounts. Next year the Estimates would be shown in the form recommended by the Committee. The Manufacturing and Ship Accounts for 1866-7, laid upon the table a few days ago, were framed generally on the principle recommended by the Committee, though they were not quite perfect.

MELTING OF ENGLISH SOVEREIGNS.

QUESTION.

Mr. SINCLAIR AYTOUN said, he would beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether he has any objection to lay upon the Table of the House Copies of any Correspondence or Papers with respect to manufactures in London, Paris, and Brussels for the melting of English sovereigns; and, if he will state whether he is in possession of any evidence that such a manufacture at present exists in Brussels?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: Sir, I have no Correspondence upon the subject to lay upon the table. Of course, I should not have made the statement I did unless I had strong reason to believe that such a manufacture was carried on at Brussels. The question is equivalent to asking me whether I made a statement for which I had no ground whatever. There is nothing, so far as I am aware, contrary to law in melting down sovereigns; and it seems to me that our regulations in making no charge for mintage are expressly framed to promote that practice.

Mr. SINCLAIR AYTOUN: May I be allowed to ask the right hon. Gentleman whether he will lay upon the table any Papers containing the evidence on the subject?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: Certainly, the hon. Gentleman may be allowed to ask me that question, and I hope I may also be allowed to decline answering it.

NAVY—WEST COAST OF AFRICA.

QUESTION.

Mr. RYLANDS said, he would beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty, What number of Vessels and of Men are at present stationed on the West Coast of Africa, and if he can now state the actual reduction he purposes making in that squadron before the close of the present year?

Mr. CHILDERS said, in reply, that on the 1st of January, a few days after he took Office, he found, upon the West Coast of Africa and at the Cape of Good Hope, sixteen ships, containing 1,806 men. When he made his statement on introducing the Navy Estimates he explained that the ships had been reduced from sixteen to fourteen, and the number of men to 1,450. Since that time the ships had been still further reduced from fourteen to thirteen, and he contemplated the reduction of another ship, and a reduction of the number of men to 1,350. Since the present Government had been in Office there had been a reduction of four ships and about 500 men in this squadron. He would repeat what he had said in answer to the hon. Member (Mr. J. Lowther), that the squadron on this coast was not employed for the suppression of the slave trade, but for the protection of our commerce, as in other parts of the world.

BRISTOL PILOTS AT FALMOUTH.

QUESTION.

Mr. R. N. FOWLER said, he wished to ask the Secretary of the Board of Trade, Whether his attention has been directed to the practice of Pilots belonging to Bristol visiting Falmouth with a view of taking charge of vessels sailing from that Port, thus interfering with the Pilots belonging to Falmouth, and frequently causing the detention of ships for want of Pilots off Lundy Island; and, whether he will consider the propriety of framing any new regulations on the subject?

Mr. SHAW LEFEVRE said, in reply, that the attention of the Board of Trade had been directed to the subject, and, after communicating with the Trinity House, they saw no necessity for interference in the matter. They were informed that vessels were not detained at Lundy Island for want of pilots.

THE THAMES EMBANKMENT AND THE METROPOLITAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

QUESTION.

Mr. WATKIN WILLIAMS said, he wished to ask the First Commissioner of Works, Whether it is true that in the event of the New Palace of Justice not being erected upon the Thames Embankment site, it is in the power of the Metropolitan Railway Company to build a station in the centre of the land reclaimed from the river; and, whether it is not the intention of the Government to secure to the public the whole of the land so reclaimed between Somerset House and the Temple for the purposes of recreation?

Mr. LAYARD said, in reply, that under the Act of Parliament, the Metropolitan Railway Company were empowered to build a station in the centre of the land reclaimed from the river; but should the House decide to erect the New Courts of Justice upon the Embankment site the Railway Company had in that case agreed to remove their station to a better postiion for the public—namely, at the end of Essex Street. The erection of a station in the centre of the reclaimed land would not interfere with that part of the reclaimed land which, under the Act of Parliament, would be set aside for recreation purposes.

THE NEW COURTS OF JUSTICE.

QUESTION.

Mr. MONK said, he would beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether the Government intend to take any steps during the Recess in reference to the erection of the New Courts of Justice?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, in reply, that any step which the Government might take must be one of two kinds. They must either give notice to acquire fresh land upon which to erect the buildings, or they must obtain a Grant from Parliament for the erection of new buildings. As to the first, the Committee had not recommended the acquisition of any fresh land, and therefore there would be no notice given of any Bill for the purpose; and as to the other course, as no Grant had been obtained from Parliament to erect these buildings upon either site, he could not see how the Government could possibly take any steps for the erection of buildings until Parliament met again.

ASSIZE SENTENCES ON CRIMINALS.

OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. BRUCE said, he wished to say a few words in regard to a Question put to him on Friday last by the hon. Member for York (Mr. J. Lowther), in the absence of the hon. Baronet (Sir George Jenkinson), as to the inequality of sentences passed by the Judges during the present Assizes. The Notice only appeared in the Paper on the morning of the day on which his answer was given, and having had no opportunity of communicating with the learned Judges, he could give no other than a vague and general answer. He had since received communications from two of the learned Judges, and it was for the interest of public justice that the substance of these communications should be made known. One was from Mr. Justice Keating, who sentenced a man named William Rapson Oates — a herbalist, who was charged at the Bodmin Assizes with obtaining £2 5*s.* under false pretences — to five years' penal servitude, although the jury recommended the prisoner to mercy. Mr. Justice Keating stated—

> "It is quite true that the sentence was as stated, and the recommendation by the jury given. But when it appeared that the prisoner had previously been convicted twice in 1868, once for obtaining money under false pretences, four months' hard labour, and once for larceny, with nine months' hard labour, besides having been in gaol under convictions as a vagrant and for assault, one month each, in 1865 and 1866, the jury stated they wished to withdraw their recommendation, which, they said, they never would have made if they had known the facts. I may add, that after getting the £2 5*s.* from the poor prosecutrix, he endeavoured the following day to obtain £1 under the same false pretence that he was the second son of the head warder of the gaol at Bodmin, who was known to her, and on whose account she advanced the money. I considered that the public had a right to be protected against a very clever and expert swindler and thief, and passed the sentence complained of."

The other sentence was passed by Mr. Justice Mellor. The hon. Member said of it that it was the case of > "A man named Simmons, convicted for feloniously killing his wife at Redhill. Details very revolting and brutal; guilty, but recommended to mercy; not concurred in by the Judge; sentence, five years' penal servitude."

The learned Judge wrote—

> "In the case of Simmons, charged with the manslaughter of his wife, I heard no evidence of any kick or act of violence done by the prisoner other than that of the pushing which caused her fall. It is true the doctor stated that injuries such as he found might have been occasioned by the prisoner knocking down his wife and then kicking her; but, in answer to a question put by me, he stated that on the post mortem examination he found no marks or bruises which might not have been caused by her falling down stairs. The daughter of the prisoner stated that she saw him pushing her mother out at the door, but did not see her fall. In answer to questions from me, she said that there was a landing-place outside the door of the chamber, the size of which she pointed out to the jury by referring to a partition in the court. The jury were of opinion that the prisoner had no intention to push the deceased downstairs, and recommended him to mercy. I delayed to pass sentence because I did not feel sure that I rightly understood the reasons upon which the recommendation was based. Upon considering the evidence of the daughter, it appeared to me that it might afford a reasonable foundation for the recommendation, and I accordingly passed the mitigated sentence of five years' penal servitude."

The next case showed that the hon. Baronet who put the Notice on the Paper was not acquainted with the facts. His words were—

"Case 2, same Court, a man named Fyfield, convicted for feloniously cutting and wounding his wife with intent to murder her; details very bad; guilty; a bad case of unlawfully wounding; sentence, eighteen months' imprisonment."

The Judge wrote—

"With reference to Fyfield's case the question assumes that he was 'convicted of feloniously cutting and wounding his wife with intent to murder her,' whereas he was acquitted of the felony and of the intent to murder, and of the intent to do grievous bodily harm, and convicted of the misdemeanour of unlawfully wounding only. I passed upon him the sentence of eighteen months imprisonment with hard labour."

Of the third case, where it was alleged that a man who severely beat another with his fists was sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude, the Judge said—

"In Gore's case, the indictment charged him with feloniously doing grievous bodily harm with intent to do grievous bodily harm. It appeared that under the pretence of buying a collar the prisoner went into the shop of the prosecutor, struck him behind the ear, and beat him with 'his fists' until he became insensible, remaining in that condition for many hours; spitting of blood followed, accompanied by other symptoms of so grave a character that the surgeon expressed a strong opinion that he will never recover, and will most probably speedily die as the result of the violence of the prisoner. He fainted as he left the Court. The avowed motive of the prisoner was revenge against the unfortunate prosecutor for having given evidence against him on a trial for assaulting the police. Two considerations influenced me in the sentence which I passed—in the first place, the grave and dangerous character of the violence inflicted; in the second place, the necessity of throwing such protection around witnesses who may hereafter be compelled to give evidence as a severe sentence was calculated to afford. My practice is to make a great distinction in the punishment of crimes of violence committed deliberately and with malice aforethought, and crimes of violence committed without premeditation and without malice aforethought. I endeavoured to apply this distinction in the sentences referred to; whether I succeeded or not I leave to the judgment of others."

THE GOLD COINAGE.—QUESTION.

Mr. Alderman W. LAWRENCE: Sir, the Chancellor of the Exchequer has proposed for our consideration in the Recess a curious conundrum with respect to coinage, currency, and circulation. So much misapprehension prevails on the subject that I wish to ask the right hon. Gentleman, Whether, in his suggestion the other evening respecting the gold coinage, he proposed that a person sending to the Mint a bar of gold, for which he now received 100 sovereigns without deduction for coining, should in future receive only 99 sovereigns of the same weight and quality as at present, the one sovereign being retained by the Mint for expenses of coinage; or whether he proposes that the same bar of gold should be coined into 101 sovereigns of less weight or quality than at present, and that the person sending the bar should receive 100 sovereigns, the remaining one being retained by the Mint for the expense of coinage. If the latter proposition were carried into effect, I wish to ask whether it would not necessarily involve the reduction of the intrinsic value of the pound sterling to be paid under existing deeds, mortgages, contracts, and other engagements, public and private, at home and abroad?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: Sir, the conundrum which I proposed to the House does not involve either of the propositions. My suggestion was this—that a man, taking the words of the question, who brought to the Mint a bar of gold for which he would now receive 100 sovereigns should receive 100 sovereigns still, but that each of these sovereigns should be lighter than the present sovereign by one grain, value somewhere about 2*d*., approximating nearly to 1 per cent on the value of the sovereign. The proposal was—at least the idea was, for there was no proposal—that if this one grain were deducted from the value of each of the sovereigns issued, there would remain over and above the bar of gold brought to the Mint, after the issue of the 100 sovereigns forming its equivalent, 100 grains of gold, which the Mint would pay into the Exchequer under the head of miscellaneous income, to be applied to the general purposes of revenue. I need not, therefore, enter into the question as to the effect of the proposal in either of the hypothetical cases put by the hon. Gentleman upon contracts, mortgages, engagements, and all the other things. But as regards the practical proposition which I did make I may say one word. The hon. Gentleman asks about the intrinsic value. I do not know what "intrinsic value" means; it is an ambiguous phrase. As far as I know there is no such thing as intrinsic value. It is not an inherent quality in the substance itself which gives to it its pecuniary value; the intrinsic value, in the sense which the hon. Gentleman means, is, as I conceive relative; that is to say, measuring the value of the thing in question by the amount of labour and capital which it would take to produce it. But if the hon. Gentleman means by intrinsic value the amount of gold which the sovereign will contain, then my proposition certainly involves the reduction of the intrinsic value to the extent of one grain in 123½ grains. I will answer his Question in this way—If the sovereign be treated, not as gold, but as bullion, it will have one grain less of producing power; but if the sovereign be viewed, not as bullion, but as gold, its producing power will remain just the same as at present. And the reason is obvious. The only seller of new sovereigns is the Government; and if new sovereigns could only be acquired upon the condition of paying 1 per cent more for them than is now paid, that 1 per cent would necessarily limit the demand for sovereigns till they attained the value put upon them. As sovereigns, therefore, they would be as valuable as at present, while as bullion they would be less valuable. And that attains precisely the object I have in view, which is that the sovereign should be circulated in this country, but should not be melted or exported abroad.

MR. ALDERMAN W. LAWRENCE: I wish to understand whether the person bringing the bar of gold to be coined will pay anything for coining it?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: I think I have answered the question before. The person bringing the bar of gold to be coined—assuming it to be worth 100 sovereigns—would have deducted from the value 100 grains of gold; and to that extent he would pay.

FOREIGN OFFICE AGENCIES.

QUESTION.

In answer to an appeal by Mr. BRUCE,

SIR HENRY BULWER, who had given notice of his intention to call attention to the state of the Foreign Office Agencies, and to propose a Resolution on the subject, said, he would consent to forego his intention. He desired, however, to obtain from his hon. Friend the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, an assurance that the Government would propose some alterations in the present arrangements as to Foreign Office Agencies, which he regarded as exceedingly objectionable. Those arrangements had been entered into originally with the view of satisfying everybody, and had ended by satisfying nobody.

MR. OTWAY said, he regretted that his hon. Friend had been prevented by indisposition from attending on the occasion when he stated the intentions of the Secretary of State on this subject. The matter had not escaped the attention of Lord Clarendon, and a scheme was now being matured, which it was hoped would have the effect desired by his hon. Friend. The Foreign Office Agency Question had not been settled satisfactorily, and he had no hesitation in saying that before Parliament met again there would be a change.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS (SCOTLAND) BILL.—QUESTION.

MR. KINNAIRD: Sir, I wish to put a question to the Government, to know whether they are prepared to announce what course they will take next Session with regard to that important measure of Scotch Education, which has met with such a disastrous end in "another place," and on no other plea than that it was the month of August when it came before the House of Lords. I wish to ask, Whether the Government are prepared to tell us that early next Session the Bill may be re-introduced?

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Certainly the course pursued in "another place" in regard to the Bill has excited not less surprise than regret — regret on many accounts, both in regard to the measure which was the subject of that treatment, and in regard to the position between the two Houses. It certainly is unfortunate that a Bill introduced into the House of Lords at the very beginning of the Session, which was altered in a very large degree by that House, which occupied that House for three months and a-half, which came down here at a time when business was very important and very pressing—and which has been before this House only a month and a-half—should have been rejected in another place, on the ground that there was not time to consider it. This is, indeed, a very unfortunate state of affairs. The Bill was a most important one; and the very alterations which had been made in it in the House of Lords prove that it was a measure of very great difficulty, requiring serious consideration; and it required consideration more particularly in this House, where the representatives of the people—the representatives of those who have the main interest in the education of the country—were to be found. All that I can say as to the future is that one cause of the regret which we feel, as to the treatment which the Bill has received, arises from the fact that we had the discussion ground free to ourselves. We were in a position to undertake and to pass a measure for Scotland without being embarrassed with other questions. Sir, I can undertake nothing absolutely for the future. What can be done next Session must depend very much upon other important questions which will have to be considered. All I can say is, that what has been done in another place will not discourage us for future efforts, and should enable the representatives of Scotland especially to aid with even more harmony and co-operation in the accomplishment of their great object.

APPOINTMENT OF REVISING BARRISTERS.—QUESTION.

MR. CRAUFURD said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department a question as to the recent appointment of Revising Barristers by the Lord Chief Baron on the Home Circuit. The senior Judge on the Summer Circuit had each year the right of appointing members of his own circuit to be Revising Barristers for the year, and therefore, theoretically, the appointment was annual, but the practice had invariably been, that except for special reasons, no change should be made in the appointments. On the last occasion, however, that practice had been departed from in one, if not in two cases. In one case the gentleman who had held the appointment before very much needed the assistance it afforded him, as he had a wife and family; but he had been displaced in favour of a young man, who was, perhaps, perfectly qualified for the office, but who had only just been elected a member of the Home Circuit. He wished to know, Whether the Home Secretary had any information on the matter; and, if not, whether the right hon. Gentleman would inquire into the reasons for pursuing such an unusual course?

MR. BRUCE, in reply, said, he had no more information than what he had stated to the House yesterday; but he should not consider it his duty to ask the Judge intrusted with the power of selecting the Revising Barristers why he had selected one in preference to another. At the same time, the young gentleman who had been referred to as having obtained one of the appointments was a barrister of more than three years' standing, as he was bound to be under the Act of Parliament.

MR. CRAUFURD: I said he had only just joined the circuit.

House adjourned at Four o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Wednesday, 11th August, 1869.

MINUTES.] — PUBLIC BILLS — Royal Assent— Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 93]; New Parishes and Church Building Acts Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 94]; Millbank Prison [32 & 33 Vict. c. 95]; Contagious Diseases [32 & 33 Vict. c. 96]; Government of India Act Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 97]; Governor General of India [32 & 33 Vict. c. 98]; Habitual Criminals [32 & 33 Vict. c. 99]; Warehousing of Wines and Spirits, &c. [32 & 33 Vict. c. 103]; Dividends on Public Stocks [32 & 33 Vict. c. 104]; Harbour of Galle Loan [32 & 33 Vict. c. 105]; East India Loan [32 & 33 Vict. c. 106]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 100]; Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 108]; Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 107]; Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c. [32 & 33 Vict. c. 109]; Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan [32 & 33 Vict. c. 101]; Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) [32 & 33 Vict. c. 102]; Charity Commissioners [32 & 33 Vict. c. 110]; Bishops Resignation [32 & 33 Vict. c. 111]; Seeds Adulteration [32 & 33 Vict. c. 112]· Nitro Glycerine [32 & 33 Vict. c. 113]; Railways Abandonment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 114]; Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 115]; Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act (1868) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 116]; Pharmacy Act (1868) Amendment [32 & 33 Vict. c. 117]; Broughty Ferry Provisional Order Confirmation [32 & 33 Vict. c. clviii.]; Inclosure of Lands [32 & 33 Vict. c: clix.]

PROROGATION OF THE PARLIAMENT.
HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

The PARLIAMENT was this day prorogued by Commission.

The Lords Commissioners—namely, The Lord Chancellor; The Lord Privy Seal (The Earl of Kimberley); The Earl Granville (Secretary of State for the Colonies); The Lord Chamberlain of the Household (The Viscount Sydney); and The Lord Foley—being in their robes, and seated on a Form between the Throne and the Woolsack; and the Commons being come, with their Speaker, the Royal Assent was given to several Bills.

Then The LORD CHANCELLOR delivered Her Majesty's Speech as follows:—

"My Lords, and Gentlemen,

"We are commanded by Her Majesty to dispense with your further attendance in Parliament.

"Her Majesty announces to you with pleasure that She continues to receive from all Foreign Powers the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition, and that Her confidence in the preservation of peace has been continued and confirmed during the present year.

"The negotiations in which Her Majesty was engaged with the United States of North America have by mutual consent been suspended; and Her Majesty earnestly hopes that this delay may tend to maintain the relations between the two countries on a durable basis of friendship.

"Her Majesty has a lively satisfaction in acknowledging the untiring zeal and assiduity with which you have prosecuted the arduous labours of the year.

"In the Act for putting an end to the Establishment of the Irish Church you carefully kept in view the several considerations which, at the opening of the Session, were commended to your notice.

"It is the hope of Her Majesty that this important measure may hereafter be remembered as a conclusive proof of the paramount anxiety of Parliament to pay reasonable regard, in legislating for each of the three Kingdoms, to the special circumstances by which it may be distinguished, and to deal on principles of impartial justice with all interests and all portions of the nation.

"Her Majesty firmly trusts that the Act may promote the work of peace in Ireland, and may help to unite all classes of its people in that fraternal concord with their English and Scottish fellow subjects which must ever form the chief source of strength to Her extended Empire.

"Her Majesty has observed with pleasure your general and cordial readiness to unite in the removal, through the Assessed Rates Act, of a practical grievance which was widely felt.

"Her Majesty congratulates you on having brought your protracted labours on the subjects of Bankruptcy and of Imprisonment for Debt to a legislative conclusion which is regarded with just satisfaction by the trading classes and by the general public.

"The law which you have framed for the better government of Endowed Schools in England will render the large resources of these establishments more accessible to the community, and more efficient for their important purpose.

"It may reasonably be expected that the Act for the supervision of Habitual Criminals will contribute further to the security of life and property.

"The measure which has been passed with respect to the Contagious Diseases of Animals will, as Her Majesty believes, add confidence and safety to the important trades of breeding and feeding cattle at home, without unnecessarily impeding the freedom of import from abroad.

"By the repeal of the tax on Fire Insurance you have met a long-cherished wish of the community; and in the removal of the duty on Corn Her Majesty sees new evidence of your desire to extend industry and commerce, and to enlarge to the uttermost those supplies of food which our insular position in a peculiar degree both encourages and requires.

"Her Majesty trusts that the measure for the purchase and management of the Electric Telegraphs by the State may be found to facilitate the great commercial and social object of rapid, easy, and certain communication, and may prove no unworthy sequel to that system of cheap postage which has passed with much advantage into so many countries of the civilized world.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"We are commanded to state that Her Majesty thanks you for the liberal supplies which you have granted for the service of the year, and for the measures by which you have enabled Her at once to liquidate the charge of the Abyssinian Expedition.

"My Lords, and Gentlemen,

"Her Majesty reflects with pleasure that, in returning to your several homes, you may contemplate with thankfulness the fruit of your exertions in the passing of many important laws, a portion of which we have now had it in command to notice.

"During the recess you will continue to gather that practical knowledge and experience which form the solid basis of legislative aptitude; and Her Majesty invokes the blessing of the Almighty alike upon your recent and your future labours for the public weal.

Then a Commission for proroguing the Parliament was read.

After which,

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said—

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

By virtue of Her Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal, to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in Her Majesty's Name, and in obedience to Her Commands, prorogue this Parliament to Thursday the 28th day of October next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Thursday the 28th day of October next.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Wednesday, 11th August, 1869.

The House met at half after One of the clock.

APPOINTMENT OF REVISING BARRISTERS.—QUESTION.

Mr. WEST said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether the Government intend to introduce a measure next Session, in accordance with the recommendations of the Select Committee on Registration, and which would have the effect of relieving the Judges having the Summer Assize Circuits from the appointment of the Revising Barristers?

Mr. BRUCE said, in reply, that the subject was under the consideration of the Government. The recommendations of the Select Committee were alternative, and it was impossible to say, if the Government should propose to alter the present system of making the appointment, which of these alternative propositions they would adopt.

LICENSES ON CABS AND OMNIBUSES. QUESTION.

Mr. GOURLEY said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether he will, before fixing the sum to be paid by the owners of omnibuses and cabs for the new Police Regulation Licenses, consider the arrangement existing in provincial towns, and so adapt the charges that the burden of local taxation may not fall heavier on the owners of public vehicles in the metropolis than in other places, the Secretary of State being empowered by the present Metropolitan Act to fix £2 2*s*. as the license on each public carriage, which in other places was only 10*s*. per annum?

Mr. BRUCE said, in reply, that the last thing he should wish to do was to intercept any portion of the benefit which would accrue both to the owners of vehicles and the public from the diminution of the duties upon public vehicles. The charges for inspection, which had amounted to about £13,000 a year, had hitherto been borne partly by the Imperial revenue and partly by the metropolitan police rate. It was stipulated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer that this charge for inspection should be levied on the vehicles themselves. It was his desire that this charge should be as low as was consistent with effective supervision. An inquiry was now going on in all the provincial towns as to the cost of supervision, but whether he should be able to reduce the charge to the level of the sum found sufficient in provincial towns he did not know.

BURGLARIES AT STAINES.—QUESTION.

Mr. GOURLEY said, he would beg to inquire, Whether the attention of the authorities of the Home Office has been drawn to the commission of a succession of burglaries, seven having taken place within the fifteen days preceding this notice at Staines and the immediate neighbourhood?

Mr. BRUCE said, it was not quite accurate to say that seven burglaries had occurred within fifteen days in and about Staines. There had been two burglaries and three larcenies by stealing out of houses in the day time, in consequence of the windows being left open. The value of the property taken in one case was only 2*s*. 6*d*. In consequence of the burglaries two mounted policemen and one detective had been sent into the neighbourhood.

JAMAICA CLERGY ACT.—QUESTION.

Mr. M'ARTHUR said, he wished to ask the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, What course the Government intend to take in relation to the Jamaica Clergy Act, which would shortly expire, and what are their intentions in reference to the future ecclesiastical arrangements for that island?

Mr. MONSELL said, in reply, that the Jamaica Clergy Act would expire this year. Under that Act more than £20,000, raised out of the taxes of the colony, was appropriated to religious purposes. By the Census of 1861 it appeared that there were in Jamaica 40,000 members of the Anglican Church 42,000 Methodists, 51,530 Baptists, and 30,000 belonging to other religious denominations. Of this sum of £20,000, all, except £370, went towards the maintenance of the Church of England. Under these circumstances it had been determined to introduce religious equality into that colony, and instructions had been issued to the Governor to the effect that Her Majesty's Government were of opinion that the moral and religious culture of the subject-race of the island, and not the ascendancy of any one portion of the community, should be the object of the Government, and that it would be desirable to avoid all appearance of showing exclusive favour to any one denomination. No scheme had yet been submitted by the Governor, but one was expected to arrive by the next mail, and it would be founded on the principle just mentioned.

PROROGATION OF THE PARLIAMENT.

Message to attend The LORDS COMMISSIONERS.

The House went;—and the ROYAL ASSENT was given to several Bills.

And afterwards Her Majesty's Most Gracious Speech was delivered to both Houses of Parliament by The LORD CHANCELLOR, in pursuance of Her Majesty's Commands.

Then a Commission for proroguing the Parliament was read.

After which,

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said—

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

By virtue of Her Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal, to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in Her Majesty's Name, and in obedience to Her Commands, prorogue this Parliament to Thursday the 28th day of October next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Thursday the 28th day of October next.

[TABLE OF STATUTES.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE, SESSION 1868-9.

RETURN to an Order of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 2 August 1869;—for,

A RETURN "of the Number of DAYS on which THE HOUSE SAT in the Session of 1868-9, stating, for each Day, the Date of the Month, and the Day of the Week, the Hour of Meeting, and the Hour of Adjournment; and the Total Number of Hours occupied in the Sittings of The House, and the Average Time; and showing the Number of Hours on which The House Sat each Day, and the Number of Hours after Midnight; and the Number of Entries in each Day's Votes and Proceedings (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 0.109, of Session 1867-8)."

(Mr. Charles Forster.)

Month.	Day.	House met.	House adjourned.		Hours of Sitting.		Hours after Midnight.		Entries in Votes.
			H.	M.	H.	M.	H.	M.
1868
Dec. 10	Th	2	3	0	1	0	-	-	6
„ 11	F	2	5	15	3	15	-	-	5
„ 12	S	2	3	30	1	30	-	-	2
„ 14	M	2	4	0	2	0	-	-	2
„ 15	Tu	2	3	30	1	30	-	-	27
„ 29	Tu	1	1	45	0	45	-	-	15
Total...	6	- -	-	-	10	0	-	-	57
1869
Feb. 16	Tu	1¾	7	45	6	0	-	-	82
„ 17	W	12	1	0	1	0	-	-	104
„ 18	Th	4	6	0	2	0	-	-	146
„ 19	F	4	6	30	2	30	-	-	83
„ 22	M	4	7	45	3	45	-	-	92
„ 23	Tu	4	11	15	7	15	-	-	97
„ 24	W	12	12	45	0	45	-	-	50
„ 25	Th	4	6	15	2	15	-	-	74
„ 26	F	4	8	30	4	30	-	-	55
Total...	9	- -	-	-	30	0	-	-	783
Mar. 1	M	4	8	30	4	30	-	-	77
„ 2	Tu	4	9	30	5	30	-	-	82
„ 3	W	12	5	30	5	30	-	-	66
„ 4	Th	4	9	0	5	0	-	-	56
„ 5	F	4	11	30	7	30	-	-	40
„ 8	M	4	12	15	8	15	0	15	70
„ 9	Tu	4	8	30	4	30	-	-	56
„ 10	W	12	5	50	5	50	-	-	36
„ 11	Th	4	1	0	9	0	1	0	68
„ 12	F	4	2	30	10	30	2	30	59
„ 15	M	4	1	15	9	15	1	15	75
„ 16	Tu	4	2	0	10	0	2	0	87
„ 17	W	12	5	53	5	53	-	-	48
„ 18	Th	4	1	45	9	45	1	45	76
„ 19	F	4	12	15	8	15	0	15	75
„ 22	M	4	12	45	8	45	0	45	82
„ 23	Tu	4	3	0	11	0	3	0	90
Total...	17	- -	-	-	128	58	12	45	1,143
1869
Apr. 1	Th	4	6	15	2	15	-	-	70
„ 2	F	4	1	30	9	30	1	30	66
„ 5	M	4	1	15	9	15	1	15	73
„ 6	Tu	4	11	30	7	30	-	-	94
„ 7	W	12	5	50	5	50	-	-	64
„ 8	Th	4	1	15	9	15	1	15	85
„ 9	F	4	1	45	9	45	1	45	76
„ 12	M	4	2	15	10	15	2	15	84
„ 13	Tu	4	12	45	8	45	0	45	79
„ 14	W	12	5	55	5	55	-	-	60
„ 15	Th	4	12	45	8	45	0	45	79
„ 16	F	4	1	0	9	0	1	0	96
„ 19	M	4	1	30	9	30	1	30	87
„ 20	Tu	4	2	0	10	0	2	0	83
„ 21	W	12	5	0	5	0	-	-	59
„ 22	Th	4	1	30	9	30	1	30	86
„ 23	F	4	12	30	8	30	0	30	84
„ 26	M	4	12	45	8	45	0	45	117
„ 27	Tu	4	12	45	8	45	0	45	82
„ 28	W	12	5	50	5	50	-	-	41
„ 29	Th	4	1	45	9	45	1	45	106
„ 30	F	4	1	30	9	30	1	30	75
Total...	22	- -	-	-	181	5	20	45	1,746
May 3	M	4	12	15	8	15	0	15	95
„ 4	Tu	2	1	0	11	0	1	0	98
„ 5	W	12	5	50	5	50	-	-	52
„ 6	Th	4	1	45	9	45	1	45	85
„ 7	F	2	9	0	7	0	-	-	66
„ 10	M	4	2	15	10	15	2	15	109
„ 11	Tu	4	2	15	10	15	2	15	68
„ 12	W	12	5	50	5	50	-	-	55
„ 13	Th	4	1	15	9	15	1	15	161
„ 27	Th	4	1	0	9	0	1	0	93
„ 28	F	4	12	30	8	30	0	30	69
„ 31	M	4	1	45	9	45	1	45	108
Total...	12	- -	-	-	104	40	12	0	1,059

Month.	Day.	House met.	House adjourned.		Hours of Sitting.		Hours after Midnight.		Entries in Votes.
			H.	M.	H.	M.	H.	M.
1869
June 1	Tu	4	1	45	9	45	1	45	114
„ 3	Th	4	1	0	9	0	1	0	98
„ 4	F	4	8	15	4	15	-	-	54
„ 7	M	4	1	45	9	45	1	45	105
„ 8	Tu	2	1	45	11	45	1	45	75
„ 9	W	12	5	55	5	55	-	-	52
„ 10	Th	4	2	0	10	0	2	0	108
„ 11	F	2	1	15	11	15	1	15	76
„ 14	M	4	2	30	10	30	2	30	106
„ 15	Tu	2	10	15	8	15	-	-	41
„ 16	W	12	5	55	5	55	-	-	53
„ 17	Th	4	1	30	9	30	1	30	77
„ 18	F	2	1	45	11	45	1	45	54
„ 21	M	4	1	30	9	30	1	30	86
„ 22	Tu	2	2	15	12	15	2	15	76
„ 23	W	12	5	55	5	55	-	-	57
„ 24	Th	4	2	15	10	15	2	15	76
„ 25	F	2	2	15	12	15	2	15	54
„ 28	M	4	1	15	9	15	1	15	80
„ 29	T	2	2	45	12	45	2	45	67
„ 30	W	12	5	50	5	50	-	-	45
Total...	21	- -	-	-	195	35	27	30	1,554
July 1	Th	4	2	0	10	0	2	0	77
„ 2	F	2	9	0	7	0	-	-	41
„ 5	M	4	2	15	10	15	2	15	89
„ 6	Tu	2	2	15	12	15	2	15	72
„ 7	W	12	5	50	5	50	-	-	62
„ 8	Th	4	1	45	9	45	1	45	90
„ 9	F	2	2	0	12	0	2	0	65
cont.
July 12	M	4	2	15	10	15	2	15	86
„ 13	Tu	2	2	45	12	45	2	45	49
„ 14	W	12	5	55	5	55	-	-	36
„ 15	Th	4	2	15	10	15	2	15	69
„ 16	F	4	1	45	9	45	1	45	53
„ 19	M	4	2	0	10	0	2	0	80
„ 20	Tu	2	2	30	12	30	2	30	67
„ 21	W	12	5	45	5	45	-	-	42
„ 22	Th	4	3	0	11	0	3	0	84
„ 23	F	2	2	15	12	15	2	15	48
„ 26	M	4	3	15	11	15	3	15	93
„ 27	Tu	2	9	10	7	10	-	-	48
„ 28	W	12	6	0	6	0	-	-	59
„ 29	Th	4	3	30	11	30	3	30	87
„ 30	F	2	2	45	12	45	2	45	84
„ 31	S	12	3	45	3	45	-	-	22
Total...	23	- -	-	-	219	55	38	30	1,503
Aug. 2	M	4	2	15	10	15	2	15	69
„ 3	Tu	2	3	30	13	30	3	30	74
„ 4	W	12	6	0	6	0	-	-	58
„ 5	Th	4	3	15	11	15	3	15	77
„ 6	F	2	3	45	13	45	3	45	59
„ 7	S	12	2	30	2	30	-	-	22
„ 9	M	3	7	15	4	15	-	-	70
„ 10	Tu	3	4	0	1	0	-	-	42
„ 11	W	1½	Prorogation.				-	-	32
Total ...	9	- -	-	-	62	30	12	45	503

SUMMARY.

Month.	Days of Sitting.	Hours of Sitting.		Hours after Midnight.		Entries in Votes.
		H.	M.	H.	M.
1868 December ...	6	10	0	-	-	57
1869 February......	9	30	0	-	-	783
March........	17	128	58	12	45	1,142
April	22	181	5	20	45	1,747
May	12	104	40	12	0	1,064
June............	21	195	35	27	30	1,554
July	23	219	55	38	30	1,503
August.........	9	62	30	12	45	503
Total......	119	932	43	124	15	8,353

Average Time of Sitting, 7 Hours 50 Minutes $\frac{33}{119}$.

DIVISIONS OF THE HOUSE, SESSION 1868-9.

(PARL. PAPER 0·100.)

SUMMARY.

Number of Divisions on Public Business before Midnight	91
Ditto „ „ „ after Midnight	61
Ditto—Private Business	8
Total Number of Divisions in Session 1868-9	160

A
TABLE OF ALL THE STATUTES
PASSED IN THE FIRST SESSION OF
THE TWENTIETH PARLIAMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM
OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

32 & 33 VICTORIA.—A.D. 1869.

PUBLIC GENERAL ACTS.

1. AN Act to apply certain sums out of the Consolidated Fund to the service of the years ending the thirty-first day of March one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and one thousand eight hundred and seventy.
2. An Act for repealing the Act of the session of the eighth and ninth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and twenty-two.
3. An Act to enable Lord Napier of Magdala to receive the full benefit of the Salary of Member of Council for the Presidency of Bombay, or as holding any other office in India, notwithstanding his being in receipt of an Annuity granted to him under the Act thirty-one and thirty-two Victoria, chapter ninety-one.
4. An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better payment of the Army and their Quarters.
5. An Act for the Regulation of Her Majesty's Royal Marine Forces while on shore.
6. An Act to repeal so much of The Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, as relates to the approval by meetings of incorporated railway companies of bills and certificates for conferring further powers on those companies.
7. An Act for the confirmation and execution of arrangements made between the Secretary of State in Council of India and the East India Irrigation and Canal Company; and for other purposes connected therewith.
8. An Act to apply the sum of seventeen million one hundred thousand pounds out of the Consolidated Fund to the service of the year ending the thirty-first day of March one thousand eight hundred and seventy.
9. An Act to amend "The Salmon Fishery (Ireland) Act, 1863," and the Acts continuing the temporary provisions of the same.
10. An Act for authorizing the removal of Prisoners from one Colony to another for the purposes of Punishment.
11. An Act for amending the Law relating to the Coasting Trade and Merchant Shipping in British Possessions.
12. An Act for Protection of Naval Stores.
13. An Act for amending the Law relating to the Militia.
14. An Act to grant certain Duties of Customs and Inland Revenue, and to repeal and alter other Duties of Customs and Inland Revenue.
15. An Act to remove doubts as to the qualification of persons holding Civil Service Pensions, or receiving Superannuation Allowances, to sit in Parliament.
16. An Act to amend so much of the Act of the session of the sixth and seventh years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter thirty-five, as provides that Norfolk Island is to be part of the diocese of Tasmania.
17. An Act for the Preservation of Sea Birds.
18. An Act to amend the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.
19. An Act for amending the law relating to Mining Partnerships within the Stannaries of Devon and Cornwall, and to the Court of the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries.

20. An Act to remove doubts as to the validity of certain Statutes made by the Convocation of the University of Oxford.
21. An Act to amend the law relating to the Payment of the Expenses of Commissioners of Inquiry into Corrupt Practices at Elections of members to serve in Parliament.
22. An Act for raising the sum of two million three hundred thousand pounds by Exchequer Bonds for the service of the year ending on the thirty-first day of March one thousand eight hundred and seventy.
23. An Act to extend the Power of Recorders to appoint Deputies in certain cases.
24. An Act to repeal certain enactments relating to Newspapers, Pamphlets, and other Publications, and to Printers, Typefounders, and Reading Rooms.
25. An Act to amend the Act of the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth years of Victoria, chapter eighty-three, section nine, by extending the age at which orphan and deserted children may be kept out at nurse.
26. An Act to extend to Burial Grounds the Provisions of the Act of the thirteenth and fourteenth years of Her Majesty, chapter twenty-eight, intituled "An Act to render more simple "and effectual the Titles by which Congrega-"tions and Societies for Purposes of Religious "Worship or Education in England and Ireland "hold Property for such Purposes."
27. An Act to amend the law for licensing Beerhouses, and to make certain alterations with respect to the Sale by retail of Beer, Cider, and Wine.
28. An Act to afford facilities for the Establishment and Maintenance of public Parks in Ireland.
29. An Act to render valid certain Title Deeds for Inam Lands.
30. An Act to legalize certain Marriages celebrated at Park Gate Chapel, and to change the name of the District Chapelry annexed to the Chapel of Cowgill.
31. An Act to confirm an Order made by the Board of Trade under The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, relating to Langston, and to amend the forty-fifth section of The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868.
32. An Act to provide for the Commutation of Pensions payable to officers and other persons out of the sums voted by Parliament to defray the charges of the army and navy services.
33. An Act to provide for the Collection of Judicial Statistics in Scotland.
34. An Act to amend the Law concerning the appointment of Deputies by Stipendiary Magistrates.
35. An Act to amend "The Prisons (Scotland) Administration Act, 1860."
36. An Act to amend the Court of Session Act, 1868, in so far as the exemption of Lighthouse Keepers and their assistants from serving on Juries is thereby abolished.
37. An Act to authorize the appointment of District Prothonotaries of the Court of Common Pleas of the county palatine of Lancaster, and to provide for the better despatch of business therein.
38. An Act to facilitate the taking Special Bails in Civil Proceedings depending in the Superior Courts of Law at Westminster, and in Proceedings in Error and on Appeal.
39. An Act to make provision for the better government and administration of Hospitals and other endowed institutions in Scotland.
40. An Act to exempt from rating Sunday and Ragged Schools.
41. An Act for amending the Law with respect to the rating of Occupiers for short terms, and the making and collecting of the Poor's Rate.
42. An Act to put an end to the Establishment of the Church of Ireland, and to make provision in respect of the Temporalities thereof, and in respect of the Royal College of Maynooth.
43. An Act to provide for the payment of Diplomatic Salaries, Allowances, and Pensions.
44. An Act to make better provision respecting Greenwich Hospital, and the application of the revenues thereof.
45. An Act to amend the Law relating to the Repayment of Loans to Poor Law Unions.
46. An Act to abolish the distinction as to priority of payment which now exists between the specialty and simple contract debts of deceased persons.
47. An Act to provide for the discharge of the duties heretofore performed by High Constables, and for the abolition of such office, with certain exceptions.
48. An Act to amend The Companies Clauses Act, 1863.
49. An Act to enable Local Authorities to collect Fines and Fees by means of Stamps.
50. An Act to provide for Superannuation Allowances to Medical Officers of poor law unions, and of dispensary districts of such unions, in Ireland.
51. An Act to amend the County Courts (Admiralty Jurisdiction) Act, 1868, and to give Jurisdiction in certain Maritime Causes.
52. An Act for the Amendment of "The Shipping Dues Exemption Act, 1867."
53. An Act to amend the Cinque Ports Act.
54. An Act to amend the Act of the first and second years of Victoria, chapter fifty-six, intituled "An Act for the more effectual Relief of the destitute Poor in Ireland."
55. An Act to shorten the Term of Residence required as a Qualification for the Municipal Franchise, and to make provision for other purposes.
56. An Act to amend the Law relating to Endowed Schools and other Educational Endowments in England, and otherwise to provide for the Advancement of Education.
57. An Act to amend the Law relating to the Protection of Seamen's Clothing and Property.
58. An Act for amending the Public Schools Act, 1868.
59. An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Investments for Savings Banks and Post Office Savings Banks.
60. An Act to alter and amend the Acts enabling Her Majesty to grant Pensions to persons having held certain high civil offices.
61. An Act to protect the Funds of Trades Unions from Embezzlement and Misappropriation.
62. An Act for the Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt, for the punishment of fraudulent debtors, and for other purposes.
63. An Act to amend The Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867.
64. An Act to appoint additional Commissioners for executing the Acts for granting a Land Tax and other rates and taxes.

65. An Act for appointing Commissioners to inquire into the existence of corrupt Practices amongst the Freemen Electors of the city of Dublin.

66. An Act to continue and amend an Act to defray the charge of the Pay, Clothing, and contingent and other expenses of the Disembodied Militia in Great Britain and Ireland; to grant allowances in certain cases to Subaltern Officers, Adjutants, Paymasters, Quartermasters, Surgeons, Assistant Surgeons, and Surgeons Mates of the Militia; and to authorize the employment of the Non-commissioned Officers.

67. An Act to provide for Uniformity in the Assessment of Rateable Property in the Metropolis.

68. An Act for the further Amendment of the Law of Evidence.

69. An Act to provide for the better Liquidation of certain Loans raised under the guarantee of Her Majesty for the service of the colony of Jamaica.

70. An Act to consolidate, amend, and make perpetual the Acts for preventing the introduction or spreading of Contagious or Infectious Diseases among Cattle and other Animals in Great Britain.

71. An Act to consolidate and amend the Law of Bankruptcy.

72. An Act to amend "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1863," and to afford further facilities for the purposes thereof.

73. An Act to alter and amend "The Telegraph Act, 1868."

74. An Act to extend the period for the Repayment of Advances of Public Money for the construction of certain Public Works in Ireland, and also to incorporate the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland for certain purposes, and to vest in the said Commissioners lands and premises held on public trusts.

75. An Act to regulate and extend the Jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consul at Zanzibar in regard to vessels captured on suspicion of being engaged in the Slave Trade, and for other purposes relating thereto.

76. An Act for providing the final sum necessary to be raised by loan towards carrying on the works now in course of construction for the protection of the Royal Arsenals and Dockyards and the Harbours of Dover and Portland, and for authorizing the abandonment of that portion of the works already sanctioned by Parliament which has not been yet commenced.

77. An Act for making better provision for the erection of a Lighthouse on the Great Basses Rock in the Colony of Ceylon, and for other purposes connected therewith.

78. An Act to amend the Law relating to Criminal Lunatics.

79. An Act to enable Corporate and other Public Bodies in Ireland to grant Superannuation Allowances to Officers in their Service in certain cases.

80. An Act to amend "The Militia (Ireland) Act, 1854," as to providing houses or places for the keeping of the arms, accoutrements, clothing, or other stores of the Militia when not embodied.

81. An Act to amend the Volunteer Act, 1863.

82. An Act to amend the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855.

83. An Act to provide for the winding-up of the business of the late Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England, and to repeal Enactments relating to Insolvency, Bankruptcy, Imprisonment for Debt, and matters connected therewith.

84. An Act to abolish the office of Cursitor of the Court of Chancery in the palatine of Durham.

85. An Act to continue various expiring Laws.

86. An Act to amend the Law relating to the Presentation of Accounts, Statements, Returns, and Documents to Parliament.

87. An Act to provide for the prevention of Gaming in public places in Scotland.

88. An Act for the separation of the Straits Settlements from the Diocese of Calcutta.

89. An Act to amend the Law relating to the office of Clerk of Assize and offices united thereto, and to certain Fees upon Orders for payment of witnesses in criminal proceedings.

90. An Act to continue certain Turnpike Acts in Great Britain, to repeal certain other Turnpike Acts, and to make further Provisions concerning Turnpike Roads.

91. An Act for amending the Law relating to the Salaries, Expenses, and Funds of Courts of Law in England.

92. An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Fisheries of Ireland.

93. An Act to apply a sum out of the Consolidated Fund and the Surplus of Ways and Means to the service of the year ending the thirty-first day of March one thousand eight hundred and seventy, and to appropriate the Supplies granted in this Session of Parliament.

94. An Act to amend the New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts.

95. An Act to enable Military Offenders to be confined in Millbank Prison.

96. An Act to amend the Contagious Diseases Act, 1866.

97. An Act to amend in certain respects the Act for the better Government of India.

98. An Act to define the powers of the Governor General of India in Council at meetings for making laws and regulations for certain purposes.

99. An Act for the more effectual Prevention of Crime.

100. An Act to facilitate the borrowing money in certain cases for the purpose of The Sanitary Act, 1866, and the Acts amending the same; and for other purposes.

101. An Act for authorizing a guarantee of a loan to be raised by Canada for a payment in respect of the transfer of Rupert's Land.

102. An Act for making further provision respecting the borrowing of Money by the Metropolitan Board of Works, and for other purposes connected therewith.

103. An Act to amend the Law relating to the Warehousing of Wines and Spirits in Customs and Excise Warehouses, and for other purposes relating to Customs and Inland Revenue.

104. An Act for facilitating the Payment of Dividends on the Public Stocks, and for making regulations with respect thereto.

105. An Act for empowering the Public Works Loan Commissioners to advance a sum not exceeding two hundred and fifty thousand pounds for the improvement of the harbour of Galle in the colony of Ceylon.

106. An Act to enable the Secretary of State in Council of India to raise Money in the United Kingdom for the Service of the Government of India.
107. An Act to amend The Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866.
108. An Act to amend "The Sanitary Act, 1866," so far as the same relates to Ireland.
109. An Act for repealing part of an Act of the first year of the reign of their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, intituled "An Act "to vest in the two Universities the presenta-"tions of benefices belonging to Papists," and for securing uniformity in the law relating to the residence of spiritual persons upon their benefices, and to the penalties and forfeitures consequent on non-residence.
110. An Act for amending the Charitable Trusts Acts.
111. An Act for the relief of Archbishops and Bishops when incapacitated by infirmity.
112. An Act to prevent the Adulteration of Seeds.
113. An Act to prohibit for a limited period the importation, and to restrict and regulate the carriage, of Nitro Glycerine.
114. An Act to amend the Law relating to the Abandonment of Railways and the Dissolution of Railway Companies.
115. An Act for amending the Law relating to Hackney and Stage Carriages within the Metropolitan Police District.
116. An Act to amend "The Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868."
117. An Act to amend "The Pharmacy Act, 1868."

The Acts contained in the following List, being Public Acts of a Local Character, are placed amongst the Local and Personal Acts.

lix. An Act to confirm a scheme under "The Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866."
lx. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1863," and the Acts amending the same.
lxx. An Act to confirm certain Orders made by the Board of Trade under The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, relating to Donibristle (Firth of Forth) and the Holy Loch (Firth of Clyde).
lxxi. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, relating to Clifftonville, Gillingham, Rosslare, Saint Just, Fowey, and Padstow. cxxiii. An Act to confirm three Provisional Orders made by the Poor Law Board under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1867, with reference to the city of Chester, the incorporated hundreds of Tunstead and Happing in the county of Norfolk, and the parish of Woolavington in the county of Sussex.
cxxiv. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders under "The Local Government Act, 1858," relating to the districts of Bideford, Bournemouth, Bowness, Bristol, Croydon (2), Fleetwood, Hanley, Harrowgate, Litchurch, Litherland, Portsmouth, Lochdale, Ryde, and Worthing; and for other purposes relative to certain districts under that Act. cxlix. An Act to confirm Provisional Orders under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1863," and the Acts amending the same.
cl. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders under "The Local Government Act, 1858," relating to the districts of Aberystwith, Ashton-under-Lyne, Bath, Cleckheaton, Crompton, Newport (Monmouthshire), Reading, Southport, Stalybridge, and Weston-super-Mare. clviii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862," relating to the Burgh of Broughty Ferry. clix. An Act to authorize the inclosure of certain lands in pursuance of a report of the Inclosure Commissioners for England and Wales.

LOCAL AND PRIVATE ACTS.

The Titles to which the Letter P. is prefixed are Public Acts of a Local Character.

i. AN Act to enable the Company of Proprietors of the West Middlesex Waterworks to raise a further sum of money; and for other purposes.

ii. An Act for better supplying with Water Brymbo and places adjacent in the county of Denbigh.

iii. An Act to amend the Acts relating to the London Necropolis and National Mausoleum Company; and for other purposes.

iv. An Act to authorize the Company of Proprietors of Lambeth Waterworks to raise further Money; and for other purposes.

v. An Act for making a Railway from the East Lincolnshire line of the Great Northern Railway at Firsby to the town of Wainfleet All Saints, in the parts of Lindsey in the county of Lincoln; and for other purposes.

vi. An Act to enable the Crystal Palace Company to grant leases of certain portions of their land.

vii. An Act to alter and enlarge some of the powers of the Rock Life Assurance Company, and for other purposes.

viii. An Act for altering the vestry of the parish of Saint Giles Without Cripplegate within the liberties of the city of London, and for other purposes.

ix. An Act to amend "The Redheugh Bridge Act, 1866."

x. An Act to confer powers upon the Corporation of Grimsby as to the West Marshes, and the construction of a bridge over the Old Dock, and of other works at Grimsby; and for other purposes.

xi. An Act to authorize the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Leeds to improve the streets and becks, and to make other improvements in the said borough; and for other purposes.

xii. An Act for making better provision for the repair and improvement of Great Tower Hill; and for other purposes.

xiii. An Act to confirm a Working Agreement between the Dublin and Meath Railway Company and the Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland Company; and for other purposes.

xiv. An Act to transfer the Harbour of Workington from the trustees thereof to the Right Honourable William Earl of Lonsdale; to authorize the improvement and extension of that harbour; and for other purposes.

xv. An Act for dissolving the Ilkley Gas Company (Limited) and re-incorporating the proprietors therein with others, and to give them further powers for supplying gas to Ilkley and the neighbourhood in the West Riding of the county of York; and for other purposes.

xvi. An Act to subdivide the shares of the Imperial (Fire) Insurance Company, and for other purposes with respect to the future management of the same Company.

xvii. An Act to sanction certain proceedings of the Harrogate Waterworks Company with reference to the construction of works and the raising of money, and to empower them to construct additional works and to raise further money; and for other purposes.

xviii. An Act to consolidate, define, and regulate the Capital of the South Devon Railway Company; and for other purposes.

xix. An Act for making provision for the execution of the London Coal and Wine Duties Continuance Act, 1868, as far as it relates to the freeing from Toll of the following Bridges on the Thames; namely, Kew, Kingston-upon-Thames, Hampton Court, Walton-upon-Thames, and Staines; and Chingford Bridge and Tottenham Mills Bridges on the Lee; and for other purposes.

xx. An Act for authorizing the Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens of the City of London to raise a further sum of Money for the completion of the Holborn Valley Viaduct, and the streets and works connected therewith.

xxi. An Act for making a railway from the Great Southern and Western Railway in the parish of Fermoy in the county of Cork to Lismore in the county of Waterford; and for other purposes.

xxii. An Act to enable the West-Ham Gas Company to increase their Capital, and for other purposes with respect to the same Company.

xxiii. An Act to alter the constitution of University College, London, and for other purposes relating to the said College.

xxiv. An Act to enable the Parochial Board of the Parish of Edinburgh, and the Trustees of the Estate of Craiglockhart for behoof of said board, to obtain from the Edinburgh Water Company a supply of Water for the New Poorhouse, and other buildings in connexion therewith, erected or to be erected on the lands of Craiglockhart.

xxv. An Act for dissolving the Manchester and Stockport Railway Company, and transferring their undertaking to the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire and Midland Railway Companies jointly; and for empowering the two last-mentioned companies jointly to make a short branch railway out of the Stockport and Woodley Junction Railway; and for authorizing a joint ownership by those two companies of the Newton and Compstall Railway and the Marple New Mills and Hayfield Junction Railway; and for granting running powers to the Midland Railway Company over parts of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway; and for other purposes.

xxvi. An Act to enable the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company to acquire additional lands at Great Grimsby, in the county of Lincoln.

xxvii. An Act for empowering the Local Board of Melton Mowbray, in the county of Leicester, to provide a Cattle Market; and for conferring other powers on the Local Board; and for other purposes.

xxviii. An Act to authorize the Kent Coast Railway Company to provide for the payment of their mortgages by means of redeemable debenture stock.

xxix. An Act for effecting an Arrangement with respect to the mortgage and other Debts of the Enniskillen, Bundoran, and Sligo Railway Company; and for other purposes.

xxx. An Act to make provision respecting the use of Subways under the management of the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London and the liberties thereof; and for other purposes.

xxxi. An Act to authorize the Great Yarmouth Waterworks Company to raise more Money, and for the Prevention of Waste and Misuse of the Company's Water; and for other purposes.

xxxii. An Act for authorizing the Water Trust of Greenock to raise further Money; and for amending the provisions of the Acts relating to the Trust; and for other purposes.

xxxiii. An Act for authorizing the Dumbarton Water Commissioners to make and maintain an additional storage reservoir and other works, and to give an increased supply of water; for dividing the Burgh of Dumbarton into wards; and for other purposes.

xxxiv. An Act to enable the West Somerset Mineral Railway Company to enter into a working agreement with and to grant a lease of their undertaking to the Ebbw Vale Steel Iron and Coal Company, limited; and for other purposes connected with their undertaking.

xxxv. An Act to extend the time for the purchase of lands and for the completion of the Hounslow and Metropolitan Railway.

xxxvi. An Act for incorporating and granting further powers to the Cleckheaton Gas Company.

xxxvii. An Act to authorize "The Radcliffe and Pilkington Gas Company" to raise further monies by shares and by borrowing.

xxxviii. An Act for enlarging the powers of the Consett Waterworks Company.

xxxix. An Act for better supplying with Gas the parish of Waltham Holy Cross in the county of Essex and the parish of Cheshunt in the county of Hertford; and for other purposes.

xl. An Act to authorize the King's Lynn Docks and Railway Company to connect their undertaking with the railways at King's Lynn, to change the name of the company, and for other purposes with relation to the company.

xli. An Act for altering and enlarging the powers of the Launceston and South Devon Railway Company for raising money, and for vesting their undertaking in the South Devon Railway Company; and for other purposes.

xlii. An Act for incorporating the Shotley Bridge and Consett District Gas Company; for enabling them to supply gas to parts of the parishes of Lanchester in the county of Durham, and Shotley in the county of Northumberland; and for other purposes.

xliii. An Act for dissolving and re-incorporating the Darwen Waterworks and Reservoirs Company, and for enabling them to execute additional works and raise further capital; and for other purposes.

xliv. An Act to extend the time limited for the completion of the Bridge and other works authorized by "The Albert Bridge Act, 1864," and for other purposes.

xlv. An Act to provide for the disposition of the Workhouse Fund of the parish of Saint Martin-in-the-Fields in the county of Middlesex.

xlvi. An Act to incorporate Commissioners, and to vest in them the undertaking of the Dundee Water Company; and for other purposes.

xlvii. An Act for making a Railway from Stony Stratford in the county of Buckingham to the Wolverton station of the London and North-western Railway Company; and for other purposes.

xlviii. An Act to vest the Glasgow, Paisley, and Johnstone Canal in the Glasgow and South-western Railway Company, and to enable that company to guarantee the payment of dividends upon a portion of the share capital of the Greenock and Ayrshire Railway Company; and for other purposes.

xlix. An Act for supplying with water the townships of Undermillbeck, Applethwaite, and Troutbeck in the parish of Windermere in the county of Westmorland, and for conferring powers for that purpose on the Windermere District Gas Company; and for other purposes.

l. An Act for supplying Bishops Stortford in the county of Hertford with water.

li. An Act for better supplying with Gas and Water the town of Bridgend and neighbourhood in the county of Glamorgan, and for other purposes.

lii. An Act to enable the Midland Great Western Railway (of Ireland) Company to raise further Monies by borrowing.

liii. An Act for extending the time for the compulsory purchase of lands for, and for the completion of the authorized Railway of the London and South-western Railway Company from Bideford to Great Torrington.

liv. An Act to alter and extend the powers of the Accrington Gas and Waterworks Company in relation to their Waterworks; and for other purposes.

lv. An Act to enable the Spalding Waterworks Company to extend their works; and for other purposes with relation to the same company.

lvi. An Act to extend the time for the purchase of lands and for the construction of the works authorized by "The Lymington Harbour and Docks Act, 1864."

lvii. An Act to extend the time for the purchase of lands and for the construction of the works authorized by The Medway Docks Act, 1866.

lviii. An Act to transfer to and vest in the Corporation of Glasgow the undertakings of the Glasgow Gaslight Company and the City and Suburban Gas Company of Glasgow, and for other purposes.

P. lix. An Act to confirm a scheme under "The Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866."

P. lx. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1863," and the Acts amending the same.

lxi. An Act for abandonment of the extension railways authorized by the Llynvi Valley Railway Act, 1866, and for extension of the times limited for purchase of lands and completion of works under that Act and the Ogmore Valley Railways Act, 1866, and for making better provision for application of capital and payment of debts of the Llynvi and Ogmore Railway Company; and for other purposes.

lxii. An Act to grant further powers to the Metropolitan District Railway Company.

lxiii. An Act to confer further powers upon the Great Western and the Bristol and Exeter Railway Companies with respect to the Bristol Harbour Railway and Depôt, and for other purposes.

lxiv. An Act to incorporate a Company to be called "The Barnstaple Gas Company;" to provide for the lighting of the town and parish of Barnstaple and adjoining places; and for other purposes.

lxv. An Act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the river Crouch in Essex, to be called "The Cricksea Bridge."

lxvi. An Act to authorize the Local Board of Oswaldtwistle, in the parish of Whalley, in the county of Lancaster to make and supply Gas, and to confer various powers upon the said Local Board in reference to gas, water, and street improvements; and for other purposes.

lxvii. An Act for discontinuing the Chapelry District or new Parish of All Saints, Bishopsgate, in the city of London, as a separate district; for authorizing the appropriation of certain land in that district (provided by the Great Eastern Railway Company for a new Church in substitution of the existing Church), as sites for a Curate's Residence for the parish of Saint Botolph Without, Bishopsgate, and for Schools in lieu of the present Bishopsgate Ward Schools, and for a School Chapel; and for the regulation and management of such new Schools and School Chapel, and for authorizing certain monies to be applied in building the same; and for other purposes.

lxviii. An Act for conferring further powers upon the Pontefract Park Trustees and the Pontefract Street Commissioners respectively.

lxix. An Act to extend the Edgware, Highgate, and London Railway to Harrow.

P. lxx. An Act to confirm certain Orders made by the Board of Trade under The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, relating to Donibristle (Firth of Forth), and the Holy Loch (Firth of Clyde).

P. lxxi. An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under The General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, relating to Cliftonville, Gillingham, Rosslare, Saint Just, Fowey, and Padstow.

lxxii. An Act for the amalgamation of the Surrey and Sussex Junction Railway Company with the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company; and for other purposes.

lxxiii. An Act for the better regulation of the Harbour of Porthleven in Mount's Bay in the county of Cornwall, and for other purposes.

lxxiv. An Act for extending the boundaries of the Borough of Stockton, and for consolidating and amending the Acts in force in the Borough in relation to the management and improvement of Streets, and to Sewerage, and to Buildings, and to Police and other matters of local government; and for other purposes.

lxxv. An Act for conferring further power on the Buckfastleigh, Totnes, and South Devon Railway Company with reference to their authorized capital.

lxxvi. An Act to enlarge the powers of the Llanelly Railway and Dock Company, and for other purposes.

lxxvii. An Act to authorize the sale of Saint James' Chapel, Hampstead Road, and the utilization of the residue of the property adjoining thereto, for the benefit of the parish of Saint James', Westminster; and for other purposes.

lxxviii. An Act to extend the time for the purchase of lands for and for the construction of certain branch railways authorized by the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (West Riding Branches, &c.) Act, 1866; to authorize the abandonment of a junction railway authorized by that Act; to confer further powers on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway and the London and North-western Railway Companies with respect to certain undertakings vested in them jointly; and for other purposes.

lxxix. An Act to amend the "Ross Improvement Act, 1865."

lxxx. An Act for authorizing the Scinde Railway Company to amalgamate their several undertakings, and to make further agreements with the Secretary of State in Council of India; and for other purposes.

lxxxi. An Act to confer further powers on the City of Glasgow Union Railway Company, the Glasgow and South-western Railway Company, and the North British Railway Company.

lxxxii. An Act for amending the Hartlepool Port and Harbour Act, 1855; for abandoning part of the works by that Act authorized; for the construction of other works; for the improvement and regulation of the Port and Harbour of Hartlepool; and for other purposes.

lxxxiii. An Act for conferring additional powers on the Midland Railway Company for the construction of new works; for extending the periods for the purchase of certain lands and for the construction of certain authorized railways; and for other purposes.

lxxxiv. An Act for dissolving and re-incorporating the Proprietors of "The Maryport Gaslight Company (Limited);" and for other purposes.

lxxxv. An Act for the formation and improvement of Clontarf Township, comprising the Districts of Clontarf, Dollymount, and Ballybough, in the Barony of Coolock and county of Dublin.

lxxxvi. An Act for conferring further powers upon and for amending the Acts relating to the London and South-western Railway Company.

lxxxvii. An Act to confer further powers upon the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Preston as a Municipal Corporation, and also as the Local Board of Health.

lxxxviii. An Act for re-incorporating and giving additional powers to the Brighton Aquarium Company, and for other purposes.

lxxxix. An Act to authorize the Great Eastern Railway Company to abandon the construction of certain railways and to purchase lands for station purposes; also to enact certain provisions with respect to the Great Eastern Metropolitan Undertaking; and for other purposes.

xc. An Act for making better provision for the cure of souls within the original limits of the parish of Saint Mary, Newington, in the diocese of London.

xci. An Act for making a railway from the Great Western (South Wales) Railway near Whitland to Crymmych Arms in the county of Pembroke.

xcii. An Act to extend the time for the completion of the East Norfolk Railway, and for other purposes.

xciii. An Act for the abandonment of the railways authorized by "The Southsea Railway Act, 1867," and for other purposes.

xciv. An Act to authorize the construction of Street Tramways in certain parts of the Metropolis south of the River Thames, and for other purposes.

xcv. An Act to authorize the construction of Street Tramways from Pimlico to Peckham and Greenwich, and for other purposes.

xcvi. An Act to extend the time for the purchase of lands, and for the completion of the Garstang and Knot End Railway, and for increasing the capital of the Garstang and Knot End Railway Company.

xcvii. An Act for enabling the Milford Improvement Commissioners to borrow further monies, and for other purposes.

xcviii. An Act for improving and completing a direct line of railway communication between Glasgow and Kilmarnock, viâ Crofthead, and for vesting the same in the Caledonian and Glasgow and South-western Railway Companies; and for abandoning the Kilmarnock Direct Railway; and for other purposes.

xcix. An Act to authorize the Crystal Palace and South London Junction Railway Company to make a short Railway in the parish of Saint Mary, Lambeth, in the county of Surrey; and for other purposes.

c. An Act to consolidate and amend the several Acts relating to the Port and Harbour of Dublin and the Dublin Port and Docks Board; and for other purposes.

ci. An Act to authorize the construction of Street Tramways in certain parts of the Metropolis north of the River Thames, and for other purposes.

cii. An Act for supplying with Gas the towns of Aberdare and Aberaman and the parish of Aberdare, all in the county of Glamorgan.

ciii. An Act for further improving the Navigation of the River Severn, and for amending and extending the Severn Navigation Acts; and for other purposes.

civ. An Act for better supplying with Gas the parishes of Walton-on-Thames and Weybridge in the county of Surrey, and for supplying the parish of Shepperton in the county of Middlesex; and for other purposes.

cv. An Act to enable the North-eastern Railway Company to alter and abandon part of their authorized Gilling and Pickering Railway, and of their Port Clarence Branch, and to confer on the Company further powers in reference to other portions of their undertaking; and for other purposes.

cvi. An Act to incorporate a Company for better supplying Milnrow, in the parish of Rochdale in the county of Lancaster, and the neighbourhood thereof, with Gas; and for other purposes.

cvii. An Act to dissolve the Cleveland Water Company (Limited) and re-incorporate the members thereof, and to make further provision for the supply of water to Saltburn-by-the-Sea, Skelton, and other places in Cleveland; and for other purposes.

cviii. An Act for enabling the Dublin and Drogheda Railway Company to effect a communication between their railway and the works of the London and North-western Railway Company at the North Wall, Dublin; and for other purposes.

cix. An Act for conferring further powers on the Great Western Railway Company in relation to their own undertaking and the undertakings of other Companies; and for other purposes.

cx. An Act for transferring to the Corporation of Huddersfield the undertaking of the Commissioners for the Huddersfield Waterworks, and for empowering the Corporation to construct additional Waterworks and to supply Water within extended limits; and for other purposes.

cxi. An Act for arranging the affairs of the Bristol and North Somerset Railway Company, and for other purposes.

cxii. An Act for better supplying with Water the towns of Walton, Weybridge, Chertsey, Byfleet, Cobham, and Shepperton, and the several parishes and places adjacent thereto, in the counties of Middlesex and Surrey; and for other purposes.

cxiii. An Act to revive and extend the time limited by "The Mid-Wales Railway (Western Extensions) Act, 1865," for the compulsory purchase of lands and completion of works, and to abandon the formation of the Railways authorized by "The Mid-Wales Railway Act, 1864," and "The Mid-Wales Railway (Eastern Extension) Act, 1865," respectively, and to enable the Mid-Wales Railway Company to use a portion of the Neath and Brecon Railway; and for other purposes.

cxiv. An Act for improving and maintaining the Harbour of Dundee and the Docks and Works connected therewith, and amending the Acts relating to the said Harbour; and for other purposes.

cxv. An Act for conferring additional powers on the London and North-Western Railway Company for the construction of new works, and in relation to their own undertaking and the undertakings of other Companies; and for other purposes.

cxvi. An Act to confer additional powers on the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company for the construction of works, and otherwise in relation to their own undertaking and the undertakings of other Companies; and for other purposes.

cxvii. An Act for enabling the Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of the City of Manchester to purchase additional lands for the purposes of their Waterworks, to widen and alter Deansgate, to acquire additional lands, and to raise further monies; and for other purposes.

cxviii. An Act for authorizing the construction of a Dry Dock and other works at Newport by and for conferring other powers upon the Newport Harbour Commissioners.

cxix. An Act to confer various powers upon the North British Railway Company for the abandonment of certain railways and works, the purchase of lands for station purposes, and with respect to surperfluous lands, deferred preference dividends, and other matters connected with their undertaking; and for other purposes.

cxx. An Act to dissolve the Local Boards of the districts of Sutton and Parr, in the Borough of Saint Helens in the county of Lancaster, and to repeal the Saint Helens Improvement Act, 1855, and to constitute the Corporation of the said borough the Local Authority therein for the improving and governing of the said borough; to enable the said Corporation to extend their Waterworks and to purchase the undertakings of the Saint Helens Waterworks Company and the Saint Helens Gas Company; and for other purposes.

cxxi. An Act to incorporate a Company for extending the Thetford and Watton Railway to the Great Eastern Railway at Swaffham in Norfolk.

cxxii. An Act for granting further powers to "The Oxford Gaslight and Coke Company."

P. cxxiii. An Act to confirm three Provisional Orders made by the Poor Law Board under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1867, with reference to the city of Chester, the incorporated hundreds of Tunstead and Happing in the county of Norfolk, and the parish of Woolavington in the county of Sussex.

P. cxxiv. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders under "The Local Government Act, 1858," relating to the districts of Bideford, Bournemouth, Bowness, Bristol, Croydon (2), Fleetwood, Hanley, Harrogate, Litchurch, Litherland, Portsmouth, Rochdale, Ryde, and Worthing; and for other purposes relative to certain districts under that Act.

cxxv. An Act for better supplying with Water the parish of Dorking in the county of Surrey.

cxxvi. An Act for enabling the Caledonian Railway Company to abandon certain authorized railways; for sanctioning the acquisition by that Company of certain land; for altering the mode of raising a portion of their authorized share capital; for authorizing the amalgamation of the Crieff and Methven Junction Railway Company with the Company, and agreements with other companies and parties; and for other purposes.

cxxvii. An Act to form into a separate undertaking the Bude and Torrington Extensions of the Devon and Cornwall Railway Company, and to incorporate a Company for the making and maintaining thereof; and for other purposes.

cxxviii. An Act to authorize the Imperial Gaslight and Coke Company to raise more money and purchase more land; and for other purposes.

cxxix. An Act for authorizing the Local Board of Health for the District of Keighley to make additional Waterworks, for extending the limits within which the Board may supply Water and Gas, for authorizing improvements in the town of Keighley; and for other purposes.

cxxx. An Act to increase the capital of the South Metropolitan Gaslight and Coke Company, and for other purposes with relation to the same Company.

cxxxi. An Act for defining and extending the powers of the Corporation of Wolverhampton in relation to the Management of Streets in the Borough, and to Sewerage, and to Police and other matters of Local Government, and to Water Supply; and for other purposes.

cxxxii. An Act to give further time for the completion of the Railways of the Dundalk and Greenore Railway Company and the joint works authorized by the Newry and Greenore Railway Act, 1863; and for other purposes.

cxxxiii. An Act to amend "The Towns Improvement (Ireland) Act, 1854," so far as relates to the town of Kingstown; and for other purposes.

cxxxiv. An Act to enable the Metropolitan Board of Works to widen Hamilton Place and to extend the same into and improve Park Lane in the parish of Saint George, Hanover Square, in the county of Middlesex; and for other purposes.

cxxxv. An Act to authorize the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Bradford, in the west riding of the county of York, to construct new Waterworks; and for other purposes.

cxxxvi. An Act to grant further powers to the Metropolitan Railway Company.

cxxxvii. An Act to enable the Severn and Wye Railway and Canal Company to improve and extend their undertaking; and for other purposes with relation to the same Company.

cxxxviii. An Act for making a Railway from the North-eastern Railway at Richmond to Reeth in the north riding of the county of York; and for other purposes.

cxxxix. An Act for better supplying with Water the borough of Truro in the county of Cornwall.

cxl. An Act for the conversion of the Mortgages of the Hereford, Hay, and Brecon Railway Company into Debenture Stock; and for other purposes relating to the same Company.

cxli. An Act for enabling the Festiniog Railway Company to widen and improve their railway, and to raise further money; and for other purposes.

cxlii. An Act to give further time for the completion of Brean Down Harbour, and for the compulsory purchase of lands for the Brean Down Docks; and for other purposes.

cxliii. An Act for making a Railway from Princes Risborough in the county of Buckingham to Watlington in the county of Oxford; and for other purposes.

cxliv. An Act to create and incorporate a Public Trust for supplying Water to the city of Edinburgh, town and port of Leith, town of Portobello, and districts and places adjacent; to transfer to the Trust the undertaking and powers of the Edinburgh Water Company; and for other purposes.

cxlv. An Act for vesting the undertaking of the Swansea Vale and Neath and Brecon Junction Railway Company in the Neath and Brecon Railway Company; for suspending legal proceedings against the Neath and Brecon Railway Company; for converting the mortgage and other debts into debenture stock; for raising money, and regulating the capital of that Company; and for other purposes.

cxlvi. An Act for making a railway from the Ely, Haddenham, and Sutton Railway at Haddenham to the Great Eastern Railway at Longstanton; and for other purposes.

cxlvii. An Act to make better provision for the Local Management of the borough of Sligo; and for dissolving the Town and Harbour Commissioners of Sligo, and vesting in the Corporation of the borough the powers of the Town Commissioners and incorporating a new body of Harbour Commissioners; and for empowering the Corporation to construct Waterworks and supply Water, and to acquire Gasworks and supply Gas; and for other purposes.

cxlviii. An Act to incorporate a Company for constructing Docks, Warehouses, and other works in the parish of Holyhead in the county of Anglesea; and for other purposes.

P. cxlix. An Act to confirm Provisional Orders under "The Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1863," and the Acts amending the same.

P. cl. An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders under "The Local Government Act, 1858," relating to the districts of Aberystwith, Ashton-under-Lyne, Bath, Cleckheaton, Crompton, Newport (Monmouthshire), Reading, Southport, Stalybridge, and Weston-super-Mare.

cli. An Act to authorize the abandonment of a certain portion of the railways authorized by the Ellesmere and Glyn Valley Railway Act, 1866, and an extension of time for the compulsory purchase of lands and the completion of other portions of the said railways; and for other purposes.

clii. An Act for making a Railway from Callington to Calstock in the county of Cornwall, and for other purposes.

cliii. An Act to authorize the Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway Company to raise a sum of money for their undertaking; and for other purposes.

cliv. An Act for conferring further powers upon the Furness Railway Company for the construction of Works and the acquisition of Lands, and otherwise in relation to their undertaking; and for other purposes.

clv. An Act to extend the time for the purchase of lands for, and completion of, the Belgravia and South Kensington New Road; and for other purposes.

clvi. An Act to authorize the construction of a Pier at Portobello in the county of Edinburgh.

clvii. An Act for making and maintaining a Market in Saint Luke, Chelsea, in the county of Middlesex; and for other purposes.

P. clviii. An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under "The General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862," relating to the Burgh of Broughty Ferry.

P. clix. An Act to authorize the inclosure of certain lands in pursuance of a report of the Inclosure Commissioners for England and Wales.

PRIVATE ACTS,

PRINTED BY THE QUEEN'S PRINTER,

AND WHEREOF THE PRINTED COPIES MAY BE GIVEN IN EVIDENCE.

1. An Act to authorize the exchange of parts of the entailed estate of Novar, in the counties of Ross and Elgin, for parts of the entailed estates of Contullich and Culcairn and the fee-simple lands of Inchcoulter, in the county of Ross.
2. An Act for making better provision respecting the disposition of the estate of the late Joseph Crossley of Halifax, deceased; and for other purposes.
3. An Act for authorizing the raising of Money on the security of part of the Settled Estates of the Marquis Camden for the purpose of the erection of a Mansion House thereon; and for other purposes.
4. An Act for confirming certain Building Leases granted by the Right Honorable Frederick Lord Calthorpe, Baron Calthorpe of Calthorpe in the county of Norfolk, deceased, of various parts of an estate situate in the parish of Edgbaston in the county of Warwick, and for altering the present powers of leasing over the same and other estates comprised in a re-settlement of the same dated the eighteenth day of July one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four; and for other purposes.
5. An Act for authorizing the leasing, selling, exchanging, and partitioning of Estates in the parish of Manchester in the county of Lancaster.
6. An Act to incorporate the Trustees of the deceased John Ferguson, of Cairnbrock, under the name of "The Ferguson Bequest Fund," and to enlarge the powers of said Trustees, the better to enable them to carry out the designs of the deceased.
7. An Act for enabling the Right Honorable Charles John Earl of Shrewsbury, and other the persons for the time being entitled to the estates annexed to the earldom of Shrewsbury, to make arrangements with the persons claiming to be entitled to or interested in lands at Oxton, in the county of Chester, under certain leases granted by Charles fifteenth Earl of Shrewsbury, John sixteenth Earl of Shrewsbury, and Bertram Arthur seventeenth Earl of Shrewsbury, respecting the premises comprised in such leases, and for annexing lands at Oxton to the earldom of Shrewsbury; and for other purposes.
8. An Act to authorize the Wardens and Commonalty of the Mystery of Grocers of the City of London, as Trustees under the will of Dame Margaret Slaney, deceased, to consent to the union of the Benefices of Allhallows Staining and Saint Olave Hart Street in the City of London, and for enabling the Trustees to carry into more complete effect the trusts of the will, and for facilitating such union.
9. An Act for authorizing mortgages of certain Real Estates in Manchester and Salford, in the county of Lancaster, subject to the will of the late Harriott Williams, deceased, and for other purposes, and of which the short title is "Williams's Estate Act, 1869."
10. An Act for authorizing the Trustees of the settlement dated the 5th day of June 1830, executed in accordance with the directions contained in the will of William Wilshere, Esquire, deceased, to pull down part of the family mansion called the Frythe, and to rebuild the same, and to make alterations in the remaining part of the mansion, and to build cottages on tho settled estates, and for authorizing the granting of building leases and sales of parts of the settled estates, and for obtaining the enfranchisement of copyholds; and for other purposes.

PRIVATE ACTS,

NOT PRINTED.

11. An Act to relieve Alexander Hugh Bruce, of Kennet, in the county of Clackmannan, Esquire, and the heirs for the time being of the body of Michael first Lord Balfour of Burley, in the Peerage of Scotland, from the effect of the attainder of Robert fifth Lord Balfour of Burley.
12. An Act to confer upon Pandeli Ralli all the rights, privileges, and capacities of a Natural-born Subject of Her Majesty the Queen.

[INDEX.

INDEX

TO

HANSARD'S PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES,

IN THE FIRST SESSION OF

THE TWENTIETH PARLIAMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

32° & 33° VICTORIA.

1868-9.

Explanation of the Abbreviations.

In Bills, Read 1°, 2°, 3°, or 1^{a}, 2^{a}, 3^{a}, Read the First, Second, or Third Time.—In Speeches, 1R., 2R., 3R., Speech delivered on the First, Second, or Third Reading.—Amendt., Amendment.—Res., Resolution.—Comm., Committee.—Re-Comm., Re-Committal.—Rep., Report.—Consid., Consideration.—Adj., Adjournment or Adjourned.—cl., Clause.—add. cl., Additional Clause.—neg., Negatived.—M. Q., Main Question.—O. Q., Original Question.—O. M., Original Motion.—P. Q., Previous Question.—R. P., Report Progress.—A., Ayes.—N., Noes.—M., Majority.—1st. Div., 2nd. Div., First or Second Division.—l., Lords.—c., Commons.

When in this Index a * is added to the Reading of a Bill, it indicates that no Debate took place upon that stage of the measure.

When in the Text or in the Index a Speech is marked thus *, it indicates that the Speech is reprinted from a Pamphlet or some authorized Report.

When in the Index a † is prefixed to a Name or an Office (the Member having accepted or vacated office during the Session) and to Subjects of Debate thereunder, it indicates that the Speeches on those Subjects were delivered in the speaker's private or official character, as the case may be.

Some subjects of debate have been classified under the following "General Headings:"—ARMY — NAVY — INDIA — IRELAND — SCOTLAND — PARLIAMENT — POOR LAW—POST OFFICE—METROPOLIS—CHURCH OF ENGLAND—EDUCATION—CRIMINAL LAW.

ABERCORN, Duke of Ireland — Religious Disturbances, [197] 1226
    State of, [196] 727
  Ireland—Crime, Address for Returns, [194] 949
  Irish Church, [196] 1581; 2R. [197] 184, 201, 207

ABINGER, Lord
  Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [194] 1759; Comm. cl. 16, Amendt. [196] 447; cl. 37, Amendt. 461; Report, 1283; cl. 18, Amendt. 1288
  Salmon Fishery Act (Scotland), [197] 1753
  Scotland — Salmon Fisheries, Motion for a Return, [194] 1082

Abyssinian Expedition
  Advances by Indian Government, Question, Mr. Fawcett; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Feb 18, [194] 110; Observations, Mr. White, Sir George Jenkinson; Reply, Sir Stafford Northcote Mar 4, 631
  Question, Viscount Enfield; Answer, Mr. Childers April 2, [195] 30
    Parl. Papers—
    Report of Mr. Rassam . . . . [4088]
    Lord Napier's Explanation . . . 92
    Report of Consul Cameron . . . [4089]
    (See SUPPLY—WAYS and MEANS)

Abyssinian War—Cost of the War
  Question, Mr. Candlish; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 4, [196] 106

[cont.

Abyssinian War—cont.
Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed, "to inquire into the causes of the great excess of cost in prosecuting the War with Abyssinia over the estimate submitted to Parliament" (Mr. Candlish) June 8, [196] 1439 ; after debate, Motion agreed to Moved, "That the Select Committee on the Abyssinian War do consist of nineteen Members" (Mr. Candlish) June 21, [197] 398
Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) ; Motion withdrawn ; original Question put, and agreed to ; Mr. Baxter nominated one of the Members of the said Committee
Moved, "That Sir Stafford Northcote be one other Member of the said Committee ;" A. 26, N. 5 ; M. 21 ; [House counted out]
Moved, "That Sir Stafford Northcote be one other Member of the Select Committee on the Abyssinian War" June 24, 566
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the Order [21st June] that the Select Committee on the Abyssinian War do consist of nineteen Members be discharged" (Mr. Craufurd) ; Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and agreed to ; main Question put, and agreed to Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Candlish (Chairman), Major Anson, Colonel Barttelot, Mr. Baxter, Captain Beaumont, Mr. Christopher Denison, Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Eastwick, Lord Elcho, Sir James Elphinstone, Sir John Hay, Mr. Holms, Mr. Howes, Mr. Mundella, Sir Stafford Northcote, Sir Patrick O'Brien, Mr. Seely, Mr. Charles Turner, and Mr. White
Report of Select Committee July 30 (Parl. P. No. 380)

Accounts, &c. Presentation Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Ordered* July 22
Read 1º* July 26 [Bill 240]
Read 2º* July 29
Committee*; Report July 30
Read 3º* July 31
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 2 (No. 253)
Read 2ª* August 5
Committee*; Report August 6
Read 3ª* August 7
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 86]

ACLAND, Mr. T. D., Devonshire, N.
Agriculture, Department of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 488, 510
Army Estimates—Yeomanry, [196] 1576
Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1313 ; cl. 2, 1321
Deanery of Lichfield and Rectory of Tatenhill, [194] 833 ; [195] 676
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1414 ; Comm. cl. 15, [196] 1766 ; cl. 19, 1770, 1771 ; cl. 29, 1774 ; cl. 41, 1780
Endowed Schools (No. 2), Comm. [198] 1467
St. James and St. Paul's, Lancashire, [195] 576
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 190
Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 967
Poor Law Commission, [197] 1691
Telegraph, Consid. [198] 975
Tithe Commission, [197] 1684

ADDERLEY, Right Hon. Sir C. B., Staffordshire, N.
British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1122
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 90, Amendt. [197] 1756, 1758
Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1223, 1227
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 15, [196] 1766 ; cl. 29, 1775
Habitual Criminals, Comm. [198] 1260, 1264
Hudson's Bay Company, [195] 680
Newfoundland Confederation, [194] 1091
New Zealand, Affairs of, [198] 486
South Sea Islands—Slave Trade from the, [197] 647
Supply—Colonial Grants in Aid, [198] 954, 960
Emigration, [198] 961
West Indies, The, [197] 1889

Adjutants (Jury) Exemption Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Stratheden)
l. Presented ; read 1ª* April 26 (No. 75)
Read 2ª* August 5
Order for Committee discharged August 6

Admiralty District Registries Bill
(Mr. Graves, Viscount Sandon, Mr. Rathbone)
c. Ordered ; read 1º* July 20 [Bill 229]
Bill withdrawn* July 28

Admiralty Jurisdiction (County Courts) Bill
(Mr. Norwood, Mr. Headlam, Mr. Candlish)
c. Ordered ; read 1º* Feb 17 [Bill 2]
Bill withdrawn* May 11

Adulteration of Food or Drink Act (1860) Amendment Bill
(Mr. Dixon, Mr. Kinnaird, Mr. Goldney)
c. Ordered ; read 1º* April 13 [Bill 78]
Bill withdrawn* July 21

ADVOCATE, The Lord (Right Hon. J. MONCREIFF), Glasgow and Aberdeen Universities
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), 2R. [197] 859
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1410 ; cl. 54, 1596
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 122, [197] 1765
Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland), Leave, [195] 755 ; Comm. [197] 160
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1726, 2068 ; Nomination of Committee, [196] 634
Game Laws (Scotland) [Mr. M'Lagan], Leave, [194] 536 ; 2R. [197] 505
Game Laws (Scotland) (No. 2), 2R. [198] 883, 884
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 379, 397
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 131, 277; 3R. 1010
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [198] 362 ; cl. 1, 366
Parliament—Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 192

[cont.

Advocate, The Lord—cont.
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1711, 1732
198] Comm. 234, 807, 815; cl. 1, 819; Amendt. 823; cl. 2, Amendt. 824, 831, 835, 1104, 1107; cl. 4, 1112, 1114; cl. 6, 1116; cl. 8, 1118; cl. 9, 1119; cl. 11, 1121; cl. 12, 1122; cl. 14, ib.; cl. 17, 1123; cl. 19, 1124, 1125; cl. 24, 1241, 1375, 1376, 1379, 1394; cl. 59, 1443, 1446; cl. 66, 1446, 1448; add. cl. 1450; Consid. add. cl. 1452, 1453, 1465; 3R. 1495, 1497, 1535
Pharmacy Act Amendment, Comm. [195] 1934
Poor Law (Scotland) Act Amendment, Leave, [195] 756; [198] 1253
Scotland—Assessments, [194] 1188
Education, [194] 1904
Sheriff Courts, [196] 1635
Scotland—Endowed Schools, &c., Motion for a Commission, [196] 1444
Scotland—Faggot Votes for Scotch Counties, Motion for a Return, [194] 1279
Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 529
Speaker, Election of a, [194] 10
Supply—Report, [198] 694

Agar-Ellis, Hon. L. G. F., Kilkenny Co.
Ireland—Ancient Monuments, Preservation of, [195] 1098
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 2033; Comm. cl. 26, 1628; cl. 58, [196] 395

Aggravated Assaults Amendment Bill
[h.l.] (The Marquess Townshend)
l. Presented; read 1ª* April 20 (No. 66)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" May 11, [196] 564
Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day six months") (The Earl of Morley); after short debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c.; resolved in the negative; Bill to be read 2ª on this day six months

Agricultural Labour Commission
Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 2, [194] 484

Agricultural Labourers—Education
Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 25, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the education of agricultural labourers is in general in so unsatisfactory a condition that immediate legislation upon the subject is imperatively demanded; this House therefore thinks that the Government ought to legislate upon the subject during the next Session of Parliament" (Mr. Fawcett), [197] 582; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Agricultural Statistics, 1869
Question, Mr. Read; Answer, Mr. Bright Mar 23, [194] 2001
Moved, "That the Agricultural Returns, now made annually, should, after this year, be discontinued, and collected every fifth year in the place of annually" (Mr. Pell) April 13, [195] 753; after short debate, Debate adjourned
Debate resumed June 30, [197] 823; after debate, Motion withdrawn
Question, Mr. Read; Answer, Mr. Bright May 28, [196] 938
Parl. Papers—
England . . . . [4200]
Ireland . . . . [4113]
Labourers' Earnings, 1869-70 . . 371

Agriculture, Department of
Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the action with reference to Agriculture of various Public Authorities, with a view to consider the expediency of recommending that some one Department be made responsible for dealing with administrative and legislative questions affecting Agriculture" (Mr. Acland) Mar 2, [194] 488; after debate, Motion withdrawn
Employment of Women and Children in, Question, Mr. Akroyd; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 13, [195] 678
Second Report—Parl. P. [4202]

Airlie, Earl of Children, &c. Protection, 2R. Amendt. [197] 1865
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 30, [197] 1884
Habitual Criminals, 2R. [194] 708
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [194] 1763; [195] 569; Comm. cl. 1, [196] 446; cl. 20, 456; cl. 68, 464; Report, 1282, 1284
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 2R. [195] 1686
Scotland—Hypothec, Law of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1178, 1652

Akroyd, Mr. E., Halifax
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1519
Beerhouses, &c. 2R. [195] 1776
Employment of Women and Children in Agriculture, [195] 678
Wine Duties, Reduction of, [197] 1270
Workshops Regulation Act in Birmingham, [195] 583

Albemarle, Earl of
Justices of the Peace Qualification, 2R. [197] 507, 511, 513

Allen, Mr. W. S., Newcastle-under-Lyne
Army—Cupping in the, [195] 1097
Irish Church, 3R. [196] 1006
Museums, &c., Opening of, on Sundays, [196] 1268

Amcotts, Colonel W. E., Leicestershire, Mid.
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1816
Prisons (Religious Instruction), Motion for Returns, [198] 351

Amphlett, Mr. R. P., Worcestershire, E.
Evidence Amendment, 2R. [195] 1813
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 13, [198] 1281

Ancient Monuments, Preservation of Question, Sir Harry Verney; Answer, Mr. Layard April 2, [195] 27
(Ireland), Question, Mr. Agar-Ellis; Answer, Mr. Layard April 19, 1098

ANDERSON, Mr. G., Glasgow
Army Estimates—General Officers' Pay, [197] 148
Land Forces, [194] 1164
195] Bankruptcy, 2R. 168
196] Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. 1211, 1212; cl. 15, Amendt. 1224; cl. 30, 1403; cl. 49, Amendt. 1417; cl. 54, Amendt. 1593, 1597; cl. 88, Amendt. 1606; cl. 130, 1909
197] 328; add. cl. 419
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 572
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 423; cl. 5, 575; Consid. cl. 5, 767
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. cl. 1, [198] 366
Money Laws (Ireland), 2R. [197] 480
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 1, [198] 822; 3R. 1497
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 533
Scotland—Poor Law Amendment, [198] 1253
Supply—Foreign Office, [197] 1679
Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 677
House of Commons Offices, [197] 1477
Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 510
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 664

ANNESLEY, Hon. Colonel H., Cavan Co.
Ireland—Fenianism, [194] 1659, 1904
Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1489

Annuity Tax (Edinburgh) Bill
(Mr. M'Laren, Mr. Miller, Mr. Crum-Ewing)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. M'Laren) Feb 24, [194] 280; Bill ordered, after short debate
Read 1° * Feb 25 [Bill 19]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 30, [197] 838
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Sir Graham Montgomery), 843; after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 151, N. 142; M. 9; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2°
Committee *; Report July 6 [Bill 198]
Committee * (on re-comm.)—R.P. July 20

ANSTRUTHER, Sir R., Fifeshire
Army—Branding Deserters, [196] 101
Army Estimates—Buildings and Repairs, [195] 670
Martial Law, [195] 660
Militia, &c. [196] 1574
Carriage of Live Stock, [194] 630
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 438; Comm. cl. 60, [197] 1529; cl. 63, Amendt. 1531, 1533, 1534; cl. 122, 1765; add. cl. 1770
Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee, [196] 632
India—Troops in Bhootan, [198] 1144
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1722, 1733; Comm. [198] 812; cl. 1, Amendt. 817, 821; cl. 2, 824, 1097; cl. 9, 1119; cl. 17, 1123, 1463

[cont.

ANSTRUTHER, Sir R.—cont.
Scotland—Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, Motion for a Return, [194] 1272
Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 519
Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 511, 513
Report, [198] 696
Stationery Office, [197] 1700

ANTROBUS, Mr. E., Wilton
Salisbury Magistrates, [196] 1620

ARCHDALL, Capt. M. E., Fermanagh Co.
Incumbered Estates Court, Ireland—Earl of Lanesborough's Estate, [195] 518
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1277
Ireland—Tarleton, Captain, Assassination of, [195] 1849
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 877; cl. 18, 1479, 1483, 1485

ARGYLL, Duke of (Secretary of State for India)
Government of India Act Amendment, [195] 222; 1R. 1069, 1082, 1087; 2R. 1834, 1841; Report, [196] 691, 697, 699, 702
Governor General of India, 2R. [194] 1055, 1078; Comm. [195] 130
India—Bengal Bank at Bombay, [197] 513
Railways—Financial Statement, [198] 521, 545, 554
Weights and Measures, Address for Papers, [198] 796
197] Irish Church, 2R. 70, 197, 201, 206, 207, 288; Comm. cl. 14, 892, 896, 899; cl. 27, 1017, 1021; cl. 41, 1161; cl. 68, 1242, 1248; Report, 1502; Commons Amendts. [198] 289, 292, 294
Life Peerages, Report, [196] 1370, 1373
Lord Napier's Annuity—Bill withdrawn, [194] 932
194] Parochial Schools (Scotland), 1R. 284; 2R. 1759, 1777, 1782
195] 569, 570, 1574, 1575
196] Comm. 432, 436, 438, 443; cl. 1, 444, 445, 447; cl. 19, 448; cl. 20, ib.; cl. 21, 460; cl. 24, Amendt. 461; cl. 37, ib.; cl. 52, 462; cl. 68, 463, 465; cl. 70, 466; Report, Amendt. 1281, 1283, 1284; cl. 18, 1288; cl. 28, Amendt. ib., 1291, 1293
198] Commons Amendts. 1470, 1474
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 2R. [195] 1680, 1691
Scotland — Hypothec, Law of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1183, 1184
Sea Birds Preservation, Comm. add. cl. [196] 81
Tenure (Ireland), Comm. [195] 1551

ARMITSTEAD, Mr. G., Dundee
India—Calcutta Port Dues, [198] 1091
Merchant Seamen and Greenwich Hospital, [196] 745

ARMY
Aldershot—Drill, Brigade and Divisional Field Days, Question, Mr. O'Reilly; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 19, [198] 156; Question, Lord Eustace Cecil; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 22, 454

[cont.

Army—cont.

Artillery

Whitworth Gun, Question, Mr. T. Hughes; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 18, [194] 1660

Small Arms

Breech-Loading Rifles, Report of Special Committee—Parl. P. . . . . . [4119]

Correspondence . . . . [4091]

Committees on New Arms, Question, Observations, Colonel Barttelot; Reply, Mr. Cardwell; short debate thereon July 22, [198] 493

Henry-Martini Rifle, Questions, Mr. Muntz, Lord Elcho; Answers, Captain Vivian August 6, [198] 1370

India, Rifles for, Question, Mr. Dixon; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 18, [194] 1653

Ball Ammunition in Barracks, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Mr. Cardwell August 5, [198] 1292

Branding Deserters, Question, Lord Garlies; Answer, Sir Colman O'Loghlen April 12, [195] 573; Question, Sir Robert Anstruther; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 4, [196] 101; Question, Lord Garlies; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 11, 573

Canada—Reduction of Forces, Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 13, [196] 747

Canteens—Sale of Wines and Spirits, Question, Mr. R. Shaw; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 16, [194] 1464

Cartridge Making—Mr. Groundwater's Invention, Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 1, [194] 410

Chaplains, Reduction of Army, Question, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 13, [195] 678

Chelmsford—Rifle Range at, Question, Lord Eustace Cecil; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 6, [196] 263

China and Japan—Allowances to Troops in, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 16, [194] 1463 (Parl. P. No. 133)

Commissions, Examinations for, Question, Colonel Barttelot; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 4, [194] 629

Concentration of Army Offices—Dover House, Question, Mr. R. Shaw; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 26, [195] 1577

Courts Martial Commission

Second Report, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 10, [196] 1495

Question, Sir John Pakington; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 20, [198] 324

Parl. Papers—

First Report . . . . [4114]

Second Report . . . . . . [4114-I]

Crimea—British Graves in the, Question, Mr. Stopford; Answer, Mr. Otway May 3, [196] 17; May 13, 747

Crimean Prize Money, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 12, [197] 1669

Cupping in the, Question, Mr. W. S. Allen; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 19, [195] 1097

Fines for Drunkenness—Responsibility of Company Officers, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 7, [196] 1295

[cont.

Army—cont.

Fortifications

Armament of Sea and Land Defences, Observations, Lord Garlies June 17, [197] 141

Gun Shields—Moncrieff Gun-Carriages, Observations, Captain F. E. B. Beaumont; Reply, Mr. Cardwell; short debate thereon June 10, [196] 1570 — Coalhouse Fort, Question, Captain F. E. B. Beaumont; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 29, [198] 895

Report of Committee on—Parl. P. [4092]

Suspension of Expenditure, Question, Mr. Fawcett; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 6, [195] 232

Parl. Papers—

Report of Committee . . . . [4135]

Expenditure 311, 430

Statement 330

Gunpowder Magazines at Upnor, Question, Mr. P. Wykeham-Martin; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 5, [197] 1168

Half-Pay List — Case of Captain Rintoul, Questions, Mr. Stacpoole; Answers, Mr. Cardwell May 7, [196] 389

Household Cavalry—The Cornetcies, Question, General Forester; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 11, [196] 572

India

Cavalry Regiments for India—Case of Major ——, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 19, [198] 154

Colonels in India, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 15, [197] 1888

Indian Officers, Return of (Parl. Paper, No. 440), Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Feb 23, [194] 204

Medal for Service in India—Umbeyla Campaign, Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 28, [197] 624—Bhootan, Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff July 8, 1424

Relief of Regiments in India, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Captain Vivian July 8, [197] 1421

3rd West India Regiment, Question, Mr. Maguire; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 19, [194] 1789

Irish Militia; Training of the, Questions, Colonel French, Colonel Forde; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 19, [194] 125

Japan—Officers of the Army in, Observations, Colonel North; Reply, Mr. Stansfeld; short debate thereon July 29, [198] 899 (Parl. P. No. 133)

Lunatics—Murder of Serjeant Barnes, Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 26, [195] 1576

MacLoughlin, Case of Dr., Question, Mr. Brady; Answer, Captain Vivian July 29, [198] 896

Mauritius—Troops at the, Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Captain Vivian June 11, [196] 1590

Military Appointments, Question, Sir Patrick O'Brien; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 26, [194] 355

Military Force of the Kingdom, Observations, Lord Monck; Reply, Lord Northbrook; debate thereon April 23, [195] 1420

[cont.

ARMY—cont.

Military Prison at Dublin, Question, Mr. Kirk; Answer, Mr. Vivian July 20, [198] 325

Military Train, Question, Mr. W. F. Cowper; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 20, [195] 1200

Militia Adjutants—See title Army—Adjutancies of Militia

Militia, Armament of—The Snider Rifle, Question, Mr. Collins; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 23, [194] 2002

Militia and Reserve Forces—Snider-Enfield Rifles, Question, and Motion for, "Return of the number of Snider-Enfield Rifles converted, the number issued, and the number in store" (Major Walker) April 27, [195] 1759; after short debate, Motion agreed to

Militia Officers — Honorary Rank, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 13, [196] 749

Militia Quartermasters—Retiring Allowances, Question, Mr. W E. Price; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 4, [194] 630

Militia—West Kent, Question, Mr. Whatman; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 13, [195] 678

Parl. Papers—
Militia Regiments Returns . . . 265
Militia Regiments Foreign Service . 318

New Zealand War Medal, Question, Viscount Enfield; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 26, [194] 352

Non-Purchase Corps, Promotion in, Question, Mr. Eykyn; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 30, [198] 995

Ordnance Survey

(England), Mining Districts, Question, Sir Lawrence Palk; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 23, [194] 1999

(Scotland), Question, Mr. A. Johnston; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 30, [195] 1974

The 6-inch Scale, Question, Mr. Hoskyns; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 1, [197] 946
Report for 1868—Parl. P. . . . [4124]

Patriotic Fund Commission — Report of Executive Committee, Question, Mr. Locke King; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 10, [196] 469

Pay of Regimental Colonels—King's Dragoon Guards and 1st Royals, Question, Mr. H. R. Brand; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 22, [195] 1362

Retirement of Officers — Committee of 1865, Question, Mr. Henderson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 19, [195] 1095

Royal Horse Artillery—C. Brigade, Question, Mr. Walsh; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 21, [197] 359

Storage of Saltpetre, Question, Mr. Alderman Lawrence; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 26, [195] 1584

Volunteer Capitation Grant, Question, Mr. Simonds; Answer, Mr. Cardwell June 7, [196] 1298 (Parl. P. No. 142)

Volunteers—Ammunition for Galloway Rifles, Question, Lord Garlies; Answer, Captain Vivian June 11, [196] 1591

Wightman—Case of Ensign, Question, Major Dickson; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 7, [196] 388

[cont.

ARMY—cont.

Wimbledon Review, Question, Lord Elcho; Answer, Captain Vivian August 9, [198] 1493

Parl. Papers—
Report on 432
Manchester, &c. 173

Yeomanry Cavalry, Question, Mr. Neville-Grenville; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 22, [194] 158

Army—Adjutancies of Militia

Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 17, To leave out from "That," and add "the declaration which has to be signed by incoming Adjutants of Militia ought to be annulled" (Mr. Sartoris), [197] 138; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Army—Buckingham Palace Guard Room

Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 17, To leave out from "That," and add "an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, that She will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House, Copy or Extracts of Correspondence between the Board of Works, the War Office, and the Royal Engineer Department of the Horse Guards, which has taken place on the subject of Buckingham Palace Guard Room, since August last" (Viscount Bury), [197] 137; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Army—Clerks of the Works and Royal Engineers

Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 17, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the Clerks of the Works and Clerks of the Royal Engineer Department are entitled to or should be granted the same rights and privileges, according to their relative rank, as are extended to other non-combatants in the Military Service" (Mr. Montagu Chambers), [197] 134; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Army—Government of the Army—Commander-in-Chief and the Secretary of State

Question, Lord Elcho; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Feb 23, [194] 203; Question, Mr. White; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 4, 625

Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 11, To leave out from "That" and add "in order to promote greater economy and efficiency, the Departments of the Horse Guards and the War Office should be placed under the control of one responsible Minister" (Mr. White), [194] 1094; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn (Parl. P. No. 75)

Army—Major M'Gwire's Camping System

Question, Mr. Knight; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 1, [197] 944

Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 26, To leave out from "That" and add "an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, that She will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House, a Copy of all Reports and Correspondence on the subject of Major M'Gwire's Camping System, from the first Report by Lord W. Paulett, in 1864, to the present date" (Mr. Knight), [198] 720; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Army—Military Labour

Amendt. on Committee of Supply April 12, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, an authorized organization should be adopted for extending the system of 'Military labour to Military works' to all stations of Her Majesty's Army" (Mr. Hanbury Tracy), [195] 642; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Question, Mr. Hanbury Tracy; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 26, [198] 684

Aldershot Barracks, Question, Mr. Hanbury Tracy; Answer, Captain Vivian June 3, [196] 1209

Army of Reserve

Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 10, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the establishment of a sufficient and reliable Army Reserve is a matter of urgent need" (Lord Elcho), [196] 1499; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after long debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Army—School of Musketry at Hythe

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for a Report on the sanitary state of the School of Musketry at Hythe, the number of officers reported sick between the 1st of March and the 30th of April 1869, and cost of maintaining the establishment of the School of Musketry there for one year" (The Lord Kinnaird) July 12, [197] 1594; after short debate, Motion agreed to (Parl. P. No. 203)

Asia, Central

Observations, Mr. Gladstone; Reply, Mr. Eastwick April 8, [195] 362; Question, Observations, Mr. Eastwick; Reply, Mr. Grant Duff; debate thereon July 9, [197] 1544

Assessed Rates Bill

(Mr. Goschen, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. John Bright)

c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Goschen) Feb 25, [194] 315; Bill ordered, after short debate

Read 1°* Feb 26 [Bill 21]

Question, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Mar 3, 556; Question, Mr. Norwood; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 4, 628; Question, Lord Henley; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 15, [195] 842

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 7, [196] 1299; after long debate, Bill read 2°

Committee*; Report June 8 [Bill 149]

197] Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. June 21, 360

. Committee; Report June 24, 519 [Bill 178]

. Considered July 2, 1082

Read 3°* July 5

l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Kimberley) July 6 (No. 174)

. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 13, 1750; after short debate, Bill read 2ª

Committee*; Report July 20

Read 3ª* July 23

Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 41]

Assessed Taxes, Collection of

Question, Mr. Charles Forster; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 5, [194] 766; Question, Mr. Monk; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 11, 1086

Assessed Tax Papers, 1869-70

Questions, Sir George Jenkinson; Answers, The Chancellor of the Exchequer August 4, [198] 1250

ASSHETON, Mr. R., Clitheroe

Agricultural Returns, Res. [197] 830

Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 572

ATHLUMNEY, Lord

Irish Church, Comm. cl. 28, [197] 1053; Commons Amendts. [198] 433

Tenure (Ireland), 2R. [195] 1184; Comm. 1567

ATTORNEY GENERAL, The (Sir R. P. Collier), Plymouth

194] Bankruptcy, Leave, 776, 795, 1186

195] 2R. 142, 166, 169

196] Comm. cl. 4, 1211; cl. 5, 1212; cl. 6, 1213, . 1215, 1216; cl. 7, 1217, 1218; cl. 8, 1219; . cl. 13, 1220; cl. 14, 1222; Amendt. 1223; . cl. 15, 1225; cl. 32, 1402; cl. 36, 1403; . cl. 43, 1404; cl. 46, 1405, 1412, 1414, 1415, . 1416; cl. 47, 1416, 1417; cl. 49, ib.; cl. 53, . 1418, 1592; cl. 54, 1596, 1597; cl. 59, 1598, . 1603; cl. 91, 1898, 1899; cl. 126, 1902, . 1903, 1904, 1905; cl. 127, Amendt. 1906; . cl. 129, 1907

197] cl. 130, Amendt. 314; cl. 131, 414; Amendt. . 415, 416; add. cl. 417, 418, 419, 420

198] Lords Amendts. cl. 6, Amendt. 1093, 1094; . cl. 14, 1095

Beverley Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 559

Bridgwater Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 25

Coronation Oath, [198] 894, 907, 908

Corrupt Practices Commissions, [195] 1975

County Courts, 2R. [194] 1571

Election Commissions, [196] 750

Election Petition Judgments, [194] 765

Evidence Amendment, 2R. [195] 1808

[cont.

ATTORNEY GENERAL, The—cont.
195] Imprisonment for Debt, 2R. 178
197] Comm. cl. 4, 421 ; Amendt. 428, 429 ; cl. 5, Amendt. 430, 575 ; cl. (D) 12, Amendt. 578, 579 ; cl. 14, 580 ; cl. 18, 581 ; Consid. add. cl. 760 ; cl. 5, 761, 764, 766, 767
Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal, [197] 1526 ; Comm. 1527
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [195] 999 ; cl. 12, 1111
Juries, Special and Common, [194] 352
Law of Forfeiture on Conviction of Felony, [197] 1542
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 623, 627
Norwich Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 3
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 197, 199
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, [194] 669
  Bridgwater Election, [194] 2000
  Drogheda Writ, [194] 151
  Youghal Election, New Writ, [195] 2070
Parliamentary Disqualification, [197] 351
Patent Laws, [194] 356
Patents for Inventions, Res. [196] 920
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 985
Stannaries, Leave, [194] 403
Statute Law, Revision of the, [194] 1653 ; Res. [196] 1254
Supply—British Museum, [198] 224

Attorneys and Solicitors Remuneration Bill (Mr. Rathbone, Mr. Morley, Mr. George Gregory)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * August 3 [Bill 260]

Audit of Public Accounts
Observations, Mr. Candlish ; Reply, Mr. Ayrton ; short debate thereon June 28, [197] 626
Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866, Observations, Mr. Hunt ; Reply, Mr. Candlish ; short debate thereon July 5, [197] 1190
Parl. Papers—
  First and Second Reports . . 87, 87-I
  Third Report 303, 303-I
  Fourth Report 356

Australia, Western—Emigration to Question, Mr. Alderman J. C. Lawrence ; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 5, [197] 1166

Australian Legislative Assembly — The O'Farrell Papers
Question, Mr. Newdegate ; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 19, [194] 1791
195] April 2, 30 ; Question, Mr. Newdegate ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 23, 1468 ; April 26, 1584
Order [6th April] for Address for Return relative to O'Farrell's crime read April 27, 1741 ; Moved, "That the said Order be discharged" (Mr. Monsell) ; after short debate, Question put ; A. 123, N. 15 ; M 108 ; Question, Mr. Newdegate ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 29, 1854 ; Question, Mr. Newdegate ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone ; long debate thereon April 30, 2064 ; Question, Observations, Mr. Newdegate ; Reply, Mr. Monsell ; short debate thereon May 3, [196] 17

Austria—Commercial Treaty with
Question, Mr. E. Egerton ; Answer, Mr. Otway May 13, [196] 970

AYRTON, Mr. A. S. (Secretary to the Treasury), Tower Hamlets
Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1438
Army—Crimean Prize Money, [197] 1669
Assessed Taxes, [194] 556
Audit of Public Accounts, [197] 629
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 54, [196] 1594 ; cl. 88, 1606 ; cl. 118, 1900 ; cl. 129, 1906 ; cl. 130, Amendt. 1907 ; [197] 317, 327
Civil Service Estimates, [195] 27
Clearing Vessels at the Custom House, [197] 1754
Consecration Fees, [194] 309
Consolidated Fund (£17,100,000), 2R: [195] 1648
Convention of Paris, Motion for Papers, [196] 1446
Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), 2R. [194] 775
Court of Probate (Registrar Clerks), [196] 1495
Courts of Justice—Carey Street Site, [198] 1144
Currency Laws, [198] 1054
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. add. cl. [196] 857
Customs, Clerks in the, [197] 624 ; [198] 1525
Dagenham Dock Company, [198] 1372
Dividends on Government Securities, [198] 800
Durham County Courts, [195] 976
Edmunds' Scandal, The, [196] 470
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 579
Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866, [197] 1193
Financial Statement—Assessed Taxes, [195] 479
Government of India Act Amendment, Comm. [198] 1364
Gravesend County Court, [195] 1579
Imperial Gas, Consid. Amendt. [195] 1792
Inclosure Awards (County Palatine of Durham), 2R. [194] 1894
Inclosure of Commons, [195] 976
Ireland—Questions, &c.
  Dublin (City) Election, [194] 832
  Fisheries, [197] 571
  Howth Harbour, [197] 948
  Maynooth College, [195] 51
  Medical and Educational Charges, [194] 304
  Salmon Fisheries, Shannon, [196] 743
  Salmon Passes on the Shannon, [197] 649
  Seizure of Fishing Smacks, [197] 948, 949
  Stationery Office, [196] 573
Libel, 2R. [194] 1616
Mail Contracts, Res. Amendt. [196] 1157
Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland), 2R. [197] 498
Metropolis Gas Bills, [194] 303
Metropolis—New Public Offices, [197] 1672
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 326, 334 ; Comm. cl. 22, 1056 ; cl. 34, 1056 ; add. cl. 1057, 1058, 1060 ; Consid. Amendt. 1127 ; 3R. 1338
Newspapers and the British Museum, [195] 1463
Newspapers, &c. Comm. [195] 1416, 1417
Newspapers, Registration, &c. of, [198] 560

[cont.

AYRTON, Mr. A. S.—cont.
  Park Lane and Piccadilly Thoroughfare, Motion for Papers, [195] 756
  Parliament—Easter Recess, [194] 556
    New Writs, [194] 16, 20
    Youghal Election, New Writ, [195] 2071
  Parliamentary Returns, [197] 1887
  Post Office—Foreign Mails, [194] 124
  Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 817, 818
  Registration (Ireland) Act, [194] 839
  Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1584
  Savings Banks, [196] 101
  Scotland—Ayrshire, Distributor of Stamps for, [198] 1144
    Portpatrick Harbour, [194] 1657; [195] 986
  Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1482
  Statute Law, Revision of the, Res. [196] 1252
  Sunday Trading, 2R. [194] 562; Comm. [195] 805
  Supply—Admiralty Court Registry (Ireland), [198] 911
    Board of Manufactures (Scotland), [198] 507
    Board of Trade, [197] 1682
    Civil Service Estimates, Vote on Account, [195] 522
    Common Law Courts, [198] 1002
    Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1468, 1470, 1471, 1473
    County Courts, [198] 908, 909
    Dublin Metropolitan Police, [198] 912
    Dundrum Criminal Lunatic Asylum, [198] 913
    Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1465
    Excesses on Grants, [194] 772
    Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 966, 967
    Four Courts Marshalsea Prison, [198] 913
    House of Commons Offices, [197] 1476, 1477, 1478
    House of Lords Offices, [197] 1475, 1476
    Landed Estates Court (Ireland), [198] 911
    Land Registry Office, [198] 909
    Learned Societies, [198] 504, 506
    Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 508, 509, 511, 512, 513
    Lunacy Commission, [197] 1685
    Miscellaneous Expenses, [198] 970, 972, 973, 974
    National Gallery, [198] 500, 503
    New Law Courts, [196] 1578
    Non-conforming Clergy, [198] 966
    Office of Woods, [197] 1701, 1703, 1704, 1705
    Patent Office, [197] 1686
    Poor Law Administration, [198] 507
    Post Office Packet Service, [194] 770, 771
    Probate Court and Registries, [197] 1211; [198] 909
    Public Buildings, [197] 676
    Public Offices Site, [197] 1201, 1205
    Public Works (Ireland), [197] 1460, 1462
    Public Works (Ireland) (Salaries), [198] 515, 745, 746
    Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Department, [197] 1711
    Rates on Government Property, [197] 1457, 1459
    Record Office, [197] 1693
    Relief of Distressed British Seamen, [198] 963
    Report, [194] 537; [198] 518, 519
[cont.

AYRTON, Mr. A. S.—cont.
    Stationery Office, [197] 1696, 1700
    Superannuation and Retired Allowances, [198] 962, 963
    Temporary Commissions, [198] 966
    Tithe Commission, [197] 1684
    Tonnage Bounties, &c. [198] 961
    Treasury, &c. Departments, [197] 1479
    Works, &c. [197] 1707, 1709
  Treasury Board, [194] 124
  Wine Duties, Reduction of, [197] 1271
  Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 129

AYTOUN, Mr. R. Sinclair, Kirkcaldy, &c.
  British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1103
  Canada—Intercolonial Railway, [196] 877
    Railway Loan, Res. [197] 1445
  Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan, 2R. [198] 1330
  Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee, [196] 633
  Game Laws (Scotland) [Mr. M'Lagan], 2R. [197] 504
  Gold Coinage—Melting of English Sovereigns, [198] 1527
  Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 397
  Ireland—Maynooth College, [194] 1465
  Irish Church, Comm. Instruction, [195] 847, 871, 877, 878; cl. 37, [196] 73; cl. 39, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 147, 267, 281; Amendt. 301, 308, 343
  Murphy's, Mr., Lectures, [195] 759
  Navy—Coal for the, [196] 879
  Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 811; cl. 2, 835, 1098; cl. 24, 1240; cl. 66, 1447
  Roman Catholic Charities, Motion for Returns, [198] 1029
  Supply—Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1472
    Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1444
    Missions and Embassies Abroad, [198] 948

BAGWELL, Mr. J., Clonmel
  Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. [198] 232
  Ireland—Stationery Office, [196] 573
    Tipperary, Extra Police in, [196] 744
  Ireland—O'Sullivan, Mr., Case of, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1169
  Irish Church, Comm. cl. 27, [195] 1860; cl. 32, [196] 34; cl. 58, 393; cl. 59, Amendt. 420; Consid. 764; Lords' Amendts. [198] 23
  O'Sullivan's Disability, [196] 185, 186; Leave, 192

Bahamas—Ecclesiastical Grants
  Question, Mr. Miall; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 12, [195] 581
    Copy of Act—(Parl. P. No. 407)

BAINES, Mr. E., Leeds
  Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1413
  China—Communication with, [198] 1032
  Education—Schools for Children of the Working Classes, [194] 1996
  Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 566
  Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 15, [196] 1767, 1768
[cont.

BAINES, Mr. E.—cont.
Factory Returns, [194] 202
Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1815
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. (D) 12, Amendt. [197] 578
India—China, Route to, [198] 799
Libel, Leave, [194] 276 ; 2R. 1599 ; [195] 757, 758
Museums, &c., Opening of, on Sundays, [196] 1278, 1279
Newspapers, Registration, &c. of, [198] 560
Post Office—Money Orders, [196] 13
Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 464
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 194
Telegraphs, [195] 845

BAKER, Mr. R. B. Wingfield, Essex, S.
Contagious Diseases (Animals), Comm. cl. 22, Amendt. [197] 1292 ; add. cl. 1771
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1394
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 23, [195] 1527
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 553

BALL, Right Hon. J. T., Dublin University
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [197] 1179
Ireland—Church Leases, [195] 1095, 1096
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1284
Ireland—Trinity College (Dublin), Res. [198] 1201
Irish Church, 2R. Motion for Adjournment,
194] 1758, 1791
195] Comm. cl. 2, 1002, 1019, 1022 ; cl. 10,
. 1103, 1105 ; cl. 13, 1126 ; cl. 14, Amendt.
. 1137, 1145, 1372 ; cl. 15, 1389, 1402,
. 1404 ; cl. 16, 1406 ; cl. 18, 1486, 1488 ;
. cl. 19, 1490 ; cl. 20, 1495, 1497 ; cl. 22,
. Amendt. 1506 ; cl. 23, 1523 ; cl. 24, Amendt.
. 1585 ; cl. 26, 1623 ; cl. 27, 1637, 1880 ;
. cl. 29, 1916
196] cl. 32, 33, 41 ; cl. 33, 61 ; cl. 61, 421 ; cl. 3,
. 423 ; Consid. 764 ; add. cl. 766, 767, 768,
. 771, 772 ; Amendt. 776, 778 ; *3R. 1028
197] Lords' Amendts. 1925, 1957, 1960, 1963,
. 1964, 1974, 1975, 1976 ; [198] 46, 99
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [198] 361 ; cl. 1, 365
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 223
Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1855
Real Property, Res. [196] 600
Supply—Education, National, [198] 740

BANDON, Earl of
Ireland—State of, [196] 733
Irish Church, Comm. Preamble, [197] 730 ; cl. 11, Amendt. 869 ; cl. 14, 913 ; cl. 41, 1160 ; cl. 46, Amendt. 1164 ; Report, 1486 ; Amendt. 1489 ; Commons' Amendts. [198] 439, 443
Municipal Magistrates, Removal of, [196] 1095

Bank of England—Payment of Dividends
Question, Mr. Stephen Cave ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 6, [196] 263

Bankruptcy Bill—Public Business
Question, Lord Chelmsford ; Answer, The Lord Chancellor ; short debate thereon Feb 18, [194] 95

Bankruptcy Bill
(Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General)
194] c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Attorney General) Mar 5, 776 ; Bill ordered, after debate
. Question, Mr. Cross ; Answer, The Attorney General Mar 12, 1186
Read 1° * Mar 15 [Bill 50]
Read 2°, after debate April 5, [195] 142
Committee * ; Report April 26 [Bill 97]
196] Committee (on re-comm.) — R.P. June 3, 1211
. Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. June 8, 1402
. Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. June 11, 1592
. Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. June 15, 1897
197] Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. June 18, 314
. Committee ; Report June 22, 414 [Bill 169]
Considered * June 25
Read 3° * June 28
l. Read 1ª * (The Lord Chancellor) June 28
. Moved, " That the Bill be now read 2ª " July 8, 1403 ; after debate, Bill read 2ª (No. 154)
198] Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into Committee" July 16, 15 ; after short debate, on Question, " That the words, &c. ;" resolved in the negative ; Bill referred to a Select Committee
And, on July 19, the Lords following were named of the Committee :—Ld. Chancellor, Ld. Privy Seal, V. Halifax, L. Overstone, L. Belper, L. Chelmsford, L. Westbury, L. Romilly, L. Colonsay, L. Cairns, L. Penzance
Report of Select Comm. July 22 (No. 207)
. Committee July 26, 678 (No. 208)
Report * July 27
. Moved, " That the Bill be now read 3ª " July 29, 889 ; after short debate, Bill read 3ª ; Bill passed, and sent to the Commons
c. Lords Amendts. [Bill 249]
. Reasons for disagreeing to certain of the Lords Amendts. reported August 2, 1125 ; after short debate, Reasons agreed to ; to be communicated to the Lords
. l. Commons' Amendts. considered August 5, 1284 ; after short debate, on Question ? agreed to
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 71]

Bankrupt Law Amendment (Ireland) Bill [H.L.] (The Marquess of Clanricarde)
l. Presented ; read 1ª * Mar 12 (No. 30)

BARING, Mr. T., Huntingdon
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1409
Canada—Railway Loan, Res. [197] 1450
Supply—Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1444
Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.) [195] 614

BARNETT, Mr. H., Woodstock
Army Estimates—Yeomanry, [196] 1576
Bankruptcy, Leave, [194] 789 ; Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1406
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 827 ; cl. 4, 841

[cont.

Barnett, Mr. H.—cont.
Financial Statement—Assessed Taxes, [195] 478
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. (D) 12, [197] 579
Life Assurance Companies, Leave, [194] 586
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 987
Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 590; —(Customs and Excise Duties), Res. 2, [196] 797

Barrow, Mr. W. H., Nottinghamshire, S.
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 88, [196] 1606; cl. 130, [197] 321; add. cl. 417
County Financial Boards, Leave, [196] 612
Imprisonment for Debt, Consid. cl. 5, [197] 763
Married Women's Property, 2R. [195] 798
Sunday and Ragged Schools, 2R. [196] 1972
Ways and Means—(Customs and Excise Duties), Res. 2, [196] 787, 796

Barttelot, Colonel W. B., Sussex, W.
Agricultural Returns, Res. [197] 831
Army—Committee on New Arms, [198] 493
Examinations for Commissions, [194] 629
Army Estimates—Buildings and Repairs, [195] 670
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 531; Consid. Amendt. 1084, 1088
Bankruptcy, Comm. add. cl. [197] 420
Contagious Diseases (Animals), [194] 1467
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 439; Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1291; cl. 27, 1292
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 567
Inclosure Act, Motion for a Committee, [195] 1287
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [195] 1036; cl. 32, [196] 35; cl. 39, 265, 269
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Instruction, Motion for Adjournment, [197] 469
Metropolis—St. Luke's Hospital, [195] 677
St. Pancras Workhouse, [197] 1754
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. Amendt. [198] 633
Supply—Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1704
Public Buildings, [197] 676
Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 592; —(Customs and Excise Duties), Res. 2, [196] 798

Bass, Mr. M. A., Staffordshire, E.
Deanery of Lichfield and Rectory of Tatenhill, [194] 833
Newspapers and the British Museum, [195] 1463

Basses Lights (Ceylon) Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Grant Duff)

c. Resolution in Committee July 16
Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1° * July 19 [Bill 224]
Read 2° * July 29
Committee *; Report July 30
Considered * July 31
Read 3° * July 31
l. Read 1ª * (The Earl of Kimberley) August 2
Read 2ª * August 3 (No. 254)
Committee *; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 77]

Bateman, Lord
Irish Church, [196] 1578, 1580

Bateson, Sir T., Devizes
Ireland—Questions, &c.
Cullen, Cardinal, and the Privy Council, [194] 483
Fenian Convict Mackey, [194] 953
Portadown, Riots at, [197] 1665
State of, [195] 2028
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 25, [195] 1607
Party Processions (Ireland), [197] 1172
Valentia, Living of, [194] 482

Bath, Marquess of
Ecclesiastical Courts, &c., Nomination of Committee, [195] 1352
Ireland—Agrarian Outrages, [195] 1533
State of, [195] 1954
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [197] 898; Commons' Amendts. [198] 319
Tenure (Ireland), Comm. [195] 1571

Baxter, Mr. W. E. (Secretary to the Admiralty), Montrose, &c.
Navy—Admiralty Contractors, [198] 897
Coal for the, [196] 879
Lime Juice, Pure, [198] 1292
Naval Contracts, [198] 635

Bayswater Market and Baths Bill (by Order)

c. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 3, [194] 540
After short debate, Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Thomas Chambers); Question, "That 'now,' &c.," put, and negatived; words added; Bill put off for six months

Bazley, Mr. T., Manchester
Assessed Rates, Consid. [197] 1087
Board of Trade Returns, [198] 705
Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), 2R. [194] 774; Comm. [195] 221
East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Res. [198] 1349
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1007
Mail Contracts, Res. [196] 1138
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 646
Post Office—Mail Contracts, [194] 716; Motion for a Committee, 1286
Spain—Treaty of Commerce, [197] 1425
Supply—Post Office Packet Service, [198] 1001
Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 623

Beach, Sir M. E. Hicks-, Gloucestershire, E.
Army Estimates—Militia, &c. [196] 1573, 1575
Assessed Rates, [194] 556; 2R. [196] 1316, 1321; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 369; Amendt. 385, 389, 395, 396, 397, 398; cl. 4, Amendt. 529; add. cl. 534; Consid. 1085, 1086, 1088, 1089, 1104
Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1817

[cont.

Beach, Sir M. E. Hicks—cont.
- Inclosure Act, Motion for a Committee, [195] 1287
- Irish Church, Comm. cl. 32, [196] 28; cl. 59, 414, 419
- Militia, Comm. [195] 1417
- Parliament—Youghal Election, New Writ, [195] 2070
- Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 528
- Police Superannuations, [195] 1695
- Poor Law—Gilbert Unions, [195] 1195
- Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 335
- Ryde, Borough of, [196] 1632
- Supply—Poor Law Commission, [197] 1686, 1692
- Vagrancy, [198] 156

Beach, Mr. W. W. B., Hampshire, N.
- Agricultural Returns, Res. [197] 833
- Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 506
- Ryde, Borough of, [196] 1631

Beauchamp, Earl
- Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. Amendt. [198] 1081; 3R. 1288
- Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 15, Amendt. [197] 1880; cl. 30, 1883
- Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 12, Amendt. [194] 1337; cl. 14, 1341
- Irish Church, Comm. cl. 29, [197] 1141; Report, 1495
- Parliament—Order in the House, [197] 409

Beaumont, Capt. F. E. B., Durham, S.
- Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1436
- Army—Fortifications, &c. [196] 1570
  - Moncrieff Gun Carriages, [198] 895
  - Spithead Forts, [198] 1089
- Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1007; cl. 1, Amendt. 1008

Beaumont, Mr. H. F., Yorkshire, W. R. S. Div.
- Betting Houses, [196] 261
- Fire Insurance Duty, [197] 1168
- Sheriffs (York County), [196] 1208

Beaumont, Mr. Somerset A., Wakefield
- Mexico—Relations with, [197] 119

Beerhouses, &c. Bill
(Mr. Selwin-Ibbetson, Mr. Akroyd, Mr. Headlam)
- c. Acts read; considered in Committee; after short debate, a Resolution agreed to Feb 26, [194] 403; Bill ordered; read 1° * [Bill 22]
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" April 27, [195] 1763
- After short debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Sir Robert Clifton); A. None, N. 232; M. 232; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2°
- Committee *; Report May 11 [Bill 116]
- Re-comm. *; Report May 27
- Considered * June 1 [Bill 141]
- Read 3° * June 7

[cont.

Beerhouses, &c. Bill—cont.
- l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Salisbury) June 8
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" June 11, [196] 1583; after short debate, Bill read 2ª (No. 122)
- Committee * June 22 (No. 145)
- Report * June 24
- Read 3ª * July 5
- Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 27]

Belper, Lord
- Education, Public, [194] 823

Benefit Building Societies Regulation Bill (Mr. Gourley, Sir Roundell Palmer, Mr. Stevenson)
- c. Ordered * August 3
- Read 1° * August 4 [Bill 262]

Bentall, Mr. E. H., Maldon
- Canada—Patent Law, [198] 1292
- Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Comm. Res. [198] 1516

Bentinck, Mr. G. A. F. Cavendish-Whitehaven
- Courts of Justice, New, [196] 1209, 1496
- Edmunds' Scandal, The, [196] 469
- False Weights and Measures, &c. [194] 734
- Fisheries, English, [194] 207
- French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 348
- Inclosure Awards (County Palatine of Durham), 2R. [194] 1894
- Ireland—Church Property, [194] 1351
- Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [195] 1031; cl. 12, 1109, 1115; cl. 14, 1374; cl. 15, 1402; cl. 16, 1408, 1410; cl. 22, 1512; cl. 25, 1602; cl. 39, Motion for reporting Progress, [196] 345, 346; Consid. add. cl. 751, 757; Lords' Amendts. [197] 1962, 1963
- Metropolis—Local Management of the, [194] 206
- Municipal Corporations (Metropolis), 2R. Amendt. [196] 1951, 1959
- Parliament—Morning Sittings, [197] 1184
  - Rules of Debate, [194] 1467
- Spain—"Tornado," Case of the, [194] 836; [196] 742, 1499
- Supply—Board of Manufactures (Scotland), [198] 507
  - British Museum, [198] 221, 225, 226
  - Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 678
  - Houses of Parliament, [197] 681, 684; Report, 1430
  - Learned Societies, [198] 505
  - National Gallery, [198] 498, 500, 501, 503
  - Post Office, [198] 997, 1001
  - Public Offices Site, [197] 1207
  - Report, [198] 686, 689
  - Royal Parks, [197] 655, 656
- University Tests, 2R. [194] 1451; Comm. [197] 767, 788; cl. 6, 793

Betting Houses—Suppression of
- Question, Mr. H. F. Beaumont; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 6, [196] 261; Question, Mr. Eykyn; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 24, [197] 514

Beverley Election—Joint Address for a Commission

Moved, "That an humble Address, &c." (Mr. Attorney General) April 9, [195] 559

After short debate, Amendt. To leave out from "That," and add "the issue of a Commission be deferred until an opportunity be afforded for an inquiry by the Select Committee on Parliamentary and Municipal Elections now sitting" (Colonel Stuart Knox); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after further short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question put, and agreed to

Address agreed to June 8

Her Majesty's Answer reported June 21

Bewdley Writ

Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown, to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Burgess to serve in this present Parliament for the Borough of Bewdley, in the room of Sir Richard Atwood Glass, whose Election has been determined to be void" (Mr. Noel) Mar 4, [194] 663

Amendt. to leave out from "That" and add "the Writ for the Borough of Bewdley be suspended for twelve months" (Mr. Muntz); after short debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 128, N. 65; M. 63; main Question put, and agreed to

Bills of Exchange

Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 17, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House it would be a great convenience to the commercial interest if the Stamp Duties on Inland and Foreign Bills of Exchange were assimilated, and if it were permitted to use adhesive stamps for Inland as they are now used for Foreign Bills of Exchange" (Mr. Muntz), [197] 140; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Bishops Resignation Bill [H.L.]

(The Lord Archbishop of Canterbury)

197] l. Presented; read 1ª* July 5 (No. 171)

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 13, 1740; after debate, Bill read 2ª

Committee * July 15 (No. 193)

198] Report July 19, 146 (No. 201)

Read 3ª* July 20

c. Read 1º* July 26 [Bill 241]

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2º" (Mr. W. E. Gladstone) August 2, 1125; after short debate, Bill read 2º

Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" August 5, 1297

After debate, Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House will, upon this day three months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Hadfield), 1306

After further debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 112, N. 26; M. 86; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee; Bill reported with Amendments, 1316 [Bill 263]

[cont.

Bishops Resignation Bill—cont.

Considered * August 6

Read 3º* August 6

l. Commons' Amendts. (No. 288) considered August 9, [198] 1469; after short debate, Commons' Amendts. agreed to, with an Amendment; and Bill, with the Amendments, returned to the Commons

Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 111]

Blake, Mr. J. A., Waterford City

Ireland—Questions, &c.
- District Asylums, [198] 684
- Fenian Convict O'Donovan Rossa, [198] 1425
- Fisheries, [197] 571
- Howth Harbour, [197] 947
- Landlord and Tenant, Law of, [194] 353
- Seizure of Fishing Smacks, [197] 948, 949

Irish Church, Comm. cl. 18, [195] 1474; cl. 59, [196] 420; Lords' Amendts. [197] 1952

Money Laws (Ireland), 2R. [197] 485

Oyster Dredging, [197] 1667

Prisons (Religious Instruction), Motion for Returns, [198] 348

*Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1457, 1490

Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 511
- Poor Law Commission, [197] 1691
- Public Works (Ireland), Salaries, [198] 514; Motion for reporting Progress, 515; Amendt. 742, 746
- Report, [198] 690

Blatcher, William, Case of

Question, Captain Dawson-Damer; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 18, [194] 1655

Bleachworks Acts—Report of Commissioner

Question, Mr. Wilbraham Egerton; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 4, [194] 629

Board of Trade Returns of Trade and Navigation

Question, Mr. Pochin; Answer, Mr. Bright April 12, [195] 575; Observations, Mr. Graves; Reply, Mr. Shaw Lefevre; short debate thereon July 26, [198] 697

Parl. P. [4102 1 to 4, 4110 1 to 7, 4138, 4192, 4216]

Bonham-Carter, Mr. J., Winchester

Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 18, [196] 849

Friendly Societies, Res. [195] 514

Supply—Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1442

Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1385

Trades Unions (Protection of Funds), 2R. [198] 233

Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 624

Bourke, Hon. R., Lynn Regis

Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 54, [196] 1593

Harbours of Refuge, [194] 200

Bourne, Colonel J., Evesham

Poor Law—Gilbert Unions, [195] 1196

BOUVERIE, Right Hon. E. P., Kilmarnock, &c.
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), 2R. [197] 863
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [197] 324
Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1309, 1311
Civil Offices (Pensions), Comm. cl. 1, [196] 869
Coventry Election, [197] 995; Motion for a Committee, 1330, 1333, 1334
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 10, [196] 1749
Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee, [196] 1784
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 5, [198] 1276; cl. 6, 1277; cl. 10, 1279
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 193, 197; 2R. 582
Parliament—Business of the House, [194] 1093
  Morning Sittings, [195] 1979
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 2, [198] 836, 1245, 1464
Printworks Regulation, Res. [194] 1539
Salisbury Magistrates, [196] 1618
Scotland—Public Business, [198] 1297
Supply—Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1443
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 3, [198] 763; cl. 4, 768
University Tests, 2R. [194] 1428; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 788; add. cl. 1100

BOWRING, Mr. E. A., Exeter
Agricultural Returns, Res. [197] 832
Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1314; cl. 2, 1322
Brentford Magistrates, The, [196] 970
China—Hong Kong—Legislative Council, [198] 153
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1715
Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Comm. Res. [198] 1516
Supply—Board of Trade, [197] 1680
  Consular Services, [198] 952
  Foreign Office, [197] 1677
  House of Commons Offices, [197] 1476
  Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 514
  Patent Office, [197] 1686
  Portland Harbour, [197] 1457
  Public Buildings, [197] 674
  Public Offices Site, [197] 1200
  Royal Parks, &c. [197] 654, 658
  Science and Art Department, [198] 214
  Superannuation and Retired Allowances, [198] 962
  Works, &c. [197] 1708
United States—Consulate at Chicago, [198] 1293
University Tests, Comm. cl. 6, [197] 791

BRADY, Mr. J., Leitrim Co.
Army—Macloughlin, Case of Dr., [198] 896
Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland), 2R. [197] 486, 499
Sunday Trading, 2R. [194] 561; Comm. Motion for reporting Progress, [195] 800

BRAND, Rt. Hon. H. B. W., Cambridgeshire
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1927

BRAND, Mr. H. R., Hertfordshire
Army—Colonels' Pay, [195] 1362
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1531, 1535

BRASSEY, Mr. T., Hastings
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1357

Brazilian Slave Trade Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Clarendon)
194] l. Presented; read 1ª* Feb 25 (No. 14)
. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" Mar 2, 471; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
. Committee; Report, after short debate Mar 4, 620
. Read 3ª, after short debate Mar 8, 825
c. Read 1º* Mar 17 [Bill 58]
Read 2º* Mar 19
Committee*; Report Mar 22
Read 3º* Mar 23
Royal Assent April 19 [32 Vict. c. 2]

BREWER, Dr. W., Colchester
Army—Soldiers' Employment, [198] 1087
Assessed Rates, Comm. add. cl. [197] 536
Beverley Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 563
Civil Offices (Pensions), Consid. [197] 543
Colne Fishery, [198] 1493
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 54, Amendt. [197] 1529; cl. 67, 1537; add. cl. 1773, 1774
County Financial Boards, Leave, [196] 612
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 11, [198] 1280
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1797
Irish Church, Consid. [196] 770
Metropolis Gas Bills, [194] 302
Metropolis — St. Pancras Workhouse, [197] 1820
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 344; Comm. add. cl. 1057; Consid. 1133
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, 2R. [196] 1356
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 556
Municipal Corporations (Metropolis), 2R. [196] 1955
National Gallery, The, [195] 975
Navy Estimates—New Works, [195] 216
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, [194] 665
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 59 (E), [198] 1444; 3R. 1496
Pharmacy Act Amendment, Leave, [194] 683; Comm. Amendt. [195] 1933, 1934
Rateable Property (Metropolis), Leave, [194] 182
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1589
Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [194] 994
Still-born Children, [197] 1819
Supply—Learned Societies, [198] 505
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 4, [198] 770
Union of Parishes in Westminster, [198] 1145
Valuation of Property (Metropolis), Comm. cl. 11, Amendt. [197] 1482

Bridges, Repairs of Question, Sir Herbert Croft; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen July 15, [197] 1886

Bridgwater Election
Question, Mr. Langton ; Answer, The Attorney General Mar 23, [194] 2000
Joint Address for a Commission, Moved, "That an humble Address, &c." (Mr. Attorney General) April 1, [195] 25; Motion agreed to
l. Address agreed to June 8, [196] 1391
Her Majesty's Answer reported June 21
Minutes of Evidence—(Parl. P. No. 65)

Bright, Mr., Letter of—(Irish Church Bill)
Notice, Lord Cairns June 15, [196] 1794; Question, Lord Cairns ; Answer, Earl Granville June 17, [197] 1 ; Question, Colonel North ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone, 121

BRIGHT, Right Hon. John (President of the Board of Trade), Birmingham
Agricultural Returns, Res. [195] 753
Agricultural Statistics, [194] 2001, 2002 ; [196] 943
Agriculture, Department of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 506
Assessed Rates, Leave, [194] 326 ; 2R. [196] 1329
Cardiff Docks, Accidents in the, [194] 739
East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Res. [198] 1360
False Weights and Measures, &c. [194] 731
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 339
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1735
Harbours of Refuge, [194] 200
Herne Bay Oyster Company, [194] 408, 838
Ireland—State of, [195] 2009, 2013
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1876, 2068, 2088, 2096 ; Comm. cl. 27, [195] 1861 ; cl. 39, [196] 290, 306 ; Lords' Amendts. [197] 1929, 1979 ; [198] 86, 119
Light Dues, Res. [196] 177
Lighthouse Accounts, [196] 1206
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [195] 1312, 1315 ; Instruction, [197] 468
Mercantile Marine, [194] 156
Merchant Seamen, Diet of, [194] 1463
Metric System of Weights and Measures, [195] 973
Metropolis Gas Bills, [194] 301
Metropolitan Railways, Smoking on, [195] 1580
Metropolitan Street Tramways, Consid. add. cl. [196] 739
Oyster Dredging, [197] 1667
Packet Service between England and France, [198] 155
Parliament—Business of the House, [195] 1473
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 24, [198] 1384 ; cl. 66, 1447
Patent Laws, [198] 1090
Pilotage Dues on Foreign Shipping, [196] 468
Preston Railway Station, [196] 1494
Railways—Questions, &c.
  Accident at Abergele, [196] 944
  Accidents at the Swindon Station, [194] 1656
  Guards' and Passengers' Communication, [194] 1903 ; [195] 29 ; [196] 1243 ; [198] 1088, 1089
  Liabilities of Railway Companies, [198] 1436, 1439
  Signalling, [198] 1372
[cont.

BRIGHT, Right Hon. John—cont.
Rule of the Road at Sea, [194] 371 ; [195] 1465
Scotland—Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, Motion for a Return, [194] 1275, 1277, 1279
Scotland—Portpatrick Harbour, [194] 110 ; [195] 360
Sea Fishing Boats, [195] 1465
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1929
South Eastern Railway, [197] 355
Trade Returns, [195] 575
Waterloo and Whitehall Railway, [195] 972

BRIGHT, Mr. Jacob, Manchester
Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1246
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. (A), 12, [196] 1764
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 668, 670
Supply—Science and Art Department, [198] 210

BRIGHT, Mr. R., Somersetshire, E.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 20, [195] 1498

BRISCOE, Mr. J. I., Surrey, W.
Supply—Missions and Embassies Abroad, [198] 952

BRISE, Colonel S. B. RUGGLES-, Essex, E.
Agricultural Labourers, Res. [197] 606
Agricultural Returns, Res. [195] 755
Army—Adjutancies of Militia, Res. [197] 140
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1167
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 682 ; 2R. [195] 442
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1740
Militia, Comm. [195] 1418
Valuation of Property, Comm. cl. 53, [197] 1483
Visitation Fees, [195] 1196

British Columbia
Motion for Address for "any Papers on the Union of British Columbia with the Dominion of Canada" (Sir Harry Verney) June 1, [196] 1098 ; after debate, Motion agreed to (Parl. P. No. 390)
Telegraphic Communication with, Question, Sir Harry Verney ; Answer, Mr. Monsell Feb 25, [194] 309

British Museum
Newspapers, Question, Mr. A. Bass ; Answer, Mr. Ayrton April 23, [195] 1463
Temple Collection, The, Question, Mr. W. Lowther ; Answer, Mr. Walpole April 26, [195] 1579
Accounts—(Parl. P. No. 211)
(See SUPPLY)

BROCKLEHURST, Mr. W. C., Macclesfield
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 337

Brodrick, Hon. W., Surrey, Mid.
- Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 424
- Ireland, State of, [195] 2037
- Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1721 ; Comm. cl. 16, [195] 1405 ; cl. 27, 1639 ; cl. 32, Amendt. [196] 43
- Post Office—Inland Postage, Res. [195] 256
- Rateable Property (Metropolis), Leave, [194] 180

Brogden, Mr. A., Wednesbury
- Civil Service Pensions, Comm. cl. 3, Motion for reporting Progress, [196] 872
- Navy Estimates—Men and Boys, [194] 926
- Post Office — Landing Mails at a Western Port, [196] 930
- Supply — Furniture, Public Departments, Amendt. [197] 676
  - House of Commons Offices, [197] 1478
  - Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1705
  - Public Buildings, [197] 675

Broughty Ferry Provisional Order Confirmation Bill
(The Lord Advocate, Mr. Adam)
- c. Ordered ; read 1° * August 2 [Bill 254]
- Read 2° * August 5
- Committee * ; Report August 6
- Considered * August 7
- Read 3° * August 7
- l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Morley) August 7 (No. 294)
- Read 2ª * ; Committee negatived August 9
- Read 3ª * August 10
- Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. clviii.]

Bruce, Right Hon. H. A. (Secretary of State for the Home Department), Renfrewshire
- Accidents in Mines, [198] 686
- Agricultural Labour Commission, [194] 484
- Agricultural Labourers, Res. [197] 601
- Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), 2R. [197] 864
- Barking Sewage Outfall, [196] 260, 1402 ; —Mortality at, [197] 515
- Beerhouses, &c. 2R. [195] 1778
- Betting Houses, [196] 261 ; [197] 514
- Beverley Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 565
- Blatcher, William, Case of, [194] 1655
- Bleachworks Act, [194] 630
- Brentford Magistrates, The, [196] 970
- Cabs and Omnibuses, Licenses on, [198] 1541
- Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 848, 868, 995
- Capital Sentences, Remission of, [195] 1358
- Cardiff Docks, Accidents in the, [194] 743
- Church Rates—Private Acts, [195] 1854
- Clerks to Magistrates, [196] 1238 ; Explanation, 1299
- Coal Fields, Motion for an Address, [196] 1914
- Coal Mines, Accidents in, [195] 359 ; Motion for Papers, [198] 1520
  - Regulation of, [195] 844
  - Reports of Inspectors, [194] 1089
- Colne Fishery, [198] 1493
- Constabulary Returns, [195] 1850
- Contagious Diseases Act, Motion for a Committee, [196] 808

[cont.

Bruce, Right Hon. H. A.—cont.
- Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [194] 1039 ; Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1290 ; cl. 70, 1757
- County Coroners, Leave, [195] 753
- County Financial Boards, Leave, [196] 617
- Crime Prevention, [194] 164
- Criminal Law—Assize Sentences on Criminals, [198] 1373, 1530
  - Bell, James, Case of, [198] 1295
  - Convict Richard Bonner, [194] 162
  - Convict George Roberts, [194] 161
  - Convict Wiltshire, [195] 1700
  - Conviction of three Children at Salisbury, [195] 675 ; [196] 1615
  - Criminal Classes, The, [194] 149
  - Liberation of Sir Eardley Eardley, [195] 1200
- Election Petitions, Judgments on, [194] 409
- Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1325
- Employment of Women and Children in Agriculture, [195] 678
- Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1409 ; Comm. cl. 19, [196] 1769 ; cl. 29, 1777
- Factory Acts—Hours of Labour, [195] 1851 ; [198] 683
- Factory Returns, [194] 202
- Fever Patients, Conveyance of, [194] 411
- Fisheries, English, [194] 90, 94, 207
- Foreign Office Agencies, [198] 1534
- Friendly Societies, Res. [195] 515
- Friendly Societies Acts, [198] 896
- Friendly Societies Returns, [197] 571
- Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee, [196] 1783
- 198] Habitual Criminals, Comm. 1253, 1260, 1264, 1270 ; cl. 4, 1274 ; Amendt. 1274, 1275 ; cl. 5, 1275, 1276 ; cl. 6, 1276, 1277 ; cl. 7, Amendt. 1277, 1278 ; cl. 9, Amendt. 1278 ; cl. 10, 1279 ; cl. 11, 1279, 1280, 1281 ; cl. 12, 1281, 1368, 1369
- Hammersmith Bridge—University Boat Race, [194] 641, 1467
- Herts Constabulary, [198] 1086
- Hounslow Powder Mills, [197] 515, 1169
- Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 395
- Imprisonment for Debt, Consid. cl. 5, [197] 763
- Imprisonment for Debt—Arrest of a Young Girl, [194] 112, 209
- Inclosure Act, Motion for a Comm. [195] 1287
- Inclosure of Lands, 3R. [195] 555, 679
- Infanticide, [198] 1143
- Ireland—O'Donovan Rossa, Case of, [196] 1239 ; [198] 1424, 1428
- Ireland—Trinity College (Dublin), Res. [198] 1210
- Jersey Jurats, [197] 945
- Judicature Commission, [196] 1633
- Kenn, John, Case of, [194] 769
- Loan Societies, [194] 1086
- Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1221, 1228, 1229
- Marriage Laws, [198] 1406
- Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [196] 1450
- Mayors, Removal of, [196] 572
- Medical Education, &c., General Council of, [197] 1270
- Metropolis—Questions, &c.
  - Cab Stands, [197] 1169
  - Cremorne Gardens, [196] 1743
  - Local Management of the, [194] 207
  - Night Houses, [195] 1852

[cont.

Bruce, Right Hon. H. A.—cont.
St. Luke's Hospital, [195] 677
Semaphore near Palace Yard, [194] 1088, 1655
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, 2R. [196] 1365
Mines, Rating of, [195] 1582
Mold—Riots at, [196] 1296
Municipal Corporations (Metropolis), 2R. [196] 1955
Murphy's, Mr., Lectures, [195] 759; [197] 125; —Arrest of, 411, 412, 1543; [198] 613
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, [194] 671
Business of the House, [198] 905
Whitsuntide Holidays, [196] 809
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Motion for a Committee, [194] 648, 952, 1546
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 810; cl. 2, 829, 835, 836; cl. 3, 837, 838, 1095, 1103; cl. 4, 1113; cl. 9, 1120; cl. 24, 1244; Motion for Adjournment, 1246, 1464; 3R. 1498, 1499
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 672, 682
Police Constables, Pay of, [197] 1663
Police Interference, [195] 477
Police Superannuations, [195] 1696
Police, The, and the Public, [198] 562, 563
Pollution of Rivers, [194] 203
Printworks Regulation, Res. [194] 1542
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 805
Prisons (Religious Instruction), Motion for Returns, [198] 349
Public Houses, &c. Res. [197] 457
Reformatory Schools, Juvenile Offenders in, [196] 742
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 822, 823, 980
Registration of Voters, Motion for a Committee, [194] 982
Revising Barristers, Appointment of, [198] 1488, 1536, 1541
Ritualistic Processions, [195] 355
Roman Catholic Charities, [195] 1362; Motion for Returns, [198] 1025, 1028
Ryde, Borough of, [196] 1633
Sanitary Acts, [194] 2001
Scotland—Truck System, [197] 1885
Waternish Church, Isle of Skye, [197] 1886; [198] 798
Staines, Burglaries at, [198] 1542
Still-born Children, [197] 1819
Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 465
Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 801
Supply—General Register Office, [197] 1685
Home Office, &c. Departments, [197] 1480, 1481, 1482
Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 512
Tithe Commission, [197] 1684
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1379
Trades Unions, Funds of, [194] 112, 367
Turnpike Trusts, [194] 484; [196] 16
Visitation Fees, [195] 1197
Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 126
Workshops Regulation Act in Birmingham, [195] 583

Bruce, Sir H. H., Coleraine
Ireland—Cork, Mayor of, [196] 103
Derry, Proclamation of, [196] 104, 263; [197] 1667
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 724
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 913; cl. 18, 1485, 1487; cl. 23, Motion for reporting Progress, 1531; cl. 27, 1643; cl. 36, [196] 72; cl. 39, 267; cl. 58, 350; cl. 61, Amendt. 420; Consid. Amendt. 778
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 1558
Registration (Ireland) Act, [194] 839
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), Leave, [194] 1545

Bruen, Mr. H., Carlow Co.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 12, [195] 1122; cl. 13, 1134, 1136; cl. 19, 1494; cl. 25, 1600; cl. 27, 1646; Consid. [196] 766
Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, 2R. Amendt. [195] 312

Buccleuch, Duke of
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 52, Amendt. [196] 462
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 2R. Amendt. [195] 1677, 1690
Representative Peers for Scotland — Double Return, [196] 561

Buller, Sir E. M., Staffordshire, N.
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 90, [197] 1541; Amendt. 1755, 1758

Bulwer, Right Hon. Sir H. L., Tamworth
Foreign Office Agencies, [198] 1534
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 2018; Lords' Amendts. [198] 72
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1505
Supply—Consular Buildings, [197] 1469, 1471, 1472, 1473
Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1465, 1467
Missions and Embassies Abroad, [198] 928, 941, 950
United States — Recent Negotiations with, [197] 1427, 1428

Burials Regulation Bill
(Mr. Hadfield, Mr. Charles Reed, Mr. Henry Richard, Mr. Candlish)
c. Acts read; considered in Committee; a Resolution agreed to Mar 2, [194] 540; Bill ordered; read 1°* [Bill 33]
Bill withdrawn* June 3

Burke, Mr. E. Haviland, Christchurch
Dublin Freemen, Leave, [197] 952
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 59, [196] 397

Burrell, Sir P., New Shoreham
Hyde Park, Furious Riding in, [197] 1592
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 877
O'Sullivan's Disability, 2R. [196] 584

Bury, Viscount, Berwick-on-Tweed
  Army—Buckingham Palace Guard Room, Motion for Papers, [197] 137
  Army Estimates — Hospital Establishment, [195] 666
    Martial Law, [195] 662
  Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1526, 1534, 1570
  British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1115, 1128
  Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1233
  Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 577
  Hammersmith Bridge—University Boat Race, [194] 640, 641, 1467
  Hudson's Bay Company, [195] 583
  Light Dues, Res. [196] 158
  Lighthouse Accounts, [196] 1206
  Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [198] 358 ; cl. 1, 366
  Metropolis—Thames Embankment, [194] 138
  Navy—Admiralty Clerks, Res. [196] 1622
  New Zealand, Affairs of, [198] 456
  Parliament — House of Commons Arrangements, Res. Amendt. [195] 278
  Parliament—New Writs, [194] 21
  Scotland—Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, Motion for a Return, [194] 1271
  Supply—Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1470
  Vacating of Seats, Leave, [194] 210, 220, 223

Butler-Johnstone, Mr. H. A., Canterbury
  Irish Church, 3R. [196] 1037

Buxton, Mr. C., Surrey, E.
  Army Estimates—Martial Law, [195] 662
  Civil Service Appointments, [195] 31
  Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1229
  Egypt—Viceroy of, [196] 1205
  Gambia—Prisoners in Bathurst Gaol, [198] 1048
  Metropolis—Thames Embankment, [194] 138
  Municipal Corporations (Metropolis), 2R. [196] 1939, 1959
  Post Office—Inland Postage, Res. [195] 255
  Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1848
  Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 987
  Supply—Education, Public, [198] 180

Cadogan, Hon. F. W., Cricklade
  Metropolitan Railways, Smoking on, [195] 1579
  Railway Accidents at the Swindon Station, [194] 1656

Cairns, Lord
  Bankruptcy, [194] 100; 2R. [197] 1413 ; Comm. [198] 16, 678
  Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1746
  Brazilian Slave Trade, 2R. [194] 477 ; Comm. 621, 622 ; 3R. 829, 830
  Bright, Mr., Letter of, [196] 1794 ; [197] 1
  Common Law Courts (Ireland), Comm. add. cl. [194] 1460
  Dublin City Election, Address, Amendt. [196] 1394
  Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [198] 1079, 1084 ; Comm. 1138

[cont.

Cairns, Lord—cont.
  Ecclesiastical Courts, 2R. [195] 838
  Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 8, [197] 1876 ; cl. 14, 1878
  Evidence Amendment, 2R. [198] 676 ; Comm. 987 ; cl. 2, 988
  Fisheries (Ireland), Comm. [198] 1067 ; cl. 16, 1068
  Government of India Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 1821, 1836, 1840, 1841 ; Report, [196] 695, 703
  Habitual Criminals, 1R. [194] 348 ; Comm. cl. 4, 1314, 1315 ; cl. 10, 1324, 1326, 1327, 1331 ; cl. 13, 1333 ; cl. 14, 1343 ; cl. 10, Amendt. [195] 224, 225
  Hudson's Bay Company, [194] 798
  Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1350
  Ireland—Questions, &c.
    Agrarian Outrages, [195] 1534
    Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 372, 373, 384
    Murders, [194] 1639, 1648
    State of, [195] 1958
196] Irish Church, 1579
197] 2R. 267, 287, 289, 291, 354 ; Comm.
. Preamble, 722 ; cl. 2, 744, 752 ; cl. 6,
. 753, 754 ; cl. 7, 758, 759 ; cl. 8, 759 ;
. cl. 12, 871 ; Amendt. 872, 873 ; cl. 13, 880,
. 885 ; cl. 14, 895, 896, 897 ; cl. 15, 920, 921 ;
. cl. 16, 922 ; cl. 23, 935 ; cl. 25, 997 ; cl. 26,
. Amendt. 998, 999, 1000 ; cl. 27, 1009 ; cl. 28,
. 1025, 1044, 1056 ; cl. 29, 1127, 1144 ; cl. 33,
. 1155 ; cl. 35, 1158 ; cl. 41, 1160, 1162 ;
. cl. 68, Amendt. 1228, 1231, 1245 ; add. cl.
. 1260 ; cl. 69, 1261 ; cl. 19, Amendt. 1261,
. 1264, 1266 ; cl. 20, Amendt. 1267 ; cl. 22,
. Amendt. 1268 ; Preamble, Amendt. 1268 ;
. Report, 1485 ; Amendt. 1486, 1487, 1492,
. 1493, 1495 ; Amendt. 1500, 1503, 1504,
. 1509, 1519, 1522, 1523 ; 3R. 1620, 1655
198] Commons Amendts. 243, 244, 258, 260,
. 262, 264, 275, 308, 313, 408, 438
  Life Peerages, 1R. [195] 465 ; 2R. 1676 ; Comm. [196] 1172 ; cl. 1, 1203 ; Report, 1385 ; 3R. [197] 1396
  Married Women's Property, 2R. [198] 985
  Municipal Franchise, Report, [198] 146
  Newspapers, &c. 2R. [196] 965, 968
  Parliament—Questions, &c.
    Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 39, 104
    Business of the House, [198] 14
    Easter Recess, [194] 798
    Order in the House, [197] 402
  Parliamentary Proceedings, 2R. [194] 607
  Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [194] 1781, 1782 ; [195] 570, 1574, 1575 ; Comm. [196] 437 ; cl. 1, 444, 447 ; cl. 68, 464 ; cl. 70, 466 ; Report, 1284, 1285
  Religious, Educational, &c. Societies Incorporation, 2R. [196] 356 ; Comm. [197] 569
  Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 2R. [195] 1681, 1693
  Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [195] 571, 572
  Scotland—Hypothec, Law of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1184
  Tenants Purchase by Instalments (Ireland), 2R. [198] 776
  Tenure (Ireland), 2R. [195] 1188 ; Comm. 1554, 1558, 1560
  Trades Unions (Protection of Funds), 2R. [198] 993, 994 ; Comm. 1068, 1069, 1071

CALLAN, Mr. P., Dundalk
Ireland—Dundalk and Louth, Proclamation of, [197] 1666
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 814

CAMBRIDGE, Duke of (Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief)
Army—Military Force of the Kingdom, [195] 1453
Endowed Schools, Comm. [197] 1869; cl. 13, 1877

CAMERON, Mr. D., Inverness-shire
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [196] 259
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Consid. Amendt. [198] 1457
Scotland—Waternish Church, [198] 798
Shepherds Dogs, Tax on, [197] 947

CAMOYS, Lord
Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c. 2R. [198] 890

CAMPBELL, Lord
Parliament—Order in the House, [198] 147

CAMPBELL, Mr. H., Stirling, &c.
Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland), Comm. [197] 156
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 395
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 800
Supply—Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 966
University Tests, Comm. [197] 772, 784

CAMPERDOWN, Earl of Greenwich Hospital, 2R. [198] 1
Naval Stores, 2R. [195] 672, 673
Navy—Armament of Turret Ships, [195] 345, 351, 352; Explanation, 570
University Tests, 2R. [198] 141

Canada—Dominion of British Columbia, Motion for Address for "any Papers on the Union of British Columbia with the Dominion of Canada" (Sir Harry Verney) June 1, [196] 1098; after debate, Motion agreed to (Parl. P. No. 390)
Canadian Boundaries, Question, Observations, Viscount Milton; Reply, Mr. Otway August 6, [198] 1440
Dockyard Emigrants, Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 27, [195] 1698; Question, Sir Harry Verney; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 4, [196] 105; Question, Mr. Alderman Salomons; Answer, Mr. Childers June 7, 1297 (Parl. P. Nos. 196, 354, 403)
Hudson's Bay Company—Cession of Territory, Question, Sir Harry Verney; Answer, Mr. Monsell Feb 25, [194] 309; Question, Lord Cairns; Answer, Earl Granville Mar 8, 798; Question, Viscount Bury; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 12, [195] 583; Question, Mr. Adderley; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 13, 680; Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Monsell June 10, [196] 1497; Question, Sir Harry Verney; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 9, [197] 1526
[cont.

Canada, Dominion of—cont.
Intercolonial Railway, Question, Mr. Sinclair Aytoun; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 28, [196] 877
Intercolonial Railway Loan, Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 8, To leave out from "That," and add "this House is of opinion that the application of money raised under the Imperial guarantee, in pursuance of 'The Canada Railway Loan Act, 1867,' to the redemption of a portion of the debt of the Canadian Dominion is contrary to the intention of that Act; and that no further guarantee should be given by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury under the above Act, except in such form and manner as shall ensure the direct application of the money so guaranteed to the construction of the Intercolonial Railway" (Mr. Sinclair Aytoun), [197] 1445; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn
Correspondence—(Parl. P. No. 272)
Newfoundland, Question, Mr. Adderley; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 11, [194] 1091
Addresses—Parl. P. . . [4198]
Patent Law, Question, Mr. Bentall; Answer, Mr. Monsell; short debate thereon August 5, [198] 1292
Reduction of Military Force in, Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Cardwell May 13, [196] 747

Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan (Guarantee) Bill (Mr. Dodson, Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Resolution in Committee July 30
Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1°* August 2 [Bill 253]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" August 5, [198] 1324
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day month" (Mr. Monk); after short debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 65, N. 10; M. 55; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2°
Committee*; Report August 6
Considered* August 7
Read 3°* August 7
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 7 (No. 285)
Read 2ª*; Committee negatived August 9
Read 3ª* August 10
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 101]

CANDLISH, Mr. J., Sunderland
Abyssinia—Cost of the War, [196] 106; Motion for a Committee, 1419, 1439
Army Estimates—Superannuation Allowances, [197] 149, 150
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 378, 397; cl. 4, 526; add. cl. 536; Consid. 1088
Audit of Public Accounts, [197] 626
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1216; cl. 13, 1221; cl. 130, [197] 317
Board of Trade Returns, [198] 706
Cardiff Docks, Accidents in the, [194] 738
Ceylon—Basses Lights, [198] 563
Civil Service Pensions, Comm. cl. 3, [196] 872
[cont.

Candlish, Mr. J.—cont.
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 843
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 19, Amendt. [196] 1768; cl. 41, 1782
Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866, [197] 1192
Greenwich Hospital, Leave, [195] 1711
Imprisonment for Debt, 2R. [195] 175
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [195] 1026 ; cl. 20, 1498 ; cl. 59, [196] 402
Light Dues, Res. [196] 182
Mercantile Marine, [194] 156
Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Comm. Res. [198] 1511
Metropolis—New Public Offices, [197] 1672
Navy—Lime Juice, Pure, [198] 1291
Naval Contracts, [198] 642
Navy Estimates—Naval Stores, [195] 187
Salaries, [195] 83
O'Sullivan's Disability, 2R. [196] 582
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 24, [198] 1383
Pilotage Dues on Foreign Shipping, [196] 468
Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [196] 1147
Post Office—West India Mails, [195] 841
Prisons (Religious Instruction), Motion for Returns, [198] 349
Rateable Property, Leave, [194] 185
Registration of Voters, Motion for a Committee, [194] 979
Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 466
Supply—Chapter House, Westminster, [197] 1210
Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1464
Foreign Office, [197] 1677
Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 678
General Register Office, [197] 1684
Houses of Parliament, [197] 680
Industrial Museum, Edinburgh, [197] 1212
Lighthouses Abroad, [197] 1463
Missions and Embassies Abroad, [198] 946
Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1705
Public Buildings, Amendt. [197] 675
Public Offices Site, [197] 1207
Public Works (Ireland), Amendt. [197] 1460
Rates on Government Property, [197] 1458
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 663
Stationery Office, [197] 1695
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 427 ;—Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 801

Canterbury, Archbishop of
Bishops of the South Western District, [196] 5, 8
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1740, 1744, 1747 ; Report, [198] 147
Ecclesiastical Courts, &c., Nomination of Committee, [195] 1353
Ecclesiastical Dilapidations, 2R. [195] 1820
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1332
196] Irish Church, 2R. 1707
197] Comm. Preamble, 728 ; cl. 2, Amendt. 743 ; cl. 3, Amendt. 753 ; cl. 12, Amendt. 870, 873 ; cl. 13, 883, 885 ; cl. 25, 998 ; cl. 28, 1077 ; cl. 29, Amendt. 1110, 1119, 1128 ; Report, Amendt. 1514, 1518, 1521 ; 3R. 1618
198] Commons' Amendts. 416
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 20, [196] 457

Cape Colony
Boers of the Transvaal Republic, Question, Mr. R. Fowler ; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 7, [197] 1342
Despatches—Parl. P. [4040]
Enslavement of Kaffir Children, Question, Mr. R. Fowler ; Answer, Mr. Monsell ; short debate thereon Feb 19, [194] 128
Correspondence—Parl. P. [4141]

Capital Punishment Abolition Bill
(Mr. Gilpin, Mr. Hadfield, Mr. M'Laren, Sir John Gray)
c. Ordered* April 9
Read 1°* April 12 [Bill 71]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" July 28, [198] 840
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. J. D. Lewis) ; after long debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c. ;" A. 58, N. 118 ; M. 60 ; words added ; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to ; Bill put off for three months

Cardiff Docks, Accidents in the
Observations, Mr. Candlish ; Reply, Colonel Stuart, Mr. Bruce Mar 5, [194] 738

Cardwell, Right Hon. E. (Secretary of State for War), Oxford City
Army—Questions, &c.
Allowances to Troops in China and Japan, [194] 1463
Armament of Sea and Land Defences, [197] 142
Ball Ammunition, Possession of, [198] 1292
Branding Deserters, [196] 101, 573
Cadastral Survey, [194] 1999
Camping System, Major M'Gwire's, [197] 944
Canteens, [194] 1464
Cartridge Making, [194] 410
Cavalry Regiments for India, [198] 154
Chaplains, [195] 678
Chelmsford, Rifle Range at, [196] 264
Colonels in the Indian Army, [197] 1888
Colonels' Pay, [195] 1362
Committee on New Arms, [198] 495
Concentration of Army Offices, [195] 1577
Courts Martial, [196] 1495 ; [198] 324
Cupping in the, [195] 1097
Drilling at Aldershot, [198] 156
Examinations for Commissions, [194] 629
Field Days at Aldershot during Hot Weather, [198] 455
Fines for Drunkenness, [196] 1296
Fortifications, Expenditure on, [195] 232, 233 ; [196] 1572
Government of the, [194] 203
Gunpowder Magazines at Upnor, [197] 1168
Household Cavalry, [196] 572
India—Rifles for, [194] 1653
Japan, Officers of the Army in, [198] 904
Lunatics — Murder of Sergeant Barnes, [195] 1576
Military Appointments, [194] 355
Military Labour, [198] 685
Military Train, [195] 1200
Militia Officers, [196] 749

[cont.

Cardwell, Right Hon. E. —cont.
- Militia Quartermasters, [194] 631
- Moncrieff Gun Carriages, [198] 895
- New Zealand War Medal, [194] 352
- Non-Purchase Corps, Promotion in, [198] 995
- Ordnance Survey, [195] 1974 ; [197] 946
- Retirement of Officers, [195] 1095
- Rintoul, Captain, Case of, [196] 389
- Royal Horse Artillery, [197] 359
- Saltpetre, Storage of, [195] 1584
- Snider Rifle, [194] 2002
- Soldiers Employment, [198] 1087
- Spithead Forts, [198] 1089
- 3rd West India Regiment, [194] 1789
- Volunteer Capitation Grant, [196] 1299
- West Kent Militia, [195] 679
- Whitworth Gun, [194] 1660
- Wightman, Ensign, Case of, [196] 388
- Yeomanry Cavalry, [194] 159

Army—Adjutancies of Militia, Res. [197] 139
Army—Clerks of the Works and Royal Engineers, Res. [197] 136
Army—Military Labour, Res. [195] 658
Army—Militia and Reserve Forces, Motion for Returns, [195] 1761
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1535
Army—War Office and Horse Guards, [194] 625 ; Res. 1105
Army Estimates—Army Administration, [197] 145
- Building and Repairs, [195] 669, 670
- Hospital Establishment, [195] 666
- Land Forces, [194] 1111, 1140, 1145, 1173
- Martial Law, [195] 663, 666
- Military Education, [197] 143, 147
- Military Stores, [195] 668, 669
- Militia, &c. [195] 667 ; [196] 1574
- Superannuation Allowances, [197] 149, 150
- Yeomanry, [196] 1577

Canada—Reduction of Forces, [196] 747, 748
Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan, 2R. [198] 1332
Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), Comm. [195] 221
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1005 ; cl. 1, 1009
Government Reductions and Emigration, [195] 992
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1791, 1792
Irish Church, 3R. [196] 996
Militia, Leave, [195] 941 ; Comm. 1418 ; 3R. 1532
Navy Estimates—Coast Guard Service, [195] 95
Navy—Naval Contracts, [198] 648
Royal Patriotic Fund, [194] 1465 ; [195] 1583; [196] 469
Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 465
Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 513, 514
Treasury Board, Constitution of the, [194] 860

Carnarvon, Earl of

Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1743, 1744
Ecclesiastical Courts, 2R. [195] 834
Endowed Schools, 2R. [197] 618
Habitual Criminals, 2R. [194] 703 ; Comm. cl. 4, 1312, 1315 ; cl. 6, 1319 ; cl. 14, Amendt. 1341, 1343
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1336, 1340

[cont.

Carnarvon, Earl of—cont.

Ireland—Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 368
- State of, [195] 1969

Irish Church, [196] 1579 ; 2R. 1717 ; [197] 36 ; Comm. cl. 2, 746 ; cl. 14, 914 ; cl. 23, Amendt. 924 ; Report, Amendt. 1484, 1486 ; 3R. 1621 ; Commons' Amendts. [198] 422
Life Peerages, Comm. [196] 1179
New Zealand, [198] 778, 786, 794
Parliament—Construction of the House, Res. [198] 4, 13
Parliament—Order in the House, [197] 403, 405
Parliamentary Proceedings, 2R. [194] 619
Pauperism and Emigration, [195] 967
University Tests, 2R. Previous Question moved, [198] 127

Carnegie, Hon. C., Forfarshire

Army Estimates—Martial Law, [195] 663
Cattle, Foreign, Importation of, [194] 352
Cattle Plague (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1810
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1532 ; cl. 90, 1757
Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee, [196] 632
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), Leave, [194] 112 ; 2R. [196] 244, 253 ; [198] 393
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [198] 361
Parliament—Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 195
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1734

Carter, Mr. R. M., Leeds

Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1251
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 538
Supply—Public Works (Ireland), [197] 1461
- Rates for Government Property, [197] 1459
- Royal Parks, &c. [197] 664

Cartwright, Mr. W. C., Oxfordshire

Employment of Women and Children in Agriculture, [194] 1355

Carysfort, Earl of

Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 27

Cashel Election—Joint Address for a Commission

Question, Lord Edwin Hill-Trevor ; Answer, The Attorney General for Ireland April 16, [195] 976 Moved, "That an humble Address, &c." (Mr. Attorney General for Ireland) April 29, 1935 ; after short debate, Motion agreed to
l. Address agreed to June 8
Her Majesty's Answer reported June 21
- Minutes of Evidence—(Parl. P. No. 121)

Cattle Plague
Cheshire, Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, the distress occasioned by the Cattle Plague to the Ratepayers of the county of Chester entitles them to the favourable consideration of Her Majesty's Government, with a view to some remission of the heavy debt incurred for the amount of compensation" (Earl Grosvenor) July 13, [197] 1807; after debate, Question put; A. 85, N. 126; M. 41
Foot and Mouth Disease, Question, Mr. J. Lowther; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster August 4, [198] 1252
Germany, Outbreak of Rinderpest in, Question, Sir James Elphinstone; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Feb 23, [194] 207
194] Importation of Diseased Foreign Sheep and Cattle, Question, Mr. Headlam; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Feb 22, 154; Question, Mr. Synan; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Feb 23, 205; Question, Mr. Carnegie; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Feb 26, 352; Question, Lord R. Montagu; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster
195] April 22, 1363; April 23, 1467; Questions, Mr. Corrance; Answers, Mr. W. E. Forster April 27, 1696; Question, Mr. A. Johnston; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 1, [197] 949
Report—(Parl. P. No. 320)
Live Stock, Carriage of, Question, Sir Robert Anstruther; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 4, [194] 630
Metropolitan Cattle Market, Question, Mr. Pell; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster May 3, [196] 15
Roumania, Cattle Plague in, Question, Mr. Turnor; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 2, [197] 1081 (Parl. P. No. 222)
Orders of Council—(Parl. P. No. 76)
(See Contagious Diseases (Animals) Bill)

CAVE, Right Hon. S., New Shoreham
Bank of England—Payment of Dividends, [196] 263
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1216; cl. 7, 1218; cl. 46, 1405; cl. 88, 1606; cl. 126, 1904; cl. 130, [197] 317
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 29, [196] 1776
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1784
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 124
Life Assurance Companies, Leave, [194] 585
Light Dues, Res. [196] 167
Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 616

CAVENDISH, Lord F. C., Yorkshire, W.R., N. Div.
Agricultural Labourers, Res. [197] 592
Agriculture, Department of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 506
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1510

CAVENDISH, Lord G. H., Derbyshire, N.
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [197] 327
Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, Estates of, [195] 676
Irish Church—Lords Amendts. [198] 57

CAWLEY, Mr. C. E., Salford
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 377, 394; cl. 5, 532, 533
197] Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 64, 1535; cl. 67, Amendt. ib. 1539; cl. 73, Amendt. 1540, 1541; cl. 90, 1758; cl. 96, Amendt. 1762; cl. 98, Amendt. ib.; cl. 99, Amendt. 1763
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 29, [196] 1773
Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1817
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 32, [196] 41; cl. 39, 135; Lords' Amendts. [197] 1934
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 655
Savings Banks, [195] 1581
Supply—Rates for Government Property, [197] 1459
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 666; Amendt. 673

CECIL, Lord E. H. B. G., Essex, W.
Army—Chelmsford, Rifle Range at, [196] 263
Field Days at Aldershot during Hot Weather, [198] 454, 455
False Weights and Measures, &c. [194] 718
Navy—Coastguardsmen, [198] 453
Sanitary Acts, [194] 2000

CHADWICK, Mr. D., Macclesfield
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 397; add. cl. 534; Consid. Amendt. 1084, 1086, 1087
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1817
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 681; 2R. [195] 446; Comm. cl. 101, [197] 1764; 3R. [198] 520
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 338
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1515

CHAMBERS, Mr. M., Devonport
Army—Clerks of the Works and Royal Engineers, Res. [197] 134
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 13, [196] 1220; cl. 59, 1605; add. cl. [197] 417
Civil Offices (Pensions), Consid. [197] 542
County Courts, 2R. [196] 687
Diplomatic Salaries, &c. Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1337
Navy—Government Dockyards, Reductions in, [194] 378
Parliament—Decoration of Central Hall, Motion for a Committee, [198] 719

CHAMBERS, Mr. T., Marylebone
Bayswater Market and Baths, 2R. Amendt. [194] 540
County Courts, 2R. [194] 1568
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 9, Amendt. [196] 1744, 1745; cl. 10, Amendt. 1748, 1749; cl. 13, Amendt. 1765
Habitual Criminals, Comm. [198] 1267; cl. 10, 1279; cl. 11, 1280
Inclosure of Lands, [194] 1905
India—Jhansi Prize Money, [194] 1466
Land, Transfer of, [194] 2000
Libel, 2R. [194] 1609
Lord's Day Society—Petition Forgeries—Explanation, [196] 1916
Marlborough Street Police Court—Motion for Papers, [198] 1227

[cont.

CHAMBERS, Mr. T.—cont.
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Leave, [194] 331 ; 2R. [195] 1288, 1324 ; Comm. [196] 1450 ; Instruction, [197] 467, 470 ; [198] 357 ; cl. 1, Amendt. 365, 366
Metropolis Gas Bills, [194] 300
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 344 ; Comm. add. cl. 1057
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 625
Museums, &c., Opening of, on Sundays, [196] 1276
Parliament—Business of the House, [194] 1093 ; [198] 1092
Parliament—Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 190
Poor Law (Removal of Children), Res. [197] 1334, 1340
Rateable Property (Ireland), Leave, [194] 182
Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 799, 800
Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 640
Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 125

CHANCELLOR, The LORD (Lord HATHERLEY)
Bankruptcy, [194] 95 ; 2R. [197] 1403, 1416 ; Comm. [198] 15, 17, 679, 681 ; 3R. 889 ; Commons' Amendts. 1284
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1747 ; Commons' Amendts. [198] 1469
Charity Commissioners, 2R. [197] 1748
Common Law Courts (Ireland), Comm. add. cl. [194] 1460 ; 3R. [195] 340
Courts of Justice Salaries and Funds, 2R. [198] 1063
Dublin City Election, Address, [196] 1400
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [198] 1084
Election Inquiries — Reports of the Judges, [196] 1294, 1391
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 14, [197] 1878
Evidence Amendment, 2R. [198] 677
Government of India Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 1829
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 10, [194] 1324, 1326 ; cl. 14, 1343 ; Report, cl. 10, [195] 226
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1349
Ireland—Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 383, 384
197] Irish Church, 2R. 247 ; cl. 7, 755, 756, 759 ; cl. 8, ib. ; cl. 13, 874, 881 ; cl. 14, 914 ; cl. 15, 920 ; cl. 16, 923 ; cl. 25, 998 ; cl. 29, 1117, 1119, 1149 ; cl. 19, 1266 ; cl. 21, 1267 ; Report, 1493, 1495, 1501, 1522 ; 3R. 1622
198] Commons' Amendts. 312, 314, 316
Life Peerages, Motion for an Address, [196] 11
Lodgers' Property Protection, 2R. [196] 563
Marriage Law Commission Report, [195] 137
Married Women's Property, 2R. [198] 984
Municipal Magistrates, Removal of, [196] 1093
Newspapers, &c. 2R. [196] 967, 968
Parliament—Opening of the Session, [194] 1, 2, 3, 14
Order in the House, [197] 408
Queen's Speech, The, [194] 24
Parliamentary Proceedings, 2R. [194] 614
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Report, [196] 1286
Religious, Educational, &c. Societies Incorporation, 2R. [196] 355 ; Comm. [197] 568
Representative Peers for Scotland — Double Return, [196] 562
[cont.

CHANCELLOR, The LORD—cont.
Speaker, Presentation of the, [194] 11, 12
Special Bails, 2R. [197] 1749
St. Katherine's Hospital, [195] 1947
Tenure (Ireland), 2R. [195] 1191 ; Comm. 1561
Trades Unions (Protection of Funds), 2R. [198] 993, 994 ; Comm. 1069, 1070
Wiltes Peerage, Report, [196] 427

CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER (Right Hon. R. LOWE), London University
Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 110, 641, 646, 647
Cost of the War, [196] 106
Assessed Taxes, Collection of, [194] 1087
Assessed Tax Papers, [198] 1251
Bank of England — Payment of Dividends, [196] 263
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [197] 318 ; cl. 131, 415
Bills of Exchange, Res. [197] 141
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1812
Civil and Diplomatic Appointments, Res. [195] 486
Civil Offices (Pensions), Consid. [197] 544
Civil Service Pensions, Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [196] 873, 874
Clerks of Local Commissioners of Taxes, [196] 1208
Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), 3R. [198] 1282
Copyhold, Inclosure, and Charity Commissions, [195] 141
Corn, Duty on, [195] 585, 844
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1254, 1270
Courts of Justice (New Site), Leave, [196] 555, 557, 559, 1496 ; [198] 1529
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 818, 824, 828 ; cl. 1, 841 ; cl. 4, 843 ; cl. 11, 845 ; cl. 18, 849, 850, 852 ; cl. 19, ib. ; cl. 26, 854 ; cl. 36, 855 ; add. cl. 857
Dagenham Dock Company, [198] 1371
Faraday, Proposed Monument to, [197] 1173
Fire Insurance, [196] 574 ; [197] 1168
Fire Insurances, Res. [195] 306
Gold Coinage, [198] 1411, 1422, 1532, 1534
Melting of English Sovereigns, [198] 1527
Horses, Tax on, [195] 1098
House Tax, Res. [197] 1805
Income and Assessed Taxes, Payment of, [195] 843 ; [197] 123
Income Tax, Res. [194] 1532
Ireland—Hackney Carriages in Dublin, [195] 583, 584
Loans to Dublin and Belfast, [197] 125
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1978
Libel, 2R. [195] 757
Licence Duties on Servants, [195] 1850
Light Dues, Res. [196] 171
Malt Duties, [194] 626 ; [198] 1247
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 338 ; Consid. 1133
Money Laws (Ireland), 2R. [197] 481
National Debt, Res. [198] 1213
Nomenclature of Diseases, [194] 1789
Parliament—Business of the House, [195] 847
Poor Law, Res. [197] 441, 443
Post Horse and Carriage Licences Duties, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1528
Post Office—Inland Postage, Res. [195] 253
Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, [194] 1187 ; Motion for a Committee, 1305, 1306
[cont.

Chancellor of the Exchequer—cont.
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 819
Prosecutions, Cost of, [196] 811
Real Property, Res. [196] 598
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1577
Savings Banks, [195] 1581, 1582
Scotland—Income Tax, [196] 390, 471
Shepherds Dogs, Tax on, [197] 947
Stamp Acts, Consolidation of the, [195] 30
Stamp Duties Exemption, [195] 1849
Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 464, 466
Supply — Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 641, 646, 647, 773
Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 967
Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1443
Industrial Museum, Edinburgh, [197] 1212
Land Registry Office, [198] 909
Missions and Embassies Abroad, [198] 945, 947
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 670
Treasury, &c. Departments, [197] 1478
Taxes, Collection of, [194] 767
Taxes on Servants, [196] 1097, 1098
Telegraphs, Comm. cl. 4, [198] 767
Telegraphs and Railway Companies, [196] 1299
Treasury Board, Constitution of the, [194] 847, 854
195] Ways and Means—Financial Statement, 363
. 408, 430, 433, 584; Res. 1, (Corn, &c.), 586,
. 593, 596, 598, 599; Motion for reporting
. Progress, 601, 605, 613, 625, 640—Res. 2, 196] (Customs and Excise Duties), 793, 796, 797,
. 798, 799; Amendt. 800, 802, 803, 804, 805,
. 806, 807

Chaplin, Mr. H., Lincolnshire, Mid.
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1287
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 29, [195] 1899

Charity Commissioners Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Chancellor)
l. Presented; read 1ª * July 5 (No. 170)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 13, [197] 1748; Bill read 2ª
Committee *; Report July 20
Read 3ª * July 22
c. Read 1° * July 26 [Bill 239]
Read 2° * July 29
Committee *—R.P. August 5
Committee *—R.P. August 6
Committee *; Report August 6
Considered * August 7
Considered * August 9
Read 3° * August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 110]

Charley, Mr. W. T., Salford
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 7, [197] 1768
Coronation Oath, The, [198] 906
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 18, [196] 852; add. cl. 856, 857
Dublin Freemen, Leave, [197] 961
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1395, 1657
Ireland — Impropriate Tithe Rent Charge, [195] 1974
Lavelle v. Proudfoot, Case of, [196] 881
[cont.

Charley, Mr. W. T.—cont.
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1285
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1949; Comm. [195] 896; cl. 10, 1107; cl. 12, 1111, 1123; cl. 13, Amendt. 1126, 1136; cl. 16, Amendt. 1407, 1409; cl. 26, 1621, 1626; cl. 58, Amendt. [196] 390; cl. 62, 421; Consid. Amendt. 773; Lords' Amendts. [197] 1954, 1955, 1958; [198] 39, 122, 581
Parliament—Business of the House, [198] 906, 908
Morning Sittings, [195] 1978
Post Horse and Carriage Licences Duties, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1528
Printworks Regulation, Res. [194] 1535, 1542
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1364
Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 620;—Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 805

Chelmsford, Lord
Bankruptcy, [194] 95; 2R. [197] 1416; Comm. [198] 17
Brazilian Slave Trade, 2R. [194] 474; 3R. 825
Common Law Courts (Ireland), Comm. add. cl. [194] 1460
Dublin City Election, Address, [196] 1399
Evidence Amendment, 2R. [198] 673
Extradition Treaty with France, [198] 554
Government of India Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 1833
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 10, [194] 1320, 1328, 1331, 1332; cl. 14, Amendt. 1339
Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1828; Comm. cl. 2, [197] 752; cl. 7, 756; cl. 9, 759; Commons' Amendts. [198] 323
Life Peerages, Comm. cl. 1, [196] 1203
Marriage Law Commission Report, [195] 135
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Report, [196] 1286
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 1R. [195] 475
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [195] 572

Chichester, Earl of
New Parishes, &c. 2R. [196] 1583

Child, Sir S., Staffordshire, W.
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1533; cl. 90, 1756

Childers, Right Hon. H. C. E. (First Lord of the Admiralty), Pontefract
Abyssinian Expedition, [195] 30
Admiralty Accounts, [198] 1526
Australian Preserved Meat, [194] 487
Fisheries, Scotch and Irish, [198] 893
Greenwich Hospital, Leave, [195] 1712; Comm. [197] 566
Herne Bay Oyster Grounds, [194] 408
India—Red Sea Route to, [198] 707
Malta—New Port and Docks, [195] 1695
Merchant Seamen and Greenwich Hospital, [196] 745
Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Leave, [198] 1515
[cont.

Childers, Right Hon. H. C. E.—cont.

- Navy—Questions, &c.
  - Admiralty Clerks, Pay of, [194] 206; [197] 412, 413
  - Admiralty, Constitution of the Board of, [194] 304
  - Admiralty Departments, Corruption in, [198] 1489
  - Africa—West Coast of, [198] 1528
  - Barnes, Mr. W., Case of, [195] 843
  - Channel and Mediterranean Fleets, [198] 797
  - Coal, Use of North Country, [195] 1354
  - Coastguard, [194] 629; [198] 454
  - Dockyard Distress, [195] 49
  - Dockyard Emigrants to Canada, [196] 1298
  - Dover Harbour, Moorings in, [195] 1583
  - Flying Squadron, [197] 311
  - Government Dockyards, Reductions in the, [194] 379
  - Greenwich Hospital, [194] 717
  - Greenwich Sixpence, [195] 1853
  - "Inconstant," The, [196] 263
  - Instructions to Officers on Foreign Stations, [194] 1353, 1354
  - Naval Chaplains, [194] 1654
  - Naval Contracts, [198] 647
  - Naval Reserve, Royal, [194] 484
  - Reserve Channel Squadron, [196] 1237
  - Water, Fresh, for the Fleet, [198] 892
  - "Will-of-the Wisp" Journal, [194] 208
- Navy—Admiralty Clerks, Res. [196] 1623, 1625, 1626
- Navy—African Squadron, Motion for Returns, [195] 44
- Navy Estimates—Coastguard Service, [195] 89, 90
  - Dockyards, &c. [195] 100
  - Half Pay, [195] 216
  - Marine Divisions, [195] 185, 186
  - Medical Establishments, [195] 185
  - Men and Boys, [194] 863, 896, 907, 929
  - Naval Stores, [195] 192, 193
  - New Works, [195] 212, 215, 217
  - Salaries, [195] 55, 66, 73, 76, 83
  - Steam Machinery, [195] 194, 199, 200, 202, 204, 209
  - Victualling Yards, &c. [195] 184
  - Victuals and Clothing, [194] 932
- Ryde Pier, [197] 358
- Supply—Grants in Aid, [198] 960
  - Greenwich Hospital, [196] 1577
- Venus, Transit of (1874), Comm. Res. [198] 1394, 1395

Children, &c. Protection Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess Townshend)

l. Presented; read 1ª* April 29 (No. 84)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 15, [197] 1864
Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months") (The Earl of Airlie); on Question, That ("now") &c.? resolved in the negative; Bill to be read 2ª on this day three months

China

- China, Relations with, Question, Mr. Dilke; Answer, Mr. Otway April 29, [195] 1855
- Hong Kong—Gambling Houses, Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 12, [197] 1667—Legislative Council, Question, Mr. Bowring; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 19, [198] 153
- Hostility to Foreigners, Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Mr. Otway April 12, [195] 577
- Insult to the French Chargé d'Affaires at Pekin, Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Mr. Otway June 28, [197] 625
- Missionaries in China, Question, Observations, The Duke of Somerset; Reply, Earl Granville; short debate thereon Mar 8, [194] 933
- Missionaries and Gunboats in Formosa, Question, Observations, The Duke of Somerset; Reply, The Earl of Clarendon; short debate thereon April 5, [195] 131
- Rangoon and Western China—Overland Route, Question, Colonel Gray; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 22, [195] 1356 (Parl. P. No. 420)
- Tien-Tsin, Treaty of, Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, that She will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House, Copies of the Memorial of the Chamber of Commerce at Shanghai to Sir Rutherford Alcock, and his Reply to the Memorial addressed to Consul Medhurst, dated the 23rd day of March last:
  And, of all Correspondence of the Foreign Office, with Sir Rutherford Alcock on the subject of the renewal of the Treaty of Tien-tsin" (Colonel Sykes) July 13, [197] 1779; after debate, Motion withdrawn

Parl. Papers—

Relating to China . . .	[4097 1 to 11]
Reports of Journeys . .	[4187]

Church of England

- Bahamas—Ecclesiastical Grants, Question, Mr. Miall; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 12, [195] 581 Copy of Act—(Parl. P. No. 407)
- Bishops of Protestant Churches—Ecclesiastical Titles Act, Question, Lord Colchester; Answer, Earl Granville June 7, [196] 1280; Question, Mr. MacEvoy; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 5, [197] 1169
  (See Irish Church)
- Church Rates—Private Acts, Question, Colonel French; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 29, [195] 1854
- Consecration Fees, Question, Mr. Monk; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Feb 25, [194] 309
- Disability of Episcopal Clergy to sit in Parliament, Question, Lord Henry Thynne; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 23, [195] 1466
- Ecclesiastical Commissioners—Deanery of Lichfield and Rectory of Tatenhill, Question, Mr. M. A. Bass; Answer, Mr. Acland Mar 8, [194] 833—Estates of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, Question, Lord George Cavendish; Answer, Mr. Acland April 13, [195] 676
- Natal—Case of the Rev. Mr. Green, Question, Mr. Thomas Hughes; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 10, [196] 467

cont.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND—cont.
Retirement of Bishops, Question, Sir Massey Lopes; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 12, [195] 581—Bishops of Winchester, Salisbury, Exeter, and Bath and Wells, Question, The Duke of Somerset; Answer, The Archbishop of Canterbury; short debate thereon May 3, [196] 4
Ritualistic Processions—St. George's-in-the-East, Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 8, [195] 355
St. James and St. Paul's, Lancashire, Question, Mr. R. Shaw; Answer, Mr. Acland April 12, [195] 576
Visitation Fees, Question, Colonel Brise; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld April 20, [195] 1196
Ecclesiastical Fees—(Parl. P. No. 149)
West Indies, Clergy in the, Question, Sir Charles Adderley; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 15, [197] 1889

Cinque Ports Act Amendment Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered; read 1°* July 9 [Bill 206]
Read 2°* July 12
Committee*; Report July 21
Read 3°* July 22
l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Morley) July 23 (No. 216)
Read 2ª* July 27
Committee*; Report July 29
Read 3ª* July 30
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 53]

Civil and Diplomatic Appointments
Amendt. on Committee of Supply April 9, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, all appointments to the Civil and Diplomatic Services ought to be obtained by open competition" (Mr. Fawcett), [195] 480; after short debate, Question put, "That the words &c.;" A. 281, N. 30; M. 251
Civil Service Appointments, Observations, Mr. Buxton; Reply, Mr. Disraeli; short debate thereon April 2, [195] 31

Civil Offices (Pensions) Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Resolution in Committee Feb 22, [194] 165
Resolution reported; Bill ordered* Feb 23
Read 1°* Mar 9 [Bill 42]
Read 2°* Mar 22
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" May 27, [196] 858
Amendt. to leave out from "That" and add "in the opinion of this House, the further consideration of this Bill ought to be deferred until an inquiry has been made into the duties attached to some Political Offices which are now regarded as comparatively sinecure, and which offices for the first time will be entitled to Pensions under this Bill" (Mr. Fawcett); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," agreed to; Committee; Report, 868 [Bill 133]
[cont.

Civil Offices (Pensions) Bill—cont.
Question, Mr. Fawcett; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 1, 1097
Considered, after debate June 24, [197] 536
Read 3°* June 28
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) June 29
Read 2ª* July 30 (No. 157)
Committee*; Report August 2
Read 3ª* August 3
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 60]

Civil Service Pensions Bill
(Mr. Locke King, Mr. Russell Gurney)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Mar 11 [Bill 46]
Read 2°* Mar 18
Committee*; Report April 8
Read 3°* April 12
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Salisbury) April 13
Read 2ª* April 30 (No. 53)
Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into a Committee on the said Bill" May 4, [196] 81; after short debate, House in Committee; Report
Read 3ª* May 13
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 15]

CLANCARTY, Earl of Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1885; Comm. cl. 13, Amendt. [197] 874, 878; cl. 28, 1025; cl. 41, 1159; cl. 46, 1165; Report, 1486, 1492; 3R. Amendt. 1595, 1614

CLANRICARDE, Marquess of Common Law Courts (Ireland), 2R. [194] 481; 3R. Amendt. [195] 339, 340
Ireland—Questions, &c.
Bills relating to, [194] 198
Fenian Prisoners, Released, [195] 671
Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 380
Mayor of Cork—Assassinations, [195] 1952
Murders in, [194] 1618, 1652
Police, [198] 665
State of, [195] 1967
Ireland—Crime, Address for Returns, [194] 946
Ireland—Sales of Tithe Rent Charge, &c., Motion for Returns, [195] 450
Irish Church, Comm. Preamble, [197] 742; cl. 2, 744; cl. 26, 999; cl. 27, 1021; cl. 28, 1025; cl. 33, 1156; cl. 45, 1164; cl. 68, 1236, 1249; Report, Amendt. 1504, 1507; Commons Amendts. [198] 279
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 1R. [195] 476
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [195] 571
Spain—Case of the "Tornado," [195] 353, 354
Tenure (Ireland), 2R. [195] 1157, 1194; Comm. 1573; [198] 776

CLARENDON, Earl of (Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs)
Brazilian Slave Trade, 2R. [194] 471; Comm. 620, 622; 3R. 827
China—Missionaries in, [194] 937; [195] 132
Extradition Treaty with France, [198] 558
Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1680; [197] 27, 28; Commons Amendts. [198] 258
Spain—Case of the "Tornado," [195] 353, 354
Turco-Persian Boundary, [196] 3
United States—"Alabama" Claims, [196] 1230

Clay, Mr. J., Kingston-on-Hull
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 994
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1582

Clergy Discipline and Ecclesiastical Courts Bill [H.L.]—See Ecclesiastical Courts Bill
(The Lord Archbishop of Canterbury)
l. Presented; read 1ª* Mar 5 (No. 26)
Bill read 2ª, and referred to the Select Committee on Ecclesiastical Courts Bill April 15

Clerk of Assize Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Ordered; read 1°* July 8 [Bill 203]
Read 2°* July 19
Committee*; Report July 29
Read 3°* July 30
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 2 (No. 248)
Read 2ª* August 3
Committee*; Report August 5
Read 3ª* August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 89]

Cleveland, Duke of
Bishops of the South Western District, [196] 9
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1742
Education, Public, [194] 824
Habitual Criminals, 2R. [194] 711; Comm. cl. 10, 1324; cl. 17, 1346; cl. 12, [195] 229
Irish Church, 2R. [197] 60; Comm. cl. 27, 1000; cl. 28, Amendt. 1026; cl. 68, 1239; Report, 1512; Commons Amendts. [198] 426
Life Peerages, Comm. [196] 1189
Parliament—Construction of the House, Res. [198] 12
Parliament—Order in the House, [197] 405
Scotland—Hypothec, Law of, [194] 1652
Wiltes Peerage, Report, Amendt. [196] 426

Clifton, Sir R. J., Nottingham
Beerhouses, &c., 2R. Motion for Adjournment, [195] 1781

Clive, Mr. G., Hereford City
Turnpike Trusts, [194] 483

Coal Fields of the United Kingdom
Motion for an Address "respecting the Report of the Royal Commission on the Exhaustion of the Coal Fields appointed in July 1866" (Mr. Pease) June 15, [196] 1910; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Coal Mines
Accidents in — Legislation, Question, Mr. Greene; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Feb 25, [194] 312; Question, Mr. Greene; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 8, [195] 359; Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 15, 844; Question, Lord Elcho; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 26, [198] 685
Motion for Address for "a Copy of the Memorial presented to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, praying for a special inquiry into the recent Accidents in Coal Mines" (Lord Elcho) August 9, [198] 1517; after short debate, Motion withdrawn
Reports of Inspectors, Question, Mr. Dimsdale; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 11, [194] 1089

Cogan, Right Hon. W. H. F., Kildare Co.
Metropolis—St. Marylebone Workhouse School, [197] 944
Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 509

Colchester, Lord
Bishops of Protestant Churches, [196] 1280
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 10, [194] 1330
Irish Church, 2R. [197] 96; Comm. cl. 13, Amendt. 884, 885; Report, Amendt. 1493
Life Peerages, 1R. [195] 473

Colebrooke, Sir T. E., Lanarkshire, S.
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), 2R. [197] 862
Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland), Comm. [197] 158
Government of India Act Amendment, Comm. [198] 1363; cl. 2, 1365, Amendt. 1366
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 384
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 1, [198] 821; cl. 2, 828; cl. 4, 1113; cl. 6, 1115; cl. 11, 1120; cl. 12, Amendt. 1121; cl. 24, 1232; cl. 44, 1393; Consid. cl. 5, 1452, 1457, 1465
Scotland—Education, [194] 1904
Scotland—Endowed Schools, &c., Motion for a Commission, [196] 1439, 1445
Scotland—Faggot Voting in Scotch Counties, [194] 1185; Motion for a Return, 1269
Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 514, 515, 521

Coleridge, Sir J. D., see Solicitor General, The

Collier, Sir R. P., see Attorney General, The

Collins, Mr. T., Boston
Army Estimates—Militia, &c. [196] 1574
Army—Militia and Reserve Forces, Motion for Returns, [195] 1761
Army—Militia—Snider Rifle, [194] 2002
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 397; add. cl. 535; Consid. 1086
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 54, [196] 1597; cl. 59, 1605
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [198] 1126
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1817
County Courts, 2R. [196] 686
Dublin Freemen, Leave, [197] 951
Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. Instruction, [198] 226, 230, 232
Endowed Schools, Motion for a Committee, [195] 23, 24, 125
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 9, [196] 1746; cl. 29, 1772; cl. 41, 1780, 1781
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1007
Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee, [196] 1784

[cont.

COLLINS, Mr. T.—cont.
Government of India Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 2, [198] 1366
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 10, [198] 1279; cl. 11, 1280
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 398
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 5, [197] 574
Imprisonment for Debt—Case of John Kenn, [194] 768
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, Amendt. [195] 1274
Ireland—Irish Clergy, Future Status of the, [195] 1198
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 32, [196] 46; cl. 39, 297; Lords' Amendts. [197] 1987
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. Amendt. [196] 1448; Instruction, [197] 467; [198] 360; cl. 1, Motion for reporting Progress, 365
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Consid. [198] 1133
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, [194] 670
Dublin City Writ, [196] 1792
New Writs, [194] 19
Youghal Election—New Writ, Amendt. [195] 2068
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 24, [198] 1240, 1383; cl. 59, 1443; cl. 66, 1447
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 818
Registration of Voters, Motion for a Committee, [194] 977; [197] 1887
Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 465
Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 799
Supply—Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 967
Miscellaneous Expenses, [198] 973
Telegraphs, Consid. [198] 977
Trades Unions (Protection of Funds), 2R. [198] 233
University Tests, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 789

Colonial Offenders Removal Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl Granville)
l. Presented; read 1ª* April 9 (No. 46)
Bill withdrawn* April 13

Colonial Prisoners Removal Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl Granville)
l. Presented; read 1ª* April 13 (No. 55)
Read 2ª* April 16
Committee*; Report April 19
Read 3ª* April 20
c. Read 1º* April 22 [Bill 92]
Read 2º* April 26
Committee*; Report April 27
Read 3º* April 28
Royal Assent May 13 [32 Vict. c. 10]

Colonial Returns since 1859
Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 10, [196] 470
Parl. Papers—
West Indies—Jamaica . . . [4090]
Statistical Abstract, 1853 to 1867 . . . . [4194]

COLONSAY, Lord
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [198] 888
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 14, [194] 1341
North British Railway—Accidental Deaths, Motion for a Paper, [196] 570
[cont.

COLONSAY, Lord—cont.
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [196] 442; cl. 20, Amendt. 459; cl. 37, 461; cl. 70, Amendt. 466; Report, 1283; Amendt. 1284, 1286; cl. 28, 1290; Commons Amendts. [198] 1480

Commissioners of Taxes, Clerks to Local—Compensation
Question, Mr. Hunt; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 3, [196] 1207

Common Law Courts (Ireland) Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl Granville)
l. Presented; read 1ª* Feb 23 (No. 9)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" (Lord Dufferin) Mar 2, [194] 481; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee Mar 16, 1459
Report* April 5
Read 3ª April 8, [195] 339
c. Read 1º* April 12 [Bill 74]
Bill withdrawn* June 21

Commons, Inclosure of, on Crown Manors
Question, Mr. Walsh; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 16, [195] 976

Companies Clauses Act (1863) Amendment Bill (Mr. Goldney, Mr. Eykyn)
c. Ordered; read 1º* May 28 [Bill 138]
Read 2º* June 9
Committee*; Report June 22
Read 3º* June 23
l. Read 1ª* (The Earl of Devon) June 24
Read 2ª* July 5 (No. 147)
Committee* July 15
Report* July 19
Read 3ª* July 22
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 48]

Compulsory Church Rates Abolition (Scotland) Bill (Mr. M'Laren, Mr. Craufurd)
c. Ordered; read 1º* August 9 [Bill 266]

CONOLLY, Mr. T., Donegal Co.
Ireland—State of, [195] 2033
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1379, 1382, 1384; cl. 25, 1596, 1601, 1602, 1611, 1613, 1615; cl. 26, 1625, 1627, 1628, 1629; cl. 29, 1895, 1929; cl. 32, [196] 37, 47; cl. 39, 134, 135, 148; Lords' Amendts. [197] 1985; [198] 42
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 234

Consolidated Fund (£8,406,272 13s. 4d.) Bill
c. Ordered; read 1º* Mar 10
Read 2º* Mar 11
Committee*; Report Mar 12
Read 3º* Mar 15
l. Read 1ª* Mar 15
Read 2ª*; Committee negatived Mar 16
Read 3ª* Mar 18
Royal Assent Mar 19 [32 Vict. c. 1]

Consolidated Fund (£17,100,000) Bill
c. Ordered * April 22
Read 1° * April 23
Read 2°, after short debate April 26, [195] 1647
Committee *; Report April 27
Read 3° * April 28
l. Read 1ª * April 29
Read 2ª * April 30
Committee *; Report May 3
Read 3ª * May 4
Royal Assent May 13 [32 Vict. c. 8]

Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Ordered; read 1° * July 31
Read 2° * August 2
Committee; Report August 3, [198] 1146
Read 3° August 4, 1282
l. Read 1ª * (The Earl Granville) August 5
Read 2ª * August 6
Committee *; Report August 7
Read 3ª * August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 93]

Constabulary Returns
Question, Mr. Rylands; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 29, [195] 1850

Contagious Diseases Act (1866)
Question, Viscount Lifford; Answer, The Earl of Morley Feb 25, [194] 284; Question, Mr. Mitford; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 25, 303
Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed "to inquire into the working of the Contagious Diseases Act, 1866, and to consider whether, and how far, and under what conditions, it may be expedient to extend its operation" (Mr. Secretary Bruce) May 13, [196] 808; after short debate, Motion agreed to
And, on June 8, Committee nominated as follows:— Captain Vivian (Chairman), Dr. Brewer, Lord Charles Bruce, Lord Eustace Cecil, Mr. Childers, Mr. Collins, Mr. Donald Dalrymple, Sir James Elphinstone, Captain Grosvenor, Marquess of Hamilton, Mr. Kinnaird, Mr. James Lowther, Mr. Mills, Mr. Mitford, Mr. Murphy, Sir John Pakington, Mr. Rathbone, Sir John Simeon, Mr. Tipping, Sir John Trelawny, and Mr. Percy Wyndham
Report of Select Committee July 8 (Parl. P. No. 306)

Contagious Diseases Act (1866) Amendment Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess Townshend)
l. Presented; read 1ª * Mar 8 (No. 29)
Bill withdrawn * May 7

Contagious Diseases (Animals) Bill
Question, Lord Robert Montagu; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster June 10, [196] 1498
Returns—(Parl. P. No. 247)
Conveyance of Cattle, Question, Mr. C. S. Parker; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster August 9, [198] 1491
Slaughter of Cattle, Question, Mr. C. S. Parker; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster August 9, [198] 1492

Contagious Diseases (Animals) Bill
(Lord Robert Montagu, Mr. Selwin-Ibbetson)
c. Considered in Committee; after short debate, a Resolution agreed to Feb 17, [194] 90; Bill ordered; read 1° * [Bill 1]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 10, 996
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Headlam); after short debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 197, N. 253; M. 56; words added; main Question, as amended, agreed to; Bill put off for six months

Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2) Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. W. E. Forster, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
194] c. Acts read; considered in Committee; after short debate, a Resolution agreed to Mar 4, 672; Bill ordered; read 1° * [Bill 38]
. Question, Sir James Elphinstone; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 16, 1466
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" April 8, [195] 434; after short debate, Bill read 2°
Committee *; Report May 3 [Bill 103]
Re-comm *—R.P. June 14
Committee *—R.P. July 2
197] Committee—R.P. July 6, 12
. Committee—R.P. July 9, 1528
. Committee; Report July 13, 1755 [Bill 212]
Considered * July 20 [Bill 226]
198] Read 3° July 22, 520
l. Read 1ª * (The Lord President) July 23
. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 29, 886; after debate, Bill read 2ª (No. 217)
. Committee July 30, 989
Report * August 2 (No. 240)
. Bill read 3ª, and passed August 3, 1137 (No. 261)
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 70]

Contagious Diseases Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Northbrook)
l. Presented; read 1ª * July 23 (No. 221)
Read 2ª * July 27
Committee * July 29
Report * July 30
Read 3ª * August 2
c. Read 1° * August 2 [Bill 255]
Read 2° * August 5
Committee *; Report August 6
Considered * August 7
Read 3° * August 7
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 96]

Contagious Diseases Prevention (Metropolis) Bill (The Marquess Townshend)
l. Presented; read 1ª * July 8 (No. 176)
Order for 2R. discharged July 22

Copyhold, Inclosure, and Charity Commission—Expenses of Question, Mr. Goldney; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 5, [195] 141

Copyright (Periodicals) Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Ordered; read 1° * April 22 [Bill 93]
Bill withdrawn * June 10

CORBETT, Colonel E., Shropshire, S.
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1531
Diplomatic Salaries, &c. Comm. cl. 7, [196] 1339
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1327
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 667
Real Property, Res. [196] 600

Corn and Grain Measurement Bill
(Mr. Henry B. Sheridan, Mr. Goldney)
c. Ordered; read 1°* June 23 [Bill 177]

Coronation Oath
Question, Observations, Lord Redesdale; Reply, Earl Granville April 19, [195] 1059; Question, Mr. White; Answer, The Attorney General July 29, [198] 893; Question, Observations, Mr. Charley; Reply, The Attorney General July 29, 906

Corporation of London Bill
(Mr. Buxton, Mr. Thomas Hughes)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Mar 8 [Bill 40]
Bill withdrawn* June 16

CORRANCE, Mr. F. S., Suffolk, E.
Agriculture, Department of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 505
Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1304; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 391, 393; cl. 4, 526
Cattle Plague—Importation of Diseased Sheep, [195] 1696
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 437; Comm. cl. 27, [197] 1293; cl. 64, 1535
Ireland—Church Property, [194] 1087
*Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 257
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 86
Business of the House, [195] 1471, 1472
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 471, 495, 538
Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 586;—(Customs and Excise Duties), Res. 2, Amendt. [196] 795, 796, 799

Corrupt Practices Commissions
Question, Lord Henry Thynne; Answer, The Attorney General April 30, [195] 1975
(See the several Boroughs)

CORRY, Right Hon. H. T. L., Tyrone Co.
Navy—African Squadron, Motion for Returns, [195] 46
Navy Estimates—Coast Guard Service, [195] 86, 99
Dockyards, &c. [195] 100, 101, 102; Amendt. 106
Half Pay, [195] 216
Marine Divisions, [195] 186
Medical Establishments, [195] 185
Men and Boys, [194] 878, 888, 890, 900, 907, 931
Naval Stores, [195] 188
Salaries, [195] 52, 76
Steam Machinery, [195] 194, 200, 203, 210
Victuals and Clothing, [194] 932

County Coroners Bill
(Mr. Goldney, Mr. Thomas Chambers, Mr. Pease)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Goldney) April 13, [195] 752; Bill ordered; read 1°* [Bill 75]
Read 2°* May 27
Committee*; Report May 28 [Bill 135]
Re-comm.*—R.P. July 14
Bill withdrawn* July 21

County Court Judges (Salaries)
Moved, "That, having regard to the Admiralty Act of last Session, by virtue of which an entirely new jurisdiction has been conferred upon certain County Courts, and to the Bankruptcy Bill, under which the district County Courts will take the place and perform the functions of the district Bankruptcy Courts, and with a view to secure efficiency in the office of County Court Judge, in the opinion of this House it is expedient that the judges upon whom the new duties and responsibilities may be imposed should receive an additional remuneration of £300 a year" (Mr. Hibbert) June 29, [197] 816; after debate, Question put; A. 56, N. 102; M. 46

County Courts Bill
(Mr. Norwood, Mr. Akroyd, Mr. Mundella)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Feb 19 [Bill 9]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 17, [194] 1561
Amendt. to leave out "now" and add "upon this day six months" (Sir Francis Goldsmid); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn: 2R. deferred
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" May 12, [196] 684; after short debate, Debate adjourned
Bill withdrawn* May 27

County Courts (Admiralty Jurisdiction) Act (1868) Amendment Bill
(Mr. Norwood, Mr. Headlam, Mr. Candlish)
c. Ordered; read 1°* May 12 [Bill 121]
Read 2°* June 22
Committee*; Report June 30
Read 3°* July 5
l. Read 1ª* (The Lord Houghton) July 6
Read 2ª* July 27 (No. 173)
Committee*; Report July 29
Read 3ª* July 30
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 51]

County Financial Arrangements
Question, Mr. Read; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen May 28, [196] 879

County Financial Boards Bill
Afterwards
County Administration Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Arthur Peel)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen) May 11, [196] 602; after debate, Bill ordered; read 1°* [Bill 119]
Bill withdrawn* July 19

Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster) Bill
(Mr. West, Mr. Bazley, Mr. Davison)
c. Ordered; read 1° * Feb 26 [Bill 26]
Read 2°, after short debate Mar 5, [194] 774
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" (Mr. West) April 5, [195] 217
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House will, upon this day six months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Serjeant Simon); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," agreed to; Committee—R.P.
Committee *; Report April 19
Considered * April 22 [Bill 86]
Read 3° * April 26
l. Read 1ª * (The Lord Dufferin) April 27
Read 2ª * July 1 (No. 79)
Committee * July 13 (No. 186)
Report * July 15
Read 3ª * July 16
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 37]

Court of Exchequer (Ireland) Offices Bill
(Colonel French, Mr. M'Mahon)
c. Ordered; read 1° * April 7 [Bill 63]
Bill withdrawn * August 4

Court of Probate (District Registrar Clerks)
Question, Mr. Monk; Answer, Mr. Ayrton June 10, [196] 1495

Court of Session Act (1868) Amendment Bill (The Lord Advocate, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Solicitor General for Scotland)
c. Ordered; read 1° * June 3 [Bill 145]
Read 2° * June 17
Committee *; Report June 28
Read 3° * June 29
l. Read 1ª * (The Earl of Morley) July 1 (No. 164)
Read 2ª * July 16
Committee *; Report July 19
Read 3ª * July 20
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 36]

COURTOWN, Earl of Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [197] 752; cl. 16, Amendt. 922; cl. 39, 1158; cl. 19, 1265; Commons' Amendts. [198] 443

Courts of Justice Site Bill—The New
Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, Mr. Layard April 8, [195] 356; Question, Mr. Monk; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer August 10, [198] 1529
Carey Street Site, Questions, Mr. Monk; Answers, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Ayrton August 3, [198] 1143
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable to re-consider the question of Carey Street as the site of the New Law Courts, inasmuch as the Thames Embankment, between the Temple and Somerset House, now offers many advantages for the erection of such buildings" (Mr. W. H. Gregory) April 20, [195] 1202

[cont.

Courts of Justice Site Bill—The New—cont.
Amendt. to leave out from "desirable," and add "to proceed as soon as possible with the erection of the New Law Courts, and the offices connected therewith, upon the site appropriated for that purpose by the Act 28 and 29 Vic. c. 49; and that if additional land be necessary for the proper erection of such Courts and offices, such additional land ought to be acquired in immediate proximity to that site" (Sir Roundell Palmer); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after long debate, Debate adjourned
Question, Mr. W. H. Gregory; Answer, Mr. Layard April 27, 1699; Questions, Mr. Pemberton, Lord Henry Lennox; Answers, Mr. Layard May 3, [196] 14; Question, Mr. Bentinck; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 10, 1496
Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed "to inquire into the site and charge of the New Courts of Law" (Mr. Gladstone) June 22, [197] 458; after short debate, Motion agreed to
And, on June 28, Committee nominated as follows: — Lord Stanley (Chairman), Mr. Bentinck, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. William Cowper, Viscount Enfield, Mr. Goldney, Mr. W. H. Gregory, Earl Grosvenor, Mr. Russell Gurney, Mr. Hope, Mr. Hunt, Mr. Layard, Lord John Manners, Mr. Osborne Morgan, Mr. Mowbray, Mr. Tite, Mr. Torrens, and Mr. Watkin Williams
Report of Select Committee July 30 (Parl. P. No. 381)
Report of Select Committee, Observations, Lord Denman August 10, [198] 1523
Designs, Question, Mr. Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Layard June 3, [196] 1209

Parl. Papers—

Mr. Shield's Report	68
Monies advanced	195, 238
Report on Site	273
Report of Committee on Plans .	274
Correspondence	317

Courts of Justice (New Site) Bill
(Mr. Layard, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Layard) May 10, [196] 538; after long debate, Bill ordered; read 1° * and referred to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills [Bill 113]

Courts of Justice Salaries and Funds Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Resolutions in Committee April 22
Resolutions reported; Bill ordered; read 1° * April 23 [Bill 96]
Read 2° * June 25
Committee *; Report June 29
Considered * July 15 [Bill 218]
Read 3° * July 22
l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) July 23 (No. 215)
Read 2ª * August 2
Committee *; Report August 3
Read 3ª * August 5
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 91]

Coventry Election
Moved, "That the Petition of Charles Flint and others [presented 10th June], relating to the Coventry Election Petition Inquiry, be printed with the Votes" (Mr. Bouverie) July 1, [197] 295; after debate, Question put, and negatived
Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the allegations of the Petition of Charles Flint and others [presented 10th June], respecting the late inquiry into the Election of Members for the City of Coventry, and to report their opinion as to what proceedings, if any, should be taken thereon" (Mr. Bouverie) July 6, [197] 1330; after short debate, Question put, and negatived

Cowper, Earl
Ireland—State of, [196] 732
United States—Hog Cholera, [195] 942

Cowper, Right Hon. W. F., Hampshire, S.
Army—Military Train, [195] 1200
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1240
Inclosure Act, Motion for a Committee, Amendt. [195] 1287
Metropolis—Hyde Park, [194] 485
Thames Embankment, [194] 143
Victoria Park, [196] 749
Parliament—House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 267
Supply—Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1471
Probate Court and Registries, Amendt. [197] 1210
Public Offices Site, [197] 1206, 1209
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 656, 661

Cowper, Hon. H. F., Hertfordshire
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 52

Cox, Mr. Serjeant E. W., Taunton
Trades Unions, [194] 366

Craufurd, Mr. E. H. J., Ayr, &c.
Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), Comm. [195] 220
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1718, 2066; Nomination of Committee, [196] 1783
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 373
Libel, 2R. [195] 758
Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1220
Park Lane and Piccadilly Thoroughfare, Motion for Papers, [195] 757
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1731; Comm. [198] 807; cl. 1, 821; cl. 2, Amendt. 831, 834; 1110; cl. 4, 1112; cl. 6, 1115, 1116; cl. 9, 1118; cl. 14, 1122; cl. 19, 1124; cl. 24, 1242, 1243; cl. 59, 1443; cl. 65, 1446; cl. 66, 1446, 1449; Consid. Amendt. 1456, 1464
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1591
Revising Barristers, Appointment of, [198] 1535, 1536
Scotland—Assessments, [194] 1188
Sheriff Courts, [196] 1635
[cont.

Craufurd, Mr. E. H. J.—cont.
Scotland—Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, Motion for a Return, [194] 1253
Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 513, 515, 533
Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, Motion for reporting Progress, [198] 510, 512
Report, Amendt. [198] 690
Stationery Office, [197] 1700
Works, &c. Amendt. [197] 1709
Ways and Means, Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 614

Crawford, Mr. R. W., London
Bankruptcy, Leave, [194] 792
Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), Comm. [198] 1146
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 819, 823, 836; cl. 4, Amendt. 842; cl. 8, 844; cl. 18, 847
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1392
Endowed Schools, Motion for a Committee, [195] 23
House Tax, Res. [197] 1805
India—East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Res. [198] 1174
Telegraphic Communication, [198] 1490
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 723
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 336, 1057
Parliament—Morning Sittings, [197] 1187
Public Business, [197] 1669
Post Office—Mails to the United States, [194] 1464
Stamp Acts, Consolidation of the, [195] 30, 123
Supply—Royal Parks, &c. [197] 673
Telegraph, [197] 1224; Comm. [198] 758
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 416; Res. 1, (Corn, &c.), 592, 596, 606, 611, 636

Creditors Sequestrations Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Harrowby)
l. Presented; read 1ª* August 5 (No. 275)

Crichton, Viscount, Enniskillen
Ireland—Jury Panel, Monaghan Assizes, [195] 503
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1843; Comm. cl. 27, [195] 1880
Party Processions (Ireland), [197] 1589

Crimea—British Graves in the Question, Mr. Stopford; Answer, Mr. Otway May 3, [196] 17; May 13, 747

Criminal Law
Betting Houses—Suppression of, Question, Mr. H. F. Beaumont; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 6, [196] 261; Question, Mr. Eykyn; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 24, [197] 514
Brentford Magistrates—Sentence on Children, Question, Mr. Bowring; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 31, [196] 970
Burglaries at Staines, Question, Mr. Gourley; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 11, [198] 1542
Capital Punishment, Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 30, [198] 995
[cont.

CRIMINAL LAW—cont.
Case of George Roberts, a Convict, Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 22, [194] 161
Case of James Bell, Convicted of Sheep-stealing, Question, Mr. Maguire; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 5, [198] 1294
Case of Richard Bonner, a Convict, Question, Mr. Walter; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 22, [194] 162
Conviction of Felony, Law of Forfeiture on, Question, Mr. C. Forster; Answer, The Attorney General July 9, [197] 1542
Conviction of Three Children at Salisbury, Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 13, [195] 675; Observations, Mr. P. A. Taylor; Reply, Mr. Bruce; short debate thereon June 11, [196] 1608
Costs of Prosecutions, Question, Mr. Hunt; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 27, [196] 811
Gibraltar Convict Prison, Question, Mr. Hibbert; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 9, [194] 952
Habitual Criminals Bill, Notice, The Earl of Kimberley Feb 23, [194] 199 [See Bill]
Habitual Criminals — Repression of Crime, Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 19, [194] 147
Inequality of Sentences, Question, Mr. J. Lowther; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 6, [198] 1373; August 10, 1530
Infanticide, Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 3, [198] 1143
Liberation of Sir Eardley Culling Eardley, Question, Mr. Scourfield; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 20, [195] 1200
Reformatory Schools—Juvenile Offenders in, Question, Dr. Lush; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 13, [196] 742
Remission of Capital Sentences — Case of Charles Wiltshire, Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 22, [195] 1358; Explanation, Mr. Bruce April 27, 1700
Salisbury Gaol—Removal of Prisoners, Question, Dr. Lush; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Feb 25, [194] 312
Special and Common Juries, Question, Viscount Enfield; Answer, The Attorney General Feb 26, [194] 352
Still-Born Children, Question, Dr. Brewer; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 14, [197] 1819
See titles Prisons (Religious Instruction)
Prisoners—(Political Offenders)

Criminal Lunatics Bill (Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered; read 1° * June 22 [Bill 172]
Read 2° * July 22
Committee *; Report July 29
Considered * July 30
Read 3° * July 30
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Morley) August 2 (No. 247)
Read 2ª * August 3
Committee *; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 78]

CROFT, Sir H. G. D., Herefordshire
Bridges, Repair of, [197] 1886
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 568
Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1814
Ireland—Bankruptcy Law, [194] 1355
Salmon Fishery Laws, [195] 975
Sea Fishing Boats, [195] 1464

CROSS, Mr. R. Assheton, Lancashire, S.W.
Bankruptcy, Leave, [194] 791, 1186; Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1407; cl. 59, 1603
County Financial Boards, Leave, [196] 613
Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), 2R. [194] 774; Comm. [195] 220
Fire Insurances, Res. [195] 307
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 337
Imprisonment for Debt, Consid. cl. 5, [197] 762
194] Irish Church, 2R. 1735
195] Comm. cl. 2, 1028; cl. 12, 1110, 1113; cl. 14, 1149, 1151, 1379; cl. 16, 1410; cl. 22, 1517; cl. 25, Amendt. 1600, 1602
197] Lords Amendts. 1919, 1942
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Leave, [194] 331; Instruction, [197] 470
Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, Motion for a Committee; Motion for Adjournment, [194] 1307
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 817, 818
Salisbury Magistrates, The, [196] 1619
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 423;—Res. 2 (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 784, 792

CROSSLEY, Sir F., Yorkshire, W. R., N. Div.
Bankruptcy, Leave, [194] 790
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1517
Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1297
Ways and Means—Res. (Corn, &c.), [195] 636

CUBITT, Mr. G., Surrey, W.
County Coroners, Leave, [195] 753
United States—Speer, Captain, Murder of, [196] 1498

Cumberland and Westmoreland—Lord Lieutenant of Motion for an humble Address "praying Her Majesty to revoke the appointment of Henry Lowther, Esq., to be Lord Lieutenant of the Counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland" (Mr. Charles Howard) April 13, [195] 728; after debate, Motion withdrawn
Commissions since 1760—(P.P. No. 101)

Currency
Currency Laws, Observations, Mr. Delahunty Reply, Mr. Ayrton July 30, [198] 1053

[cont.

Currency—cont.
Gold Coinage, Observations, Mr. J. B. Smith; Reply, The Chancellor of the Exchequer; short debate thereon August 6, [198] 1408; Question, Mr. Alderman W. Lawrence; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer August 10, 1532
Melting of English Sovereigns, Question, Mr. Sinclair Aytoun; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer August 10, [198] 1527
Coinage 1859 to 1868—(Parl. P. No. 157)

Cursitor (County Palatine of Durham) Bill
See Inclosure Awards (County Palatine of Durham Bill

Custom House—Clearing Vessels
Question, Mr. Graves; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 13, [197] 1754

Customs and Inland Revenue Duties Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Presented; read 1° * April 23 [Bill 95]
196] Read 2°, after debate May 11, 585
Committee May 27, 812; after debate, Report Considered * May 31 [Bill 132]
Read 3° * June 1
l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) June 3 (No. 111)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" June 11, 1585; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee *; Report June 14
Read 3ª * June 15
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 14]

Customs, Clerks in the Question, Mr. Whitwell; Answer, Mr. Ayrton August 10, [198] 1525
"Writers" in the—Annual Leave, Question, Captain Grosvenor; Answer, Mr. Ayrton June 28, [197] 624

Dagenham Dock Company
Question, Viscount Enfield; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer August 6, [198] 1371

DALGLISH, Mr. R., Glasgow
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [198] 361
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1734; Comm. [198] 814
Portugal—Claims on the Government, [196] 1243
Ways and Means—Res. 2 (Customs and Excise Duties, [196] 807

DALHOUSIE, Earl of
Army—Military Force of the Kingdom, [195] 1457
Irish Church, 2R. [197] 287; Comm. Preamble, 724
North British Railway — Accidental Deaths, Motion for a Paper, [196] 568, 569
Parochial Schools (Scotland), [195] 568; Comm. [196] 442; cl. 21, 460; cl. 37, 461
Scotland—Police Systems, [196] 706

DALRYMPLE, Mr. C., Buteshire
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 398
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 2035; Comm. cl. 39, [196] 140; Lords Amendts. [198] 86
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1736; Comm. cl. 3, [198] 837
Scotland—Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, Motion for a Return, [194] 1267

DALRYMPLE, Mr. D., Bath
Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1308
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1533
Fire Insurances, Res. [195] 307
Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1815
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 426
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, 2R. [196] 1367
Norwich Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 12
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 34, [198] 1391; Consid. add. cl. 1452, 1462
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 680
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 977
Supply—Learned Societies, [198] 504
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 3, [198] 765

DALWAY, Mr. M. R., Carrickfergus
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 664

DAMER, Hon. Captain L. DAWSON-, Portarlington
Blatcher, William, Case of, [194] 1655
Fever Patients, Conveyance of, [194] 411, 626
Metropolis — Semaphore near Palace Yard, [194] 1088, 1655
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [196] 1792

D'ARCY, Mr. M. P., Wexford Co.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 12, [195] 1115

DAVENPORT, Mr. W. BROMLEY-, Warwickshire, N.
District Medical Officers, Birmingham, [194] 1089
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 27, [195] 1647

DAVISON, Mr. J. R., Durham (City)
Assessed Taxes, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 382

DAWSON, Mr. R. PEEL-, Londonderry Co.
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1792
Ireland—Cork, Mayor of, [196] 13, 102
Grand Jury Laws, [194] 156
Seditious Language in the Queen's Colleges, [197] 517
Ireland — Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 713
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 26, [195] 1629; cl. 36, [196] 67, 68
Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland), 2R. [197] 489
Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [194] 993

Debts of Deceased Persons Bill
(Mr. Hinde Palmer, Mr. Locke King, Mr. Headlam)
c. Ordered; read 1°* June 16 [Bill 165]
Read 2°* June 22
Committee*; Report June 29
Considered* June 30
Read 3°* July 1
l. Read 1ª* (The Lord Romilly) July 2 (No. 169)
Read 2ª* July 23
Committee*; Report July 26
Read 3ª* July 27
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 46]

De Grey and Ripon, Earl (Lord President of the Council)
Aggravated Assaults Amendment, 2R. [196] 565
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [198] 886, 889; Comm. cl. 2, 988; cl. 64, 990; 3R. 1137
Education of Children, 2R. Amendt. [197] 1738
Education, Public, [194] 811
197] Endowed Schools, 2R. 607, 623; Comm. 1872, 1873; cl. 8, 1875; cl. 12, 1876; cl. 14, 1877; cl. 15, 1880, 1881, 1882; cl. 20, 1883; cl. 30, 1884; cl. 42, 1885
Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1878; Comm. cl. 12, [197] 872; cl. 13, 878; cl. 26, 1000; Report, 1492; 3R. 1619, 1620
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [194] 1784; Comm. cl. 1, [196] 445; cl. 19, 448; cl. 20, 458; cl. 68, 464
United States—Hog Cholera, [195] 942

De Grey, Hon. T., Norfolk, W.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 18, [195] 1416
Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 255

Delahunty, Mr. J., Waterford City
Currency Laws (Ireland), [198] 1053
Irish Church, Lords Amendts. [198] 85
Money Laws (Ireland), Leave, [194] 273; 2R. [197] 471, 485

De la Warr, Earl
Army—Military Force of the Kingdom, [195] 1456
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 30, [197] 1883

De L'Isle and Dudley, Lord
National Gallery, Purchases for the, [198] 651

Denbigh, Earl of
Irish Church, Comm. [197] 686; cl. 28, 1076; Report, 1513; 3R. 1657
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [194] 1767; Comm. cl. 20, [196] 458

Denison, Right Hon. J. E. (see Speaker, The)

Denison, Mr. C. Beckett-, Yorkshire, W. R., E. Div.
Government of India Act Amendment, Comm. [198] 1363
India—Affghanistan, Ameer of, [194] 955
Punjaub Tenancy Act, [196] 1591; [198] 1145
India—East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Res. [198] 1351
Liabilities of Railway Companies, [198] 1434
Metropolis—Park Lane Improvements, [195] 1973
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 3R. [198] 1343

Denison, Mr. E., Newark
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 501

Denman, Lord
Assessed Rates, 2R. [197] 1751
Bankruptcy, Comm. [198] 681
Evidence Amendment, 2R. [198] 676; Comm. cl. 1, 987
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 10, [194] 1331; cl. 12, 1337
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [197] 746; cl. 13, 882, 886; 3R. 1619
Life Peerages, 2R. Amendt. [195] 1676; 3R. [197] 1396, 1400
New Courts of Justice, Report of Select Committee, [198] 1523
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Reprint, [198] 1524
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 2R. [195] 1691

Denman, Hon. G., Tiverton
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 1212; cl. 6, 1215; cl. 91, 1899; cl. 130, [197] 326, 328
County Courts, 2R. [196] 685
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1230, 1236
Coventry Election, Motion for a Committee, [197] 1334
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [197] 1182
Evidence Amendment, Leave, [194] 406; 2R. [195] 1798
Parliament — Youghal Election, New Writ, [195] 2072
Patents for Inventions, Res. [196] 922
South Sea Islands—Slave Trade from the, [197] 648
University Tests, Comm. add. cl. [197] 1102

Dent, Mr. J. D., Scarborough
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 6, Amendt. [197] 533
Contagious Diseases (Animals), Leave, [194] 93; 2R. 1037
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 680; Comm. cl. 67, [197] 1539; cl. 73, 1541; cl. 101, 1764
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 18, [196] 847
Parliament—Whitsuntide Recess, [196] 585
Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [196] 1147
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), Leave, [194] 1545
Supply—Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 645
House of Commons Offices, [197] 1476

Derby, Earl of
Beerhouses, &c. 2R. [196] 1584
Bright, Mr., Letter of, [197] 16
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 10, [194] 1328
Ireland—State of, [196] 718, 720, 724, 726
Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, [196] 1090
197] Irish Church, 2R. 18, 27, 28, 36, 37, 48 ; . Comm. cl. 13, 878 ; cl. 14, 891 ; cl. 18, 923, . 924 ; Report, 1521 ; 3R. 1614, 1620
198] Commons Amendts. 293, 312, 313
Life Peerages, 2R. [195] 1648, 1665
Oriel College, Oxford, 2R. [194] 800
Parliament—Despatch of Business, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1309
Parliamentary Proceedings, 2R. [194] 599, 800

De Ros, Lord
Ireland—Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, [196] 1092
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 29, [197] 1125
Militia, 3R. [196] 99

Derry, Bishop of
Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1728 ; Comm. cl. 14, [197] 891, 912 ; cl. 29, 1131

De Vesci, Viscount
Irish Church, Commons Amendts. [198] 443

Devon, Earl of
Irish Church, [196] 1279 ; 3R. Amendt. [197] 1614
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [198] 1076 ; Comm. 1284

Devonshire, Duke of
Irish Church, 2R. [197] 76

Dick, Mr. W. W. Fitzwilliam, Wicklow Co.
Ireland—Bankruptcy Law, [194] 1355
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 18, Motion for reporting Progress, [195] 1415

Dickinson, Mr. S. S., Stroud
Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1303 ; cl. 1, Amendt. 1316, 1319, 1320 ; cl. 2, 1322 ; cl. 3, 1322, 1323
Government of India Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 2, [198] 1364, 1365 ; cl. 5, Amendt. 1367
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 9, [198] 1279
India—East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Res. [198] 1361
Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1828

Dickson, Major A. G., Dover
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1173
Army—Wightman, Ensign, Case of, [196] 388
Navy — Dover Harbour, Moorings in, [195] 1583

Digby, Mr. K. T., Queen's Co.
New Zealand—Affairs of, [198] 491

Dilke, Sir C. W., Chelsea
Assessed Rates, Consid. Amendt. [197] 1084
British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1121
Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan, 2R. [198] 1328
China—Relations with, [195] 1855
China — Tien-tsin, Treaty of, Motion for Papers, [197] 1796
Civil and Diplomatic Appointments, Res. [195] 493
Government of India Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 2, [198] 1366
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1796
India—Seat of Government, Removal of, [194] 312
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, 2R. [196] 1349
New Zealand—Affairs of, [198] 472
O'Farrell Papers, The, [195] 1755
Registration of Voters, Motion for a Committee, [194] 981
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1373

Dillwyn, Mr. L. L., Swansea
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. (A) 12, [196] 1764
Hayti—Civil War in, [194] 837
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1730
Railways—Accident at Abergele, [196] 938
South Kensington Museum, Motion for a Paper, [196] 1635
Supply—Chapter House, Westminster, [197] 1209
Civil Service Estimates, Vote on Account, [195] 544
Excesses on Grants, [194] 772
Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 678
House of Commons Offices, [197] 1478
Houses of Parliament, [197] 684 ; Report, Amendt. 1429
Patent Office, [197] 1685, 1686
Post Office Packet Service, [194] 770, 771
Public Buildings, [197] 675
Public Offices Site, [197] 1204
Report, [194] 537
Royal Palaces, [197] 654
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 656
Treasury, &c. Departments, [197] 1478

Dimsdale, Mr. R., Hertford
Coal Mines—Reports of Inspectors, [194] 1089
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 12, [198] 1281

Diplomatic Pensions
Question, Mr. Staveley Hill ; Answer, Mr. Otway June 11, [196] 1589

Diplomatic Service [Salaries and Allowances] Bill (Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Stansfeld)
c. Resolution in Committee May 10
Resolution reported ; Bill ordered ; read 1°* May 11 [Bill 118]
Read 2°* May 27
Committee *—r.p. June 3
Committee ; Report June 7, [196] 1336
Considered * June 10
Read 3°* June 11

[cont.

Diplomatic Service [Salaries and Allowances] Bill—cont.
l. Read 1^{a}* (Earl of Clarendon) June 14 (No. 128)
Read 2^{a}* June 25
Committee * July 13
Report * July 15
Read 3^{a}* July 16
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 43]

"Diseases, Nomenclature of"—Distribution of Question, Mr. M'Laren ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 19, [194] 1789

DISRAELI, Right Hon. B., Buckinghamshire
Civil Service Appointments, [195] 36
Ireland—State of, [195] 2007
194] Irish Church, Leave, 466, 469 ; 2R. Amendt. 1662, 1680
195] 356, 585 ; Comm. 934 ; cl. 2, 993, 1052 ; cl. 15, 1401 ; cl. 19, Amendt. 1488, 1494 ; cl. 23, Amendt. 1518, 1531 ; cl. 25, Amendt. 1585, 1592 ; cl. 26, 1629 ; cl. 27, Amendt. 1629, 1647 ; cl. 29, 1886 ; Amendt. 1887, 1922, 1927
196] cl. 32, Amendt. 44 ; cl. 33, 62, 66 ; cl. 39, 292 ; 3R. 1042
197] Lords Amendts. 1892, 1910, 1954, 1987, 1993
198] 23, 51, 57, 98, 100, 583
Lord Lieutenant (Cumberland and Westmoreland), Motion for an Address, [195] 731
National Portrait Gallery—Hogarth's Portrait, [198] 996
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 208, 212
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 67 ; Report, 108
Business of the House, [194] 1092
Supply—Civil Service Estimates, Vote on Account, [195] 539, 544
National Gallery, [198] 501
University Tests, [198] 452
Ways and Means, Res. 1, (Corn, &c.), [195] 600

Dividends on Public Stocks Bill
(Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Ordered ; read 1^{o}* July 29 [Bill 247]
Read 2^{o}* July 30
Committee * ; Report August 2
Considered * August 3
Read 3^{o}* August 4
l. Read 1^{a}* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 5 (No. 269)
Read 2^{a}* August 6
Committee * ; Report August 7
Read 3^{a}* August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 104]

DIXON, Mr. G., Birmingham
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 392, 397 ; cl. 13, Amendt. 534 ; Consid. 1086
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [197] 315
Birmingham Board of Guardians, [194] 1901
Clergy, The, and Parliament, [196] 746
Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1207
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 31, Amendt. [196] 1779
[cont.

DIXON, Mr. G.—cont.
India—Rifles for, [194] 1653
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 610
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, [194] 666
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 24, [198] 1374
Poor Law, Res. [197] 438
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 187

DODDS, Mr. J., Stockton
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 7, Amendt. [197] 1768
Fisheries, English, [194] 90
Ireland—Fisheries Commission, [195] 358
Pollution of Rivers, [198] 453
Supply—Harbours of Refuge, [197] 1457

DODSON, Mr. J. G. (Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means), Sussex, E.
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 369, 391
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 443 ; Comm. cl. 96, [197] 1761, 1762
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1796
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 423 ; cl. 14, 580
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 25, [195] 1594, 1595, 1596 ; cl. 27, 1643 ; cl. 29, 1929 ; cl. 32, [196] 23 ; cl. 37, 74 ; cl. 39, 147, 267, 308, 318
Parliament—New Standing Orders, [198] 1485
Parliament—House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 292
Parliament—Private Business—Railway Bills, Res. [194] 105, 106
Supply—Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 646
Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 512
Missions and Embassies Abroad, [198] 950
Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1704
Royal Parks, [197] 656
University Tests, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 788, 789

DOWNING, Mr. McCarthy, Cork Co.
Ireland—Jury Panel, Monaghan Assizes, [195] 497 ; [197] 1343
Landlord and Tenant, Law of, [194] 353
State of, [195] 2057
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 25, [195] 1606 ; cl. 33, [196] 54 ;* cl. 39, 311
Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland), 2R. [197] 498
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 619, 620, 621
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 232 ; 2R. 584
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 1558 ; [197] 1588
Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 329
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 811
Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 802
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 740

DOWSE, Mr. Serjeant R., Londonderry Bo.
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 13, [196] 1220 ; cl. 14, 1224
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1534
Evidence Amendment, 2R. [195] 1811
[cont.

Dowse, Mr. Serjeant R.—cont.
Ireland—Londonderry, Riots in, [196] 20
State of, [195] 2030, 2032
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 695, 708
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1955; Comm. cl. 18, [195] 1483, 1487; cl. 25, 1611; cl. 26, 1626; cl. 33, Amendt. [196] 55, 65; cl. 36, 70, 71; cl. 58, 394, 412; Lords Amendts. [198] 32, 951
Libel, 2R. [194] 1613
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. cl. 1, [198] 366
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 1556
Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1477
Statute Law, Revision of the, Res. [196] 1253
Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 508
Public Works (Ireland), [197] 1462
Stationery Office, [197] 1698
Turkey—Christians in Crete, [198] 19

Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act (1863) Amendment Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Ordered; read 1° * July 9 [Bill 208]
Read 2° * July 15
Committee *; Report July 29
Considered * July 30
Read 3° * July 31
l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 2 (No. 256)
Read 2ª * August 3
Committee *; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 72]

Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Supplemental Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
c. Ordered; read 1° * Mar 16 [Bill 55]
Read 2° * Mar 22
Committee *; Report Mar 23
Read 3° * April 1
l. Read 1ª * (The Lord Dufferin) April 5 (No. 39)
Read 2ª * June 18
Committee *; Report June 21
Read 3ª * June 22
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. lx.]

Drainage and Improvement of Lands Ireland (Supplemental) (No. 2) Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Glyn)
c. Ordered * June 7
Read 1° * June 8 [Bill 151]
Read 2° * June 14
Committee *; Report June 16
Read 3° * June 17
l. Read 1ª * (Lord Dufferin) June 18 (No. 136)
Read 2ª * July 30
Committee *; Report August 2
Read 3ª * August 3
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. cxlix.]

Drogheda Writ
Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Burgess to serve in this present Parliament for the Borough of Drogheda, in the room of Benjamin Whitworth, Esquire, whose Election has been determined to be void" (Mr. Glyn) Feb 19, [194] 151; after short debate, Motion withdrawn
After short debate, New Writ ordered (Mr. Glyn) Mar 5, 797

Dublin, Archbishop of Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1809; Comm. cl. 12, [197] 871; cl. 14, Amendt. 917; cl. 15, 919; cl. 45, Amendt. 1164; cl. 19, 1262; 3R. Amendt. 1659; Commons Amendts. [198] 442, 443

Dublin City Election
Question, Mr. O'Reilly; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Mar 8, [194] 832; Observations, Mr. Gathorne Hardy, The Attorney General for Ireland; Reply, Mr. O'Reilly Mar 16, 1542
Election Inquiry—Minutes of Evidence—(Parl. P. No. 29)
Joint Address for a Commission, Moved, "That an humble Address, &c." (Mr. O'Reilly) April 20, [195] 1270
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Citizen to serve in this present Parliament for the City of Dublin, in the room of Sir Arthur Edward Guinness, baronet, whose Election has been determined to be void" (Mr. Collins); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Question put; A. 192, N. 120; M. 72; main Question put, and agreed to; Message to the Lords thereon
l. Message from the Commons April 22
In the Commons Address to Her Majesty, Moved that the blank be filled up with ("Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and") (The Lord Chancellor) June 8, [196] 1394
Amendt. to leave out from ("the,") and insert ("said Address be taken into consideration this day six months") (The Lord Cairns); after short debate, Amendt. agreed to, and Address to be taken into consideration this day six months
Message to the House of Commons "That this House, having considered the report of the Judge appointed to try a petition complaining of an undue election and return for the city of Dublin, do not think it expedient to address Her Majesty praying Her Majesty to cause inquiry to be made pursuant to the provisions of the Act 31st and 32d Vict. chap. 125"

Dublin City Writ
Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland, to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Citizen to serve in this present Parliament for the City of Dublin, in the room of Sir Arthur Guinness, baronet, whose Election has been determined to be void" (Mr. Noel) June 14, [196] 1784

[cont.

Dublin City Writ—cont.
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "leave be given to bring in a Bill for disfranchising the Freemen of the City of Dublin" (Sir George Grey); after short debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 169, N. 215; M. 46
Question proposed, "That those words be there added;" after debate, Debate adjourned, 1793
Question again proposed, "That those words, &c.;" Debate resumed June 17, [197] 126; after short debate, Question put, and agreed to; main Question, as amended, "That leave be given to bring in a Bill for disfranchising the Freemen of the City of Dublin," put, and agreed to

Dublin Freemen Commission Bill
(Mr. Attorney General for Ireland, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
c. Moved, "That leave be given to bring in a Bill for appointing Commissioners to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices amongst the Freemen Electors of the City of Dublin" (Mr. Attorney General for Ireland) June 29,
197] 819
After short debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Colonel Taylor); A. 52, N. 100; M. 48
Question again proposed; Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Viscount Galway); after further short debate, Motion withdrawn; Debate adjourned
Debate resumed July 1, 950
After debate, Question put; A. 239, N. 136; M. 103
Bill ordered; read 1° * [Bill 189]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" July 5, 1174
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Sir Frederick W. Heygate); after short debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 246, N. 126; M. 120; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2°
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" July 9; Debate adjourned
198]Debate resumed July 19, 226
Amendt. to leave out from "That" and add "it be an Instruction to the Committee, that they have power to include in a Bill a Commission to inquire into corrupt practices at the Election for Youghal held in November last" (Mr. Collins); after short debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 184, N. 78; M. 106; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.;" put, and agreed to; Committee; Report
Committee * (on re-comm.); Report July 20
Considered * July 20
Read 3° * July 20
l. Read 1ª * (Lord Lurgan) July 22 (No. 210)
Read 2ª * August 2
Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into Committee" (The Lord Lurgan) August 3, 1138
Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day three months") (The Earl of Longford); after short debate, on Question, That ("now") &c.? resolved in the affirmative; Committee; Report

Dublin Freemen Commission Bill—cont.
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3ª" (The Lord Lurgan) August 5, [198] 1285
After short debate, Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months") (The Earl of Longford); after further short debate, on Question, That ("now") &c.; resolved in the affirmative; Bill read 3ª; after further short debate, Bill passed
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 65]

Dublin Freemen Disfranchisement Bill
(Sir George Grey, Mr. O'Reilly, Mr. Whitbread)
c. Ordered; read 1° * June 17 [Bill 168]
Question, Mr. J. Lowther; Answer, Sir George Grey July 19, [198] 158
Bill withdrawn * July 19

DUFF, Mr. M. E. Grant (Under Secretary of State for India), Elgin, &c.
Army Estimates—Army Administration, [197] 148
Army—Medals for Service in India, [197] 625
Army—Camping System, Major M'Gwire's, Motion for Papers, [198] 723
Central Asia, [197] 1565
Government of India Act Amendment, Comm. cl. 2, [198] 1365, 1366; cl. 5, 1367; cl. 6, ib.
Governor General of India, Comm. [198] 1368
India—Questions, &c.
  Accounts, [195] 1578
  Affghanistan, Ameer of, [194] 955
  Appeals, [197] 1424
  Auditor General of Accounts, [197] 357
  Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [194] 1462; [195] 1580
  Bank of Bengal, [196] 1237;—Bombay Branch, [198] 1295
  Bank of Bombay, [194] 1186
  Bhore Ghaut, Railway Accident at, [194] 485
  Budget, The, [194] 201
  Calcutta Port Dues, [198] 1091
  China—Route to, [198] 799
  Civil Service, [196] 1208
  Civil Service Examinations, [194] 841
  Communication with, [198] 1042
  Finance, [195] 478
  Fisheries, [197] 357
  Home Accounts, [197] 118
  Indian Field Officers, [195] 2
  Indian Officers, Return of, [194] 204
  Jhansi Prize Money, [194] 1466
  Jungera, Nawab of, [195] 231
  Kohat, Garrison of, [194] 488
  Medal for Bhootan, [197] 1424; [198] 1144
  Military Appointments, [194] 1655
  Morar—Barracks at, [197] 1418
  Muscat and Zanzibar, [195] 1581
  Mysore, Maharajah of, [196] 1495
  Native Scholarships, [194] 310
  Opium Trade, [198] 449
  Prince Azeem Jah, [198] 1091
  Punjaub Tenancy Act, [194] 1085; [196] 748, 1592; [198] 1145
  Railways, [196] 744; [197] 1424; [198] 797, 1091
  Rangoon and Western China, [195] 1356
  Revenues of, [196] 16

[cont.

DUFF, Mr. M. E. Grant—cont.
    Seat of Government, Removal of, [194] 312
    Telegraphic Communication, [198] 1490
    Tonk, Nawab of, [194] 311
  India—East India (Home Accounts), Motion for Papers, [197] 1329
  *India—East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Res. [198] 1147, 1361
  Navy—"Crocodile" Transport, [195] 1198

DUFF, Mr. R. W., Banffshire
  Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee, [196] 634
  Imperial Gas, 2R. [195] 1787
  Supply—Report, [198] 692

DUFFERIN, Lord (Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster)
  Common Law Courts (Ireland), 2R. [194] 481; Comm. add. cl. 1460; 3R. [195] 339
  Dublin Freemen Commission, 3R. [198] 1288, 1290
  Fisheries (Ireland), Comm. cl. 16, [198] 1068
  Ireland—Murders in, [194] 1622, 1634
    Police, [198] 669
    Portadown Inquest, [197] 1737; [198] 124
  Ireland—Crime, Address for Returns, [194] 948
  Ireland—Tithe Rent Charges, Motion for Returns, [194] 1081; [195] 451
  Irish Church, Comm. cl. 29, [197] 1129; cl. 46, 1165; add. cl. 1259; Report, 1491
  Married Women's Property, 2R. [198] 986
  Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [195] 571, 572
  Tenants Purchase by Instalments (Ireland), 2R. [198] 775
  Tenure (Ireland), Comm. [195] 1569

Dumfriesshire Election
  Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed, to "consider whether Sir Sydney Hedley Waterlow is disqualified from sitting and voting as a Member of this House under the Statute 22 Geo. 3, c. 45, and to report their opinion thereon" (Mr. Thomas Chambers) Feb 22, [194] 190; after short debate, Motion agreed to
   And, on Feb 24, Committee nominated as follows: — Mr. Thomas Chambers (Chairman), The Lord Advocate, Mr. Brand, Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Mr. Headlam, Mr. Henley, and Mr. Pemberton
  Resolution [15th March] reported—"That Sir Sydney Hedley Waterlow is disqualified, under the Statute 22 Geo. 3, c. 45, from sitting and voting as a Member of this House;" Resolution agreed to; New Writ issued Mar 17, [194] 1561
  Government Contractors, Disqualification of, under 22 Geo. III. c. 45, Question, Mr. Rylands; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 2, [194] 482

DUNCOMBE, Hon. Colonel O., Yorkshire, N.R.
  Mines, Rating of, [195] 1582

DUNRAVEN, Earl of
  Irish Church, 3R. [197] 1641

DUNSANY, Lord
  Ireland—Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, [196] 1088
  Irish Church, Comm. cl. 25, Amendt. [197] 997; cl. 26, 1000; cl. 28, Amendt. 1024; cl. 29, 1137
  Tenants Purchase by Instalments (Ireland), 2R. [198] 773, 776

Durham County Courts
  Question, Mr. Henderson; Answer, Mr. Ayrton April 16, [195] 976

Durham, University of—University Tests Bill
  Question, Mr. Stevenson; Answer, The Solicitor General Mar 22, [194] 1897

DYOTT, Colonel R., Lichfield
  Assessed Rates, Consid. add. cl. [197] 1082
  Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 90, [197] 1757; cl. 101, 1764
  Poor Law—Magistrates and Boards of Guardians, [197] 119

East India Irrigation and Canal Company Bill (Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Stansfeld)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Feb 19 [Bill 8]
  Read 2°* Mar 10, and referred to a Select Committee
  Committee nominated as follows:—Sir Harry Verney (Chairman), Colonel Amcotts, Mr. Robert N. Fowler, Mr. Muntz, and Mr. Pemberton
  Committee*; Report Mar 16
  Read 3°* Mar 17
l. Read 1ª* (The Duke of Argyll) Mar 18
  Read 2ª* April 5 (No. 31)
  Report of Committee* April 6
  Committee* April 8
  Report* April 9
  Read 3ª* April 12
  Royal Assent April 19 [32 Vict. c. 7]

East India Loan Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Stansfeld)
c. Resolution in Committee July 29
  Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1°* July 30 [Bill 251]
  Read 2°* August 2
  Committee*—R.P. August 3
  Committee*; Report August 3
  Considered* August 4
  Read 3°* August 4
l. Read 1ª* (The Duke of Argyll) August 5
  Read 2ª* August 6 (No. 267)
  Committee*; Report August 7
  Read 3ª* August 9
  Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 106]

East India Revenue Accounts
c. Considered in Committee August 3, [198] 1147
  Moved, "That it appears by the Accounts laid before this House that the total Revenue of India for the year ending the 31st day of March 1868 was £48,534,412; the total of the direct claims upon the Revenue, including charges of collection and cost of Salt and Opium was £8,957,464; the charges in India, including Interest on Debt, and Public Works ordinary, were £32,362,402; the value of Stores supplied from England was £970,926; the charges in England were £5,710,880; the Guaranteed Interest on the Capital of Railway and other Companies in India and in England, deducting net Traffic Receipts, was £1,540,435, making a total charge for the same year of £49,542,107; and there was an excess of Expenditure over Income in that year amounting to £1,007,695; that the charge for Public Works extraordinary was £602,462, and that including that charge the excess of Expenditure over Income was £1,610,157" (Mr. Grant Duff); after debate, Committee—R.P.

[cont.

East India Revenue Accounts—cont.
Considered in Committee August 5, 1343; after long time spent therein, Resolution agreed to
l. Statement of the Secretary of State for India (The Duke of Argyll) on presenting (by Command) Correspondence with the Government of India respecting Railways (India) (No. 219); also, Report on Railways (India) for the year 1868-9; long debate thereon July 23, [198] 521
Revenues of India—Authority of the Secretary of State, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff May 3, [196] 16
(See Weights and Measures (India)

EASTWICK, Mr. E. B., Penryn, &c.
Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1432
Asia, Central, [195] 362; [197]* 1544
Barking Creek—Mortality at, [197] 514
Sewage Outfall, [196] 260
India—Civil Service, [196] 1208
Light Dues, Res. [196] 157
Mayors, Removal of, [196] 572
Post Office—Landing Mails at a Western Port, [196] 933
New York Mails, [195] 1583

EATON, Mr. H. W., Coventry
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 335
Police Interference, [195] 477

Ecclesiastical Commissioners
Twenty-first Report—Parl. P. [4118]
Deanery of Lichfield and Rectory of Tatenhill, Question, Mr. M. A. Bass; Answer, Mr. Acland Mar 8, [194] 833
Estates of the Dean and Chapter, Question, Lord George Cavendish; Answer, Mr. Acland April 13, [195] 676

Ecclesiastical Courts Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Shaftesbury)
l. Presented; read 1ª* Feb 16 (No. 2)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 15, [195] 808; after debate, Bill read 2ª, and referred to a Select Committee
After short debate, Question, "That the Committee do consist of fifteen Members," put, and agreed to April 22, 1351
And, on April 26, the Lords following were named of the Committee:—L. Abp. Canterbury, L. Abp. York, Ld. President, M. Salisbury, E. Shaftesbury, E. Portsmouth, [cont.

Ecclesiastical Courts Bill—cont.
E. Carnarvon, E. Beauchamp, V. Halifax, L. Bp. Oxford, L. Bp. Ripon, L. Bp. Gloucester and Bristol, L. Portman, L. Westbury, L. Cairns
Report of Select Committee July 15 (No. 190)
Bill reported, with Amendts.* July 15 (No. 191)
Bill withdrawn July 29, [198] 885

Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Archbishop of York)
l. Presented; read 1ª* Mar 5 (No. 25)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 29, [195] 1818; after short debate, Motion and Bill withdrawn

Ecclesiastical Dilapidations (No. 2) Bill [H.L.] (The Lord Archbishop of York)
l. Presented; read 1ª* April 29 (No. 82)
Read 2ª* June 24
Committee*; Report June 25 (No. 152)

Ecclesiastical Titles Act Repeal Bill
(Mr. MacEvoy, Mr. William Gregory, Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, Mr. Corbally)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. MacEvoy) Feb 22, [194] 186; Bill ordered, after debate; read 1º*
Question, Mr. Walpole; Answer, Mr. MacEvoy Mar 1, 412; Question Mr. Newdegate; Answer, Mr. MacEvoy Mar 2, 488
Bill withdrawn* July 5 [Bill 13]

Ecclesiastical Titles—Legislation
Question, Mr. MacEvoy; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 5, [197] 1169

Education
Education in Large Towns, Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 12, to leave out from "That" and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the state of Education in the great Provincial Towns" (Mr. Melly), [194] 1189; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after long debate, Amendt. withdrawn
Primary Education, Question, Viscount Sandon; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster July 19, [198] 152
Public Education in England, Ireland, and Scotland, Observations, Earl Russell; debate thereon Mar 8, [194] 805 Schools for Children of the Working Classes, Question, Mr. Baines; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 23, [194] 1996
Schools of Science—Science and Art Department, Question, Lord Henry Lennox; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 1, [197] 946; Observations, Mr. Samuelson; Reply, Mr. W. E. Forster July 19, [198] 158
Parl. Papers—
Report of Committee of Council, 1868-9 . . . . [4139]
Report on Technical Instruction . . . . [4151] [4207]
Science and Art Department [4103] [4136]
Revised Code of Regulations [4115]

Education Bill
(The Lord Stratheden)
l. Presented; read 1ª* August 2 (No. 259)

Education of Children Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess Townshend)
l. Presented ; read 1^a* April 29 (No. 88)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2^a" July 13, [197] 1738
Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months") (The Lord President); on Question, That ("now,") &c.; resolved in the negative; Bill to be read 2^a on this day three months

Egerton, Hon. A. F., Lancashire, S.E.
Army Estimates—Yeomanry, [196] 1576
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [195] 1042 ; cl. 39, [196] 120
Printworks Regulation, Res. [194] 1541

Egerton, Hon. Captain F., Derbyshire, E.
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [195] 1297
Navy—Channel and Mediterranean Fleets, [198] 797
Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [195] 123

Egerton, Hon. W., Cheshire, Mid.
Bleachworks Act, [194] 629
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1816
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 680 ; Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1535
Parliament—Crypt under St. Stephen's Chapel, [195] 676
Printworks Regulation, Res. [194] 1538

Egerton, Mr. E. C., Cheshire, E.
Austria—Commercial Treaty with, [196] 970
Cattle Plague (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1810
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 434 ; Comm. cl. 67, [197] 1537

Egerton of Tatton, Lord
Contagious Diseases (Animals), 2R. [198] 888

Egypt
Société Industrielle et Agricole d'Egypte, Question, Mr. Sidebottom ; Answer, Mr. Otway July 5, [197] 1167 ; Question, Mr. White ; Answer, Mr. Otway July 22, [198] 451
Suez Canal, Question, Mr. Gourley ; Answer, Mr. Otway July 12, [197] 1664
The Viceroy—Present of a Steamer for the Albert Nyanza, Question, Mr. Buxton ; Answer, Mr. Otway June 3, [196] 1205

Elcho, Lord, Haddingtonshire
Accidents in Mines, [198] 685, 1517
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), 2R. [197] 857
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1129, 1165
Martial Law, [195] 661
Militia, [195] 667
Army—Government of the, [194] 203
Henry-Martini Rifle, [198] 1371
Wimbledon Review, [198] 1493
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1499, 1527, 1565
Feed Stuffs and Manures, Res. [197] 965
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1715, 1718 ; Nomination of Committee, [196] 631, 636

[cont.

Elcho, Lord—cont.
Game Laws (Scotland) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 586, 587 ; 2R. [198] 879
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. Amendt. [196] 251, 253
Irish Church, 3R. [196] 982, 1000
Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1228
Metropolis—Statues in Palace Yard, [196] 1742
Metropolis—Thames Embankment, [194] 133 ; Motion for a Committee, 277, 278
Navy—Admiralty Departments, Corruption in, [198] 1489
Parliament — Decoration of Central Hall, Motion for a Committee, [198] 718
Parliament—House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 282, 285
Parliament—Whitsuntide Holidays, [196] 809
198] Parochial Schools (Scotland, Comm. cl. 1, 822, 1101 ; cl. 2, 835 ; cl. 3, 837, 838 ; cl. 4, 1113, 1244, 1246, 1374, 1386, 1388 ; cl. 34, 1399 ; cl. 59, 1444 ; Consid. 1458, 1459, 1465 ; 3R. Amendt. 1494, 1498
Patents for Inventions, Res. [196] 917
Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 523
South Kensington Museum, [197] 570
Supply, Report, [194] 537

Election Commissioners [Expenses] Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Resolution in Committee May 4
Resolution reported ; Bill ordered ; read 1^o* May 5 [Bill 109]
Read 2^o* May 27
Committee *—R.P. May 28
Committee * ; Report May 31 [Bill 139]
Considered * June 3
Read 3^o * June 7
l. Read 1^a* (Earl of Kimberley) June 8 (No. 121)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2^a" June 11, [196] 1588 ; Bill read 2^a
Committee * ; Report June 14
Read 3^a* June 15
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 21]

Election Expenses Bill
(Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Baines, Mr. M'Laren)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Fawcett) Feb 19, [194] 150 ; Bill ordered ; read 1^o* [Bill 7]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2^o" Mar 3, 563
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Floyer) ; after short debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c. ;" A. 165, N. 168 ; M. 3 ; words added ; main Question, as amended, agreed to ; Bill put off for six months ; Division List, Ayes and Noes, 583

Election Inquiries
Reports of the Judges on Election Inquiries, Observations, The Lord Chancellor June 7, [196] 1294 ; June 8, 1391
Question, Mr. Vernon Harcourt ; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 14, [194] 408 ; Observations, Mr. Vernon Harcourt ; Reply, The Attorney General Mar 5, 759
[See the several Cities and Boroughs]

[cont.

Election Inquiries—cont.
Undue Influence and Bribery—17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, Question, Mr. J. S. Hardy; Answer, The Solicitor General June 10, [196] 1497

Election Petitions
Parl. Papers—
Return of Commissions . . . 281
Return of Petitions . . . 107, 108
Judgments of the Judges . . 120, 121
Return of Costs 395

Elections (Wales)
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, the proceedings of certain landlords in Wales towards their tenants on account of the free exercise of the Franchise at Elections are oppressive and unconstitutional, and an infringement of the rights conferred by Parliament on the people of this country" (Mr. Henry Richard) July 6, [197] 1294; after long debate, Motion withdrawn

ELLENBOROUGH, Earl of
Government of India Act Amendment, Report, [196] 689, 694
Governor General of India, Comm. [195] 131

ELLICE, Mr. E., St. Andrews, &c.
British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1120
Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee, Motion for Adjournment, [196] 634
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 392
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 285
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 2, [198] 836; cl. 1, 1107; cl. 4, 1113; cl. 9, 1119; cl. 24, 1229

ELLIOT, Mr. G., Durham, N.
Coal Fields, Motion for an Address, [196] 1914
Supply—Poor Law Commission, [197] 1689

ELPHINSTONE, Sir J. D. H., Portsmouth
Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1437, 1439
Agricultural Returns, Res. [197] 836
Army—Officers in China and Japan, [198] 904
Beverley Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 564
Cattle Plague, The, [194] 207
Contagious Diseases (Animals), Leave, [194] 94
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), [194] 1466; Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1271; cl. 122, 1766
Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. [198] 232, 233
Election Commissions, [196] 750
Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland), Leave, [195] 756
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Commission, [195] 2065; Nomination of Committee, Amendt. [196] 628, 1783
Game Laws (Scotland) [Mr. M'Lagan], 2R. [197] 503
Game Laws (Scotland) (No. 2), 2R. [198] 884, 885
Government Reductions and Emigration, [195] 991
Greenwich Hospital, Comm. [197] 565
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 396
[cont.

ELPHINSTONE, Sir J. D. H.—cont.
India—Red Sea Route to, [198] 706
Ireland—State of, [195] 2032
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, Motion for reporting Progress, [195] 1155, 1156; cl. 39, [196] 274, 279, 346; cl. 59, 405
Money Laws (Ireland), 2R. [197] 485
Navy—Questions, &c.
  Admiralty, Constitution of the Board of, [194] 304, 308
  Dockyard Distress, [195] 47, 49
  Government Dockyards, Reductions in the, [194] 374
  Naval Contracts, [198] 645
  Ryde Pier, [197] 358
Navy Estimates—Coastguard Service, [195] 83, 97, 98
  Half Pay, [195] 216
  Marine Divisions, [195] 185
  Men and Boys, [194] 914
  Salaries, Amendt. [195] 77, 83
  Steam Machinery, [195] 204, 206
  Victualling Yards, &c. [195] 183
Parliament — Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 191
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Re-comm. [198] 234, 816; cl. 2, 837
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1599
Scotland—Income Tax, [196] 389

ELY, Bishop of
Endowed Schools, 2R. [197] 615; cl. 15, 1881; cl. 19, Amendt. 1882; cl. 20, Amendt. 1883
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 29, [197] 1151

Emigration and Pauperism
Observations, Lord Houghton; Reply, Earl Granville; debate thereon April 16, [195] 943
Emigration Commission, Question, Mr. Hardcastle; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 12, [195] 579 29th Report—(Parl. P. [4159]
Emigration to Western Australia, Question, Mr. Alderman J. C. Lawrence; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 5, [197] 1166
Dockyard Emigrants—(Parl. P. 354, 403)

Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland) Bill
(The Lord Advocate, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Adam)
c. Motion for Leave (The Lord Advocate) April 13, [195] 755; Bill ordered
Read 1°* April 14 [Bill 79]
Read 2°* April 22
Committee*; Report May 6 [Bill 110]
Committee* (on re-comm.); Report May 13 [Bill 124]
Order for Committee (on re-comm) read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" (The Lord Advocate) June 17, [197] 150
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House will, upon this day three months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Dr. Lyon Playfair); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," agreed to; Committee; Report
Considered* June 28
Read 3°* July 5
[cont.

Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland) Bill—cont.
l. Read 1ª * (The Earl of Morley) July 6 (No. 175)
Read 2ª * July 20
Committee * ; Report July 22
Read 3ª * July 23
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 39]

Endowed Schools and Hospitals (Scotland)
Address for a Royal Commission "to inquire into the nature and amount of all Endowments in Scotland, the funds of which are devoted to the maintenance or education of young persons; also to inquire into the administration and management of any Hospitals or Schools supported by such Endowments, and into the system and course of study respectively pursued therein, and to report whether any and what changes in the administration and use of such Endowments are expedient, by which their usefulness and efficiency may be increased" (Sir Edward Colebrooke) June 8, [196] 1439; after short debate, Debate adjourned
Order for resuming Adjourned Debate discharged July 19

Endowed Schools Bill
Betten's Charity, Question, Mr. Pell; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster June 21, [197] 356
Commissioners and Secretary, The, Question, Mr. Neville-Grenville; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 24, [197] 516

Endowed Schools Bill
(Mr. W. E. Forster, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. W. E. Forster) Feb 18, 194] 113; Bill ordered, after debate; read 1° *
. Question, Mr. Gathorne Hardy; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 9, 955
. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 15, 1356; Bill read 2°, after long debate, and committed to a Select Committee
. Question, Mr. Charley; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster Mar 18, 1657
195] Moved, "That the Select Committee do consist of Twenty-one Members" (Mr. W. E. Forster) April 1, 23; after short debate, Motion agreed to; Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. W. E. Forster (Chairman), Mr. Acland, Sir C. Adderley, Mr. Jacob Bright, Mr. Buxton, Mr. Dillwyn, Mr. Goldney, Mr. George B. Gregory, Mr. Beresford Hope, Mr. James Howard, Mr. Melly, Lord Robert Montagu, Mr. Mowbray, Sir Stafford Northcote, Sir John Pakington, Mr. C. S. Parker, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. John G. Talbot, Mr. S. H. Walpole, Mr. Walter, and Mr. Winterbotham
. Moved, "That the Select Committee do consist of Twenty-two Members" (Mr. Crawford); after short debate, Motion agreed to; Mr. Alderman W. Lawrence added April 2, 123
. Moved, "That the Select Committee do consist of Twenty-three Members" (Mr. James Lowther); after short debate, Question negatived, [195] 124
Re-comm * ; Report May 11
Report of Select Comm. June 8 [P. P. 256]
Committee; Report June 14, [196] 1744
Considered * June 17
Read 3° * June 18
l. Read 1ª * (The Lord President) June 22
[cont.

Endowed Schools Bill—cont.
197] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" June 28, 607; after debate, Bill read 2ª
. Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into a Committee" July 15, 1866; after debate, Committee, 1875
Report * July 23
Read 3ª * July 26
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 56]
Bill . . . . [Bill 3]
Report from Select Committee [P.P. 208]
Report and Special Report of Select Committee . . . . [P.P. 256]
As amended by Select Committee [Bill 115]
As amended by Select Committee, and on re-comm. . . . [Bill 163]
Bill . . . . (No. 139)
As amended in Committee . (No. 192)
As amended on Report . . . (No. 220)

Endowed Schools (No. 2) Bill
Formerly part of Endowed Schools Bill
c. Committee * ; Report June 9
Bill withdrawn August 7, [198] 1466
Report and Special Report of Select Committee—Parl. P. 256
As amended on re-comm. 154

ENFIELD, Viscount, Middlesex
Abyssinian Expedition, [195] 30
Army—New Zealand War Medal, [194] 352
Dagenham Dock Company, [198] 1371
Hounslow Powder Mills, [197] 515
Juries, Special and Common, [194] 352
Metropolis—Finsbury Park, [196] 741
Nighthouses, [195] 1852
Metropolitan Police, [194] 1354
Special and Common Juries, 2R. [198] 398

ERSKINE, Vice Admiral J. E., Stirlingshire
Navy Estimates—Coastguard Service, [195] 83, 86, 97
Dockyards, &c. [195] 114
Steam Machinery, [195] 206
South Sea Islands—Slave Trade from the, [197] 646
Ways and Means, Res. 2 (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 806

ESMONDE, Sir J., Waterford Co.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 27, [195] 1870; cl. 32, [196] 36; Lords Amendts. [198] 73, 98, 579
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 240
Witnesses (House of Commons), Motion for a Committee, [196] 625

Established Church (Ireland)—See Irish Church

EVERSLEY, Viscount
Irish Church, Commons Amendts. [198] 315

Evidence Amendment Bill—Formerly
Law of Evidence Bill
(Mr. Denman, Mr. Locke King, Mr. Locke)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Denman) Feb 26, [194] 406; Bill ordered; read 1° * [Bill 25]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" April 28, [195] 1798
[cont.

Evidence Amendment Bill—cont.
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Staveley Hill); after short debate, Question, "That 'now,' &c." put, and agreed to; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2°
Committee*; Report May 10
Considered* May 27
Read 3°* May 28
Read 1ª* (The Lord Penzance) June 1 (No. 110)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 26, [198] 670; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee July 30, 987 (No. 239)
Report* August 2 (No. 260)
Read 3ª* August 3
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 68]

EWING, Mr. A. Orr, Dumbarton
*Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), 2R. [197] 846
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 369
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [198] 818, 1098; cl. 2, Amendt. 826, 835; cl. 6, Amendt. 1114, 1116; cl. 17, 1123, 1124

EWING, Mr. H. E. CRUM- Paisley
Bankruptcy, Leave, [194] 790; Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1408
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 122, [197] 1765
Cuba—Imprisonment of a British Subject, [194] 159
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 348
Game Laws (Scotland) [Mr. M'Lagan], Leave, [194] 536
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 22, [195] 1516
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 1, [198] 822; cl. 2, 833, 1108; cl. 4, 1113; cl. 9, 1118; cl. 14, 1122
Post Office—Landing Mails at a Western Port, [196] 927
West Indies—Clergy in the, [194] 2001

Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866
Observations, Mr. Hunt; Reply, Mr. Candlish; short debate thereon July 5, [197] 1190

Exchequer Bonds (£2,300,000) Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Ordered; read 1°* June 8 [Bill 152]
Read 2°* June 10
Committee*; Report June 11
Read 3°* June 14
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) June 15
Read 2ª* June 17
Committee*; Report June 18
Read 3ª* June 21
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 22]

EXCHEQUER, CHANCELLOR of the, see CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER

EXETER, Marquess of
Militia, Comm. [195] 1846

Exeter, Port of
Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Shaw Lefevre June 14, [196] 1741

Expiring Laws Continuance Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered; read 1°* July 29 [Bill ~~245]~~
Read 2°* July 30
Committee*; Report July 31
Read 3°* August 2
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 3 (No. 262)
Read 2ª* August 5
Committee*; Report August 6
Read 3ª* August 7
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict c. 85]

Extradition, Law of
Question, Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens; Answer, Mr. Otway Mar 16, [194] 1462
Treaty with France, Question, Lord Chelmsford; Answer, The Earl of Clarendon July 23, [198] 554

EYKYN, Mr. R., Windsor
Army — Non-Purchase Corps, Promotion in, [198] 995
Betting Houses, [197] 514
India—Nawab of Jungera, [195] 231
Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1218, 1224, 1226
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [196] 1450; Instruction, [197] 470
Navy—Naval Chaplains, [194] 1654
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Motion for a Committee, [194] 662
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 821, 823, 975

Factory Acts
Hours of Labour, Question, Mr. Muntz; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 29, [195] 1851
Workshops Regulation Act in Birmingham, Question, Mr. Akroyd; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 12, [195] 583

Factory and Workshops Act, 1867
Question, Mr. Samuelson; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 26, [198] 683
(See Printworks Regulation)

Factory Returns
Question, Mr. Baines; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 23, [194] 202
Factory Acts
See Agricultural Labour Commission
Bleachworks Acts
Printworks Regulation

Faraday, Proposed Monument to Question, Dr. Lyon Playfair; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 5, [197] 1173

FAWCETT, Mr. H., Brighton
Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 110
Agricultural Labourers, Res. [197] 582, 606
Army—Expenditure on Fortifications, [195] 232, 233
Army—Horse Guards and the War Office, Res. [194] 1104
Civil and Diplomatic Appointments, Res. [195] 480, 487
196] Civil Offices (Pensions), Comm. Amendt. 858, 864; cl. 1, Motion for reporting Progress, 868; cl. 4, 874; cl. 6, 876; cl. 7, 877, 1097
197] Consid. add. cl. 537, 539, 545, 549; cl. 3, Amendt. 551; cl. 6, 552
Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, Amendt. [194] 1214
Election Expenses, Leave, [194] 150; 2R. 563, 582
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. (A) 12, [196] 1761
Inclosure Act, Motion for a Committee, [195] 1286
Inclosure of Lands, 3R. Amendt. [195] 547, 679, 680
Ireland—Trinity College, Dublin, Res. [198] 1197, 1208
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 18, [195] 1487; cl. 32, [196] 23, 24; Amendt. 37, 42, 48; cl. 39, 338; cl. 59, Amendt. 407, 410; Lords Amendts. [197] 1949
Parliament—Business of the House, [194] 1092
  Youghal Election, New Writ, [195] 2070
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 823, 978, 980, 995, 1194, 1198, 1200
Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 508
  Miscellaneous Expenses, [198] 968, 972
University Tests, Comm. add. cl. [197] 1099, 1104
Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 128

Feed Stuffs and Manures
Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 1, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that the attention of the Board of Trade should be directed to the adulteration of feed stuffs and manures" (Lord Elcho), [197] 965; after short debate, Question, "That the words, &c.;" put, and agreed to

Fever Patients, Conveyance of Question, Captain Dawson-Damer; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 1, [194] 411; Question, Captain Dawson-Damer; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 4, 626

FEVERSHAM, Earl of Contagious Diseases (Animals), Comm. cl. 2, [198] 989
Ireland—Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 387
Life Peerages, 2R. [195] 1676

FIELDEN, Mr. J., Yorkshire, W.R., E. Div.
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 571
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 29, [196] 1775
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 121
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 533
Supply—Missions and Embassies Abroad, [198] 948

Fine Arts Copyright Consolidation and Amendment Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Westbury)
l. Presented; read 1ª* Feb 26 (No. 17)
Bill withdrawn* April 12

Fine Arts Copyright Consolidation and Amendment (No. 2) Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Westbury)
l. Presented; read 1ª* April 12 (No. 51)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 30, [195] 1936; after short debate, Bill read 2ª, and referred to a Select Committee
And, on May 3, the Lords following were named of the Committee:—Ld. Privy Seal, E. Stanhope, E. Carnarvon, E. Sommers, V. Hardinge, L. Bp. Oxford, L. Portman, L. Overstone, L. Lyveden, L. Westbury, L. Houghton, L. Romilly; May 4, The Duke of Saint Albans, The Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, and The Lord De L'Isle and Dudley added
Report of Select Comm. June 29
Report of Select Comm. July 9 (No. 181)

Fines and Fees Collection Bill
(Mr. Hunt, Mr. Sclater-Booth, Mr. Staveley Hill)
c. Ordered; read 1º* June 10 [Bill 159]
Read 2º* June 18
Committee*; Report June 22
Re-comm.*; Report June 25 [Bill 171]
Considered* June 25
Read 3º* June 25
l. Read 1ª* (The Duke of Richmond) June 28
Read 2ª* July 20 (No. 155)
Committee* July 22
Report* July 23
Read 3ª* July 26
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 49]

FINGALL, Earl of Irish Church, Commons Amendt. [198] 439

Fire Insurance Duty
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, the Duty on Fire Insurances should be, at the earliest opportunity, reduced to 6*d.* per cent in place of the Duty of 1*s.* 6*d.* per cent now charged; and that such a reduction would have a tendency to improve the Revenue by inducing the insurance of property now uninsured" (Mr. H. B. Sheridan) April 6, [195] 305; after short debate, Debate adjourned
Septennial Policies, Question, Mr. H. Beaumont; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 5, [197] 1168

Fisheries (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Attorney General for Ireland)
c. Ordered; read 1º* July 1 [Bill 190]
Read 2º* July 5
Committee*; Report July 22
Considered* July 26
Read 3º* July 28

[cont.

Fisheries (Ireland) Bill—cont.
l. Read 1ª* (The Lord Dufferin) July 29
Read 2ª* July 30 (No. 236)
Committee August 2, [198] 1067
Report August 3, 1138
Read 3ª* August 5
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 92]

Fitzwalter, Lord
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 41, Amendt. [197] 1159

Fletcher, Mr. J., Cockermouth
Lord Lieutenant (Cumberland and Westmoreland), Motion for an Address, [195] 746

Floyer, Mr. J., Dorsetshire
Election Expenses, 2R. Amendt. [194] 577
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 496
Supply—British Museum, [198] 225

Forde, Colonel W. B., Downshire
Army—Training of the Irish Militia, [194] 125
Ireland—Cork, Meeting in, [196] 573

Fordyce, Mr. W. D., Aberdeenshire, E.
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Commission, [195] 2067
Game Laws (Scotland) [Mr. M'Lagan], Leave, [194] 535; 2R. [197] 502
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 395
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 17, [198] 1123
Scotland—Salmon Fisheries, [195] 1196
Sea Birds Preservation, Consid. Amendt. [195] 557

Foreign Office Agencies
Question, Mr. T. Potter; Answer, Mr. Otway Mar 11, [194] 1083; Question, Sir Henry Bulwer; Answer, Mr. Otway August 10, [198] 1534

Foreign Office—Unpaid Attachés
Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 12, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the unpaid Attachés in the Diplomatic Service are entitled to salaries equal to those now given to the Junior Clerks in the Foreign Office" (Mr. William Lowther), [197] 1672; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Forester, Right Hon. Major General, Wenlock
Army—Household Cavalry, [196] 572

Forster, Right Hon. W. E. (Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education), Bradford
Betten's Charity, [197] 356
Beverley Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 564
Carriage of Live Stock, [194] 630; [198] 1491
Cattle Disease in Roumania, [197] 1081

[cont.

Forster, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.
Cattle, Foreign, Importation of, [194] 154, 205, 352
Cattle Plague, [194] 207
Conveyance of Cattle, [194] 630; [198] 1491
Diseased Foreign Sheep, [195] 1363, 1364, 1468, 1696, 1698; [197] 949
Foot and Mouth Disease, [198] 1252
Slaughter of Cattle, [198] 1492
Contagious Diseases (Animals), 2R. [194] 1030, 1466, 1467
194] Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, 672, 678, 682
195] 2R. 447
196] 1498
197] Comm. cl. 15, 1271, 1272, 1282, 1288, 1290; cl. 16, 1292; cl. 22, ib.; cl. 27, 1293; cl. 34, ib.; cl. 45, 1294, 1528; cl. 54, ib.; cl. 63, 1530, 1532; Amendt. 1533, 1534, 1535; cl. 64, ib.; cl. 67, 1537, 1539, 1540; cl. 73, ib. Amendt. 1541; cl. 88, Amendt. ib.; cl. 90, 1757, 1758, 1759; cl. 96, 1761; cl. 98, 1762, 1763; cl. 101, 1764; cl. 7, 1766; add. cl. 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772, 1773, 1774
Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1235
Education, Primary, [198] 152
Education—Schools for Children of the Working Classes, [194] 1997
Education Votes, [197] 515
Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland), Comm. [197] 158
Endowed Schools, Leave, [194] 113, 116, 121; 955; 2R. 1356, 1658; Motion for a Committee, [195] 23, 24, 123, 124
196] Comm. cl. 9, 1744, 1746, 1748; cl. 10, 1748, 1750, 1751; cl. (A.) 12, 1760; cl. 13, 1765; cl. 15, 1766, 1768; cl. 19, 1768, 1769, 1770, 1771; cl. 29, 1772, 1774, 1776, 1777; cl. 31, 1778, 1779; cl. 35, 1779; cl. 36, 1780; cl. 38, ib.; cl. 41, 1781, 1782
198] Re-comm. 1466, 1467
Metropolitan Cattle Market, [196] 15
Parliament—Business of the House, [194] 1093, 1094
198] Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 2, 826, 833, 834; cl. 1, 1108; cl. 6, 1115, 1116, 1117; cl. 24, 1234, 1242; cl. 44, 1392, 1393; Consid. 1454, 1456, 1457, 1458
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 656, 670
Pharmacy Act Amendment, Leave, [194] 683; Comm. [195] 1933
Schools of Science, [198] 162
South Kensington Museum, [196] 1636; [197] 570
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 162, 184, 197
Science and Art Department, [198] 200, 217
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1385

Forster, Mr. C., Walsall
Assessed Rates, Leave, [194] 329, 842; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 371; add. cl. 534
Law of Forfeiture on Conviction of Felony, [197] 1542
Ratepaying Clauses, [194] 127
Taxes, Collection of, [194] 766
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 414

FORTESCUE, Earl
Endowed Schools, 2R. [197] 620; Comm. cl. 14, 1878
India—Railways—Financial Statement, [198] 553
India — Weights and Measures, Address for Papers, [198] 795

FORTESCUE, Right Hon. Chichester S. (Chief Secretary for Ireland), Louth Co.
Army—Training of the Irish Militia, [194] 125
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [197] 1177; Comm. [198] 231
Ireland—Questions, &c.
Agrarian Outrages, [195] 1850; [198] 839
Anketell, Mr., Murder of, [194] 1091; [197] 351
Ballyheigue, Affray at, [196] 1207
Beerhouses, Licensing of, [195] 309
Caledon—12th July in, [198] 448
Church Leases, [195] 1095
Clerk of the Crown for King's County, [197] 1422
Cork, Mayor of, [195] 359
Cork, Meeting in, [196] 574
Cullen, Cardinal, and the Privy Council, [194] 483
Derry, Proclamation of, [196] 104, 263
District Asylums, [198] 684
Dundalk and Louth, Proclamation of, [197] 1666
Education, National, [194] 1898
Education—Salaries of Teachers, [195] 1698
Fenianism, [194] 159, 161, 209, 311, 954, 1659, 1661, 1904, 1998; [195] 357
Fercal, Union of, [196] 1206
Firearms, Use of, by the Irish Constabulary, [197] 1668
Fisheries Commission, [195] 358
Glebes and Glebe Houses, [198] 1088
Grand Jury Laws, [194] 157
Inflammatory Speeches, [194] 1349, 1351
Landlord and Tenant, Law of, [194] 353
Londonderry, Riot in, [195] 1848; [196] 20, 102, 104, 390, 749;—Proclamation of, [197] 1668
Lunatics, [198] 683
Maynooth College, [194] 1091, 1465; [195] 50
Municipal Franchise, [194] 1186
Orangeism, [197] 360
Polling Places, [194] 835
Poor Law, [194] 111;—Commissioners, 1466
Portadown, Riots at, [197] 1170, 1171, 1665, 1666
Prisons, [195] 1855
Protection of Life, [196] 470
Rates on Disturbed Districts, [196] 21
Representation of, [194] 363
Roscommon and Galway Lunatic Asylum, [197] 313
St. Patrick's Day in Dublin, [195] 230
Seditious Language in the Queen's Colleges, [197] 517
State Aid to Irish Nonconformists, [198] 153
State of, [195] 1990, 2052
Tarleton, Captain, Assassination of, [195] 1849
Tipperary, Extra Police in, [196] 744
[cont.

FORTESCUE, Right Hon. Chichester S.—cont.
Tralee Gaol, [196] 1630
Wetherall, Sir E. R., Appointment of, [194] 747, 755
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 720
Ireland—O'Sullivan, Mr., Case of, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1165, 1166
Ireland—Trinity College, Dublin, Res. [198] 1205
Ireland—Ulster, Recent events in, Motion for Papers, [198] 354
194] Irish Church, 2R. 1745
195] Comm. cl. 10, 1104, 1105; cl. 13, 1134,
. 1136; cl. 14, 1138, 1375; cl. 15, 1398; cl. 18,
. 1414, 1478; cl. 22, 1517; cl. 23, 1528; cl. 25,
. 1597, 1605, 1614; cl. 26, 1628, 1629; cl. 27,
. 1629; cl. 29, 1918, 1922, 1929
196] cl. 36, 72; cl. 37, 74; cl. 39, 129, 295;
. cl. 59, 403, 410, 413, 419; Consid. 769
197] Lords Amendts. 1949; Amendt. 1958, 1977
198] 26, 98, 122, 587
Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland), 2R. [197] 497
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 213
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 88
Business of the House, [194] 1093
Morning Sittings, [195] 1980
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 1558; [197] 864, 868, 1590
Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 327, 335
Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [194] 994; Comm. [196] 1455
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), Leave, [194] 1546
Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1487
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 738
Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 967
Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 514

Fortifications (Provision for Expenses) Bill (Mr. Dodson, Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Captain Vivian)
c. Resolutions in Committee July 16
Resolutions reported; Bill ordered; read 1°* July 19 [Bill 223]
Read 2°* July 22
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" (Mr. Cardwell) July 30, [198] 1003
Amendt. to leave out from "That" and add "this House will, upon this day month, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Taylor); Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 100; N. 32; M. 68; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker &c." put, and agreed to; Committee; Report, 1008
Read 3°* July 31
l. Read 1ª* (Lord Northbrook) August 2 (No. 251)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" August 3, 1139; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee*; Report August 5
Read 3ª* August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 76]

FOTHERGILL, Mr. R., Merthyr Tydvil
Ireland—State of, [195] 2002
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 977

Fowler, Mr. R. N., Penryn, &c.
Bristol Pilots at Falmouth, [198] 1528
British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1100
British Subjects in the Levant, [198] 1250
Cape of Good Hope—Boers of the Trans-Vaal Republic, [197] 1342
  Enslavement of Kaffir Children, [194] 128
Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 856
Gambia—Prisoners in Bathurst Gaol, [198] 1051
India—East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Res. [198] 1193
Ireland—St. Patrick's Day in Dublin, [195] 230
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 12, [195] 1121
Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1226
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [196] 1450
Mauritius—Famine, Reported, [194] 1657
New Zealand—Affairs of, [198] 474
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 1246
Post Office—Landing Mails at a Western Port, [196] 924
  West India Mails, [195] 574
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 993
Sierra Leone—Thomas v. Huggins, Case of, [198] 1216
Supply—Houses of Parliament, [197] 683

Fowler, Mr. W., Cambridge Bo.
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1411; cl. 126, 1903
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 831
Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1842
Real Property, Res. [196] 586, 602
South Sea Islands—Slave Trade from the, [197] 645
Supply—Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1464
  Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 678
  House of Commons Offices, [197] 1477
  Miscellaneous Expenses, [198] 973
Telegraph, Comm. [198] 747; 3R. 977
University Tests, 2R. [194] 1447; Comm. add. cl. [197] 1102
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 425; Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), 617

France
Claims of British Subjects under Convention of Paris, 1815, and Treaties of 1814 and 1815, Motion for Papers (Mr. H. B. Sheridan) June 8, [196] 1445; after short debate, A. 80, N. 109; M. 29
Commercial Treaty, The, Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 18, To leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into and report upon the operation of the Commercial Treaty with France, ratified the 13th day of January 1860, and particularly as it affects the Silk Manufacture in this Country" (Mr. Staveley Hill), [197] 329; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Question put; A. 155, N. 101; M. 54
Extradition Treaty with France, Question, Lord Chelmsford; Answer, The Earl of Clarendon July 23, [198] 554
  Channel Passage—(Parl. P. No. 353)

Freedom of Speech—Arrest of Mr. Murphy by the Mayor of Birmingham—(See Murphy's Lectures)

French, Right Hon. Colonel F., Roscommon Co.
Army—Militia, Training of the Irish, [194] 125
Barking Creek, River Thames at, [196] 1402
Church Rates—Private Acts, [195] 1854
Ireland — Roscommon and Galway Lunatic Asylum, [197] 313
  Salmon Passes on the Shannon, [197] 648
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 715
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 32, [196] 53; cl. 33, 54; Lords Amendts. [197] 1907
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 235
Parliament—Business of the House, [198] 157
  Dublin City Writ, [197] 133
  Whitsuntide Holidays, [196] 21
Parliament — House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 270
Revising Barristers, Appointment of, [198] 1487
Sea Fisheries (Ireland), [196] 24, 1489
Statute Law, Revision of the, Res. [196] 1253
Supply—Dublin Metropolitan Police, [198] 912
  Dundrum Criminal Lunatic Asylum, [198] 912
  Landed Estates Court (Ireland), [198] 911
  Probate Courts, [198] 909
  Public Works (Ireland) (Salaries), [198] 743

Friendly Societies' Acts
Question, Mr. W. Lowther; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 29, [198] 896
  (See title Trades Unions)

Friendly Societies—Law in Relation to Observations, Mr. E. Richards; Reply, Mr. Bruce; short debate thereon April 9, [195] 508

Friendly Societies' Returns
Question, Mr. W. Lowther; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 25, [197] 571

Gallwey, Sir W. P., Thirsk
Packet Service between England and France, [198] 154
Supply—Works, &c. [197] 1708

Galway, Viscount, Retford (East)
Dublin Freemen, Leave, Motion for Adjournment, [197] 820
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [198] 358
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [196] 1792
  Youghal Election, New Writ, [195] 2072
Taxes on Servants, [196] 1097, 1098
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1378
Ways and Means—Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 799, 800

Gambia—Prisoners in Bathurst Gaol
Observations, Mr. Buxton; Reply, Mr. Monsell; short debate thereon July 30, [198] 1048

Game Laws (Scotland)
Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed "to inquire into the operation and effect of the Laws in Scotland relating to Game" (Mr. Loch) April 27, [195] 1713 ; after debate, Motion agreed to ; Select Committee appointed
Moved, "That the Select Committee do consist of Eighteen Members" (Mr. Loch) May 11, [196] 628
Amendt. to leave out from "That" and add "the Order for the appointment of the said Select Committee be discharged" (Sir James Elphinstone) ; Question proposed, "That the words, &c. ;" after short debate, Debate adjourned
Debate resumed June 14, [196] 1783 ; after short debate, Order discharged
Amendt. on Committee of Supply April 30, To leave out from "That," and add "the question of the Game Laws in Scotland be referred to a Royal Commission" (Sir James Elphinstone), [195] 2065 ; Question proposed, "That the words, &c. ;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Game Laws (Scotland) Bill
(Mr. M'Lagan, Mr. Fordyce, Mr. Orr Ewing)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. M'Lagan) Mar 2, [194] 534 ; Bill ordered, after short debate ; read 1° * [Bill 32]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 23, [197] 499 ; after short debate, Bill withdrawn

Game Laws (Scotland) (No. 2) Bill
(Lord Elcho, Sir Graham Montgomery)
c. Motion for Leave (Lord Elcho) Mar 3, [194] 586 ; Bill ordered, after short debate ; read 1° * [Bill 36]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" July 28, [198] 879 ; after short debate, Debate adjourned

Game Laws (Scotland) (No. 3) Bill
(Mr. Loch, Sir Robert Anstruther, Mr. Parker)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * Mar 11 [Bill 47]
Bill withdrawn * July 28

GARLIES, Lord, Wigtonshire
Army—Armament of Sea and Land Defences, [197] 141
Branding in the, [195] 573 ; [196] 573
Army Estimates — Hospital Establishment, [195] 666
Land Forces, [194] 1151
Martial Law, [195] 662
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 388
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 806, 807 ; cl. 19, 1124
Scotland—Ayrshire, Distributor of Stamps for, [198] 1144
Portpatrick Harbour, [194] ; 110, 367 ; [195] 983
Scotland—Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, Motion for a Return, [194] 1272
Volunteers, Ammunition for the, [196] 1591

GILPIN, Colonel R. T., Bedfordshire
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1533
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 574
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 18, [195] 1413, 1416 ; cl. 29, 1932 ; Lords Amendts. Motion for Adjournment, [197] 1986, 1987
Militia, Comm. [195] 1417

GILPIN, Mr. C., Northampton Bo.
Assessed Rates, Comm. add. cl. [197] 535
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1410
Cape Colony—Enslavement of Kaffir Children, [194] 132
Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 840, 848, 874
Civil Offices (Pensions), Consid. [197] 551
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 19, [196] 1771
India—Bank of Bengal, [198] 1295
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 123
Merchant Seamen, Diet of, [194] 1463
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 983
Salisbury Magistrates, The, [196] 1620
Supply—Poor Law Commission, [197] 1691
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 663

GLADSTONE, Right Hon. W. E. (First Lord of the Treasury), Greenwich
Asia, Central, [195] 362 ; [197] 1580
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 379, 390, 394 ; cl. 4, 527
Audit of Public Accounts, [197] 631
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [197] 321, 328, 329
198] Bishops Resignation, 2R. 1125 ; Comm.
. 1297, 1314 ; cl. 2, 1316, 1317, 1318, 1320,
. 1321, 1322 ; cl. 3, 1322, 1323 ; cl. 5, 1323,
. 1324 ; cl. 11, 1324
Bishops, Retirement of, [195] 581
Bright, Mr., Letter of, [197] 121
British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1124
Canada—Railway Loan, Res. [197] 1452
Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan, 2R. [198] 1329
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1817
Church Temporalities (Ireland) Commissioners, Comm. [195] 1531
Civil and Diplomatic Appointments, Res. [195] 494
196] Civil Offices (Pensions), Comm. 863, 864 ;
. cl. 1, 869, 870 ; cl. 2, 871 ; cl. 3, 872 ; cl. 4,
. 873, 874, 875 ; cl. 5, 876 ; cl. 6, ib. ; cl. 7,
. 877, 1097
197] Consid. 539, 542, 548 ; cl. 3, 552 ; cl. 6,
. Amendt. 553
Civil Service Appointments, [195] 40
Clergy, The, and Parliament, [196] 746
Contagious Diseases, [194] 303
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1268
Courts of Justice, Site, [198] 1144
Customs and Inland Revenue, 2R. [196] 585
Diplomatic Service, Expenses of the, [194] 836
Dublin Freemen Commission, Leave, [197] 820 ; Comm. [198] 233
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 9, [196] 1747 ; [197] 516
Episcopal Clergy, Disabilities of the, [195] 1466, 1467
Financial Statement—Corn Duty, [195] 479
Fire Insurances, Res. [195] 308
Gladstone, Mr., and the Independent Orange Association, [197] 1890

[cont.

Gladstone, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.
Government Contractors, [194] 482
Greece—British Payments to, [194] 1896
Inclosure of Lands, 3R. [195] 557
Ireland—Questions, &c.
  Church Leaseholds, [195] 1096
  Church Property, [194] 1087, 1351
  Established Church—Value of Endowments, [194] 839
  Impropriate Tithe Rent-Charge, [195] 1974
  Irish Church Funds, Surplus of, [198] 156
  Irish Clergy, Future Status of the, [195] 1198
  Landlord and Tenant, Law of, [194] 353
  Lavelle v. Proudfoot, Case of, [196] 885
  Lord Lieutenant, Rumoured Resignation of, [194] 2003
  Maynooth College, [194] 1658; [195] 316, 680;—Professors of, [196] 748
  Mayor of Cork, [194] 1999
  Prelates of the Irish Church, [196] 261
  Property of the Irish Church, [194] 1461
  Railways, Purchase of, [195] 1577
  Sligo Election, [195] 974
  State of, [195] 2020, 2024, 2025, 2053
  Valentia, Living of, [194] 482
  Wetherall, Sir E. R., Appointment of, [194] 756
194] Irish Church, Leave, 412, 468, 469; 2R. 1662, 1680, 1829, 2106, 2111, 2121, 2126;
195] 356; Comm. 924; cl. 2, 1044, 1058; cl. 3, 1099, 1100; cl. 7, 1100; cl. 10, 1101, 1106; cl. 12, 1109; Amendt. 1110, 1111, 1116; cl. 13, 1137; cl. 14, 1152, Motion for reporting Progress, 1157, 1357, 1367, 1370; Amendt. 1378, 1379, 1384, 1385, 1386; cl. 15, 1387, 1389, 1392; Amendt. 1401, 1402, 1403, 1404; cl. 16, Amendt. 1404, 1408; cl. 17, Amendt. 1410, 1411, 1412; cl. 18, 1412, 1413, 1415, 1416, 1475, 1485, 1488; cl. 19, 1489; cl. 20, 1495, 1497, 1504; cl. 22, 1510, 1514, 1517; cl. 23, 1520, 1521; cl. 24, 1585; cl. 25, 1592, 1596, 1598, 1600, 1601, 1602, 1603, 1614, 1615, 1616; cl. 26, 1624, 1628; cl. 27, 1633, 1634, 1644, 1645, 1646, 1647, 1856; cl. 28, 1881; cl. 29, 1904, 1922, 1927, 1931, 1932
196] cl. 32, 24, 33, 41; Amendt. 43, 46, 47, 52; cl. 33, 64; cl. 36, Amendt. 66, 67, 68; cl. 37, 73, 75; cl. 39, 110, 120; Amendt. 132, 133, 136, 137, 139, 146, 147, 148, 268, 269, 270, 281; Amendt. 301, 319, 337, 346; cl. 49, Amendt. 349; cl. 58, 350; Amendt. 391; cl. 59, 398, 407, 409, 410, 417, 419, 420; cl. 61, 421; cl. 62, 421; cl. 3, 421, 423; add. cl. 423, 425, 426; Consid. add. cl. 751, 757, 760, 765, 767, 769, 773, 774; Amendt. 778, 779, 780; 3R. 1060
197] Lords Amendts. 1891; Amendt. 1897, 1916, 1924; Amendt. 1946, 1948, 1952, 1953; Amendt. 1955; Amendt. 1959, 1960; Amendt. 1961, 1963, 1964; Amendt. 1965, 1976, 1977; Amendt. 1978, 1986, 1993
198] Amendt. 21, 47, 51; Amendt. 52, 98, 99, 103, 564
Irish Church—Organists, [195] 1197
Law Courts, New, Motion for a Committee, [197] 458, 463
Light Dues, Res. [196] 184
Local Museums, [197] 946
Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 265; [195] 978

Gladstone, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.
Lord Lieutenant (Cumberland and Westmoreland), Motion for an Address, [195] 748
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Instruction, [197] 462; Comm. [198] 359
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Consid. [198] 1132
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, 2R. [196] 963
Municipal Corporations (Metropolis), 2R. [196] 1959
Navy—Lord High Admiral, Office of, [194] 627
  Slave Trade, West Coast of Africa, [194] 831
Navy—Admiralty Clerks, Res. [196] 1628
Navy Estimates—Salaries, [195] 80
O'Farrell Papers, The, [195] 1468, 1470, 1584, 1854, 2064
Official Salaries, [195] 27
O'Sullivan's Disability, [196] 185, 186; Leave, 212, 219; 2R. Amendt. 577, 581, 584
Park Lane and Piccadilly Thoroughfare, Motion for Papers, [195] 757
Parliament—Questions, &c.
  Business of Parliament, Lords Message, [194] 1560
  Business of the House, [194] 1092, 1093, 1459; [195] 846, 1470, 1472; [198] 157, 158, 1092, 1296, 1297
  Dublin City Writ, [196] 1792, 1793
  Easter Recess, [194] 157
  Public Business, [197] 1669
  Whitsuntide Holidays, [196] 21, 104, 585, 809
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 74; Report, 106, 164
Parliament — House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 301, 302
Parliament—Insufficient Accommodation of the House, Res. [197] 964
Parliament—Morning Sittings, [195] 1856; Res. 1975, 1978, 1980, 1981
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Motion for a Committee, [194] 660; Instruction to Committee, 1518
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 1559
Pensions for Civil Offices, Res. [194] 165
Post Office—Inland Postage, Res. [195] 256
Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [196] 1156, 1157, 1160
Post Office—Mail Packet Service, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1307
Ratepaying Clauses, [194] 127
Real Estate Intestacy, Leave, [194] 967
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 977
Registration of Householders, [194] 158
Representation of Minorities, [197] 124
Representation of the People Act (1867) Amendment, Leave, [194] 511; 2R. [196] 1334
Representative Peers (Scotland and Ireland), Leave, [194] 987
Revenue Officers, Leave, [194] 272, 1592
Scotland—Queen's Remembrancer, [194] 1187
Slave Trade—Brazilian Vessels, [194] 354
Statute Law, Revision of the, Res. [196] 1249
Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 464, 466
Supply—Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 647
  Civil Service Estimates, Vote on Account, [195] 530, 543
  Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1438

[cont.

[cont.

GLADSTONE, Right Hon. W. E.—cont.
- Science and Art Department, [198] 213
- Stationery Office, [197] 1698
- United States—Recent Negotiations with, [197] 1425
- University Tests, 2R. [194] 1051; Comm. cl. 6, [197] 796
- Vacating of Seats, Leave, [194] 221
- Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 411, 414; Res. 1, (Corn, &c.), 598, 600
- Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 127
- Witnesses (House of Commons), Motion for a Committee, [196] 625

GLADSTONE, Mr. W. H., Whitby
- University Tests, Comm. [197] 780

GLOUCESTER and BRISTOL, Bishop of
- Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1743
- Contagious Diseases (Animals), 2R. [198] 887; Comm. cl. 64, Amendt. 990, 992
- Endowed Schools, 2R. [197] 621; Comm. cl. 15, 1882
- Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1344
- Irish Church, Comm. cl. 12, [197] 749; cl. 28, 1033; cl. 69, 1261; Report, Amendt. 1488; Commons Amendts. [198] 443
- Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c. 2R. [198] 890, 891
- University Tests, 2R. [198] 136

GLYN, Mr. G. G., Shaftesbury
- Parliament—Drogheda Writ, [194] 151, 797
  - Youghal Election, New Writ, [195] 2068

Gold Coinage, The
- Gold Coinage, Observations, Mr. J. B. Smith; Reply, The Chancellor of the Exchequer; short debate thereon August 6, [198] 1408; Question, Mr. Alderman W. Lawrence; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer August 10, 1532
- Melting of English Sovereigns, Question, Mr. Sinclair Aytoun; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer August 10, [198] 1527
  - Coinage 1859 to 1868—(Parl. P. No. 157)

GOLDNEY, Mr. G., Chippenham
- Agriculture, Department of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 497
- Assessed Rates, Leave, [194] 325; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 385, 386, 394
- Copyhold, Inclosure, and Charity Commissions, [195] 141
- County Coroners, Leave, [195] 752
- Courts of Justice (New Site), Leave, [196] 560
- Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1393; Comm. cl. 9, [196] 1747; cl. 19, Amendt. 1768, 1769; cl. 29, 1772; cl. 36, Amendt. 1780
- Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1788
- Inclosure of Lands, 3R. [195] 555
- Irish Church, Comm. cl. 13, Amendt. [195] 1124, 1126; cl. 14, 1152; cl. 18, Amendt. 1412, 1413, 1415, 1473, 1479; cl. 32, [196] 40, 53
- Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1227
- Metropolis—New Public Offices, [197] 1669

[cont.

GOLDNEY, Mr. G.—cont.
- Parliament—Business of the House, [195] 1472
  - New Writs, [194] 18
- Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Motion for a Committee, [194] 662
- Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 24, [198] 1242
- Real Estate Intestacy, Leave, [194] 963; 2R. [197] 1845
- Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 465
- Supply—Board of Trade, [197] 1682
  - Burlington House, Amendt. [197] 1213
  - Charity Commission, [197] 1683
  - Civil Service Estimates, Vote on Account, [195] 538
  - County Courts, [198] 908
  - Education, Public, [198] 192
  - Home Office, &c. Departments, [197] 1480
  - House of Lords Offices, [197] 1476
  - Land—New Palace, Westminster, [197] 679
  - Land Registry Office, [198] 910
  - National Gallery, [198] 503
  - Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1703
  - Probate Court and Registries, [197] 1211; [198] 909
  - Public Offices Site, [197] 1201, 1203, 1204, 1208
  - Royal Palaces, [197] 653
  - Royal Parks, &c. Amendt. [197] 665, 673
  - Tithe Commission, [197] 1684
  - Works, &c. [197] 707
- Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 409

GOLDSMID, Sir F. H., Reading
- Bankruptcy, 2R. [195] 166; Comm. cl. 59, [196] 1600
- County Courts, 2R. Amendt. [194] 1563; [196] 684
- Married Women's Property, 2R. [195] 792

GORE, Mr. W. R. ORMSBY- Leitrim Co.
- Ireland—Railways, Purchase of, [195] 1577
  - Shannon Salmon Fisheries, [196] 743
- Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 86

GOSCHEN, Right Hon. G. J. (Chief Commissioner of the Poor Law Board), London
- Assessed Rates, Leave, [194] 315, 628, 842; [195] 842; 2R. [196] 1299
- 197] Comm. cl. 1, 372, 383, 385, 386, 390, 392, 396, 397, 398; cl. 4, 520, 524, 528; Amendt. 529, 531; cl. 6, Amendt. 533; add. cl. 534, 535, 536; Consid. add. cl. 1082, 1083, 1084, 1085, 1086, 1087, 1088, 1089
- Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1407
- Birmingham—District Medical Officers, [194] 1089;—Board of Guardians, 1902
- Catholic Children in Workhouses, [197] 1419
- District Asylums, [194] 1899
- Emigration of Paupers, [194] 627
- Fever Patients, Conveyance of, [194] 626
- Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1816
- Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 241; [195] 358
- Metropolis—St. Marylebone Workhouse, [197] 944
  - St. Pancras Workhouse, [197] 1754, 1820

[cont.

GOSCHEN, Right Hon. G. J.—cont.
- Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Consid. [198] 1130
- Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, Leave, [194] 1534, 1535; 2R. [196] 946, 963, 1364, 1368
- Orphan Pauper Children, [195] 971
- Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 521
- Poor Law—Questions, &c.
  - Gilbert Unions, [194] 626; [195] 1195, 1196
  - Keighley Union, [198] 892
  - Kensington Sick Asylum District, [195] 841
  - Magistrates and Boards of Guardians, [197] 120
  - Metropolitan Lunatic Asylums, [195] 1355
  - Payment of Rates by Owners, [194] 409
  - Sick Poor Asylums, [194] 954
  - Vagrants in Sacks—Narberth Union, [197] 308, 1890
- Poor Law—Removal of Children, Res. [197] 1337, 1340
- Poor Rates, Exemption from, [194] 356
- Poor Relief Assessment, [194] 485
- Rateable Property, Leave, [194] 185
- Rateable Property (Metropolis), Leave, [194] 170, 183
- Rates and Taxes, Collection of, [194] 839
- Rating of Mines, [194] 407
- Rating of Woods, [194] 411
- Sunday and Ragged Schools, 2R. [196] 1969
- Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 514
  - Poor Law Commission, [197] 1689, 1692
- Union of Parishes in Westminster, [198] 1145
- Vagrancy, [195] 1096; [198] 157
- Valuation of Property, [194] 1661
- Valuation of Property (Metropolis), 2R. [195] 22, 359; Comm. cl. 11, [197] 1482, 1483; cl. 53, Amendt. 1483

GOUGH, Viscount
- Irish Church, Report, Amendt. [197] 1503; 3R. Amendt. 1660

GOURLEY, Mr. E. T., Sunderland
- Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1333
- Cabs and Omnibuses, Licenses on, [198] 1541
- Colonies, Grants in Aid, [198] 960
- Cuba—Seizure of the "Mary Lowell" in British Waters, [196] 264
- Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 26, [196] 854
- Egypt—Suez Canal, [197] 1664; [198] 1087
- Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Leave, [198] 1516
- Navy Estimates—Men and Boys, [194] 922
- Navy—Reserve Channel Squadron, [196] 1236
- Poor Relief Assessment, [194] 485
- Staines, Burglaries at, [198] 1542
- Trades Unions, Funds of, [194] 112
- Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 624

Government Annuities, &c. Bill
(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Stansfeld)
- c. Ordered; read 1°* April 9 [Bill 70]
- Read 2°* June 7
- Bill withdrawn* August 5

Government Contractors, 22 Geo. III. c. 45
- Question, Mr. Rylands; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 2, [194] 482
- (See Dumfriesshire Election)

Government of India Act Amendment Bill
(The Duke of Argyll)
- 195] l. Notice April 6, 222
- . Presented; read 1ª, after debate April 19, 1069
- . Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 29, 1821; after short debate, Bill read 2ª (No. 62)
- Committee* May 7 (No. 94)
- 196] Report May 13, 689
- . Amendt. moved to omit "elected or" (The Marquess of Salisbury); after short debate, Cont. 89, Not-Cont. 53; M. 36; resolved in the affirmative; Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. 697
- Moved, to insert a new clause (The Marquess of Salisbury); after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn (No. 104)
- . Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3ª" June 4, 1236; after short debate, Bill read 3ª
  - As amended by Commons (No. 290)
- c. Read 1°* June 8 [Bill 150]
- Read 2°* June 21
- Committee; Report August 5, [198] 1361
- Considered* August 6
- Read 3°* August 6
- Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 97]

Government Securities, Dividends on—Transmission of Warrants
- Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 27, [198] 800

Governor General of India Bill [H.L.]
(The Duke of Argyll)
- l. Presented; read 1ª* Feb 26 (No. 16)
- Bill read 2ª, after debate Mar 11, [194] 1055
- Committee April 5, [195] 130 (No. 42)
- Report* April 9
- Read 3ª* April 19
  - As amended by Commons (No. 291)
- c. Read 1°* April 21 [Bill 89]
- Read 2°* June 21
- Committee; Report August 5, [198] 1368
- Considered* August 6
- Read 3°* August 6
- Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 98]

GOWER, Lord R. S. Leveson-, Sutherlandshire
- Metropolis—Burlington House, [194] 1351

GOWER, Hon. E. F. Leveson, Bodmin
- Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1847

GRAHAM, Mr. W., Glasgow
- Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [196] 259; [198] 387
- Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 805; cl. 1, 823, 1106; cl. 19, 1124; cl. 24, 1240, 1243; cl. 34, 1391; Consid. 1459
- Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1308

GRANARD, Earl of
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 13, [197] 884; Report, 1499; 3R. 1640

Grand Jury Cess (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Stacpoole, Colonel Greville-Nugent)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Mar 18 [Bill 60]
Bill withdrawn* August 4

GRANVILLE, Earl (Secretary of State for the Colonies)
Appropriation of Property, Motion for a Return, Amendt. [194] 689
Assessed Rates, 2R. [197] 1752
Bankruptcy, [194] 97, 103; Comm. [198] 681
Bishops of Protestant Churches, [196] 1281
Bishops of the South Western District, [196] 10
Brazilian Slave Trade, 2R. [194] 480; 3R. 829
Bright, Mr., Letter of, [197] 10, 15, 16, 36
Canning Statue, The, [198] 1484
China—Missionaries in, [194] 933
Civil Service Pensions, Comm. [196] 85
Coronation Oath, [195] 1066, 1069
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [198] 1079; Comm. 1138; 3R. 1286, 1287, 1290
Ecclesiastical Courts, &c. 2R. [195] 833; Nomination of Committee, 1353, 1536
Ecclesiastical Titles, [197] 1169
Endowed Schools, Comm. [197] 1874
Furious Riding, Conviction for, [197] 1106
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 10, [194] 1332
Hudson's Bay Company, [194] 798
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1350
Ireland—Questions, &c.
Agrarian Outrages, [195] 1533, 1534, 1535
Bills relating to, [194] 199
Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 362, 373
Mayor of Cork—Assassinations, [195] 1951; [196] 77
Murders in, [194] 1635, 1642, 1648
State of, [195] 1956, 1971; [196] 715, 720
Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, [196] 1089
Ireland—Crime, Address for Returns, [194] 951
Irish Church, [196] 1580; 2R. 1637, 1666;
197] 301, 353; Comm. 686; Preamble, 710, 730; cl. 2, 744; cl. 6, 753, 754; cl. 9, 759; cl. 11, 869; cl. 12, 870, 871; cl. 13, 874, 876, 883, 885; cl. 14, 890, 897, 902, 913, 916; cl. 16, 922; cl. 18, Amendt. 923; cl. 23, 940; cl. 25, 997; cl. 26, 999; cl. 27, 1007; cl. 28, 1025, 1048; add. cl. 1109; cl. 29, 1123, 1125, 1126, 1127; cl. 33, 1156; cl. 35, 1158; cl. 45, 1164; cl. 68, 1231, 1232, 1253; cl. 22, 1268; Preamble, ib.; Report, 1486, 1488; Amendt. 1490, 1491, 1494, 1495, 1511, 1517, 1518, 1521, 1524; 3R. 1614, 1651
198] Commons Amendts. 235, 243, 260, 309, 312, 313, 315; Motion for Adjournment, 323, 406, 440, 443, 447
Life Peerages, 1R. [195] 469, 471; 2R. 1662, 1665; Comm. [196] 1192; cl. 1, 1202; Report, 1388; 3R. [197] 1325
National Gallery, Purchases for the, [198] 652, 664; Res. 1142
New Zealand, War in, [194] 332; [198] 783

[cont.

GRANVILLE, Earl—cont.
Oriel College, Oxford, 2R. [194] 804
Parliament—Questions, &c.
Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 46, 104, 153
Adjournment, [194] 15
Business of the House, [198] 14, 15
Easter Recess, [194] 798
Morning Sittings, [197] 1188
Order in the House, [197] 401, 408; [198] 149
Parliament—Construction of the House, Res. [198] 8, 11
Parliament—Despatch of Business, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1309
Parliamentary Proceedings, 2R. [194] 592, 618, 620, 799, 800
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Report, [196] 1285; [198] 1451; Commons Amendts. 1471, 1482
Party Processions (Ireland), [197] 1172
Pauperism and Emigration, [195] 952
Poor in England and Wales, Motion for a Commission, [197] 399
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 2R. [195] 1690, 1691
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [195] 572
Tenure (Ireland), 2R. [195] 1163, 1190; Comm. 1536, 1557, 1558, 1560, 1571

Gravesend County Court
Question, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer, Mr. Ayrton April 26, [195] 1579

GRAVES, Mr. S. R., Liverpool
Assessed Rates, Consid. [197] 1085
Board of Trade Returns, [198] 697
Clearing Vessels at the Custom House, [197] 1754
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 399
Ireland—Agrarian Outrages, [195] 1851
State of, [195] 1982
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [195] 1024; cl. 14, 1150
Light Dues, Res. [196] 175
Navy Estimates—Coastguard Service, [195] 85
Men and Boys, [194] 923
Steam Machinery, [195] 206
Navy—Government Dockyards, Reductions in the, [194] 376
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 677
Post Office—Inland Postage, Res. [195] 233, 252
Post Office — Mail Packet Contracts, [194] 1186; Motion for a Committee, 1292; Res. [196] 1139
Sunday and Ragged Schools, 2R. [196] 1967
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 3, [198] 765; cl. 5, 771

GRAY, Sir J., Kilkenny Bo.
General Council of Medical Education, &c. [197] 1269, 1270
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1795
Ireland—O'Donovan Rossa, Case of, [196] 1238, 1243
Orangeism, [197] 359, 360
State of, [195] 2060
Ireland—O'Sullivan, Mr., Case of, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1170
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1831; Comm. cl. 23, [195] 1529; cl. 25, 1616; cl. 27, 1874; Lords Amendts. [198] 588

[cont.

Gray, Sir J.—cont.
Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland), 2R. [197] 491
Newspapers, Registration, &c. of, [198] 559
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 199
Parliament—Reporters' Gallery, [198] 898
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [197] 868
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 12, [198] 772

Gray, Colonel W., Bolton
India — Rangoon and Western China, [195] 1356

Greaves, Mr. E., Warwick
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 29, [196] 1778

Greece—British Payments to Question, Mr. Kirk; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 22, [194] 1896

Greene, Mr. E., Bury St. Edmunds
Coal Mines, Accidents in, [194] 312; [195] 359
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1734
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 428
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1994; Comm. [195] 891; cl. 2, 1043; cl. 39, [196] 275, 277
Murphy, Mr., the Protestant Lecturer, [197] 124;—Arrest of, 411
Parliament — Dublin City Writ, Motion for Adjournment, [196] 1793
Ways and Means, Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 791

Greenwich Hospital Bill
(Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. Childers, Mr. Adam)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Trevelyan) April 27, [195] 1701; Bill ordered, after short debate
Read 1° * May 4 [Bill 105]
Read 2° * June 11
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" June 24, [197] 553
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the Bill be committed to a Select Committee" (Mr. Liddell); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Question put; A. 124, N. 43; M. 81; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," agreed to; Committee; Report
Read 3° * June 29
l. Read 1ª * (The Earl of Camperdown) July 1
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 16, [198] 1; Bill read 2ª (No. 165)
Committee *; Report July 19 (No. 202)
Read 3ª * July 20
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 44]

Gregory, Mr. G. B., Sussex, E.
Agricultural Labourers, Res. [197] 606
Bankruptcy, 2R. [195] 154; Comm. cl. 6, Amendt. [196] 1214, 1215; cl. 7, 1217; cl. 43, Amendt. 1403; cl. 54, 1595; cl. 59, 1601; cl. 126, 1901; cl. 130, [197] 316; cl. 131, 415; add. cl. 416, 417, 420
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 681; Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1271; cl. 34, Amendt. 1294; cl. 54, Amendt. 1528; cl. 67, Amendt. 1539
[cont.

Gregory, Mr. G. B.—cont.
County Courts, 2R. [196] 685
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1239
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. (A) 12, [196] 1761; cl. 38, Amendt. 1780
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 426; cl. (D) 12, 579
India—Bank of Bengal, [196] 1237
Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal, Comm. [197] 1527
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1156, 1385; cl. 22, 1516; cl. 29, Amendt. 1881, 1886; Consid. [196] 769; [198] 74
Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1848
Real Property, Res. [196] 596
Roman Catholic Charities, Motion for Returns, [198] 1028
Special and Common Juries, 2R. [198] 400
Waterloo and Whitehall Railway, [195] 972

Gregory, Mr. W. H., Galway Co.
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1202, 1248, 1270, 1699
Ireland—Medical and Educational Charges, [194] 303
  Poor Law Commissioners, [194] 1466
  Salmon Passes on the Shannon, [197] 651
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1694; Comm. cl. 18, [195] 1485; cl. 25, 1602, 1608; cl. 29, 1932; cl. 59, [196] 399; Amendt. 419; Lords Amendts. [198] 46, 60
Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland), 2R. [197] 490
Museums, &c., Opening of, on Sundays, [196] 1254, 1278, 1493
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [196] 1791
  Morning Sittings, [197] 1189
Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 331
Supply—Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1444
  Industrial Museums, Edinburgh, [197] 1212

Greville-Nugent, Colonel F. S., Longford Co.
Ireland—Wetherall, Sir E. R., Appointment of, [194] 744, 753, 754
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1273
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 25, [195] 1594; cl. 26, 1617, 1623, 1627; cl. 27, 1865; cl. 59, [196] 410

Grey, Earl
Appropriation of Property, Motion for a Return, [194] 691
Assessed Rates, 2R. [197] 1751, 1752
Bankruptcy, [194] 98
Brazilian Slave Trade, 2R. [194] 479
Bright, Mr., Letter of, [197] 17
China—Missionaries in, [194] 944
Education, Public, [194] 820
Government of India Act Amendment, Report, [196] 696
Habitual Criminals, 1R. [194] 347; Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. 1310, 1315; cl. 10, 1323, 1327, 1335; cl. 13, 1339; cl. 14, Amendt. 1343, 1344; cl. 10, [195] 225; cl. 12, 228
[cont.

GREY, Earl—cont.
Ireland—Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 381
Murders in, [194] 1625, 1634
State of, [195] 1963
Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1794
197] Notice, 352 ; Comm. Preamble, Amendt. 689, 743 ; cl. 6, 753 ; cl. 12, 871 ; cl. 14, 915; cl. 28, 1025 ; add. cl. 1109 ; cl. 29, 1125, 1138, 1141 ; cl. 33, 1155 ; cl. 41, 1161 ; cl. 68, 1251, 1253 ; Report, 1493, 1509
198] Commons Amendts. 266, 316, 319, 429, 446
Life Peerages, Comm. Preamble, [196] 1192 ; cl. 1, 1203, 1204 ; Report, add. cl. 1389
Militia, 3R. [196] 86
Municipal Magistrates, Removal of, [196] 1092
Parliamentary Proceedings, 2R. [194] 611
Pauperism and Emigration, [195] 961
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 1R. [195] 473, 475 ; 2R. 1679, 1691
Tenure (Ireland), 2R. [195] 1168; Comm. 1542

GREY, Right Hon. Sir G., Morpeth
Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. [198] 233
Dublin Freemen Disfranchisement, [198] 158
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1285
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 10, [195] 1104 ; cl. 27, 1871 ; Lords Amendts. [197] 1921
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [195] 1311
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, Amendt. [196] 1784, 1792 ; [197] 127, 130
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1498
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 681
Speaker, Election of a, [194] 4

GRIEVE, Mr. J. J., Greenock
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 389
Post Office—Stornaway, [194] 1900
Scotland—Cumbrae Lights, [198] 799
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 427

GROSVENOR, Earl, Chester City
Cattle Plague (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1807
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 96, [197] 1761

GROSVENOR, Hon. Captain R. W., Westminster
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 545 ; Consid. add. cl. [196] 737
Navy—Admiralty Clerks, Pay of, [194] 205 ; Res. [196] 1621
Parliament—Business of the House, [195] 846
South Eastern Railway, [197] 355
"Writers" in the Customs, [197] 624

GUEST, Mr. A. E., Poole
Army Estimates—Martial Law, [195] 662
Metropolis — Thames Embankment, South Side, [195] 1464
Supply—Royal Parks, &c., Amendt. [197] 658, 660

GURNEY, Right Hon. Russell, Southampton
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 59, [196] 1600 ; cl. 127, 1906 ; cl. 130, [197] 320, 328
Civil Offices (Pensions), Comm. cl. 1, [196] 869, 870 ; cl. 4, Amendt. 873 ; Consid. cl. 6, [197] 553
Clerks to Magistrates, [196] 1238
Coventry Election, [197] 995
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 6, [198] 1277 ; cl. 9, 1278 ; cl. 10, 1279 ; cl. 11, 1280 ; cl. 13, 1281
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 429 ; cl. 5, 577
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 717
Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1223
Married Women's Property, Leave, [194] 331 ; 2R. [195] 760
Post Office—Landing Mails at a Western Port, [196] 930
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1589
Telegraph, Consid. cl. 24, Amendt. [198] 977

Habitual Criminals Bill
(The Earl of Kimberley)
194] l. Notice Feb 23, 199
. Bill presented ; read 1ª, after short debate Feb 26, 332 (No. 18)
. Read 2ª, after debate Mar 5, 691
. Committee Mar 15, 1309 (No. 32)
195] Report, after debate April 6, 222 (No. 41)
Read 3ª * April 8
c. Read 1° * April 12 [Bill 73]
Read 2° * July 26
198] Committee—R.P. August 4, 1273
. Committee ; Report August 5, 1368 [Bill 264]
Considered * August 6
Read 3° * August 6
. l. Commons Amendts. August 9, 1469 ; after short debate, Commons Amendts. agreed to
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 99]

Hackney and Stage Carriages Law Amendment Bill
(Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * July 20 [Bill 227]
Read 2° * July 29
Committee * ; Report July 31
Considered * August 2
Read 3° * August 3
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Morley) August 4 (No. 266)
Read 2ª * August 5
Committee * August 6
Report * August 7
Read 3ª * August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 115]

HADFIELD, Mr. G., Sheffield
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 527
Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1306, 1313
British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1128
Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 874
Endowed Schools, Leave, [194] 117
Habitual Criminals, Comm. [198] 1273
Imprisonment for Debt, Consid. cl. 5, [197] 762
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 116 ; Lords Amendts. [198] 44

[cont.

HADFIELD, Mr. G.—cont.
Museums, &c., Opening of, on Sundays, [196] 1493
O'Sullivan's Disability, 2R. [196] 584
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 88
  Easter Recess, [194] 955
Parliament — Private Bills — Railway Bills, Res. [194] 105
Post Office—American Mail Contracts, [194] 717
Real Estate Intestacy, Leave, [194] 967
Revision of the Statutes, [194] 1653; Res. [196] 1244
Trades Unions, Funds of, [194] 112

HALIFAX, Viscount
Ecclesiastical Dilapidations, 2R. [195] 1820
Government of India Act Amendment, 1R. [195] 1083; 2R. 1843; Report, [196] 693
India—Railways—Financial Statement, [198] 536
Ireland—Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, [196] 1091
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 28, [197] 1044; Commons Amendts. [198] 275, 276, 430
Life Peerages, Comm. cl. 1, [196] 1197
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Report, [196] 1286

HAMBRO, Mr. C. J. T., Weymouth, &c.
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 18, [196] 847
Velocipedes and Post Office Service, [196] 745

HAMILTON, Marquess of, Donegal Co.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 44, Amendt. [196] 349

HAMILTON, Right Hon. Lord C., Tyrone Co.
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 573
Ireland—Lunatics, [198] 683
  Sligo Election, [195] 973
  State of, [195] 2003, 2008, 2013
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1973; Comm. cl. 12, [195] 1116; cl. 15, 1403; cl. 26, 1628; cl. 29, 1930; cl. 30, [196] 22; cl. 39, 318, 347; cl. 59, 416, 417; add. cl. 423
Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland), 2R. [197] 498
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 554
Murphy, Mr. Arrest of, Res. [198] 621
Parliament—Business of the House, Morning Sittings, Res. [195] 1975
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1501, 1510
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 671
Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 336
Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 805
Supply—Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1444

HAMILTON, Lord G. F., Middlesex
Army Estimates—Military Stores, [195] 668
Hounslow, Explosion at, [197] 1169
Ireland—Londonderry, Riots in, [196] 390
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 2054; Comm. cl. 36, [196] 70
Kew Gardens, [197] 124
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 553

HAMILTON, Mr. E. W. T., Salisbury
British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1124
India—Accounts, [195] 1578
Post Office—Mail Contracts, Res. [196] 1159

Harbour of Galle Loan Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Stansfeld)
c. Resolution in Committee July 29
Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1°* July 30 [Bill 250]
Read 2°* August 2
Committee*; Report August 3
Read 3°* August 4
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 5 (No. 268)
Read 2ª* August 6
Committee*; Report August 7
Read 3ª* August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 105]

Harbours of Refuge—Commission of 1859
Question, Mr. Bourke; Answer Mr. Bright Feb 23, [194] 200

HARCOURT, Mr. W. Vernon, Oxford City
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [197] 360, 379, 384, 392; cl. 4, Amendt. 519, 520, 528; cl. 5, 532; add. cl. 534, 535; Consid. add. cl. 1083
Election Petitions, Judgments on, [194] 408, 759
Evidence Amendment, 2R. [195] 1812
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1373, 1384; cl. 15, 1394, 1400; cl. 29, 1895; Lords Amendts. [197] 1984
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 198
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [197] 130
Parliament — House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 289
Registration of Voters, Motion for a Committee, [194] 970; [197] 1887
Vacating of Seats, Leave, [194] 212
Witnesses (House of Commons), Motion for a Committee, [196] 623

HARDCASTLE, Mr. J. A., Bury St. Edmunds
Emigration Commission, [195] 579
Navy—"Will-of-the-Wisp" Journal, [194] 208
Parliament—Easter Recess, [194] 157
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1491, 1496
Post Office — North German Confederation, [195] 1584

HARDINGE, Viscount
Governor General of India, 2R. [194] 1077
Militia, Comm. [195] 1843
National Gallery, Purchases for the, [198] 664

HARDWICKE, Earl of
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 28, [197] 1052
Naval Stores, 2R. [195] 673
Navy—Armament of Turret Ships, [195] 350

Hardy, Right Hon. Gathorne, Oxford University
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), 2R. [197] 861
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [197] 318
Coventry Election, Motion for a Committee, [197] 1332
Criminal Law—Liberation of Sir E. C. Eardley, [195] 1202
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 581
Endowed Schools, Leave, [194] 116, 955 ; 2R. 1390
Habitual Criminals, Comm. [198] 1265 ; cl. 4, 1273 ; cl. 6, 1277 ; cl. 9, Amendt. 1278
Ireland — Fenian Convicts, Pardon of, [194] 161
Fereal, Union of, [196] 1205
State of, [195] 2049
Ireland—Dublin Election, [194] 1542 ; Motion for a Commission, [195] 1272, 1277, 1281, 1283
194] * Irish Church, 2R. 2066, 2088, 2111
195] Comm. cl. 3, 1099, 1100 ; cl. 10, Amendt. 1100, 1104, 1105 ; cl. 12, Amendt. 1109, 1111 ; cl. 13, 1135 ; Amendt. 1136 ; cl. 14, Amendt. 1137, 1156 ; cl. 17, 1411 ; cl. 20, 1501 ; cl. 22, 1511 ; cl. 25, 1599, 1604, 1605 ; Amendt. 1613, 1614, 1617 ; cl. 27, 1647 ; cl. 29, Amendt. 1922, 1927
196] cl. 59, 403 ; Consid. 765
197] Lords Amendts. 1941, 1946, 1948, 1949, 1961, 1977, 1978 ; [198] 111
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, Leave, [194] 1535 ; 2R. [196] 963, 1351
Norwich Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 14
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 237
Parliament — Business of the House, [194] 1093
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Motion for a Committee, [194] 659
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 1102 ; cl. 24, Motion for reporting Progress, 1243
Rateable Property (Metropolis), Leave, [194] 179
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), Leave, [194] 1544, 1545
Shrievalties of Yorkshire and Lancashire, [194] 411
University Tests, 2R. [194] 1451, 1452 ; Comm. cl. 3, [197] 790 ; cl. 6, 794

Hardy, Mr. J., Warwickshire, S.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 18, [195] 1484 ; cl. 59, [196] 419

Hardy, Mr. J. Stewart, Rye
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 27, [195] 1873
Navy—Coastguard, [194] 628
Undue Influence and Bribery, [196] 1497

Harrowby, Earl of
Bright, Mr., Letter of, [197] 15
Ecclesiastical Courts, 2R. [195] 838
Education, Public, [194] 822
Endowed Schools, 2R. [197] 619 ; Comm. cl. 15, 1881 ; cl. 30, 1884
Habitual Criminals, 1R. [194] 349 ; Comm. cl. 10, 1336 ; cl. 12, [195] 229
Ireland —State of, [195] 1966

cont.

Harrowby, Earl of—cont.
Irish Church, 2R. Amendt. [196] 1666 ; Comm. cl. 14, [197] 911 ; cl. 41, 1162 ; Report, 1491, 1495, 1521 ; 3R. 1644 ; Commons Amendts. [198] 432
Life Peerages, Comm. cl. 1, [196] 1199 ; Report, 1390
Married Women's Property, 2R. [198] 986

Hartington, Right Hon. Marquess of (Postmaster General), New Radnor
Electric Telegraphs, [194] 1788 ; [195] 845 ; Comm. [197] 1214, 1225
Post Office—Questions, &c.
Book Post, &c. [194] 1895
Communication with South Wales, [195] 1582
Life Assurances, [194] 1188
Mails to the United States, [194] 1464, 1465
Money Orders, [196] 14
Newspapers, Postage on, [194] 1188
New York Mails, [195] 1583
North German Confederation, [195] 1585
Services in Wales, [196] 1295
Stornoway, [194] 1901
Submarine Telegraph Cables, [198] 154
Velocipedes and Post Office Service, [196] 745
West India Mails, [195] 575, 842 ; [196] 15
Post Office—Inland Postage, Res. [195] 246
Post Office—Mail Contracts, [194] 716, 717 ; Motion for a Committee, 1287 ; Res. [196] 1148, 1159
Post Office—Packet and Telegraph Contracts, Res. [197] 1818
Supply—Post Office, [198] 1000, 1001
Telegraph, Comm. [198] 759 ; cl. 3, 765 ; cl. 4, Amendt. ib. ; cl. 5, 771 ; cl. 12, Amendt. 771, 772 ; cl. 20, 772 ; cl. 24, ib. ; Consid. 976, 977, 978

Hatherley, Lord (see Chancellor, The Lord)

Hay, Lord J. (Lord of the Admiralty), Ripon
Navy Estimates—Victualling Yards, &c. [195] 182

Hay, Rear-Admiral Sir J. C. D., Stamford
Agricultural Labour Commission, [194] 484
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1173
Army—Fortifications, &c. [196] 1572
Canada—Reduction of Forces, [196] 747
Cuba—Capture of an American Ship in British Colonial Waters, [196] 105
Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. [198] 231
Greenwich Hospital, Comm. Amendt. [197] 563
Ireland—Inflammatory Speeches, [194] 1349, 1351
"Marquess of Abercorn," Loss of the, [196] 1897
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [198] 361 ; Motion for Adjournment, 362
Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Leave, [198] 1513

[cont.

HAY, Rear-Admiral Sir J. C. D.—cont.
Navy—Questions, &c.
Admiralty Contractors, [198] 897, 898
Flying Squadron, The, [197] 309
Fresh Water for the Fleet, [198] 892
"Inconstant," The, [196] 262
Naval Contracts, [198] 640
Navy Estimates—Coastguard Service, [195] 91, 94
Half Pay, [195] 216
Men and Boys, [194] 896
New Works, [195] 212
Salaries, [195] 73, 82
Victualling Yards, &c. [195] 184
Parliament—Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 194
Rule of the Road at Sea, [194] 369; [195] 1465
Scotland—Portpatrick Harbour, [194] 1656; [195] 985
Supply—Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1473
Greenwich Hospital, [196] 1577
Ways and Means—Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 801

Hayti, Civil War in
Question, Mr. Dillwyn; Answer, Mr. Otway Mar 8, [194] 837

HEADLAM, Right Hon. T. E., Newcastle-upon-Tyne
Army—Military Labour, Res. [195] 657
Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1312
Contagious Diseases (Animals), Leave, [194] 92; 2R. Amendt. 1018
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 679; 2R. [195] 444; Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1271, 1277, 1291
Light Dues, Res. [196] 149, 183
Parliament—Morning Sittings, [195] 1978
Parliament—House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 258, 304, 1467
Parliament—Insufficient Accommodation of the House, Res. [197] 962
Sheep and Cattle, Foreign, Importation of, [194] 154
Spain—"Mermaid," Case of the, [194] 1659
Supply—Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1437
University Tests, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 789

HENDERSON, Mr. J., Durham (City)
Army—Retirement of Officers, [195] 1095
Durham County Courts, [195] 976
University Tests, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 789

HENLEY, Lord, Northampton Bo.
Agriculture, Department of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 504
Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1326; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 393; cl. 4, 531
Endowed Schools, Leave, [194] 116

HENLEY, Right Hon. J. W., Oxfordshire
Agricultural Labourers, Res, [197] 604
Assessed Rates, [195] 842; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 378, 379; Consid. 1087, 1088
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1413; cl. 130, [197] 316

[cont.

HENLEY, Right Hon. J. W.—cont.
Beerhouses, &c. 2R. [195] 1768
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [198] 1126
Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 875
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1811
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 681; Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1288; cl. 54, 1528; cl. 67, 1538, 1539; cl. 101, 1764
County Courts, 2R. [194] 1570
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1266
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 830; cl. 5, 844; cl. 8, 845; cl. 18, 846, 848; cl. 19, 852; cl. 24, 853; cl. 26, 854; cl. 36, 855
Dublin Freemen Commission, Leave, [197] 960; 2R. 1183
Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1249
Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland), Comm. [197] 161
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 9, [196] 1745, 1748; cl. (A) 12, 1762; cl. 15, 1767; Amendt. 1768; cl. 19, 1770, 1771; cl. 29, 1773, 1777; cl. 38, 1780; cl. 41, ib., 1782
Habitual Criminals, Comm. [198] 1270; cl. 4, 1274; cl. 6, 1276; cl. 7, 1277; cl. 11, 1280
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 425, 430; cl. 5, 577; cl. (D) 12, 579; cl. 18, 581
Ireland—O'Sullivan, Mr., Case of, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1168
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 20, [195] 1499; cl. 39, [196] 133, 134, 136, 139, 288; Consid. 765
Light Dues, Res. [196] 182
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Instruction, [197] 469; Comm. cl. 1, [198] 365
Married Women's Property, 2R. [195] 790
Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Leave, [198] 1515
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Consid. [198] 1131
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 630
Navy—Naval Contracts, [198] 650
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 228
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [197] 126
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 24, [198] 1382; cl. 44, 1391, 1393; Consid. 1452, 1456, 1459
Railway Companies, Liabilities of, [198] 1439
Railway Guards and Passengers Communication, [198] 1439
Real Estate Intestacy, Leave, [194] 969; 2R. [197] 1859
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1591
Roman Catholic Charities, Motion for Returns, [198] 1027
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1927
Special and Common Juries, 2R. [198] 401
Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 466
Supply—Royal Parks, &c. [197] 669
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 4, [198] 770
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1386
University Tests, Comm. [197] 772
Vacating of Seats, Leave, [194] 219
Valuation of Property (Metropolis), 2R. [195] 17
Ways and Means, Res. 1 (Corn, &c.), [195] 613; Res. 2 (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 791, 798, 799
Witnesses (House of Commons), Motion for a Committee, [196] 627

HENNIKER-MAJOR, Hon. J. M., Suffolk, E.
  Cattle Disease—Importation of Diseased Sheep, [195] 1697
  County Financial Boards, Leave, [196] 619
  Gladstone, Mr., and the Independent Orange Association, [197] 1890
  Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 250

HENRY, Mr. J. S., Lancashire, S. E.
  Ireland—Mayor of Cork, [194] 1999

HERBERT, Right Hon. Major-General Percy E., Shropshire, S.
  Army—Adjutancies of Militia, [197] 140
    Japan, Officers in, [198] 903
    Militia, [195] 667
  Army — Camping System, Major M'Gwire's, Motion for Papers, [198] 724
  Army—Military Labour, Res. [195] 658
  Army Estimates—Army Administration, [197] 147
    Land Forces, [194] 1168
  Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1385
  Militia, 3R. [195] 1532
  Ways and Means—Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 797; Amendt. 799

HERBERT, Mr. H. A., Kerry Co.
  Ireland—Ballyheigue, Affray at, [196] 1207
    Tralee Gaol, [196] 1630
  Irish Church, Comm. cl. 12, [195] 1114; cl. 18, 1415; cl. 32, Amendt. [196] 23; cl. 39, 279; Lords Amendts. [198] 63
  Metropolitan Railway — Palace Yard Station, [194] 1898
  Parliament—Ladies' Gallery, [197] 120, 121; Res. 1582, 1588; [198] 20

Heritable Rights Bill (The Lord Advocate, Mr. Solicitor General for Scotland)
c. Ordered; read 1° * July 9 [Bill 204]
  Read 2° * July 15
  Committee *; Report July 22 [Bill 234]
  Bill withdrawn * August 2

HERMON, Mr. E., Preston
  Bankruptcy, Leave, [194] 790; Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1415; cl. 91, Amendt. 1898; cl. 126, 1901
  Board of Trade Returns, [198] 705
  Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), 2R. [194] 774
  Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1252
  Preston Railway Station, [196] 1494
  Supply—Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1465
  Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 421; Res. 1, (Corn, &c.), [195] 593

HEYGATE, Sir F. W., Londonderry Co.
  Beverley Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 565
  Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. Amendt. [197] 1174

[cont.

HEYGATE, Sir F. W.—cont.
  Ireland—Questions, &c.
    Agrarian Crimes, [198] 839
    Education—Salaries of Teachers, [195] 1698
    Fenian Convicts, [194] 311
    Irish Church Funds, Surplus of, [198] 155
    Londonderry, Riots in, [195] 1848; [196] 749
    Polling Places, [194] 835
  Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 725
  Irish Church, Leave, [194] 469; 2R. 1825; Comm. cl. 12, [195] 1119; cl. 14, 1148, 1357; cl. 26, 1619; cl. 29, Amendt. 1927; cl. 32, [196] 33; cl. 36, 69; cl. 39, 286; cl. 59, Amendt. 410, 412, 419; add. cl. 425; Consid. 769, 770; 3R. 971, 1002; Lords Amendts. [197] 1982; [198] 30, 577
  Money Laws (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [197] 476
  O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 195
  Parliament—Insufficient Accommodation of the House, Res. [197] 963
  Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 1555
  Scotland—Portpatrick Harbour, [195] 360
  Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1928
  Supply—Education, Public, [198] 737

HIBBERT, Mr. J. T., Oldham
  Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1310, 1321; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 383, 393, 397
  Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 54, [196] 1596; cl. 59, 1599; cl. 130, [197] 327; add. cl. 418
  Beerhouses, &c. 2R. [195] 1781
  Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 867
  Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 67, [197] 1539; cl. 101, 1763; cl. 7, 1768
  County Financial Boards, Leave, [196] 616
  Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 574
  Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 29, [196] 1774
  Gibraltar Convict Prison, [194] 952
  Irish Church, Comm. cl. 32, [196] 53; cl. 59, 420
  Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 805
  Public Houses, &c. Res. [197] 458
  Representation of the People Act (1867) Amendment, Leave, [194] 512
  Savings Banks, [195] 1582
  Supply—Embassy Houses Abroad, Amendt. [197] 1466, 1468
    Home Office, &c. Departments, [197] 1481
    Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1444
    Public Works (Ireland), [197] 1462
  Ways and Means—Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 795; Amendt. 800

High Constables Office Abolition, &c. Bill (Mr. Hunt, Mr. Sclater-Booth, Mr. Staveley Hill)
c. Ordered; read 1° * June 10 [Bill 160]
  Read 2° * June 18
  Committee *; Report June 28 [Bill 182]
  Re-comm. *; Report July 5 [Bill 195]
  Considered * July 7
  Read 3° * July 8
l. Read 1ª * (The Duke of Buckingham and Chandos) July 9 (No. 99)
  Read 2ª * July 22
  Committee *; Report July 23
  Read 3ª * July 27
  Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 47]

HILL, Mr. A. Staveley, Coventry
Bankruptcy, 2R. [195] 164; Comm. cl. 7, [196] 1218; cl. 46, 1411; cl. 47, 1416
County Courts, 2R. [196] 687
Diplomatic Pensions, [196] 1589
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1405
Evidence Amendment, 2R. Amendt. [195] 1805
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 329
Imprisonment for Debt, 2R. [195] 174
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1281
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [195] 1038
Lord Lieutenant (Cumberland and Westmoreland), Motion for an Address, [195] 744
Married Women's Property, 2R. [195] 779
Parliament—Drogheda Writ, [194] 797
  Dublin City Writ, [197] 133
  Youghal Election, New Writ, [195] 2070
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 985
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), Leave, [194] 1545
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 24, [198] 772

HOARE, Sir H. A., Chelsea
Army Estimates—Yeomanry, Amendt. [196] 1575
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 376
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1734
Horses, Tax on, [195] 1097
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1797
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 5, [197] 574
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 12, [195] 1116; cl. 39, [196] 348
Metropolis—St. James' Park, [194] 410
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Consid. [198] 1133
Municipal Corporations (Metropolis), 2R. [196] 1953
Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1854
Representation of Minorities, [197] 124
Ways and Means—Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 797

HODGSON, Mr. W. N., Cumberland, E.
Lord Lieutenant (Cumberland and Westmoreland), Motion for an Address, [195] 745

HOLMS, Mr. J., Hackney
Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1313; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 377; Consid. 1084
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Comm. add. cl. [198] 1059

HOLT, Mr. J. M., Lancashire, N.E.
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 879; cl. 12, 1123; 3R. Amendt. [196] 971
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 610, 628

HOPE, Mr. A. J. Beresford, Cambridge University
Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1305; cl. 2, 1319; cl. 11, 1324
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1231
Endowed Schools, Leave, [194] 120; 2R. 1382; Comm. cl. 9, [196] 1744, 1747; cl. (A) 12, 1761; cl. 15, 1765, 1768; cl. 29, 1776; cl. 35, 1779; cl. 41, 1781

[cont.

HOPE, Mr. A. J. Beresford—cont.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 15, [195] 1390; cl. 19, 1491; cl. 22, 1509; cl. 25, 1616; Consid. [196] 777; Lords Amendts. [197] 1980
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [195] 1306; Comm. Instruction, Motion for Adjournment, [197] 467, 470; cl. 1, [198] 358; Motion for reporting Progress, 364
Married Women's Property, 2R. [195] 784; 3R. [198] 404
Metropolis—Thames Embankment, [194] 145
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 236
Parliament—Public Business—Orders of the Day, [198] 1092
  Rules of Debate, [194] 1468
Parliament—House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 275
Parliament — Insufficient Accommodation of the House, Res. [197] 964
Parliament—Ladies' Gallery, Res. [197] 1584
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 59, [198] 1444
Real Estate Intestacy, Leave, [194] 958; 2R. Amendt. [197] 1831
Supply—Chapter House, Westminster, [197] 1209
  Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1437
  Probate Court and Registries, [197] 1211
University Tests, 2R. [194] 1054; Motion for Adjournment, 1450, 1451; Comm. [197] 776

HOSKYNS, Mr. C. W., Hereford City
Agricultural Returns, Res. [197] 833
Army—Ordnance Survey, [197] 946

Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption Bill
(Mr. Wheelhouse, Sir Herbert Croft)
c. Ordered; read 1°* April 14 [Bill 81]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" April 28, [195] 1814; after short debate, Debate adjourned
Bill withdrawn* July 28

HOUGHTON, Lord
Government of India Act Amendment, 3R. [196] 1236
Governor General of India, 2R. [194] 1075
Habitual Criminals, 1R. [194] 346; 2R. 708; Comm. cl. 4, 1313; cl. 10, 1321, 1323
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 13, [197] 879; cl. 35, 1157; cl. 68, 1258; 3R. 1633
Life Peerages, Report, [196] 1379
Pauperism and Emigration, [195] 943, 955, 970
Sea Birds Preservation, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 79
Wiltes Peerage, Report, [196] 428

Hounslow Powder Mills, Explosion at Question, Viscount Enfield; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 24, [197] 515; Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 5, 1169

House Tax
Moved, "That the House Tax ought to be abolished because it imposes injurious and unnecessary restrictions upon the erection of dwellings for the Working Classes, and because the Tax presses very unequally upon

[cont.

House Tax—cont.
different classes of the community, and falls most heavily upon persons of moderate income" (Mr. Alderman W. Lawrence) July 13, [197] 1802 ; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Howard, Hon. C. G. W., Cumberland, E.
Lord Lieutenant (Cumberland and Westmoreland), Motion for an Address, [195] 728, 752

Howard, Mr. J., Bedford
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 446 ; Comm. cl. 54, [197] 1528 ; cl. 60, 1530 ; cl. 63, 1534
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1388 ; Comm. cl. 11, [196] 1751 ; cl. (A) 12, 1762 ; cl. 19, 1770
Patent Laws, [194] 356 ; [196] 909
Pollution of Rivers, [194] 202

Howes, Mr. E., Norfolk, S.E.
Norfolk Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 16
Ways and Means—Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), Amendt. [196] 803, 804

Hudson's Bay Company—Cession of Territory
Question, Sir Harry Verney ; Answer, Mr. Monsell Feb 25, [194] 309 ; Question, Lord Cairns ; Answer, Earl Granville Mar 8, 798 ; Question, Viscount Bury ; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 12, [195] 583 ; Question, Mr. Adderley ; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 13, 680 ; Question, Sir Stafford Northcote ; Answer, Mr. Monsell June 10, [196] 1497 ; Question, Sir Harry Verney ; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 9, [197] 1526

Hughes, Mr. T., Frome
Army—Whitworth Gun, [194] 1660
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1556
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1416 ; cl. 130, [197] 317
Inclosure of Lands, 3R. Motion for Adjournment, [195] 554
Natal—Green, Rev. Mr., Case of, [196] 467
Sunday Trading, 2R. [194] 557 ; Comm. [195] 799, 800, 802 ; cl. 1, [196] 1490
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1344

Hunt, Right Hon. G. W., Northamptonshire, N.
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [197] 325, 327, 328, 329
Canada—Railway Loan, Res. [197] 1448, 1454
Civil Service Pensions, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 873, 874 ; Amendt. 875 ; cl. 5, Amendt. 876
Clerks of Local Commissioners of Taxes, [196] 1207
Consolidated Fund (£17,100,000), 2R. [195] 1647
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1287, 1288 ; Amendt. 1289
County Financial Boards, Leave, [196] 614
Courts of Justice, New, [195] 1700
Customs and Inland Revenue, 2R. [196] 585 ; Comm. 812, 818 ; cl. 18, 849, 850
Electric Telegraphs, Comm. [197] 1223
[cont.

Hunt, Right Hon. G. W.—cont.
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 41, [196] 1782
Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866, [197] 1190
Ireland—Incumbered Estates Court—Earl of Lanesborough's Estate, [195] 521
Irish Church, Leave, [194] 469 ; Comm. cl. 18, [195] 1478, 1485 ; cl. 27, 1864 ; cl. 32, [196] 28 ; cl. 39, 282
Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 269
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 333
Parliament—Business of the House, [195] 846, 847
Dublin City Writ, [196] 1786 ; [197] 129
Parliament — Decoration of Central Hall, Motion for a Committee, [198] 718
Parliament — Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 196
Parliament—House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 282
Post Office—Inland Postage, Res. [195] 250
Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1298, 1305, 1306, 1307 ; Res. [196] 1155
Prosecutions, Cost of, [196] 811
Scotland—Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, Motion for a Return, [194] 1277
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1935
Supply—Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 646
Civil Service Estimates, Vote on Account, [195] 524, 532, 535
Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1436, 1441, 1442, 1444
Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 508, 510, 514
New Law Courts, [196] 1577
Report, [198] 516
Stationery Office, [197] 1700
Works, &c. [197] 1707
Telegraph and Railway Companies, [196] 1299
Telegraph, Comm. [198] 756; cl. 4, 766
Treasury Board, Constitution of the, [194] 853
Vagrancy, [195] 1096
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 400, 413, 414, 433 ; Res. 1, (Corn, &c.), 591, 595, 597, 599, 601, 602, 627 ; Res. 2, (Customs and Excise Duties), Amendt. [196] 782, 794, 795, 797, 799 ; Amendt. 803, 805, 806, 807

Hutt, Right Hon. Sir W., Gateshead
Navy — Slave Trade, West Coast of Africa, [194] 831

Hylton, Lord
Habitual Criminals, 2R. [194] 695 ; Comm. cl. 4, 1312

Hypothec Abolition (Scotland) Bill
(Mr. Carnegie, Mr. Fordyce, Mr. Craufurd)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Carnegie) Feb 18, [194] 112 ; Bill ordered, after short debate ; read 1° * [Bill 4]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" May 5, [196] 244
Amendt. to leave out from "That" and add "pending the consideration (by a Committee of the House of Lords) of the whole question of the Law of Hypothec as existing
[cont.

Hypothec Abolition (Scotland) Bill—cont.
both in Scotland and other countries, it is expedient to delay the further consideration of this Bill" (Lord Elcho); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Debate adjourned
Adjourned Debate [5th May] resumed July 21, [198] 368; after debate, Question put, and agreed to; main Question put; A. 127, N. 91; M. 36; Bill read 2°

Imperial Gas Bill (by Order)
c. Moved, "That the Bill be now taken into Consideration" April 28, [195] 1782
Amendt. to leave out "now taken into Consideration," and add "re-committed to the former Committee, with a view to the insertion of Clauses to make the Bill consistent with the provisions of 'The City of London Gas Act, 1868'" (Mr. Morrison); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn
Amendt. to leave out "now taken into Consideration," and add "re-committed to the former Committee, with an Instruction to consider the expediency of inserting Clauses to make the Bill consistent with the provisions of 'The City of London Gas Act, 1868'" (Mr. Ayrton); after further short debate, Question, "That the words, &c." put, and negatived; words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to

Imprisonment for Debt
Arrest of a Young Girl, Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 18, [194] 111; Feb 23, 209
Case of John Kenn, aged 85, Questions, Observations, Mr. Collins; Reply, Mr. Bruce Mar 5, [194] 768

Imprisonment for Debt Bill
(Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Mar 19 [Bill 61]
Bill read 2°, after short debate April 5, [195] 173
Committee*; Report April 26 [Bill 98]
Committee* (on re-comm.)—R.P. June 18
Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. June 22, [197] 421
Committee; Report June 25, 572 [Bill 179]
Considered June 29, 760
Read 3°* July 1
Lords Amendts. [Bill 252]
l. Read 1ª* (The Lord Chancellor) July 2
Read 2ª* July 8 (No. 168)
Order of the Day for the House to be put into Committee, read, and discharged; and Bill referred to the Select Committee on the Bankruptcy Bill July 16, [198] 18
Committee July 26, 681
Report* July 27 (No. 224)
Read 3ª* July 30
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 62]

Inam Lands Bill [H.L.]
(The Duke of Argyll)
l. Presented; read 1ª* June 22 (No. 143)
Read 2ª* June 24
Committee*; Report June 25
Read 3ª* June 28
c. Read 1°* July 1 [Bill 193]
Read 2°* July 2
Committee*; Report July 6
Read 3°* July 7
Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 29]

Inclosure Awards (County Palatine of Durham) Bill—Afterwards
Cursitor (County Palatine of Durham) Bill (Mr. Bentinck, Sir Roundell Palmer, Mr. William Lowther)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Mar 10 [Bill 44]
Read 2°, after short debate Mar 19, [194] 1894
Committee*; Report July 12 [Bill 210]
Committee* (on re-comm.); Report July 28
Considered* July 29
Read 3°* August 2
l. Read 1ª* (The Lord Chancellor) August 3
Read 2ª* August 5 (No. 263)
Committee*; Report August 6
Read 3ª* August 7
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 84]

Inclosure of Lands Bill (Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Mar 1 [Bill 31]
Read 2°* Mar 5
Question, Mr. T. Chambers; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Mar 22, [194] 1905
Committee*; Report Mar 22
Considered* Mar 23
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3°" April 9, [195] 547
Amendt. to leave out from "Bill be," and add "re-committed, in order that from the proposed Inclosures some land may be reserved as allotments for the labouring poor, in accordance with the provision of the Act 8 & 9 Vic. c. 118, sections 30 to 34" (Mr. Fawcett); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" Debate adjourned
Question, Mr. Fawcett; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 13, 679
Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire whether the Inclosure Act 8 and 9 Vic. c. 118, requires amendment" (Mr. Fawcett) April 20, 1286
Amendt. to add the words "in respect to the provisions for places of public recreation, and for allotments for the labouring poor" (Mr. William Cowper); after short debate, Question, "That those words, &c." put, and agreed to; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to
And, on April 26, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. William Cowper (Chairman), Colonel Barttelot, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Thomas Chambers, Mr. Fawcett, Lord George Hamilton, Mr. Vernon Harcourt, Mr. Andrew Johnston, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Knight, Mr. Leveson-Gower, Mr. Liddell, Mr. William Lowther, Mr. Pease, Mr. Peek, Mr. Walsh, and Mr. Philip Wykeham-Martin

[cont.

Inclosure of Lands Bill—cont.
Report of Select Committee July 7 (Parl. P. No. 304)
Committee * (on re-comm)—R.P. July 19
Committee * (on re-comm); Report July 30
Considered * August 3
Read 3° * August 4
l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 5 (No. 270)
Read 2ª * August 6
Committee *; Report August 7
Read 3ª * August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. clix.]

Inclosure of Lands (No. 2) Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered; read 1° * June 3 [Bill 148]
Bill withdrawn * August 3

Income Tax
Moved, "That it is expedient to include in the Financial arrangements of the Government for the ensuing year the unconditional repeal of the Income Tax on trade profits and personal property of all kinds; and that any deficiency be raised by an increased tax on land and fixed property" (Mr. Whalley) Mar 16, [194] 1530; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Increase of the Episcopate Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Lyttelton)
l. Presented; read 1ª * Mar 18 (No. 34)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 22, [195] 1329
Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day three months") (The Lord Portman); after debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c.; Cont. 20, Not-Cont. 43; M. 23; resolved in the negative; List of Cont. and Not-Cont. 1351

INDIA
Affghanistan, Ameer of, Question, Mr. Beckett Denison; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 9, [194] 955
Appeals, Question, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff July 8, [197] 1423

Army
Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 16, [194] 1462; Question, Mr. O'Reilly; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 26, [195] 1580 (Parl. P. No. 298)
Barracks at Morar, Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff July 8, [197] 1418
Colonels in India, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Cardwell July 15, [197] 1888
Indian Field Officers, Retirement of, Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 1, [195] 1
Jhansi Prize Money, Question, Mr. T. Chambers; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 16, [194] 1466
Medal for Service in Umbeyla Campaign, Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 28, [197] 624; July 8, 1424

[cont.

INDIA—cont.
Medal to Troops in Bhootan, Question, Sir Robert Anstruther; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff August 3, [198] 1144
Military Appointments — Official Memoranda, Question, Mr. O'Reilly; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 18, [194] 1655
Relief of Regiments in India, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Captain Vivian July 8, [197] 1421

Bank of Bengal, Bombay Branch, Question, Mr. Nicol; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 12, [194] 1186; Question, Mr. G. Gregory; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 4, [196] 1237; Question, The Marquess of Salisbury; Answer, The Duke of Argyll June 24, [197] 513; Question, Mr. Gilpin; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff August 5, [198] 1295
Report of Commission . . . . [4162]
Bhore Ghaut, Recent Accident at the, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 2, [194] 485
Ceylon—Little Basses Light, Question, Mr. Candlish; Answer, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre July 23, [198] 563

Education
Civil Service — Age of Native Candidates, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 3, [196] 1208
Civil Service Examiners, Question, Sir Patrick O'Brien; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 8, [194] 841
Native Scholarships, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Feb 25, [194] 310

Fisheries — Irrigation Works, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 21, [197] 357
Correspondence—(Parl. P. No. 315)
Government, Seat of, Removal of the, Question, Mr. Dilke; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Feb 25, [194] 312
Kohat, Garrison of, Surprize of the, Question, Mr. Wyllie; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 2, [194] 488
Muscat and Zanzibar, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 26, [195] 1580

Native Princes
Maharajah of Mysore—Guardianship of, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 10, [196] 1495
Nawab of Jungera, Question, Mr. Eykyn; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 6, [195] 231
Nawab of Tonk, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Feb 25, [194] 310

Opium Cultivation, Questions, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answers, Mr. Grant Duff July 22, [198] 449
Overland Routes to China, &c., Question, Mr. Baines; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff July 27, [198] 799; Question, Observations, Mr. Baines; Reply, Mr. Grant Duff; debate thereon July 30, 1032 — Rangoon and Western China, Question, Colonel Gray; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 22, [195] 1356 — Red Sea Route to India, Observations, Sir James Elphinstone; Reply, Mr. Childers July 26, [198] 706

[cont.

INDIA—cont.

Punjaub Tenancy Act, Question, Sir Charles Wingfield; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Mar 11, [194] 1085; May 13, [196] 748; Question, Mr. C. Denison; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 11, 1591; August 3, [198] 1145

Railway Extension, Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff May 13, [196] 744; July 8, [197] 1424
(Parl. P. [4190], 351, 412)

Railways—Eastern Bengal, Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff July 27, [198] 797

Railways (India)—Financial Statement, Correspondence with the Government of India respecting Railways (India) [No. 219]; also, Report on Railways (India) for the year 1868-9—Presented (by command) (The Duke of Argyll); long debate thereon July 23, [198] 521

Revenue and Finance

Auditor General of Accounts, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 21, [197] 357

Budget, The Indian, Question, Mr. J. B. Smith; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff Feb 23, [194] 201

East India (Home Accounts), Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff June 17, [197] 118

Home Charges, Question, Mr. E. T. Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 26, [195] 1578

Moved, "That the Home Accounts of the Government of India [presented 10th May], be referred to the Committee of Public Accounts" (Sir Stafford Northcote) July 6, [197] 1329; after short debate, Motion agreed to Finance—Bills drawn on India, Question, Mr. Mitchell; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 9, [195] 478

Revenues of India—Authority of the Secretary of State, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff May 3, [196] 16
(See East India Revenue Accounts)

Parl. Papers—
Annual Accounts 205
Home Accounts 206

Telegraphic Communication, Question, Mr. Crawford; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff August 9, [198] 1490
Convention—Parl. P. . . . . [4101]

India—Weights and Measures

Motion for Address for Copy of despatch from the Government of India to the Secretary of State, of the 6th November 1868, relating to Weights and Measures for India [and other Papers] (The Earl Fortescue) July 27, [198] 795; after short debate, Motion agreed to

Industrial Schools (Great Britain) Bill [H.L.] (The Marquess Townshend)

l. Presented; read 1ª* April 20 (No. 64)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" May 7, [196] 357; after short debate, Bill withdrawn

Infant Life Preservation Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess Townshend)

l. Presented; read 1ª* April 29 (No. 89)
Bill withdrawn July 13, [197] 1739

Insolvent Debtors Court, &c. Bill
Afterwards—
Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal Bill
(Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General)

c. Bill ordered * May 11
Read 1º* May 28 [Bill 134]
Read 2º* June 18
Committee *; Report June 25 [Bill 180]
Re-comm.; Report July 9, [197] 1527
Considered * July 12
Read 3º* July 13
l. Read 1ª* (The Lord Chancellor) July 15
Read 2ª* July 29 (No. 195)
Committee * July 30 (No. 241)
Report * August 2
Read 3ª* August 3
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 83]

Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal [Re-payment of Unclaimed Dividends]

Resolution reported July 9, [197] 1526; after short debate, Resolution agreed to

IRELAND

Ancient Monuments—Preservation of, Question, Mr. Agar-Ellis; Answer, Mr. Layard April 19, [195] 1098

Area of Rating, Question, Mr. M'Mahon; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 18, [194] 111

Cardinal Cullen and the Privy Council of Ireland, Question, Sir Thomas Bateson; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 2, [194] 483

Church in Ireland—Union of Fercal, Question, Mr. Gathorne Hardy; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 3, [196] 1205
(See title Irish Church Bill)

Coronation Oath, Question, Observations, Lord Redesdale; Reply, Earl Granville April 19, [195] 1059; Question, Mr. White; Answer, The Attorney General July 29, [198] 893; Question, Observations, Mr. Charley; Reply, The Attorney General July 22, 906

Dublin and Belfast Waterworks Commission, Loans to, Question, Mr. W. Johnston; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 17, [197] 125

Dublin City Election—(See that Title)

Dublin, Hackney Carriages in, Question, Mr. Vance; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 12, [195] 583

Dublin—Lord Mayor of, Question, Mr. Wingfield Verner; Answer, The Attorney General for Ireland May 13, [196] 746

Education

National Education—Report of Royal Commission, Question, Mr. Keown; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 22, [194] 1898

Salaries of Teachers under the National Board, Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 27, [195] 1698

[cont.

Ireland—cont.

Trinity College (Dublin), Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, those who are not members of the Established Church cannot be placed in a position of equality with regard to University Education in Ireland until all the Fellowships and Scholarships of Trinity College, Dublin, are freed from all religious disabilities" (Mr. Fawcett) August 3, [198] 1197; after debate, Motion withdrawn

Parl. Papers—
Thirty-fifth Report P. P. . . . [4193]
Science and Art Department . . [4103]
Schools, Monastic Institutions . . 194
Report for 1868-9 326

Election and Municipal Law

Election Petitions, Reports of the Judges, Question, Viscount St. Lawrence; Answer, The Attorney General for Ireland April 19, [195] 1096 [See the several Boroughs]

Municipal Franchise, Question, Mr. M'Clure; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 12, [194] 1185

Polling Places, Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 8, [194] 835

Registration (Ireland) Act—Clerks of Unions and Town Clerks, Question, Sir Hervey Bruce; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Mar 8, [194] 839

Representation of Ireland—Re-distribution of Seats, Observations, Mr. Raikes, Mr. M'Mahon; Reply, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 26, [194] 357

Fisheries

Fisheries, Inspectors and Commissioners of, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, The Attorney General for Ireland Mar 8, [194] 830; Mar 11, 1084; Question, Mr. Dodds; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 8, [195] 358; Question, Mr. Blake; Answer, Mr. Ayrton June 25, [197] 571

Fishing Smacks, Seizure of, Question, Mr. Blake; Answer, Mr. Ayrton; short debate thereon July 1, [197] 948

Salmon Passes on the Shannon, Question, Mr. W. Ormsby Gore; Answer, Mr. Ayrton May 13, [196] 743; Question, Colonel French; Answer, Mr. Ayrton June 28, [197] 648

Scotch and Irish Fisheries, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Mr. Childers July 29, [198] 893

Parl. Papers—
Report of Commissioners, 1868 . [4164]
Report of Inspectors, 1868 . . . [4177]
Papers 216
Correspondence 373

General Valuation, &c. (Ireland), Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into the constitution and management of the department of the general Valuation of Ireland, the cost of the Townland and Tenement Valuation, and all matters connected with the annual revision thereof" (Colonel French) Mar 3, [194] 587

[cont.

Ireland—cont.

And, on April 5, Committee nominated as follows:—Colonel French (Chairman), Mr. Attorney General for Ireland, Mr. Ayrton, Viscount Crichton, Mr. Fitzwilliam Dick, Mr. M'Carthy Downing, Colonel Forde, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Colonel Greville, Mr. H. A. Herbert, Sir Frederick W. Heygate, Mr. Hunt, Mr. George H. Moore, The O'Conor Don, Mr. Pollard-Urquhart, Mr. Stacpoole, and Colonel Taylor

Report of Select Committee July 27 (Parl. P. No. 362)

Gladstone, Mr., and the Independent Orange Association, Question, Mr. Henniker-Major; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 15, [197] 1890

Government, Policy of the, Observations, Question, The Marquess of Salisbury; Reply, Earl Granville; debate thereon May 7, [196] 357; Question, Observations, Earl Russell; Reply, Earl Granville; long debate thereon May 13, 707

Howth Harbour, Question, Mr. Blake; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 1, [197] 947

Incumbered Estates Court — Earl of Lanesborough's Estate, Question, Captain Archdall; Answer, The Attorney General for Ireland; short debate thereon April 9, [195] 518

Irish Militia, Training of the, Questions, Colonel French, Colonel Forde; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 19, [194] 125

Landlord and Tenant, Law of, Questions, Mr. Downing, Mr. Blake; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Gladstone Feb 26, [194] 353

Law and Police

Bankruptcy Law, Question, Mr. Fitzwilliam Dick; Answer, The Attorney General for Ireland Mar 15, [194] 1355

Civil Bills, Law of, Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 8, [194] 835

Clerk of the Crown for King's County, Questions, Sir Patrick O'Brien; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 8, [197] 1421

Grand Jury Laws, Revision of, Question, Mr. Dawson; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 22, [194] 156

Jury Panel, Monaghan Assizes, Observations, Mr. Downing; Reply, The Attorney General for Ireland April 9, [195] 497; July 7, [197] 1343

Licensing of Beerhouses, Question, Mr. Kavanagh; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 6, [195] 308

Prisons—County and Convict, Question, Mr. Vance; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 29, [195] 1855

State of Ireland

State of Ireland, Question, Observations, The Marquess of Bath; Reply, Earl Granville; long debate thereon April 30, [195] 1954; Observations, Mr. Graves; Reply, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, 1982

Agrarian Outrages, Postponement of Question (Viscount Lismore); short debate thereon April 26, [195] 1533; Question, Lord John Manners; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

April 29, 1850; Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 28, [198] 839: Returns—(P.P. No. 266)

Assassinations in Ireland, Question, Observations, The Marquess of Clanricarde; Reply, Lord Dufferin; debate thereon Mar 18, [194] 1618; Question, Observations, Viscount Lifford; Reply, Earl Granville; short debate thereon April 30, [195] 1948

Anketell, Mr., Murder of, Question, Mr. Wingfield Verner; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 11, [194] 1091; Observations, Mr. Pollard-Urquhart; Reply, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 18, [197] 351
(Parl. P. No. 215)

Ballycohey, The Murders at, Address for, Copies of the correspondence between the Irish Government and the stipendiary magistrate of Tipperary upon the aid to be given to the landlord of Ballycohey to enable him to serve certain notices upon his tenants, and upon the subsequent placing and the speedy withdrawal of extra police upon the townland of Ballycohey; [and other Returns] (The Marquess of Clanricarde) Mar 8, [194] 946; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Ballyheigue—Affray at, Question, Mr. Herbert; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 3, [196] 1207

Dundalk and Louth, Proclamation of, Question, Mr. Callan; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 12, [197] 1666

Protection of Life, Question, Lord John Manners; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 10, [196] 470

Rates on Disturbed Districts, Question, Colonel Wilson-Patten; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 3, [196] 20

Tarleton, Murder of Captain, Question, Captain Archdall; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 29, [195] 1849

Tipperary, Extra Police in, Question, Mr. Bagwell; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 13, [196] 744

Ulster, State of, Moved, "That there be laid before this House, Copies of Reports of the Stipendiary Magistrates relating to the state of Ulster on the 12th day of July 1869" (Mr. William Johnston) July 20, [198] 352; after short debate, Question put, and negatived—In Caledon, on 12th of July, Question, Mr. W. Verner; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 22, [198] 448

Fenian Conspiracy, The

Banquet at Cork—Speeches of the Mayor, Question, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 18, [194] 1661; Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 23, 1997—Mayor of Cork, Question, Mr. Maguire; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 8, [195] 359
(See title—O'Sullivan's Disability Bill—
(Municipal Magistrates, Removal of)

Fenian Convict Mackey, Questions, Sir Thomas Bateson, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 9, [194] 953
[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

Fenian Convict O'Donovan Rossa, Question, Sir John Gray; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 4, [196] 1238; Observations, Mr. G. H. Moore; Reply, Mr. Bruce; short debate thereon August 6, [198] 1422

Fenian Convicts in Australia, Released, Observations, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 23, [194] 209; Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 25, 311; Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 8, [195] 356

Fenian Prisoners—Released, Question, Notice withdrawn (The Marquess of Clanricarde) April 13, [195] 671

Fenian Convicts, Pardon of, Questions, The O'Conor Don, Mr. Gathorne Hardy; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 22, [194] 159; Question, Colonel Annesley; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 18, 1659; Mar 22, 1904
Returns—(Parl. P. Nos. 72, 125)

Firearms, Use of, by the Irish Constabulary, Question, Mr. Vance; Answer, Mr. C. Fortescue July 12, [197] 1668
General Instructions—Parl. P. No. 388

Limerick, Inflammatory Speeches at, Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 15, [194] 1349; Question, Mr. Henry; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 23, 1999

Smith, Arrest of, a Fenian, Question, Colonel Annesley; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 18, [194] 1659; Mar 22, 1904

Londonderry, Riots in, Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 29, [195] 1848—Proclamation of the City, Question, Mr. Serjeant Dowse; Answer, 196] Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 3, 20; Question, Mr. W. Johnston; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 4, 102; Question, Sir Hervey Bruce; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 4, 104; May 6, 263; Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 7, 390; Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 13, 749; Question, Sir Hervey Bruce; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 12, [197] 1667

Lord Lieutenant, Rumoured Resignation of the, Question, Mr. Vance; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 23, [194] 2003

Lunatic Asylums—Report of Inspectors, Question, Lord Claud Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 26, [198] 683
18th Report P. P. [4181]

Maynooth, College of, Returns, Question, Mr. Newdegate; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 11, [194] 1091; Question, Mr. Sinclair Aytoun; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 16, 1465; Observations, Mr. Newdegate; Reply, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Ayrton April 2, [195] 49; Questions, Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Pemberton; Answers, Mr. Gladstone April 8, 360 — Visitation, Question, Mr. Newdegate; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 13, 680

Returns—(Parl. P. Nos. 102, 117)
(See title Irish Church Bill)

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

Party Processions (Ireland) Act—The 12th July, Question, Sir John Gray ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 21, [197] 359 ; Question, Sir Thomas Bateson ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 5, 1172 ; Question, Mr. Downing ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue ; short debate thereon July 9, 1588

Police (Ireland), Observations, The Marquess of Clanricarde ; Reply, Lord Dufferin July 26, [198] 665

Poor Law—Medical and Educational Charges, Question, Mr. Gregory ; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Feb 25, [194] 303 ; Question, Mr. Gregory ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 16, 1466

Portadown, Riots at, Questions, Mr. W. Verner, Mr. Vance, Sir James Stronge ; Answers, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 5, [197] 1170 ; Question, Sir Thomas Bateson ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 12, 1665—Inquest, Observations, The Duke of Manchester ; Reply, Lord Dufferin July 13, 1737 ; July 19, [198] 123

Press Prosecutions—Case of Mr. O'Sullivan, Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed "to inquire into the treatment of political prisoners, particularly of those who may be untried ; and of those who, under exceptional circumstances, may be detained in custody, without any special charge having been preferred against them" (Mr. George Moore) June 1, [196] 1160 ; after short debate, Question put, A. 20, N. 84 ; M. 64

Railways, Purchase of, Question, Mr. W. Ormsby Gore ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 26, [195] 1577
Second Report—Parl. P. . . [4086]

Religious Disturbances in Leitrim, Question, The Duke of Abercorn ; Answer, Earl Spencer July 6, [197] 1226

Roscommon and Galway Lunatic Asylum, Question, Colonel French ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 18, [197] 313

St. Patrick's Day in Dublin, Question, Mr. R. Fowler ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 6, [195] 230

Seditious Language in the Queen's Colleges of Galway and Belfast, Question, Mr. Dawson ; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 24, [197] 517

Stationery Office, Question, Mr. Bagwell ; Answer, Mr. Ayrton May 11, [196] 573

Tralee Gaol, Question, Mr. O'Reilly ; Answers, Mr. H. A. Herbert, Mr. Chichester Fortescue June 11, [196] 1629

Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant—Appointment of Sir E. R. Wetherall, Question, Observations, Colonel Greville-Nugent ; Reply, Mr. Chichester Fortescue ; short debate thereon Mar 5, [194] 744 ; Question, Observations, The Earl of Longford ; Reply, Earl Granville ; short debate thereon June 1, [196] 1085

Ireland—The Irish Society

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that She will be graciously pleased to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the manner in which the Irish Society administer the property which, according to their own admission in their law suit with the Skinners' Company, they hold as trustees for the benefit of their trust ; and to consider whether, under a totally different state of circumstances from those in which the Society had their origin, it would not be advisable to carry into effect the recommendation of the Royal Commission of 1854 on the Corporation of London, that the Irish Society should be abolished ; and to advise such other arrangements as would be most in harmony with existing circumstances, and most conducive to the public advantage" (Mr. Maguire) April 13, [195] 680 ; after long debate, Motion withdrawn

Irish Church Bill

LORDS—

Question, Observations, Lord Bateman ; Reply, Earl Granville ; short debate thereon June 11, [196] 1578

Appropriation of Property, Moved, That there be laid before this House, a Return of all Acts of Parliament whereby property belonging to any person, corporation, or trust has been taken from such person, corporation, or trust without their consent, and without securing to them full compensation for the property so taken, or without offence being charged against such person, corporation, trust or justifying such confiscation (The Lord Redesdale) Mar 5, [194] 684
Amendt. to leave out from ("consent") and insert ("together with the reasons stated in such Acts for the appropriation of such property") (The Earl Granville) ; after short debate, Amendt. and original Motion withdrawn

Bishops of Protestant Churches—Ecclesiastical Titles Act, Question, Lord Colchester ; Answer, Earl Granville June 7, [196] 1280 ; Question, Mr. MacEvoy ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 5, [197] 1169

Bright, Mr., Letter of, Notice, Lord Cairns June 15, [196] 1794 ; Question, Lord Cairns ; Answer, Earl Granville June 17, [197] 1

Coronation Oath, Question, Observations, Lord Redesdale ; Reply, Earl Granville April 19, [195] 1059 ; Question, Mr. White ; Answer, The Attorney General July 29, [198] 893 ; Question, Observations, Mr. Charley ; Reply, The Attorney General July 29, 906

Petitions from Archdeaconry of Exeter, Observations, The Earl of Devon June 7, [196] 1279 ; Observations, The Duke of Abercorn—from Belfast June 11, 1581

Tithe Rent-Charges (Ireland), Motion for, "Return of all the tithe rent-charges sold in the Encumbered and the Landed Estates Courts, Ireland, specifying in each case, 1. Date of Sale : 2. Amount of rent-charge : 3. Whence accruing : 4. Price for which sold : 5. How many times the amount of each rent-charge the price is equal to" (The Earl of Limerick) Mar 11, [194] 1081 ; after short debate, Motion agreed to Motion for Returns (The Marquess of Clanricarde) April 9, [195] 450 ; after short debate, Motion amended, and agreed to
(Parl. P. No. 47)

Irish Church Bill—cont.

COMMONS—

Church Property — Archbishop Bramhall's Fund, Question, Mr. Mellor; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 16, [194] 1461

Borrowing Powers of Limited Owners, Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 22, [195] 1357

Church Property—Ecclesiastical Residences—Private Endowments, Question, Mr. Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 15, [194] 1351

Church Property, Appropriation of— The Presbyterian Church—Maynooth, Question, Mr. Corrance; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 11, [194] 1087

Endowments, Amount of, Question, Sir Stafford Northcote; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 8, [194] 839

Surplus of the Irish Church Funds—Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 19, [198] 155

Church of England—Prelates of the Irish Church—Ecclesiastical Titles Act, Question, Mr. MacEvoy; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 6, [196] 261

Episcopal Clergy, Disability to sit in Parliament, Question, Lord Henry Thynne; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 23, [195] 1466

Disability of the Roman Catholic Clergy, Question, Mr. Dixon; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 13, [196] 746

Relation of the Irish Clergy to the Church of England, Question, Mr. Collins; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 20, [195] 1198

Church Leaseholds, Question, Sir Lawrence Palk; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 19, [195] 1096

Church Leases, Purchase of, in Perpetuity, Question, Dr. Ball; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue April 19, [195] 1095

Impropriate Tithe Rent-Charge, Question, Mr. Charley; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 30, [195] 1974

Bright, Mr., Letter of, Question, Colonel North; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 17, [197] 121

Maynooth, College of, Question, Mr. Corrance; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 11, [194] 1087; Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 18, 1658

Maynooth, Professors of, Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 13, [196] 748

Organists, Question, Mr. O'Reilly-Dease; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 20, [195] 1197

State Aid to Irish Nonconformists, Question, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue July 19, [198] 153

Valentia — The Living of, Question, Sir Thomas Bateson; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 12, [194] 482

Irish Church Bill—Church Temporalities Commissioners

Names, Question, Mr. Disraeli; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 8, [195] 356

[cont.

Irish Church Bill—cont.

Church Temporalities (Ireland) Commissioners [Advances], Considered in Committee April 23, [195] 1531; Resolved, That the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt be authorized to advance, with the consent of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, to the Commissioners of Church Temporalities in Ireland to be appointed by any Act passed in the present Session of Parliament "to put an end to the Establishment of the Church in Ireland, and to make provision in respect to the temporalities thereof, and in respect to the Royal College of Maynooth," such monies as the said Commissioners of Church Temporalities may require to raise for the purposes of the said Act; and that it is expedient to authorize the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to guarantee the repayment to the said Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt of any monies so advanced (Mr. Gladstone)

Resolution reported, and agreed to April 26

Irish Church Bill—Formerly Established Church (Ireland) Bill

(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. John Bright, Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Attorney General for Ireland)

194] c. Acts 39 and 40 Geo. 3, c. 67, 3 and 4 Will. 4, c. 37, 1 and 2 Vic. c. 109, 35 Geo. 3, c. 21 (Ireland), 40 Geo. 3, c. 85 (Ireland), 8 and 9 Vic. c. 25, and Resolution [7th May 1868] relative to the Established Church (Ireland) read; considered in Committee Mar 1, 412

Bill ordered, after debate; read 1°* [Bill 27]

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 18, 1662

Amendt. to leave out "now" and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Disraeli); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after long debate, Debate adjourned

Debate resumed Mar 19, 1791; after long debate, Debate further adjourned

Debate resumed Mar 22, 1906; after long debate, Debate further adjourned

Debate resumed Mar 23, 2004; after long debate, Question put; A. 368, N. 250; M. 118; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2°

Division List, Ayes and Noes, 2128

195] Notice of Amendments (Mr. Disraeli) April 12, 585

Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" (Mr. Gladstone) April 15, 847

Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House will, upon this day six months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Newdegate); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after long debate, Question put; A. 355, N. 229; M. 126

Division List, Ayes and Noes, 936

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c." put, and agreed to; Bill considered in Committee; Committee—R.P.

[cont.

Irish Church Bill—cont.
195] Committee April 16, 993
Clause 1 (Short Title)
Clause 2 (Dissolution of legislative union between Churches of England and Ireland); Committee—R.P.

. Committee April 19, 1099
Clause 3 (Appointment of commissioners)
. Clause 7 (Powers of commissioners), 1100
. Clause 10 (Prohibition of future appointments), 1100
. Clause 12 (Church property vested in commissioners under Act), 1109
. Clause 13 (Dissolution of ecclesiastical corporations, and cessation of right to sit in House of Lords), 1124
. Clause 14 (Compensation to ecclesiastical persons other than curates), 1137; Committee—R.P.

. Committee April 22, 1364
. Clause 14 (Compensation to ecclesiastical persons other than curates), 1364
. Clause 15 (Compensation to curates), 1386
. Clause 16 (Compensation to diocesan schoolmasters, clerks, and sextons), 1404
. Clause 17 (Compensation to organists, vergers, and others), 1410
. Clause 18 (Compensation to lay patrons), 1412; Committee—R.P.

. Committee April 23, 1473
. Clause 18 (Compensation to lay patrons), 1473
. Clause 19 (Repeal of laws prohibiting synods, &c.), 1488
. Clause 20 (Existing law to subsist by contract), 1495
. Clause 21 (Abolition of ecclesiastical courts and ecclesiastical law), 1506
. Clause 22 (Incorporation of church body), 1506
. Clause 23 (Redemption of annuities and life interest of ecclesiastical persons), 1518; Committee—R.P.

. Committee April 26, 1585
Clause 24 (Building charge to be paid on commutation of annuity)
. Clause 25 (Enactments with respect to churches), 1585
. Clause 26 (Enactments with respect to burial grounds), 1617
. Clause 27 (Enactments with respect to ecclesiastical residences), 1629; Committee—R.P

. Committee April 29, 1856
Clause 27 (Enactments with respect to ecclesiastical residences)
. Division List, Ayes and Noes, 1876
. Clause 28 (Power to convey additional land to church body), 1880
. Clause 29 (Enactments with respect to private endowments), 1881
. Division List, Ayes and Noes, 1923
Committee—R.P.

196] Committee May 3, 22
. Clause 30 (Enactments with respect to mixed endowments), 22
. Clause 31 (Limitations of right to purchase fee simple in consideration of perpetual rent), 23
. Clause 32 (Sale of tithe rent-charge to owners of land), 23

[cont.

Irish Church Bill—cont.
196] Clause 33 (Power of Commissioners to sell their property), 53
. Clause 36 (Compensation to nonconforming ministers), 66
. Clause 37 (Compensation in respect of salaries of professors and college buildings at Belfast), 73
. Clause 38 agreed to, 76; Committee—R.P.

. Committee May 4, 107
. Clause 39 (Repeal of Maynooth Acts. Compensation on the cessation of certain annual sums), 107; Committee—R.P.

. Committee May 6, 265
. Clause 39 (Repeal of Maynooth Acts. Compensation on the cessation of certain annual sums), 265; A. 318, N. 192; M. 126
. Division List, Ayes and Noes, 298
. Clauses 40 to 42 agreed to, 349
. Clause 43 (Compensation to Ecclesiastical Commissioners and their officers), 349
. Clause 44 (Compensation to vicars general and other officers by annuities equal to their average income for the three years ending 1st January, 1870), 349
Clauses 45 to 48 agreed to
. Clause 49 (Regulations as to payment of annuity), 349
. Clauses 50 and 51 agreed to, 350
. Clause 52 (Sales of lands, &c., may be made in Landed Estates Court), 350
. Clauses 53 to 57 agreed to, 350
. Clause 58 (Regulation as to vacancies), 350; Committee—R.P

. Committee May 7, 390
. Clause 58 (Regulation as to vacancies), 390
. Clause 59 (Ultimate trust of surplus), 395
. Clause 60 agreed to, 420
. Clause 61 (Saving rights as to proprietary chapels and chapels of ease), 420
. Clause 62 (Saving of Act of 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67), 421
. Clause 63 (Interpretation) amended, and agreed to, 421
. Clause 3 (Appointment of commissioners), 421
. Clauses 4 to 9 agreed to, 423
. New Clause (Accounts of capital and revenues), 423
Bill reported May 7 [Bill 112]

. Considered as amended May 13, 751
. New Clause (Moveable chattels belonging to see or Church), 751
. New Clause (Provision for the officers of Cathedral Churches in Ireland), 751
. New Clause (Compensation to ecclesiastical persons not otherwise provided for), 757
. New Clause (Annuities not to be forfeited because annuitants do not consent to alteration in articles of Church), 758
. New Clause (Benefices of Saint Mary, Saint Thomas, and Saint George, Dublin), 766
. New Clause (Commissioners may purchase surrender or assignment of lease), 767
. New Clause (Compensation to trustees of Armagh Observatory), 767

Re-comm. *; Report May 28

Considered * May 28 [Bill 123]

[cont.

Irish Church Bill—cont.
196] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3^o" May 31, 971
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Holt); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after long debate, Question put, A. 361, N. 247; M. 114
• Division List, Ayes and Noes, 1078
Main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 3^o, and passed

l. Read 1^a* (Earl Granville) June 1 (No. 109)
. Moved, That the last three paragraphs of Her Majesty's most gracious Speech be read (Earl Granville)—agreed to; and the said paragraphs accordingly read by the clerk June 14, 1637
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2^a"
Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months") (The Earl of Harrowby); after long debate, Debate adjourned

. Adjourned Debate June 15, 1794; after long debate, further Debate adjourned

197] Adjourned Debate June 17, 18; after long debate, further Debate adjourned
. Adjourned Debate June 18, 162; after long debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c.; Cont. 179, Not-Cont. 146; M. 33; resolved in the affirmative; Bill read 2^a
• Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont., 305
. Protest thereon (The Earl of Clancarty), 307

. Notice of Amendments, Observations, Earl Grey; Reply, Earl Granville; short debate thereon June 21, 352

. Moved, That the House do now resolve itself into a Committee upon the said Bill June 29, 686; after short debate, House in Committee
Title postponed
Then it was moved that the Preamble be postponed; which being objected to (The Earl Grey); resolved in the affirmative; Preamble postponed
. Clause 1 (Short title), 743
. Clause 2 (Dissolution of legislative union between churches of England and Ireland), 743
. Clause 3 (Appointment of commissioners), 753
. Clause 4 (Quorum of commissioners), 753
. Clause 5 (Appointment of officers), 753
. Clause 6 (Salaries and expenses), 753
. Clause 7 (Powers of commissioners), 755
. Clause 8 (Forms of application, and general rules), 759
. Clause 9 (Duration of office, and restriction on sitting in Parliament), 759
. Clause 10 (Prohibition of future appointments), 760

. Committee July 1, 869
. Clause 11 (Property of ecclesiastical commissioners vested in commissioners under Act), 869
. Clause 12 (Church property vested in commissioners under Act), 870
. Clause 13 (Dissolution of ecclesiastical corporations, and cessation of right to sit in House of Lords), 874
. Clause 14 (Compensation to ecclesiastical persons other than curates), 886

[cont.

Irish Church Bill—cont.
197] Clause 15 (Compensation to curates), 918
. Clause 16 (Compensation to diocesan schoolmasters, clerks, and sextons), 921
Clause 17 (Compensation to organists, vergers, and others)
. Clause 18 (Compensation to lay patrons), 923
Clauses 19 to 22 [Powers of Church after passing of Act] postponed
. Clause 23 (Redemption of annuities and life interest of ecclesiastical persons), 924

. Committee July 2, 996
. Clause 24 (Building charge to be paid on commutation of annuity), 996
. Clause 25 (Enactments with respect to churches), 997
. Clause 26 (Enactments with respect to burial-grounds), 998
. Clause 27 (Enactments with respect to ecclesiastical residences), 1000
. Clause 28 (Power to convey additional land to church body), 1024

. Committee July 5, 1108
. Clause 29 (Enactments with respect to private endowments), 1110
. Clause 30 (Enactments with respect to mixed endowments), 1154
. Clause 31 (Moveable chattels belonging to see or church), 1154
. Clause 32 (Limitation of right to purchase fee simple in consideration of perpetual rent), 1154
. Clause 33 (Sale of tithe rentcharge to owners of land), 1154
• Clause 34 (Commissioners may purchase surrender or assignment of lease), 1157
. Clause 35 (Power of commissioners to sell their property), 1157
. Clause 36 (Orders of commissioners operating as conveyance or mortgage to be liable to same stamp duty as conveyances or mortgages), 1158
. Clause 37 (Payment of money into bank), 1158
. Clause 38 (Accounts of capital and revenues), 1158
. Clause 39 (Compensation to nonconforming ministers), 1158
. Clause 40 (Commutation of annuities of nonconformist ministers and professors at Belfast), 1159
. Clause 41 (Repeal of Maynooth Acts. Compensation on the cessation of certain annual sums), 1159
. Clause 42 (Remission of debt to trustees of Maynooth), 1163
. Clause 43 (Regulations as to appeal), 1163
. Clause 44 (Possession to be given up of 24, Upper Merrion Street), 1163
. Clause 45 (Compensation to Ecclesiastical Commissioners and their officers), 1164
. Clause 46 (Compensation to vicars-general and other officers by annuities equal to their average income for the three years ending 1st January, 1869), 1164
. Clause 47 (Benefices of Kilcullen, Kildare, Saint Mary, Saint Thomas, and Saint George, Dublin), 1165
. Clause 48 (Delivery up of books by registrars), 1165
. Clauses 49 to 59 [Dealings with Property], 1165

[cont.

Irish Church Bill—cont.

197] Clauses 60 to 65 [Power of the Commissioners to raise Money], 1165
. Clause 66 (Rules as to arbitration), 1165
. Clause 67 (Regulation as to vacancies), 1165

. Committee July 6, 1228
. Clause 68 (Ultimate trust of surplus), 1228
. Clause 69 (Provision as to Acts relating to United Church of England and Ireland), 1260
. Clause 70 (Saving rights as to proprietary chapels and chapels of ease), 1261
. Clause 71 (Saving of Act of 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 67), 1261
. Clause 72 (Interpretation), 1261
. Clause 19 (Repeal of laws prohibiting holding of synods, &c.), 1261
. Clause 20 (Existing law to subsist by contract), 1267
. Clause 21 (Abolition of ecclesiastical courts and ecclesiastical law), 1267
. Clause 22 (Incorporation of church body), 1268,
. Preamble, as amended, agreed to ; Title read, and agreed to, 1268
As amended in Committee (No. 172)

. Amendments reported July 9, 1484
. Clause 2 (Dissolution of legislative union between Churches of England and Ireland), 1489
. Clause 10 (Prohibition of future appointments), 1489
. Clause 12 (Church property vested in Commissioners under Act), 1490
. Clause 69 (Ultimate trust of surplus), 1490
. Clause 13 (Dissolution of ecclesiastical corporations, and cessation of right to sit in House of Lords), 1493
. Clause 14 (Compensation to ecclesiastical persons other than curates), 1500
. Clause 21 (Existing law to subsist by contract), 1502
. Clause 27 (Enactments with respect to burial grounds), 1503
. Clause 28 (Enactments with respect to ecclesiastical residences), 1504
. Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont., 1513
. Clause 30 (Enactments with respect to private endowments), 1517 ; after long debate, Amendments made
As amended on Report (No. 182)

. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3ª" July 12, 1595
Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months") (The Earl of Clancarty) ; after debate, Amendt. withdrawn ; original Motion agreed to ; Bill read 3ª ; after further long debate, Amendments made
. Division Lists, Conts. and Not-Conts., 1623, 1657
On Question, That the Bill do pass ? objected to ; on Question, agreed to ; Bill passed, and sent to the Commons
Protests thereon—
. Against the Third Reading of the Bill, 1661
. Against the Passing of the Bill, 1662

.c. Lords Amendts. considered July 15, 1891 ; after long debate, further Consideration deferred [Bill 209]
[cont.

Irish Church Bill—cont.

198] Lords Amendts. further considered July 16, 21
Clause 29 (Enactments with respect to private endowments), 47
Clause 68 (Ultimate trust of surplus), 94
After long debate, Committee appointed, "to draw up Reasons to be assigned to the Lords for disagreeing to the Amendments to which this House hath disagreed"
Reasons for disagreeing to certain of the Lords Amendts. reported, and agreed to · to be communicated to the Lords

.l. Returned from the Commons with several of the amendments made by the Lords agreed to ; several amendments agreed to, with amendments ; and several other amendments disagreed to, for which they assign Reasons :—The said Reasons, and Bill, with the amendments, to be printed ; and to be taken into consideration on Tuesday next July 16
With Commons Amendts. and Reasons (Nos. 196 and 197)

Commons amendments to Lords amendments and Commons reasons for disagreeing to some of the amendments made by the Lords considered July 20
. Moved, That this House do not insist on so much of the amendment made in the preamble, to which the Commons have disagreed, as consists in leaving out the words ("held and applied for the advantage of the Irish people, but not for the maintenance of any church or clergy or other ministry, nor for the teaching of religion") (The Earl Granville), 235
. After short debate, Amendt. to leave out from ("House") to the end of the motion and insert ("do insist on the amendment made to the preamble to which the Commons have disagreed") (The Duke of Marlborough), 289
. After further short debate, on Question, "That the words, &c. ;" Cont. 95, Not-Cont. 173 ; M. 78 ; resolved in the negative
Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont., 321
Further debate on Commons amendments and reasons adjourned

. Commons amendments to Lords Amendments and Commons reasons for disagreeing to some of the amendments made by the Lords, further considered July 22, 406
Moved, in Clause 2, not to insist on the Amendment to which the Commons have disagreed (The Earl Granville)
After long debate, Motion, That the House do not insist upon the Amendment, agreed to
. Clause 27 (Enactments with respect to ecclesiastical residences), 442
Moved, Not to insist on the Amendment to which the Commons have disagreed (The Earl Granville)
After short debate, on Question ? Cont. 47, Not.-Cont. 17 ; M. 30
. Division List, Cont. and Not.-Cont., 444
. Protest thereon, 445
. Clause 68 (Ultimate trust of surplus), 446
[cont.

Irish Church Bill—cont.
Then it was moved, "Not to insist on the Amendments in Clause 68, to which the Commons disagree, but to leave out the said clause, and to insert the following clause in lieu thereof:
"And whereas it is further expedient that the proceeds of the said property should be appropriated mainly to the relief of unavoidable calamity and suffering, yet not so as to cancel or impair the obligations now attached to property under the Acts for the relief of the poor: Be it further enacted, that the said proceeds shall be so applied accordingly in the manner Parliament shall hereafter direct"
After short debate, Motion agreed to; words inserted accordingly
A Committee appointed to prepare reasons to be offered to the Commons for the Lords insisting on the said amendments: The Committee to meet forthwith
Report read, and agreed to; and a message sent to the Commons to return the said Bill, with amendments and reasons

c. Lords Amendments to Commons Amendments and Reasons [Bill 231]
Ordered, That the Commons Amendments to the Lords Amendments to the Irish Church Bill, and the Reasons for disagreeing to several of the Lords Amendments, be printed (Mr. Walpole) July 22, 520 [Bill 232]
Lords Amendments to Commons Amendments to Lords Amendments and Reasons considered July 23, 564
After debate, Amendments and Reasons read a second time, 577
Resolved, That this House doth not insist upon its disagreement to the Amendments insisted upon by the Lords; and doth agree to the Amendments made by the Lords to the Amendments made by the Commons to the Amendments made by the Lords, and to the consequential Amendment to the said Bill
l. Returned from the Commons, with the amendments made by the Lords to the amendments made by the Commons to the amendments made by the Lords, and the consequential amendment, agreed to; and the amendments made by the Lords to which the Commons had disagreed and on which the Lords have insisted, agreed to July 23, 521
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 42]

Parl. Papers—
COMMONS—
Bill . . . . [Bill 27]
As amended in Committee . . [Bill 112]
As amended on Consid. . . . [Bill 123]
As amended by the Lords . . [Bill 209]
Lords Amendts. to Commons Amendts. and Reasons . . [Bill 231]
Commons Amendts. and Lords Amendts. and Reasons . . [Bill 232]
LORDS—
Bill as sent from Commons . . (No. 109)
As amended in Committee . . (No. 172)
As amended on Report . . . (No. 182)
With Commons Amendts. to Lords Amendts. . . . . (No. 196)
Commons Amendts. and Reasons . . . . (No. 197

Italy—Arrest of Mr. Nathan
Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor; Answer, Mr. Otway August 10, [198] 1526

Jamaica—Jamaica Clergy Act
Question, Mr. M'Arthur; Answer, Mr. Monsell August 11, [198] 1542

Jamaica Loans Bill
(Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Ordered * July 6
Read 1° * July 7 [Bill 200]
Read 2° * July 12
Committee *; Report July 16
Read 3° * July 19
l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) July 20
Read 2ª * July 29 (No. 204)
Committee * July 30
Report * August 2
Read 3ª * August 3
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 69]

JAMES, Mr. H., Taunton
Dublin Freemen, Leave, [197] 950
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 426; Amendt. 428, 429
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [196] 1789

JENKINSON, Sir G. S., Wiltshire, N.
Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 634
Assessed Tax Papers, [198] 1250, 1251
Capital Punishment, [198] 995
Capital Sentences, Remission of, [195] 1358
Contagious Diseases (Animals), 2R. [194] 1040
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 449; Comm. cl. 96, [197] 1761; add. cl. 1772
County Courts, 2R. [196] 688
Courts of Justice (New Site), Leave, [196] 560
Criminal Classes, The, [194] 147
Criminal Law—Convict George Roberts, [194] 161
Habitual Criminals, Comm. [198] 1273; cl. 4, Amendt. 1275; cl. 10, 1279; add. cl. 1368, 1369
Imprisonment for Debt—Arrest of a young Girl, [194] 111, 209
Income and Assessed Taxes, Payment of, [197] 122
Ireland—Fenian Convicts, [194] 1997; [195] 356
Maynooth College, [194] 1658
194] Irish Church, 2R. 1704
195] Comm. 941; cl. 14, Amendt. 1364, 1365, 1366; cl. 25, Amendt. 1594, 1595, 1599, 1617; cl. 27, Motion for reporting Progress, 1644, 1866; cl. 28, Amendt. 1880
196] cl. 39, Amendt. 139, 148, 296, 348
Local Taxation, [194] 534; [195] 358, 977
Malt Tax, [198] 1247
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Motion for a Committee, [194] 662
Poor Law, Res. [197] 444
Turnpikes, [198] 620
Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 618

Jersey Jurats
Question, Mr. Locke; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 1, [197] 945

Jervis, Colonel H. J. W., Harwich
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. Amendt. [196] 648

Jessel, Mr. G., Dover
194] Bankruptcy, Leave, 792
195] 2R. 142
196] Comm. cl. 4, 1212; cl. 6, 1215; cl. 7, 1217,
. 1218; cl. 8, 1219; cl. 14, 1221, 1223, 1224;
. cl. 43, 1403; cl. 46, 1408, 1416; cl. 59, 1602;
. cl. 91, 1607, 1898; cl. 126, 1905
197] cl. 130, 325; cl. 131, 416; add. cl. 417
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 427
Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1225
Married Women's Property, 3R. [198] 404
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 340

Johnston, Mr. A., Essex, S.
Army—Ordnance Survey, [195] 1974
Assessed Rates, Leave, [194] 330
Cattle Disease, [197] 949
Corn Duty, [195] 844
Gambia—Prisoners in Bathurst Gaol, [198] 1051
Metropolitan Board of Works, [195] 674
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Comm. add. cl. [198] 1060
Parliament—Ladies' Gallery, Res. [197] 1583
Real Property, Res. [196] 600

Johnston, Mr. W., Belfast
Ireland—Loans for Dublin and Belfast, [197] 125
Londonderry, Riots in, [196] 102
Ireland—Ulster—Recent Events in, Motion for Papers, [198] 352
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 36, [196] 69; cl. 59, 402; 3R. 1039
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 240
Party Processions (Ireland), Leave, [194] 122; 2R. 1547; [197] 868
Scotland—Portpatrick Harbour, [195] 982
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1929

Johnstone, Sir H., Scarborough
Spain—Imprisonment of a British Subject at Barcelona, [196] 1741

Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Bill (Mr. Henry B. Sheridan, Mr. Serjeant Simon)
c. Ordered; read 1° * May 31 [Bill 140]
Read 2° * June 22
Committee *, Report June 23
Read 3° * June 30
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Lichfield) July 1 (No. 167)
Bill withdrawn * August 3

Jones, Mr. J., Carmarthenshire
Post Office—Communication with South Wales, [195] 1582

Judicature Commission — Extension of Powers
Question, Mr. Norwood; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 11, [196] 1633

Judicial Statistics (Scotland) Bill (The Lord Advocate, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Solicitor General for Scotland)
c. Ordered; read 1° * June 3 [Bill 142]
Read 2° * June 17
Committee *; Report June 21
Read 3° * June 24
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Morley) June 25 (No. 151)
Read 2ª * July 15
Committee *; Report July 16
Read 3ª * July 19
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 33]

Justices, &c., Clerks to—Fees and Salaries
Question, Mr. Russell Gurney; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 4, [196] 1238; Explanation, Mr. Bruce June 7, 1299

Justices of the Peace Qualification Bill [H.L.] (The Earl of Albemarle)
l. Presented; read 1ª * May 4 (No. 93)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" June 24 [197] 506
Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day three months") (The Duke of Richmond); after short debate, Amendt., original Motion, and Bill withdrawn

Kavanagh, Mr. A. M., Carlow Co.
Ireland—Beerhouses, Licensing of, [195] 308
Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, [194] 484; 2R. [195] 322

Kekewich, Mr. S. T., Devonshire, S.
Catholic Children in Workhouses, [197] 1418, 1421
Supply—Poor Law Commission, [197] 1692
Woods, Rating of, [194] 411

Keown, Mr. W., Downpatrick
Ireland—Education, National, [194] 1898

Kew Gardens
Question, Lord George Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Layard June 17, [197] 124

Kimberley, Earl of (Lord Privy Seal)
Assessed Rates, 2R. [197] 1750
Criminal Law—Repression of Crime, [194] 199
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [198] 1083; 3R. 1287
Election Commissioners (Expenses), 2R. [196] 1588
Fine Arts Copyright Consolidation and Amendment (No. 2), 2R. [195] 1943
194] Habitual Criminals, 1R. 332, 350; 2R. 712;
. Comm. cl. 3, Amendt. 1310; cl. 4, 1311,
. 1312, 1314, 1315, 1317; cl. 6, Amendt.
. 1319; cl. 10, Amendt. 1320, 1321, 1328,
. 1329, 1330, 1331, 1332, 1333, 1335; cl. 12,
. 1337, 1338; cl. 13, 1339; cl. 14, 1340,
. 1342, 1344; cl. 17, 1347

[cont.

Kimberley, Earl of—cont.
195] cl. 4, Amendt. 222; cl. 10, 224, 225; Amendt. 226; cl. 12, Amendt. 227; cl. 14, 229
198] Commons Amendts. 261, 262, 264, 1469
 Ireland—Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 378
  Murders, [194] 1649
  State of, [195] 1964; [196] 724, 726
196] Irish Church, 2R. 1666
197] 41, 48; Comm. Preamble, 730; cl. 6, 753; cl. 13, 879; cl. 14, 891, 910; cl. 18, 924; cl. 23, 933; cl. 25, 998; cl. 26, 999, 1000; cl. 27, 1014; cl. 28, 1069; add. cl. 1110; cl. 29, 1142; cl. 46, 1164; cl. 68, 1249, 1253; add. cl. 1260; Report, 1489, 1501, 1503, 1504; 3R. 1638
 Municipal Franchise, Report, [198] 145
 Parliament—Construction of the House, Res. [198] 13
 Railway Companies Meetings, Comm. [195] 672
 Railways Abandonment, 2R. [198] 1139
 Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [198] 1077; Comm. 1283
 Tenure (Ireland), 2R. [195] 1179

King, Hon. P. J. Locke, Surrey, E.
 Army—Patriotic Fund Commission, [194] 1465; [195] 1583; [196] 469
 Assessed Rates, Leave, [194] 329
 Irish Church, Comm. cl. 26, Amendt. [195] 1627
 Parliament—Crypt of St. Stephen's, [196] 744
 Real Estate Intestacy, Leave, [194] 956; *2R. [197] 1820, 1835, 1863
 Representation of the People Act (1867) Amendment, Leave, [194] 511
 Statutes, Revision of the, Res. [196] 1247
 Supply—House of Commons Offices, [197] 1476
  House of Lords Offices, [197] 1474
  Houses of Parliament, [197] 680, 681; Amendt. 684, 685
  Industrial Museum, Edinburgh, [197] 1212
 Turnpikes, [198] 619
 Vacating of Seats, Leave, [194] 219

Kinnaird, Lord
 Army—School of Musketry at Hythe, Motion for Report, [197] 1593
 North British Railway—Accidental Deaths, Motion for a Paper, [196] 566, 571
 Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 1, [196] 446; cl. 20, 456; cl. 68, 464

Kinnaird, Hon. A. F., Perth
 Army—Medals for Service in India, [197] 624
 Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1314
 British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1104
 Canada—Dockyard Emigrants, [195] 1698
 Coal Mines, Regulation of, [195] 844
 Coronation Oath, The, [198] 908
 Dividends on Government Securities, [198] 800
 Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 19, [196] 1769
 Foreign Office—Unpaid Attachés, Res. [197] 1674
 Game Laws (Scotland), Leave, [194] 535
 Game Laws (Scotland) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 586

[cont.

Kinnaird, Hon. A. F.—cont.
 Government of India Act Amendment, Comm. [198] 1361; cl. 2, 1364, 1365
 India—Medals for Bhootan, [197] 1424
  Railways, [196] 744; [197] 1424; [198] 797
 India—East India Revenue Accounts, Res. [198] 1358
 Life Assurance Companies, Leave, [194] 585
 Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1222
 Metalliferous Mines, [194] 314
 Metropolis—New Public Offices, [197] 1671
 Navy—African Squadron, Motion for Returns, [195] 46
 Parliament—Morning Sittings, [197] 1187
 Parliament—Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 194
 Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1734; Comm. cl. 2, [198] 833; cl. 24, 1238, 1534
 Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 522
 Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1938
 South Sea Islands—Slave Trade from the, [197] 644, 648
 Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 804
 Supply—Embassies and Missions Abroad, [198] 926, 952
  Houses of Parliament, [197] 681, 685
  Land Registry Office, [198] 909, 910
  Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1703
  Stationery Office, [197] 1700
 Vacating of Seats, Leave, [194] 220
 Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 591
 Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 127

Kirk, Mr. W., Newry
 Greece—British Payments to, [194] 1896
 Ireland—Military Prison, Dublin, [198] 325
 Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1152; cl. 26, 1621; cl. 36, Amendt. [196] 66, 67, 72; add. cl. 423; Lords Amendts. [197] 1963; [198] 83, 582

Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. E. H. (Under Secretary of State for the Home Department), Sandwich
 Bridges, Repair of, [197] 1886
 Coal Mines, Accidents in, [194] 313
 County Financial Boards, Leave, [196] 602, 619, 880
 Employment of Women and Children in Agriculture, [194] 1355
 Inclosure of Lands, [194] 1905; 3R. [195] 550
 Judicial Commission, The, [195] 975
 Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [196] 1450
 Metalliferous Mines, [194] 314
 Metropolis—Burlington House, [194] 1351
  Local Management, [194] 412
 Metropolitan Board of Works, [195] 674
 Metropolitan Police, [194] 1354
 Parliament—Business of the House, [194] 1094
 Pollution of Rivers, [198] 453
 Salisbury Gaol—Removal of Prisoners, [194] 313
 Salmon Fishery Laws, [194] 2003; [195] 975
 Sheriff's (York County), [196] 1208
 Shrievalties of Yorkshire and Lancashire, [194] 411
 Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 125, 128

Knight, Mr. F. W., Worcestershire, W.
Army—Camping System, Major M'Gwire's, [197] 944; Motion for Papers, [198] 720
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. Motion for reporting Progress, [198] 1245
Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 319

Knightley, Sir R., Northamptonshire, S.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 147

Knox, Hon. Colonel W. Stuart, Dungannon
Army—Chaplains, [195] 678
Beverley Election, Motion for an Address, Amendt. [195] 563
Ireland—Fenianism, [194] 954, 1661
  Jury Panel, Monaghan Assizes, [195] 503, 506
  State Aid to Irish Nonconformists, [198] 153
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 726
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 868; cl. 12, 1111; cl. 18, 1415; cl. 36, [196] 71; add. cl. 425
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 231
Parliament—Business of the House, [194] 1093
  Dublin City Writ, Motion for Adjournment, [196] 1792
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 1557

Laird, Mr. J., Birkenhead
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1818
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 7, Amendt. [197] 1769
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 551
Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [195] 118
  New Works, [195] 215

Lambert, Mr. N. G., Buckinghamshire
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1281
National Debt, Res. [198] 1211, 1214

Land Tax Commissioners Names Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Ordered; read 1° * Mar 16 [Bill 54]
Read 2° * Mar 17
Committee *—r.p. June 21
Committee *; Report June 24
Considered * June 25
Read 3° * June 28
l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) June 29 (No. 158)
Read 2ª * August 2
Committee *; Report August 3
Read 3ª * August 5
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 64]

Land Tax Law Amendment, &c. Bill
(Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Ordered; read 1° * July 1 [Bill 188]
Read 2° * July 8
Bill withdrawn * July 31

Land, Transfer of—Land Transfer Act, 1862
Question, Mr. T. Chambers; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld Mar 23, [194] 2000

Lands Clauses Consolidation Act Amendment Bill (Mr. Bazley, Mr. Jacob Bright, Mr. Graves, Mr. Baines, Mr. Dixon, Mr. Hibbert)
c Ordered; read 1° * Mar 3 [Bill 34]
Read 2° * Mar 11
Committee *; Report Mar 16
Considered * Mar 22
Read 3° * Mar 23
l. Read 1ª * (Viscount Halifax) April 5 (No. 38)
Read 2ª * April 23
Committee * April 30
Report * May 3 (No. 90)
Read 3ª * May 4
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 18]

Langton, Mr. W. H. P. Gore-, Somersetshire, W.
Parliament—Bridgwater Election, [194] 2000

Lansdowne, Marquess of (Lord of the Treasury)
Courts of Justice Salaries and Funds, 2R. [198] 1062
Customs and Inland Revenue, 2R. [196] 1585
Newspapers, &c. 2R. [196] 946, 969

"Lavelle v. Proudfoot"—Case of
Question, Observations, Mr. Charley, Mr. G. H. Moore; Reply, Mr. Gladstone May 28, [196] 881

Lawrence, Lord
Government of India Act Amendment, 1R. [195] 1088; Report, [196] 694
India—Railways—Financial Statement, [198] 545
Telegraphs, 2R. [198] 1135

Lawrence, Right Hon. Alderman J. C. (Lord Mayor), Lambeth
Emigration to Western Australia, [197] 1166
Post Horse and Carriage Licences Duties, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1527
Supply—Royal Palaces, [197] 654
  Royal Parks, &c. [197] 659

Lawrence, Mr. Alderman W., London
Army—Saltpetre, Storage of, [195] 1584
Bankruptcy, 2R. [195] 161; Comm. cl. 14, [196] 1222; cl. 46, 1414; cl. 91, 1899
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 18, Amendt. [196] 849, 850
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1411; Comm. cl. 29, [196] 1773
Gold Coinage, The, [198] 1532, 1533
House Tax, Res. [197] 1802, 1807
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 695
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 342
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 554
Parliament — Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 191
Post Horse and Carriage Licences Duties, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1523, 1530
Post Office—Foreign Mails, [194] 124

[cont.

Lawrence, Mr. Alderman W.—cont.
- Rateable Property (Metropolis), Leave, [194] 180
- Supply—Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 967
  - Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1701, 1704
  - Rates on Government Property, [197] 1458
- Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 427; Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), 639; Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), Amendt. [196] 801, 803, 807
- Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 126

Lawson, Sir W., Carlisle
- Bishops Resignation, Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [198] 1323, 1324
- Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1007
- India—Opium Trade, [198] 449
- India—East India Revenue Accounts, Res. [198] 1194
- Lord Lieutenant (Cumberland and Westmoreland), Motion for an Address, [195] 742
- Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 637, 682, 683

Layard, Right Hon. A. H. (Chief Commissioner of Works), Southwark
- Ancient Monuments, Preservation of, [195] 28
- Army—Buckingham Palace Guard Room, Motion for Papers, [197] 137
- Courts of Justice (New Site), Leave, [196] 538, 553, 560
- Ireland—Ancient Monuments, Preservation of, [195] 1098
- Kew Gardens, [197] 124
- Metropolis—Questions, &c.
  - Battersea Park, [195] 843
  - Courts of Justice, New, [195] 356, 1699, 1700; [196] 14, 1210
  - Finsbury Park, [196] 740
  - Hyde Park, [194] 485
  - National Gallery, The, [195] 975
  - Park Lane Improvements, [195] 1973
  - Public Offices, Concentration of, [195] 678 1973; [197] 1670, 1671
  - St. James' Park, [194] 410; [196] 13
  - Statues in Palace Yard, [196] 1742
  - Victoria Park, [194] 486; [196] 750
- Metropolis—Thames Embankment, [194] 139; Motion for a Committee, 278
- Metropolitan Railway—Palace Yard Station, [194] 1898
- Parliament—Crypt under St. Stephen's Chapel, [195] 676; [196] 744
  - Mosaics in the Houses of Parliament, [198] 448
  - Reporters' Gallery, [198] 898
- Parliament—Decoration of Central Hall, Motion for a Committee, [198] 710, 712
- Parliament — House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 294, 1467
- Parliament—Ladies' Gallery, [197] 120; Res. 1586; [198] 20
- Supply—British Museum, [198] 225
  - Burlington House, [197] 1213, 1214
  - Chapter House, Westminster, [197] 1209, 1210
  - Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1464, 1467
  - Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 677, 678

[cont.

Layard, Right Hon. A. H.—cont.
  - Houses of Parliament, [197] 680, 682, 683, 684; Report, 1431; Amendt. 1441, 1442, 1443
  - Land—New Palace, Westminster, [197] 679
  - National Gallery, The, [198] 502
  - Post Office, &c. Buildings, [197] 1456
  - Probate Court and Registries, [197] 1210, 1211
  - Public Buildings, [197] 675, 676
  - Public Offices Site, [197] 1202, 1203, 1204, 1207, 1208
  - Report, [198] 515, 517, 689
  - Royal Palaces, [197] 653
  - Royal Parks, &c. [197] 659, 660, 661, 663, 664, 668, 669
  - Works, &c. [197] 1706, 1707, 1708
- Thames Embankment and the Metropolitan Railway Company, [198] 1529

Lea, Mr. T., Kidderminster
- Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1399

Leatham, Mr. E. A., Huddersfield
- Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1316
- Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1470, 1523
- Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 661

Lefevre, Mr. J. G. Shaw (Secretary to the Board of Trade), Reading
- Agricultural Returns, Res. [197] 834
- Board of Trade Returns, [198] 703
- Bristol Pilots at Falmouth, [198] 1528
- Ceylon—Basses Lights, [198] 563
- Exeter, Trade of, [196] 1741
- Feed Stuffs and Manures, Res. [197] 974
- Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1786
- Light Dues, Res. [196] 162
- "Marquess of Abercorn," Loss of the, [196] 1897
- Married Women's Property, 2R. [195] 779
- Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Leave, [198] 1499, 1517
- Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 552
- Railway Accidents, [198] 726
- Regulation of Railways Act Amendment, Leave, [195] 24
- Scotland—Cumbrae Lights, [198] 799
- Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1924
- Supply—Board of Trade, [197] 1681
  - Distressed British Seamen, [198] 965
  - Harbours of Refuge, [197] 1456
  - Lighthouses Abroad, [197] 1463

Lefroy, Mr. A., Dublin University
- Irish Church, Comm. [195] 893; cl. 13, 1139, 1145; cl. 14, 1385; cl. 15, Amendt. 1397; cl. 16, 1408; Lords Amendts. [197] 1961; [198] 580
- Supply—Education, National, [198] 741

Leinster, Duke of
- Dublin Freemen Commission, 3R. [198] 1288
- Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [197] 746; 3R. 1641

LEITRIM, Earl of
Ireland—State of, [195] 1972
Irish Church, 3R. [197] 1612; Commons Amendts. [198] 444
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 2R. [195] 1691

LENNOX, Lord H. G. C. G., Chichester
Local Museums, [197] 946
Metropolis—Courts of Justice, New, [196] 14
Navy—Ryde Pier, [197] 358
Navy—Admiralty Clerks, Res. [196] 1622, 1626; [197] 412, 413
Navy Estimates—Salaries, [195] 62
Supply—Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1703, 1704
Science and Art Department, [198] 213, 218
Works, &c. [197] 1708

LESLIE, Colonel C. P., Monaghan Co.
Cab Stands (Metropolis), [197] 1169

LEWIS, Mr. J. D., Devonport
Army Estimates—Military Stores, [195] 668
Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. Amendt. [198] 860
Navy—Government Dockyards, Reductions in the, [194] 375
Post Office—Landing Mails at a Western Port, [196] 936

Libel Bill
(Mr. Baines, Mr. Candlish, Mr. Morley)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Baines) Feb 23, [194] 276; Bill ordered; read 1°* [Bill 17]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 17, 1599
Amendt. to leave out "now" and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Newdegate); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after short debate, Debate adjourned
Adjourned Debate April 13, [195] 757; Bill read 2°
Committee*; Report May 4 [Bill 106]
Bill withdrawn* July 14

LICHFIELD, Earl of
Habitual Criminals, 1R. [194] 349; Comm. cl. 6, 1320; cl. 10, 1330, 1332; Amendt. 1333; cl. 12, Amendt. 1337
Municipal Franchise, 2R. [197] 1417
Trades Unions (Protection of Funds), Comm. [198] 1072

LICHFIELD, Bishop of Irish Church, 2R. [197] 213; Comm. cl. 2, 750, 752; cl. 14, 913; cl. 29, 1126; Report, 1521; Commons Amendts. [198] 444
New Zealand, [198] 784, 786

LIDDELL, Hon. H. G., Northumberland, S.
China—Tien-tsin, Treaty of, Motion for Papers, [197] 1794
Coal Fields, Motion for an Address, [196] 1914
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 16, [197] 1291; cl. 63, 1532
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1739

[cont.

LIDDELL, Hon. H. G.—cont.
Greenwich Hospital, Leave, [195] 1710; Comm. Amendt. [197] 553
Ireland—State of, [195] 2058
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 26, [195] 1625; cl. 29, 1883; cl. 59, [196] 401; cl. 3, 423
Libel, 2R. [194] 1609
Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 245
Navy Estimates—Coastguard Service, [195] 90, 96
Salaries, [195] 65
Navy—Naval Contracts, [198] 643
O'Sullivan's Disability, 2R. [196] 581
Poor Law—Payment of Rates by Owners, [194] 409
Poor Law, Res. [197] 439
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1583
Salmon Fisheries, [194] 2003
Steam Machinery, [195] 202, 216
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 177
Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 509
Valuation of Property, [194] 1660
Valuation of Property (Metropolis), 2R. [195] 23, 359
Witnesses (House of Commons), Motion for a Committee, [196] 622

Life Assurance Companies Bill
(Mr. S. Cave, Mr. Bazley, Mr. Russell Gurney)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Stephen Cave) Mar 3, [194] 585; Bill ordered, after short debate; read 1°* [Bill 35]
Read 2°* April 7
Committee*; Report April 8 [Bill 65]
Bill withdrawn* July 20

Life Peerages Bill
(The Earl Russell)
l. Presented; read 1ª, after debate April 9, [195] 452 (No. 49)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 27, 1648
After debate, Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day six months") (Lord Denman); after further short debate, on Question, That ("now,") &c.; resolved in the affirmative; Bill read 2ª
Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into Committee" June 3, [196] 1172; after short debate, House in Committee (No. 113)
Report June 8, 1370
Moved, "That the said Report be now received" (The Earl Russell)
After debate, Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert ("this day three months") (The Earl of Malmesbury); after further short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; original Motion agreed to; Report received; Amendments (Earl Grey) moved and negatived
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3ª" July 8, [197] 1387
Amendt. to leave out ("now,") and insert ("this day three months") (The Earl of Malmesbury); on Question, That ("now,") &c.; Cont. 76; Not-Cont. 106; M. 30; resolved in the negative; Bill to be read 3ª on this day three months
Division List, Cont. and Not.-Cont., 1401

Life Peerages—Office of Lord High Chancellor of England
Motion for an Address, "praying that for the advantage of this House and for the honour of the legal profession Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to sanction the erection of the office of Lord High Chancellor of England into a barony which shall entitle the holder of that office to a writ of summons to Parliament by such title as Her Majesty shall in each case be pleased to summon him; and that such writ of summons as aforesaid shall make the person receiving the same, although he may not continue to hold the said office, a Peer of Parliament for life without remainder to the heirs of his body" (The Lord Redesdale) May 3, [196] 10; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

LIFFORD, Viscount
Contagious Diseases, [194] 284
Ireland—Mayor of Cork—Assassinations, [195] 1948
Irish Church, Comm. add. cl. [197] 1108; cl. 68, Amendt. 1256; Report, 1501; Commons Amendts. [198] 443

Light Dues
Moved, "That it is the opinion of this House, that the practice of charging upon the shipping of this Country and the shipping of Foreign Nations the cost of maintaining the Lights, Buoys, and Beacons which light and protect the shores of the United Kingdom should cease, as being a practice unworthy of a great maritime nation whose ships are afforded the use of the Lights of other Countries free of all expense" (Mr. Headlam) May 4, [196] 149; after debate, Motion withdrawn
Report—Parl. P. No. 100
Memorials 174

Lighthouse Accounts
Question, Viscount Bury; Answer, Mr. Bright June 3, [196] 1206

LIMERICK, Earl of
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1744; Report, [198] 146
Dublin Freemen Commission, 3R. [198] 1289
Ireland—Tithe Rent Charges, Motion for Returns, [194] 1081
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 33, Amendt. [197] 1154, 1155; 3R. Amendt. 1660
Militia, Comm. [195] 1847

LINDSAY, Hon. Colonel C. H., Abingdon
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1521

LINDSAY, Colonel R. J. Loyd, Berkshire
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1162
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1558

LISMORE, Viscount
Ireland—Agrarian Outrages, [195] 1533

LLOYD, Sir T. D., Cardigan, &c.
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1324
Emigration of Paupers, [194] 627

Loan Societies
Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 11, [194] 1086

Local Government Supplemental Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered; read 1° * April 21 [Bill 90]
Read 2° * April 22
Referred to Select Committee May 11
Report of Select Committee June 9 [Bill 155]
Committee *; Report June 17
Considered * June 18
Read 3° * June 18
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Morley) June 22 (No. 140)
Read 2ª * July 16
Committee *; Report July 19
Read 3ª * July 20
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 124]

Local Government Supplemental (No. 2) Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered; read 1° * July 1 [Bill 192]
Read 2° * July 5
Committee *; Report July 8
Considered * July 9
Read 3° * July 9
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Morley) July 12 (No. 183)
Read 2ª * July 20
Committee * July 22
Report * July 23
Read 3ª * July 26
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. cxxiv.]

Local Museums
Question, Lord Henry Lennox; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 1, [197] 946

Local Officers Superannuation (Ireland) Bill (Mr. Pim, Sir John Gray)
c. Ordered; read 1° * April 20 [Bill 87]
Read 2° * May 4
Committee *; Report July 20
Committee * (on re-comm.); Report July 29
Considered * July 29
Read 3° * July 30
l. Read 1ª * (Lord Dufferin) August 2 (No. 250)
Read 2ª * August 3
Committee *; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 79]

Local Taxation
Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, that She will be graciously pleased to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the present amount, incidence, and effect of Local Taxation, with a view to a more equitable re-adjustment of these burdens" (Sir Massey Lopes) Feb 23, [194] 223; after long debate, Motion withdrawn; Observations, Sir George Jenkinson Mar 2, 534; Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 8, [195] 358; Question, Observations, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 16, 977; short debate thereon

LOCH, Mr. G., Wick, &c.
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1713, 1728 ; Nomination of Committee, [196] 628, 633, 1783, 1784
Game Laws (Scotland), Address for a Commission, [195] 2067
Game Laws (Scotland) (No. 2), 2R. [198] 881
Park Lane and Piccadilly Thoroughfare, Motion for Papers, [195] 756
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 1, [198] 821 ; cl. 8, Amendt. 1117, 1118
Supply—Report, [198] 696

LOCKE, Mr. J., Southwark
Assessed Rates, Leave, [194] 330 ; 2R. [196] 1327 ; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 383 ; Amendt. 386 ; Consid. 1088
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1215
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1252
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1396 ; Comm. [195] 125 ; cl. 9, [196] 1744 ; cl. 19, Amendt. 1771
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1784, 1795
Inclosure of Lands, 3R. [195] 556
Jersey Jurats, [197] 945
Metropolis Gas Bills, [194] 301
Metropolis Local Management, [194] 411
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 335 ; Comm. add. cl. 1058
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 545, 547
Municipal Corporations (Metropolis), 2R. [196] 1954
Police, The, and the Public, [198] 561, 562
Public Houses, &c. Res. [197] 454
Rateable Property (Metropolis), Leave, [194] 181
Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 799, 800
Supply—Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1702
  Probate Court and Registries, [197] 1211
Valuation of Property (Metropolis), 2R. [195] 21
Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 127

Lodgers Property Protection Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess Townshend)
l. Presented ; read 1ª * April 20 (No. 65)
Moved, " That the Bill be now read 2ª " May 11, [196] 562
After short debate, Amendt. to leave out ("now") and insert (" this day three months ") ; Amendt., Motion, and Bill withdrawn

LONDON, Bishop of
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1742
Education, Public, [194] 821
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 15, Amendt. [197] 1880 ; cl. 30, Amendt. 1883 ; add. cl. 1885
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1347
Irish Church, Commons Amendts. [198] 308
Oriel College, Oxford, 2R. [194] 803

LONGFORD, Earl of
Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. Amendt. [198] 1138 ; 3R. Amendt. 1285, 1289
Ireland—Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, [196] 1085, 1089
Irish Church, Report, [197] 1485, 1494
Parliament—Order in the House, [197] 403

LOPES, Sir M., Devonshire, S.
Bishops, Retirement of, [195] 581
Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 223, 271
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, 2R. [196] 1361

LOPES, Mr. H. C., Launceston
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [197] 1181
Evidence Amendment, 2R. [195] 1809
Married Women's Property, 2R. Amendt. [195] 774, 798

Lord Napier's Annuity Bill [H.L.]
(The Duke of Argyll)
l. Presented ; read 1ª * Feb 26 (No. 15)
Bill withdrawn Mar 8, [194] 932

Lord Napier of Magdala [Salary] Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Stansfeld)
c. Resolution in Committee Mar 15
Resolution reported ; Bill ordered ; read 1º * Mar 16 [Bill 57]
Read 2º * Mar 18
Committee * ; Report Mar 19
Read 3º * Mar 22
l. Read 1ª * (Duke of Argyll) April 5 (No. 37)
Read 2ª * April 6
Committee * ; Report April 8
Read 3ª * April 9
Royal Assent April 19 [32 Vict. c. 3]

LORNE, Marquess of, Argyllshire
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 379
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 24, [198] 1240

LOWE, Right Hon. R. (see CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER)

LOWTHER, Mr. J., York City
Assessed Rates, Leave, [194] 326
Assize Sentences on Criminals, [198] 1373
Cattle Disease—Foot and Mouth, [198] 1252
Contagious Diseases (Animals), 2R. [194] 1037
Dublin Freemen, Leave, [197] 950 ; [198] 158
Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. [198] 230
Endowed Schools, Comm. Amendt. [195] 124 ; cl. 4, [196] 1744 ; cl. 29, Amendt. 1772, 1777
Hyde Park, Furious Riding in, [197] 1592
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 37, [196] 74 ; cl. 39, 280
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 343 ; Comm. cl. 34, Amendt. 1056
Navy—African Squadron, Motion for Returns, [195] 41
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [197] 130
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 234, 1105 ; cl. 24, 1233, 1245, 1388 ; cl. 59, 1442, 1445 ; 3R. 1497, 1498

LOWTHER, Mr. W., Westmoreland
British Museum—Temple Collection, [195] 1579
Foreign Office—Unpaid Attachés, Res. [197] 1672, 1676
Friendly Societies' Acts, [198] 896
Friendly Societies' Returns, [197] 571
Supply—Foreign Office, [197] 1679

Lucan, Earl of
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 68, [197] 1254

Lurgan, Lord
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [198] 1080; 3R. 1288
Irish Church, 3R. [197] 1604

Lush, Dr. J. A., Salisbury
Juvenile Offenders in Reformatory Schools, [196] 742
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 509
Salisbury Gaol—Removal of Prisoners, [194] 313

Lusk, Mr. Alderman A., Finsbury
Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1438
Army Estimates—Chelsea and Kilmainham Hospitals, [197] 149
  Martial Law, [195] 666
  Military Stores, [195] 668
  Militia, &c. [196] 1575
  Superannuation Allowances, [197] 149
Audit of Public Accounts, [197] 633
Bankruptcy, 2R. [195] 167; Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1215; cl. 13, 1220; cl. 46, 1415; cl. 54, 1597
Civil Service Pensions, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 873
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 838; cl. 4, 842, 843; cl. 18, 848
Diplomatic Salaries, &c. Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1336, 1338; cl. 7, Amendt. 1339
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 15, [196] 1767
Foreign Office—Unpaid Attachés, Res. [197] 1675
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1797
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 18, [197] 582
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 344; Comm. add. cl. 1060
Navy—Australian Preserved Meat, [194] 487
Navy Estimates—Coastguard Service, [195] 90
  Naval Stores, [195] 193
  Salaries, [195] 61
  Victualling Yards, &c., [195] 181, 184
Post Horse and Carriage Licences Duties, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1528
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1584
Special and Common Juries, 2R. [198] 400
Supply—Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 773
  Board of Trade, [197] 1682
  Chapter House, Westminster, [197] 1210
  Charity Commission, [197] 1683
  Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1471
  County Courts, [198] 908
  Dublin Metropolitan Police, [198] 911
  Emigration, [198] 961
  Excesses on Grants, [194] 771
  Foreign, &c. Services, [197] 1710
  Foreign Office, [197] 1677, 1680
  Harbours of Refuge, [197] 1456
  Home Office, [197] 1481
  Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1437
  Land—New Palace, Westminster, [197] 679
  Land Registry Office, [198] 909
  Lighthouses Abroad, [197] 1463
  Poor Law Commission, [197] 1692
  Post Office, &c. Buildings, [197] 1456
  Probate Court and Registries, [197] 1211

Lusk, Mr. Alderman A.—cont.
  Public Buildings, [197] 674
  Public Offices Site, [197] 1204
  Public Works (Ireland), [197] 1461
  Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Department (Scotland), Amendt. [197] 1710
  Rates on Government Property, [197] 1457, 1459
  Report, [194] 536, 537
  Royal Palaces, [197] 652
  Royal Parks, &c. [197] 657, 667
Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 623
Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 129

Lyttelton, Lord
Bishops of the South Western District, [196] 8
Bishops Resignation, Report, [198] 146
Endowed Schools, Comm. [197] 1868, 1870; cl. 12, Amendt. 1876; cl. 15, 1880, 1881; cl. 19, Amendt. 1882; cl. 30, 1884
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1329, 1350
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [197] 752; 3R. 1610
Parliament—Order in the House, [198] 150
University Tests, 2R. [198] 143

Lyveden, Lord
Education, Public, [194] 817
Government of India Act Amendment, 1R. [195] 1085; 2R. 1832; Report, [196] 692
Governor General of India, 2R. [194] 1068
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 17, Amendt. [194] 1344
India—Railways—Financial Statement, [198] 551
Irish Church, Commons Amendts. [198] 436
Life Peerages, Comm. cl. 1, [196] 1200; Report, 1390; 3R. [197] 1391
New Zealand, [198] 793, 794

McArthur, Mr. W., Lambeth
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 395
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 287
Jamaica—Disendowment of the Church, [198] 1542
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 554
Museums, &c., Opening of, on Sundays, [196] 1275
Ways and Means—Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 808

McClean, Mr. J. R., Staffordshire, E.
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 5, [197] 574

McClure, Mr. T., Belfast
Ireland—Municipal Franchise, [194] 1185
Irish Church, Comm. add. cl. [196] 424; Lords Amendts. [198] 31

McCombie, Mr. W., Aberdeenshire, W.
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1275; cl. 45, 1528; cl. 60, Amendt. 1529; cl. 63, 1534; cl. 67, 1538; Amendt. 1540; cl. 90, 1756; add. cl. 1770
Game Laws (Scotland) [Mr. M'Lagan], 2R. [197] 502
Malt Duties, [194] 625

MacEvoy, Mr. E., Meath Co.
Ecclesiastical Titles Act Repeal, Leave, [194] 186, 412, 488 ; [197] 1169
Ireland—Prelates of the Irish Church, [196] 261

Macfie, Mr. R. A., Leith, &c.
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), 2R. [197] 855
Army—Committee on New Arms, [198] 495
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1168
Canada—Patent Law, [198] 1293
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 681
County Courts, 2R. [194] 1567
Electric Telegraphs, Comm. [197] 1221
Financial Statement—Corn Duty, [195] 479
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1728
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 18, Amendt. [195] 1479 ; Lords Amendts. [198] 588
Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Leave, [198] 1516
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 3R. [198] 1341
National Debt, Res. [198] 1213
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 88
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 24, [198] 1242; cl. 66, 1447 ; Consid. 1457
Patent Laws, [198] 1089, 1090
Patents for Inventions, Res. [196] 888
Post Office—Book Post, &c. [194] 1895
Post Office—Inland Postage, Res. [195] 244
Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1308
Sunday Trading, 2R. [194] 562
Supply—Report, [198] 692
  Stationery Office, [197] 1699
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 3, Amendt. [198] 764 ; cl. 20, 772
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 429

McLagan, Mr. P., Linlithgowshire
Agricultural Returns, Res. Motion for Adjournment, [195] 755 ; *[197] 823, 831
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. add. cl. [197] 1772
Feed Stuffs and Manures, Res. [197] 973
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1725
Game Laws (Scotland), Address for a Commission, [195] 2065
Game Laws (Scotland) [Mr. M'Lagan], Leave, [194] 534 ; 2R. [197] 499
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 389
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1733 ; Comm. cl. 9, [198] 1119
Pharmacy Act Amendment, Comm. [195] 1934

McLaren, Mr. D., Edinburgh
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), Leave, [194] 280, 282 ; 2R. [197] 838, 863
Army Estimates—Superannuation Allowances, [197] 150
Audit of Public Accounts, [197] 630
Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1314
Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland), Comm. [197] 157
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1412 ; Comm. cl. 19, [196] 1769

[cont.

McLaren, Mr. D.—cont.
Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1815
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 378
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 26, [195] 1626 ; cl. 39, [196] 274, 276 ; cl. 59, 405
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [198] 361 ; cl. 1, 366
Nomenclature of Diseases, [194] 1789
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1723 ; 198] Comm. 813 ; cl. 1, 820 ; cl. 2, 829, 1098 ; cl. 4, 1113 ; cl. 9, 1120, 1121 ; cl. 12, 1121 ; cl. 14, 1122 ; cl. 17, 1123 ; cl. 19, 1124 ; cl. 24, 1239 ; cl. 34, 1390 ; cl. 44, 1392 ; cl. 59, 1443 ; Consid. 1461
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 678
Real Property, Res. [196] 598
Roman Catholic Charities, Motion for Returns, [198] 1031
Scotland—Public Business, [198] 1296
Scotland—Endowed Schools, &c. Motion for a Commission, [196] 1442
Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 524
Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1480
Supply—Board of Manufactures (Scotland), [198] 506
  Learned Societies, [198] 506
  Public Offices Site, [197] 1208
  Public Works (Ireland), [197] 1461, 1462
  Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Department, [197] 1711
  Rates on Government Property, [197] 1458
  Report, [198] 694
  Stationery Office, [197] 1698
  Works, &c. [197] 1708
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 421 ; Res. 1. (Corn, &c.) 619, 640

McMahon, Mr. P., New Ross
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1413 ; add. cl. [197] 419
County Courts, 2R. [196] 686
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 573
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [198] 1274
Imprisonment for Debt, 2R. [195] 174 ; Comm. cl. 5, Amendt. [197] 430, 572, 578
Ireland—Poor Law, [194] 111
  Representation of, [194] 362
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 26, [195] 1623 ; cl. 32, [196] 36 ; cl. 52, Amendt. 350 ; Consid. 758 ; Amendt. 778
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 88
Poor Law (Ireland) Amendment, [194] 484 ; 2R. [195] 309

Magniac, Mr. C., St. Ives
Irish Church, Consid. add. cl. [196] 779
New Zealand—Affairs of, [198] 468

Maguire, Mr. J. F., Cork City
Army—Clerks of the Works and Royal Engineers, [197] 136
  3rd West India Regiment, [194] 1789
Bell, James, Case of, [198] 1294
Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. [198] 229

[cont.

MAGUIRE, Mr. J. F.—cont.
Ireland—Cork, Mayor of, [195] 359 ;—Case of, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1170
Fenian Convicts—O'Donovan Rossa, [198] 1432
State of, [195] 2041
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 680, 726
Irish Church, Lords Amendts. [198] 63
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 550
Navy Estimates—New Works, [195] 210, 212
O'Farrell Papers, The, [196] 20
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 202 ; 2R. 576, 583
Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 336
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 815
Prisons (Religious Instruction), Motion for Returns, [198] 345, 352
Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), Comm. [196] 1456
Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1466, 1473, 1475
Supply — Education, Public, [198] 727, 738, 742
Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 624

MALMESBURY, Earl of
Dublin Freemen Commission, 3R. [198] 1287
Ireland—Agrarian Outrages, [195] 1535
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 28, [197] 1026 ; cl. 68, 1234 ; Commons Amendts. [198] 427
Life Peerages, 2R. [195] 1666 ; Report, Amendt. [196] 1381, 1389 ; 3R. Amendt. [197] 1387
National Gallery, Purchases for the, [198] 662
Parliament—Order in the House, [197] 405

Malta
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient, in accordance with pledges given in the name of the Sovereign, to restore to the people of Malta, with such modifications as present circumstances may require, their ancient representative institution, the 'Congresso Popolare;' to re-establish the Executive Council' as a distinct body, aiding the Governor in administering the Civil Affairs of the Island ; and, reverting to the policy abandoned in 1859, to sever the office of 'Civil Governor' from that of 'Commander of the Forces" (Mr. Robert Torrens) July 13, [197] 1774; after short debate, Motion withdrawn
New Port and Docks at, Question, Mr. Onslow ; Answer, Mr. Childers April 27, [195] 1695 (Parl. P. No. 217)

Malt Duties
Question, Mr. M'Combie ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 4, [194] 625 ; Question, Sir George Jenkinson ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer August 4, [198] 1247 Returns 1868—(Parl. P. 228)

MANCHESTER, Duke of Ireland—Portadown Inquest, [197] 1737 ; [198] 123
Irish Church, Report, [197] 1499 ; Commons Amendts. [198] 319

MANNERS, Right Hon. Lord J. J. R., Leicestershire, N.
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1247, 1249, 1269
Courts of Justice (New Site), Leave, [196] 559
Inclosure of Lands, 3R. [195] 554
Ireland—Agrarian Outrages, [195] 1850
Protection of Life, [196] 470
State of, [195] 2017
195] Irish Church, Comm. cl. 10, 1107 ; cl. 15, 1404 ; cl. 18, 1415 ; cl. 22, 1512, 1515 ; cl. 25, 1614 ; cl. 27, 1858, 1880 ; cl. 19, 1932
196] cl. 32, 51 ; cl. 39, 130 ; cl. 59, 403
197] Lords Amendts. 1960
198] 75, 121
Metropolis—Public Offices, Concentration of, [195] 677
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 241
Parliament — House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 271
Parliament—Insufficient Accommodation of the House, Res. [197] 964
Printworks Regulation, Res. [194] 1540
Roman Catholic Charities, Motion for Return [198] 1030
Supply—Burlington House, [197] 1214
Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1471
Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1466, 1467
Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 677
Houses of Parliament, [197] 683, 685 ; Report, 1435
Industrial Museum, Edinburgh, [197] 1213
Public Offices Site, [197] 1203, 1209
Rates on Government Property, [197] 1458
Royal Palaces, [197] 654
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 656, 663, 664, 667, 668
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1385
United States — Recent Negotiations with, [197] 1427

Marine Mutiny Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Childers, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * Mar 9
Read 2° * Mar 18
Committee * ; Report Mar 19
Considered * Mar 22
Read 3° * Mar 23
l. Read 1ª * (The Earl of Camperdown) April 5
Read 2ª * April 6
Committee * ; Report April 8
Read 3ª * April 9
Royal Assent April 19 [32 Vict. c. 5]

MARLBOROUGH, Duke of
Education, Public, [194] 815
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 8, [197] 1875 ; cl. 15, 1880 ; cl. 42, Amendt. 1884
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 26, [197] 999 ; cl. 28, 1039 ; Commons Amendts. Amendt. [198] 315, 433, 444
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [194] 1771 ; [195] 567 ; Comm. [196] 443 ; cl. 1, 446 ; cl. 20, 453 ; cl. 68, Amendt. 462, 464
University Tests, Comm. add. cl. [197] 1095

"Marquess of Abercorn"—Loss of the Question, Sir John Hay ; Answer, Mr. Shaw Lefevre June 15, [196] 1897

Marriage Law Commission Report
Question, Observations, Lord Chelmsford; Reply, The Lord Chancellor April 5, [195] 135; Observations, Question, Sir Roundell Palmer; Reply, Mr. Bruce; short debate thereon August 6, [198] 1395

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill (Mr. Thomas Chambers, Mr. Morley)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Thomas Chambers)
194] Feb 25, 331; Bill ordered, after short debate
Read 1° * Feb 26 [Bill 23]
195] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" April 21, 1288
Amendt. to leave out "now" and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Sclater-Booth); after debate, Question put, "That 'now' &c.; A. 243, N. 144; M. 99; Bill read 2°
. Division List, Ayes and Noes, 1325
196] Order for Committee read June 8, 1448
Moved, "That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to make provision for a woman to marry her deceased husband's brother" (Mr. Collins); after short debate, Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Sclater-Booth); A. 63, N. 113; M. 50
Question again proposed; Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Mr. Cross); A. 63, N. 98; M. 35
Question again proposed; Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. R. Fowler); Motion agreed to; Debate adjourned
197] Adjourned debate [8th June] resumed June 22, 466
Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Beresford Hope); A. 52, N. 100; M. 48
Question again proposed; after short debate, Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson); A. 43, N. 101; M. 58
Question again proposed; Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Colonel Barttelot); after further short debate, Debate adjourned
Adjourned debate [8th June] resumed July 1; Debate adjourned
Adjourned Debate on Question [8th June]
"That it be an Instruction to the Committee on the Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, that they have power to make provision therein for a woman to marry her deceased husband's brother" (Mr. Collins)
198] Question again proposed; Debate resumed July 20, 357
Amendt. To leave out from "That" and add "the Order for the Committee on the said Bill be read and discharged" (Mr. John Talbot); after short debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 143, N. 57; M. 86
Main Question again proposed; Moved, "That the debate be now adjourned" (Sir John Hay); A. 43, N. 145; M. 102
Main Question put, and negatived
Moved, "That it be an Instruction to the Committee on the Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, that they have power to make [cont.

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill—cont.
198] provision for a man to marry his deceased wife's brother's or sister's daughter" (Mr. Monk) July 20; Question put, and negatived
Committee—R.P.
Bill withdrawn * August 4

Married Women's Property Bill (Mr. Russell Gurney, Mr. Headlam, Mr. Jacob Bright)
194] c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Russell Gurney) Feb 25, 331; Bill ordered; read 1° * [Bill 20]
195] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" April 14, 760
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Lopes); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn; Bill read 2°, and committed to a Select Committee
And, on April 22, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Russell Gurney (Chairman), Mr. Amphlett, Mr. Bentinck, Mr. Jacob Bright, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Cross, Mr. Dowse, Mr. Headlam, Mr. Jessel, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr. Lopes, Mr. Pemberton, Mr. Scourfield, Sir John Simeon, Mr. Solicitor General
Report of Select Committee May 13 (No. 210)
Committee * (on re-comm.); Report June 17
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3°" July 9
Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Henley); A. 47, N. 38; M. 9; Debate adjourned
198] Adjourned debate on Question [9th July], "That the Bill be now read 3°;" Question again proposed; Debate resumed July 21, 401
After short debate, Question put, "That 'now' &c."; A. 131, N. 33; M. 98; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 3° [Bill 122]
l. Read 1ª * (Lord Penzance) July 22 (No. 212)
. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 30, 979; after short debate, Bill read 2ª

MARTIN, Mr. C. Wykeham, Newport, Isle of Wight
Army Estimates—Buildings and Repairs, [195] 669

MARTIN, Mr. P. Wykeham, Rochester
Army—Gunpowder Magazines at Upnor, [197] 1168
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 397
Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. [198] 232
Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1816
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 27, [195] 1641
Navy—Government Dockyards, Reductions in the, [194] 377
Supply — Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 509
Miscellaneous Expenses, [198] 974

Matthews, Mr. H., Dungarvan
Ireland—Seizure of Fishing Smacks, [197] 949
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [196] 1790
Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1476

Mauritius—Reported Famine
Question, Mr. R. Fowler; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 18, [194] 1657

Medical Education and Registration—General Council of Question, Sir John Gray; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 6, [197] 1269

Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Brady, Mr. Pim, Mr. Trant Hamilton)
c. Ordered; read 1° * Mar 11 [Bill 48]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 23, [197] 486; after debate, Bill read 2°
Committee *; Report June 29 [Bill 185]
Re-comm.*; Report July 5
Considered * July 7
Read 3° * July 8
l. Read 1ª * (The Lord Granard) July 9 (No. 180)
Read 2ª * July 19
Committee * July 22
Report * July 23
Read 3ª * July 26
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 50]

Mellor, Mr. T. W., Ashton-under-Lyne
Ireland—Property of the Irish Church, [194] 1461
Rateable Property (Metropolis), Leave, [194] 183
Supply—House of Commons Offices, [197] 1477
Royal Palaces, [197] 653

Melly, Mr. G., Stoke-upon-Trent
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 391; Consid. 1085
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1817
*Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1189, 1227, 1252
Irish Church, [198] 84
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 172
Foreign Office, [197] 1679
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 420

Melville, Viscount
Parliament—Business of the House, [198] 15
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Commons Amendts. [198] 1471

Mercantile Marine — Consolidation of Statutes
Question, Mr. Candlish; Answer, Mr. Bright Feb 22, [194] 156

Merchant Seamen, Diet of
Question, Mr. Gilpin; Answer, Mr. Bright Mar 16, [194] 1463

Merchant Shipping and Navigation Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr. John Bright)
c. Acts read; considered in Committee August 9, [198] 1499; after debate, a Resolution agreed to, and reported; Bill ordered; read 1° * [Bill 267]

Merchant Shipping (Colonial), 1869, Bill
[H.L.] (The Earl Granville)
l. Presented; read 1ª * April 13 (No. 56)
Read 2ª * April 15
Committee *; Report April 19
Read 3ª * April 20
c. Read 1° * April 22 [Bill 91]
Read 2° * April 26
Committee *; Report April 27
Considered * April 28
Read 3° * April 29
Royal Assent May 13 [32 Vict. c. 11]

Metropolis
Burlington House, Question, Lord Ronald Gower; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Mar 15, [194] 1351
Cab Stands, Question, Colonel Leslie; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 5, [197] 1169
Cremorne Gardens—Special Licences, Question, Mr. J. G. Talbot; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 14, [196] 1743
Hammersmith Bridge—The University Boat Race, Question, Viscount Bury; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 4, [194] 640; Mar 16, 1467
Marlborough Street Police Court, Question, Mr. Locke; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 23, [198] 561
Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, that She will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House, Papers relating to the Charge made by the Police against three young men on the night of the 30th June last, and tried before Mr. Knox, the Police Magistrate at Marlborough Street" (Mr. Eykyn) August 3, 1218; after short debate, Motion withdrawn
Metropolis Local Management, Question, Mr. Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 23, [194] 206
Metropolis Local Management Act—Returns, Question, Mr. Locke; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Mar 1, [194] 411
Returns 1867-8—(Parl. P. No. 435)
Metropolitan Police Force, Question, Viscount Enfield; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Mar 15, [194] 1354
Metropolitan Railway—Palace Yard Station, Question, Mr. Herbert; Answer, Mr. Layard Mar 22, [194] 1898
Night Houses, Question, Viscount Enfield; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 29, [195] 1852
Palace Yard, Semaphore near, Question, Captain Dawson-Damer; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 11, [194] 1088 Park Lane and Piccadilly Thoroughfare, Moved, "That there be laid before this House, a Copy of all Correspondence which has passed since the month of February 1865, inclusive, between the Lords of the Treasury, the First Commissioner of Works, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and the Metropolitan Board of Works, on the subject of any proposed thoroughfare between Park Lane and Piccadilly (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 132, of Session 1865)" (Mr. Loch) April 13, [195] 756; after short debate, Motion withdrawn; Question, Mr. C. B. Denison; Answer, Mr. Layard April 30, 1973

[cont.

Metropolis—cont.
Park Lane and Hamilton Place—Correspondence—(Parl. P. No. 168)
Police Interference with Passengers, Question, Mr. Eaton; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 9, [195] 477

Poor Law
St. Marylebone Workhouse School, Question, Mr. Cogan; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 1, [197] 944
St. Pancras Workhouse, Question, Colonel Barttelot; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 13, [197] 1754; Question, Dr. Brewer; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 14, 1820

Public Offices—(See that Title)

Public Parks
Battersea Park, Question, Mr. Peek; Answer, Mr. Layard April 15, [195] 843
Finsbury Park, Questions, Mr. W. M. Torrens, Viscount Enfield; Answers, Mr. Layard, Mr. Tite May 13, [196] 740
Hyde Park, Question, Mr. W. Cowper; Answer, Mr. Layard Mar 2, [194] 485—Conviction for Furious Riding, Question, The Earl of Winchilsea; Answer, Earl Granville July 5, [197] 1105; Observations, Captain White; Reply, Mr. Bruce; short debate thereon July 9, 1591
St. James's Park — Bathing, Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, Mr. Layard May 3, [196] 12 — Open Spaces of, Question, Sir Henry Hoare; Answer, Mr. Layard Mar 1, [194] 410
Victoria Park, Question, Mr. C. Reed; Answer, Mr. Layard Mar 2, [194] 486; Question, Mr. Cowper; Answer, Mr. Layard May 13, [196] 749

St. Luke's Hospital, Question, Colonel Barttelot; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 13, [195] 677
Statues in Palace Yard, Question, Mr. Neville-Grenville; Answer, Mr. Layard June 14, [196] 1742 — Canning Statue, Question, Lord Stratheden; Answer, Earl Granville August 9, [198] 1484

Metropolis Gas Bills
Moved, "That the Imperial Gas Bill and the Bills of all other Companies supplying the Metropolis with Gas be referred to the same Committee" (Mr. Thomas Chambers) Feb 25, [194] 300; after short debate, Motion agreed to

Metropolis Local Management Acts Amendment Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess Townshend)
l. Presented; read 1ª * April 29 (No. 86)
Bill withdrawn * June 24

Metropolitan Board of Works
Parl. Papers—
Report for 1867-8 . . . (No. 23)
Returns . . . . . . (No. 24)
Report and Account . (No. 436)
Main Drainage—Barking Creek Outfall, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 6, [196] 260; Question, Colonel French; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 8, 1402
Memorial—Sewage—(Parl. P. No. 231)
Mortality at Barking, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 24, [197] 514
Returns—(Parl. P. No. 278)
Report, 1868, Question, Mr. A. Johnston; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen April 13, [195] 674
Thames Embankment — Proposed Viaduct, Observations, Lord Elcho, Viscount Bury; Reply, Mr. Layard; short debate thereon Feb 19, [194] 133
Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed, "to inquire into the Roadway and Viaduct proposed to be made on the Thames Embankment from Hungerford Bridge to Wellington Street, Strand, and whether the site might not be more advantageously occupied by some Public Building; also to inquire whether any, and if so what, controlling power over Public Works in the Metropolis is vested in and exercised by any Government Department" (Lord Elcho) Feb 23, 277; after short debate, Motion agreed to
And, on Mar 2, Committee nominated as follows:—Lord Elcho (Chairman), Mr. Bentinck, Viscount Bury, Mr. Buxton, Mr. William Cowper, Captain Dawson-Damer, Sir C. W. Dilke, Mr. W. H. Gregory, Mr. Beresford Hope, Mr. Alderman W. Lawrence, Mr. Layard, Mr. M'Clean, Lord John Manners, Viscount Sandon, Mr. Sclater-Booth, Mr. William Henry Smith, and Sir W. Tite Thames Embankment and the Metropolitan Railway Company, Question, Mr. Watkin Williams; Answer, Mr. Layard August 10, [198] 1528
Thames Embankment (South Side), Question, Mr. Guest; Answer, Mr. Tite April 23, [195] 1464

Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Goschen)
c. Resolutions in Committee June 24
Resolutions reported; Bill ordered; read 1° * June 25 [Bill 181]
198] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" (Mr. Ayrton) July 20, 326; after short debate, Bill read 2°, and committed to a Select Committee
And, on July 21, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Ayrton (Chairman), Lord Frederick Cavendish, Mr. Thomas Chambers, Mr. Cross, Mr. M'Laren, Sir Stafford Northcote, and Mr. William Henry Smith
Report of Select Committee July 23 [Bill 238]
Committee * (on re-comm.); Report July 31
. Considered August 2, 1127
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3°" August 3

Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Bill—cont.

198] Amendt. to leave out from "Bill be," and add "re-committed to consider of a Proviso to Clause 22" (Mr. William Henry Smith); Question proposed, "That the words, &c. ;" Amendt. withdrawn; Question again proposed, Debate adjourned

Adjourned Debate, on Question [3rd August], "That the Bill be now read 3° ;" Question again proposed; Debate resumed August 5, 1335

Amendt. to leave out from "Bill be," and add "re-committed to a Committee of the whole House in respect of a Proviso to Clause 22, and a new Clause for restricting the sale of park lands" (Mr. William Henry Smith); after short debate, Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and agreed to; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 3°

l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 6 (No. 280)
Read 2ª * August 7
Committee *; Report August 9
Read 3ª * August 10
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 102]

Metropolitan Building Act (1855) Amendment Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

c. Ordered * July 6
Read 1° * July 13 [Bill 214]
Read 2° * July 22
Committee *; Report July 23
Considered * July 26
Read 3° * July 26
l. Read 1ª * (The Earl of Morley) July 27 (No. 232)
Read 2ª * August 3
Committee *; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 82]

Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment Bill (Mr. T. Chambers, Mr. Locke)

c. Ordered; read 1° * April 13 [Bill 77]
Read 2°, * and referred to a Select Committee May 31
And, on June 16, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Thomas Chambers (Chairman), Colonel Barttelot, Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Buxton, Lord George Hamilton, Mr. Andrew Johnston, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Knight, Mr. Charles Reed, Mr. Henry Samuelson, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson, Mr. Frederick Stanley, Mr. Rowland Winn, Mr. William Cowper, and Mr. Gerard Sturt
Report of Select Committee July 19 (Parl. P. No. 334)
Report * July 19 [Bill 221]
Committee * (on re-comm.)—R.P. July 28
Committee * (on re-comm.); Report August 3
Considered * August 4
Read 3° * August 4
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Devon) August 5 (No. 271)
Read 2ª * August 6
Committee *; Report August 7
Read 3ª * August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 107]

Metropolitan Commons Supplemental Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)

c. Ordered; read 1° * Mar 1 [Bill 30]
Read 2° * Mar 5
Committee *; Report Mar 15
Read 3° * Mar 16
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Morley) Mar 18 (No. 35)
Read 2ª * June 7
Committee *; Report June 8
Read 3ª * June 11
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 63]

Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment Bill (Mr. Goschen, Mr. A. Peel, Mr. Ayrton)

c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Goschen) Mar 16, [194] 1534; Bill ordered, after debate; read 1° *
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" May 28, [196] 946; after debate, Debate adjourned
Debate resumed June 7, 1340
Amendt. to leave out from "That" and add "in the present condition of the Ratepayers of the Metropolis, and of the burthens laid upon them for the relief of the sick and infirm, it is not expedient to adopt any further measures of legislation until full inquiry shall have been made into the existing extent of hospital accommodation, and how far the same may be made adequate to meet the want of the sick poor not relieved in their own dwellings" (Mr. W. M. Torrens); Question proposed, "That the words, &c. ;" after debate, Question put; A. 118, N. 15; M. 103; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2° [Bill 53]
Committee *—R.P. June 25
Committee *—R.P. July 20
Committee *; Report July 23
Considered * July 26
Read 3° * July 27
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Kimberley) July 27 (No. 235)
Read 2ª * July 29
Committee *; Report July 30
Read 3ª * August 2
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 63]

Metropolitan Regulations Bill
(The Marquess Townshend)

l. Presented; read 1ª * April 29 (No. 87)
Bill withdrawn * June 24

Metropolitan Street Tramways Bill (by Order)

c. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 3, [194] 542
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Pease); after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c. ;" A. 209, N. 78; M. 131; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2°
Bill, as amended, further considered May 13, [196] 735

Mexican Bondholders

Question, Mr. H. B. Sheridan; Answer, Mr. Otway July 29, [198] 897

Mexico—Diplomatic Relations with

Question, Mr. H. B. Sheridan; Answer, Mr. Otway April 15, [195] 845; Question, Mr. Somerset Beaumont; Answer, Mr. Otway June 17, [197] 119

Miall, Mr. E., Bradford
Bahamas—Ecclesiastical Grant, [195] 581
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 19, [196] 1768
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1856 ; Lords Amendts. [198] 590

Milbank, Mr. F. A., Yorkshire, N.R.
Language used in Debate in the other House, [198] 368

Militia Bill
(Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Major Vivian)
195] c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Cardwell) April 15, 941 ; Bill ordered ; read 1° * [Bill 82]
Read 2° * April 20
. Committee; Report, after short debate April 22, 1417
. Read 3°, after short debate April 23, 1532
l. Read 1ª * (Lord Northbrook) April 26 (No. 76)
Read 2ª * April 27
. Committee April 29, 1846 (No. 83)
Report * May 3
196] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3ª" May 4, 86 ; after debate, Bill read 3ª
Royal Assent May 13 [32 Vict. c. 13]

Militia (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. Attorney General for Ireland)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * July 20 [Bill 228]
Read 2° * July 22
Committee * ; Report July 29
Considered * July 30
Read 3° * July 31
l. Read 1ª * (Lord Dufferin) August 2 (No. 252)
Read 2ª * August 3
Committee * ; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 80]

Militia Pay Bill (Mr. Dodson, Mr. Secretary Cardwell, Captain Vivian)
c. Ordered * June 18
Read 1° * July 19
Read 2° * July 22
Committee * ; Report July 30
Read 3° * July 31
l. Read 1ª * (The Lord Northbrook) August 2
Read 2ª * August 3
Committee * ; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 66]

Millbank Prison Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Northbrook)
l. Presented ; read 1ª * July 27 (No. 234)
Read 2ª * July 30
Committee * ; Report August 2
Read 3ª * August 3
c. Read 1° * August 3 [Bill 258]
Read 2° * August 4
Committee * ; Report August 5
Considered * August 6
Read 3° * August 6
l. Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 95]

Miller, Mr. J., Edinburgh (City)
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), Leave, [194] 280 ; 2R. [197] 858
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 34, Amendt. [197] 1293 ; cl. 56, Amendt. 1529 ; cl. 63, 1533 ; cl. 122, Amendt. 1765, 1766
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 2040 ; 3R. [196] 1041
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 804 ; cl. 1, 818 ; Amendt. 823 ; cl. 2, Amendt. 835 ; cl. 9, Amendt. 1118, 1120 ; cl. 18, Amendt. 1124 ; cl. 65, Amendt. 1445, 1446
Scotland—Questions, &c.
Income Tax, [196] 471
Queen's Remembrancer, [194] 1187
Sheriff Courts, [196] 1633
Waternish Church, Isle of Skye, [197] 1886
Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 528
Supply—Houses of Parliament, [197] 682
Industrial Museum, Edinburgh, [197] 1212
Learned Societies, [198] 504
Public Offices Site, [197] 1207
Report, [198] 693
Stationery Office, [197] 1697, 1699; Amendt. 1700

Mills, Mr. C. H., Kent, W.
Navy—Barnes, Mr. W., Case of, [195] 842

Milton, Viscount, Yorkshire, W. R.—S.
Canada—Boundaries, [198] 1440
Convention of Paris, Motion for Papers, [196] 1446
United States—Island of San Juan, [198] 1248

Mines
Metalliferous Mines—Legislation in respect to, Question, Mr. Kinnaird ; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Feb 25, [194] 312 ; Question, Lord Elcho ; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 26, [198] 865—Rating of, Question, Mr. St. Aubyn ; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 1, [194] 407 ; Question, Colonel Duncombe ; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 20, [195] 1582
Mold—Riot at, Question, Mr. Osborne Morgan; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 7, [196] 1296
(See Coal Mines, Accidents in)

Mines Regulation Bill (Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * April 15 [Bill 84]
Read 2° * May 6
Bill withdrawn * July 19

Minto, Earl of
North British Railway — Accidental Deaths, Motion for a Paper, [196] 569
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 20, [196] 457 ; Amendt. 460
Scotland—Courts of Law Commission, [195] 1575
Police Systems, [196] 703

Mitchell, Mr. T. A., Bridport
India—Finance, [195] 478

MITFORD, Mr. W. T., Midhurst
  Contagious Diseases, [194] 303
  Contagious Diseases Act, Motion for a Committee, [196] 808
  Gilbert Unions, [194] 626

MONCK, Viscount
  Army—Military Force of the Kingdom, [195] 1420, 1451
  Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1894; Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [197] 753; cl. 6, Amendt. 754; cl. 29, 1135
  Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 33, 44
  Tenure (Ireland), Comm. [195] 1548

Money Laws (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Delahunty, Mr. Blake, Mr. Dawson)
c. Considered in Committee; a Resolution agreed to Feb 23, [194] 273; Bill ordered; read 1° *
  Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 23, [197] 471 [Bill 16]
  Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Sir Frederick W. Heygate); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn; Bill withdrawn

MONK, Mr. C. J., Gloucester
  Assessed Taxes, Collection of, [194] 1086
  Bishops Resignation, Comm. cl. 2, [198] 1322
  Canada—Railway Loan, Res. [197] 1448, 1455
  Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan, 2R. Amendt. [198] 1327
  Civil Offices (Pensions), Consid. [197] 539
  Consecration Fees, [194] 309
  Court of Probate (Registrar Clerks), [196] 1495
  Courts of Justice—Carey Street, [198] 1143, 1144, 1529
  Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1783, 1788
  Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2 [195] 1035
  Marriage Laws, [198] 1404
  Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. Instruction, [197] 467, 470; [198] 362
  Revenue Officers, Leave, [194] 271; 2R. 1573, 1598
  Supply—Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1468, 1471
    Consular Services, [198] 954
    Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1464, 1465
    Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 967
    Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 678
    Houses of Parliament, [197] 679; Amendt. 681
    Industrial Museum, Edinburgh, [197] 1212
    Learned Societies, [198] 504; Amendt. 505
    Miscellaneous Expenses, [198] 972
    Nonconforming Clergy, [198] 965
    Poor Law Administration, [198] 507
    Probate Court and Registries, Amendt. [197] 1210
    Public Buildings, [197] 676
    Public Offices Site, [197] 1207
    Public Works (Ireland), [197] 1460, 1462
    Record Office, [197] 1693
    Stationery Office, [197] 1697
  Telegraph, Comm. cl. 5, [198] 771; cl. 24, 772
  Turkey—Cretan Insurgents, [195] 1098
  Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 616

MONSELL, Right Hon. W. (Under Secretary of State for the Colonies), Limerick Co.
  Bahamas—Ecclesiastical Grant, [195] 581
  British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1107, 1115
  Canada—Questions, &c.
    Dockyard Emigrants, [195] 1698; [196] 105
    Hudson's Bay Company, [194] 309; [195] 583, 680; [196] 1497; [197] 1526
    Intercolonial Railway, [196] 878
    Patent Law, [198] 1293
  Cape of Good Hope—Boers of the Trans-Vaal Republic, [197] 1342
    Enslavement of Kaffir Children, [194] 131
  China—Hong Kong Gambling Houses, [197] 1667
    Legislative Council, [198] 153
  Colonial Returns, [196] 470
  Emigration Commission, [195] 580
  Emigration to Western Australia, [197] 1166
  Fenianism in Australia, [195] 31
  Gambia—Prisoners in Bathurst Gaol, [198] 105
  Gibraltar Convict Prison, [194] 953
  Ireland—Fenian Conspiracy, [194] 1791
  Irish Church, 3R. [196] 1023
  Jamaica—Disendowment of the Church, [198] 1542
  Malta, Res. [197] 1676
  Mauritius—Famine in, Reported, [194] 1657
  Natal—Green, Rev. Mr., Case of, [196] 467
  Newfoundland Confederation, [194] 1091
  New Zealand—Affairs of, [198] 477
    Imperial Troops in the Colony, [195] 676
  O'Farrell Papers, The, [195] 1741; [196] 19
  Order of St. Michael and St. George, [194] 1349
  Parliament—Returns, [194] 111
  Post Office—Communication with Australia, [195] 140
  Queensland—Alleged Slavery in, [196] 571; [197] 641, 644
  Sierra Leone—Thomas v. Huggins, Case of, Res. [198] 1216
  South Sea Islands, Slave Trade from the, [197] 641, 644
  Supply—Colonies, Grants in Aid, [198] 958, 960
    Emigration, [198] 962
    Tonnage Bounties, [198] 961
  Tasmania—Public Worship, [194] 1086
  West Indies, The, [197] 1889
    Clergy in the, [194] 2001

MONTAGU, Right Hon. Lord R., Huntingdonshire
  Cattle Plague—Diseased Foreign Sheep, [195] 1363, 1364, 1467
  Contagious Diseases (Animals), Leave, [194] 90; 2R. 996, 1034
  Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 677, 678; 2R. [195] 445; [196] 1498; Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1271, 1279; cl. 16, Amendt. 1291
  Endowed Schools, Leave, [194] 117
  Pharmacy Act Amendment, Leave, [194] 683; Comm. [195] 1934
  Supply—Education, Public, [198] 180, 185
    Science and Art Department, [198] 215

Montgomery, Sir G. G., Peeblesshire
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), Leave, [194] 280 ; 2R. Amendt. [197] 843
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 392
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 814 ; cl. 1, 821 ; Comm. 1108 ; cl. 4, 1112 ; cl. 8, 1118 ; cl. 9, 1120 ; cl. 24, 1238, 1387 ; Consid. Amendt. 1459
Scotland—Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, [194] 1185 ; Motion for a Return, 1265, 1273
Supply—Board of Manufactures (Scotland), [198] 507
Report, [198] 519

Montrose, Duke of
North British Railway—Accidental Deaths, Motion for a Paper, [196] 569
Parliament—Construction of the House, Res. [198] 11

Moore, Mr. G. H., Mayo Co
Ireland—Fenian Convicts—O'Donovan Rossa, [198] 1422
"Lavelle v. Proudfoot," Case of, [196] 884
Ireland—O'Sullivan, Mr., Case of, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1160, 1166, 1171
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 2061 ; Comm. cl. 26, [195] 1625 ; cl. 27, 1867 ; cl. 39, [196] 283 ; Lords Amendts. [198] 57, 67
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. cl. 1, [198] 366 ; Motion for reporting Progress, ib.
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 613
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 195
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 798, 808, 812, 814, 815
Supply—Education, National, [198] 740

Morgan, Mr. G. O., Denbighshire
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [197] 315
Bishops Resignation, Comm. cl. 2, [198] 1322
*Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1308
Married Women's Property, 2R. [195] 788
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 650
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 819
Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1854
University Tests, 2R. [194] 1433 ; Comm. add. cl. [197] 1094
Wales—Riots at Mold, [196] 1296

Morley, Earl of Aggravated Assaults Amendment, 2R. Amendt. [196] 564
Beerhouses, &c. 2R. [196] 1585
Contagious Diseases, [194] 284
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 10, [194] 1323
Industrial Schools (Great Britain), 2R. [196] 354
Infant Life Preservation, 2R. [197] 1739
North British Railway—Accidental Deaths, Motion for a Paper, [196] 571
Reformatory Schools Amendment, 2R. [196] 352
Salmon Fishery Act (Scotland), [197] 1753
Scotland—Courts of Law Commission, [195] 1575
Police Systems, [196] 704
Scotland—Salmon Fisheries, Motion for a Return, [194] 1082
Trades Unions (Protection of Funds), 2R. [198] 992 ; Comm. 1070
University Tests, 2R. [198] 133

Morley, Mr. S., Bristol
Bankruptcy, Leave, [194] 791 ; 2R. [195] 162 ;
196] Comm. cl. 6, 1216 ; cl. 7, 1218 ; cl. 13, Amendt. 1220 ; cl. 14, 1222 ; cl. 32, Amendt. 1402, 1403 ; cl. 46, 1406, 1415 ; cl. 47, Amendt. 1416 ; cl. 53, Amendt. 1592; cl. 54, 1597 ; cl. 59, 1602 ; cl. 88, 1606; cl 91, Amendt. 1607, 1608, 1898 ; cl. 118, 1900 ; cl. 126, ib., 1903, 1905 ; cl. 129, 1907
197] cl. 130, 317 ; cl. 131, 415 ; add. cl. 418, 419
198] Lords Amendts. 1094, 1095, 1125
County Courts, 2R. [194] 1567
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 835
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 5, [197] 576 ; cl. 14, Amendt. 580
Supply—Houses of Parliament, [197] 681
Wisley Common, Motion for a Committee, [195] 129

Morrison, Mr. W., Plymouth
Imperial Gas, Consid. Amendt. [195] 1782, 1798
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 32, [196] 40 ; cl. 59, 409 ; Lords Amendts. [198] 83
Municipal Corporations (Metropolis), 2R. [196] 1950
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Comm. [194] 1546
Post Office—Landing Mails at a Western Port, [196] 927
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 993
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1928

Mowbray, Right Hon. J. R., Oxford University
Bishops Resignation, Comm. [198] 1311, 1312
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 9, [196] 1746 ; cl. 15, 1766 ; cl. 29, 1773
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 2026
University Tests, Leave, [194] 273 ; 2R. Amendt. 1045, 1046, 1054 ; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 788 ; cl. 6, 793

Mundella, Mr. A. J., Sheffield
Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1430
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1166
County Courts, 2R. [196] 685
Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1243
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 29, [196] 1774
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 350
Navy—Naval Contracts, [198] 644, 649
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 63
Bewdley Writ, [194] 664
Patents for Inventions, Res. [196] 914
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 510
Post Office—Inland Postage, Res. [195] 243
Printworks Regulation, Res. [194] 1541
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 819
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 980
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 178
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1373

Municipal Corporations (Metropolis) Bill
(Mr. Buxton, Mr. Thomas Hughes)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Mar 8 [Bill 39]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 16, [196] 1939
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Bentinck); after short debate, Question, "That 'now,' &c.;" put, and agreed to; main Question put, and negatived; Bill withdrawn

Municipal Franchise Bill
(Mr. Herbert, Mr. Hodgkinson, Mr. Candlish)
c. Ordered; read 1°* April 15 [Bill 85]
Read 2°* May 4
Committee*; Report May 10
Considered* June 7
Read 3°* June 9
l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Lichfield) June 11 (No. 125)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 8, [197] 1417; Bill read 2ª
Committee* July 13 (No. 187)
Report July 19, [198] 145 (No. 200)
Read 3ª* July 22
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 55]

Municipal Magistrates, Removal of
Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 11, [196] 572; Question, Earl Grey; Answer, The Lord Chancellor; short debate thereon June 1, 1085
(See O'Sullivan's Disability)

Muntz, Mr. P. H., Birmingham
Army—Henry-Martini Rifle, [198] 1370
New Arms, Committee on, [198] 498
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 394
Bankruptcy, Leave, [194] 795; Comm. cl. 14, [196] 1223; cl. 46, 1414; cl. 49, 1417; cl. 54, 1597; cl. 88, 1606
Bills of Exchange, Res. [197] 140
County Courts, 2R. [196] 686
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 24, [196] 853; cl. 26, 854
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 567
Factory Acts—Hours of Labour, [195] 1851
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1006; cl. 1, 1013
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 349
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1740
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1798
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 618, 623
Navy—Contracts, [195] 51; [198] 633
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, Amendt. [194] 663
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 994
Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 801
Supply—Admiralty Court Registry, [198] 911
Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1473
Consular Services, [198] 953
County Courts, [198] 908
Dundrum Lunatic Asylum, [198] 912, 913
Embassies and Missions Abroad, [198] 927, 948
Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1466
Excesses on Grants, [194] 773
Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1438
Land Registry Office, [198] 909
Learned Societies, [198] 505
[cont.

Muntz, Mr. P. H.—cont.
Probate Court, [198] 909
Tonnage Bounties, [198] 960
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 429; Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 787

Murphy, Mr. N. D., Cork City
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 33, [196] 61
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 202, 229; 2R. 582
Post Horse and Carriage Licences Duties, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1528
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 816
Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. Amendt. [194] 991, 995; Comm. Amendt. [196] 1451
Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1489

Murphy's Lectures
The Mayor of Tynemouth—Act 39 Geo. III. c. 79, Question, Mr. Sinclair Aytoun; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 14, [195] 759
Mr. Murphy, the Protestant Lecturer, Arrest of, Question, Mr. Greene; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 17, [197] 124; Questions, Mr. Greene, Mr. Newdegate; Answers, Mr. Bruce June 22, 411; Question, Mr. Newdegate; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 9, 1542
Freedom of Speech—Arrest of Mr. Murphy, Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 23, To leave out from "That" and add "the right of free speech is one of the most important safeguards of good Government, and that attacks upon this right are, therefore, dangerous to the welfare of the State:—That the recent conduct of the Secretary of State for the Home Department in preventing free discussion of important topics was, in fact, an attack upon this great safeguard of freedom; and is, therefore, deserving of reprehension by this House:—That this conduct of the Secretary of State for the Home Department has proved especially mischievous, since it has led to breaches of the law on the part of official persons, more particularly by the Mayor of Birmingham, who caused the arrest of an innocent person for the purpose of preventing what to him was distasteful discussion" (Mr. Newdegate), [198] 592; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Debate adjourned Debate resumed; after further debate, Question put, and agreed to

Museums, &c., Opening of, on Sundays
Observations, Mr. W. H. Gregory June 4, [196] 1254; after debate, [House counted out]—The Lord's Day Society and the Petition Forgeries, Explanation, Mr. W. H. Gregory June 10, 1493; Explanation, Mr. T. Chambers June 16, 1916

Mutiny Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Secretary Cardwell, The Judge Advocate)
c. Ordered; read 1°* Mar 12
Read 2°* Mar 18
Committee*; Report Mar 9
Read 3°* Mar 22
[cont.

Mutiny Bill—cont.
l. Read 1ª* (The Earl Granville) April 5
Read 2ª* April 6
Committee*; Report April 8
Read 3ª* April 9
Royal Assent April 19 [32 Vict. c. 4]

National Debt
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that steps should be taken gradually to reduce the National Debt" (Mr. Lambert) August 3, [198] 1211; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

National Gallery
Deterioration of Pictures in South Kensington Museum, Motion for Address for "Copy of the Report of the Committee appointed by the Science and Art Department to inquire into the alleged deterioration of the Pictures belonging to the National Gallery deposited at the South Kensington Museum" (Mr. Dillwyn) June 11, [196] 1635; Motion withdrawn
National Portrait Gallery—Hogarth's Portrait, Observations, Mr. Disraeli July 30, [198] 996 12th Report—(Parl. P. No. 189)
Purchases — The "Rembrandt," Questions, Lord De L'Isle and Dudley, The Earl of Winchilsea; Answers, Earl Granville, Lord Overstone; short debate thereon July 26, [198] 651
Moved to resolve, That henceforth it be an instruction to Mr. Boxall, R.A., to buy no picture in England without previously submitting it to the judgment of the Trustees of the National Gallery, or any picture in foreign parts which has not got an authentic pedigree from the date of its being painted by the master to whom it is ascribed to the day of purchase, unless by special permission in writing from the aforesaid Trustees (The Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham) August 3, [198] 1140; after short debate, Motion withdrawn
Parl. Papers—
Report for 1868 . . . . . . (No. 3)
New National Gallery—Correspondence . . . . . (No. 88)

Naval Stores Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Camperdown)
l. Presented; read 1ª* Mar 15 (No. 33)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 13, [195] 672; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee* April 15
Report* April 16 (No. 57)
Read 3ª* April 19
c. Read 1°* April 21 [Bill 88]
Read 2°* April 23
Committee*; Report April 26
Considered* April 28
Read 3°* April 29
Royal Assent May 13 [32 Vict. c. 12]

NAVY
Admiralty Accounts — Recommendations of Select Committee, Question, Mr. Seely; Answer, Mr. Childers August 10, [198] 1526
Admiralty — Third Class Clerks, Question, Captain Grosvenor; Answer, Mr. Childers Feb 23, [194] 205
Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 11, To leave out from "That" and add "in the opinion of this House, the members of the Civil Service are entitled to a scale of pay in accordance with the terms of any Order in Council which has not been revoked or qualified by a succeeding Order of equal authority" (Captain Grosvenor), [196] 1621; after short debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 107, N. 64; M. 43; Question, Lord Henry Lennox; Answer, Mr. Childers June 22, [197] 412
Clerks (Somerset House)—(P. P. No. 103)
African Squadron — Returns, Question, Observations, Mr. J. Lowther; Reply, Mr. Childers; short debate thereon April 2, [195] 41—Force on West Coast, Question, Mr. Rylands; Answer, Mr. Childers August 10, [198] 1527
Armament of Turret-ships, Question, The Duke of Somerset; Answer, The Earl of Camperdown April 8, [195] 340; Explanation, The Earl of Camperdown April 12, 569
Australian Preserved Meats, Question, Mr. Lusk; Answer, Mr. Childers Mar 2, [194] 487
Board of Admiralty, Constitution of the, Question, Sir James Elphinstone; Answer, Mr. Childers Feb 25, [194] 304
Channel and Mediterranean Fleets, Question, Captain Egerton; Answer, Mr. Childers July 27, [198] 797
Coal for the Navy, Question, Mr. Sinclair Aytoun; Answer, Mr. Baxter May 28, [196] 879 Report of Trials—(P. P. No. 270)
Coal, North Country, Question, Mr. H. Vivian; Answer, Mr. Childers April 22, [195] 1354
Coastguard, The, Question, Mr. Stewart Hardy; Answer, Mr. Childers Mar 4, [194] 628
Coastguardmen in the Flying Squadron, Observations, Sir John Hay; Reply, Mr. Childers June 18, [197] 309; Question, Lord Eustace Cecil; Answer, Mr. Childers July 22, [198] 453
Contracts, Observations, Mr. Muntz April 2, [195] 51; Observations, Mr. Muntz; Reply, Mr. Baxter; short debate thereon July 23, [198] 633; Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Baxter July 29, 897
Corruption in the Admiralty Departments, Question, Lord Elcho; Answer, Mr. Childers August 9, [198] 1489
"Crocodile" Transport, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Mr. Grant Duff April 20, [195] 1197
Dockyards
Government Dockyards, Reductions in, Observations, Sir James Elphinstone; Reply, Mr. Childers; short debate thereon Feb 26, [194] 374
Distress, Question, Sir J. Elphinstone; Answer, Mr. Childers April 2, [195] 47

[cont.

NAVY—cont.

Emigration, Observations, Sir James Elphinstone; Reply, Mr. Cardwell April 16, [195] 991; Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 27, [195] 1698; Question, Sir Harry Verney; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 4, [196] 105; Question, Mr. Alderman Salomons; Answer, Mr. Childers June 7, 1297
Parl. Papers—
Dockyard Artizans (Canada) 196, 354, 403

Fresh Water for the Fleet, Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Childers July 29, [198] 892

Greenwich Hospital
Question, Mr. Pease; Answer, Mr. Childers Mar 5, [194] 717
Greenwich Hospital Fund—Merchant Seamen, Question, Mr. Armitstead; Answer, Mr. Childers May 13, [196] 745
Greenwich Sixpence, The—Mercantile Marine Fund, Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Mr. Childers April 29, [195] 1853
(See Supply)
Parl Papers—
Estimates . . . . . . (No. 131, 364)
Papers . . . . (No. 207)
Accounts, 1867-8 . . . (No. 163)

Herne Bay Oyster Company and H.M.S. "Buzzard," Question, Mr. Pemberton; Answers, Mr. Bright, Mr. Childers Mar 1, [194] 407; Question, Mr. Pemberton; Answer, Mr. Bright Mar 8, 838

"Inconstant," The, Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Childers May 6, [196] 262

Lord High Admiral, Office of, Question, Mr. White; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 4, [194] 627

Malta—New Port and Docks, Question, Mr. Onslow; Answer, Mr. Childers April 27, [195] 1695

Moorings in Dover Harbour, Question, Major Dickson; Answer, Mr. Childers April 26, [195] 1353

Naval Chaplains, Question, Mr. Eykyn; Answer, Mr. Childers Mar 18, [194] 1654

Naval Officers on Foreign Stations, Instructions to, Question, Colonel Sykes; Answer, Mr. Childers Mar 15, [194] 1353

Pure Lime Juice, Question, Mr. Candlish; Answer, Mr. Baxter August 5, [198] 1291

Reserve Channel Squadron—Coastguard and Naval Reserve Seamen, Question, Mr. Gourley; Answer, Mr. Childers June 4, [196] 1236

Royal Naval Reserve, Question, Mr. Hanbury Tracy; Answer, Mr. Childers Mar 2, [194] 484

"Will-of-the-Wisp" Journal and the Admiralty, Question, Mr. Hardcastle; Answer, Mr. Childers Feb 23, [194] 208

Woolwich Dockyard—Mr. Barnes, Admiralty Pilot, Question, Mr. Mills; Answer, Mr. Childers April 15, [195] 842

NELSON, Earl
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1741
Ecclesiastical Courts, &c., Nomination of Committee, [195] 1535
Endowed Schools, 2R. [197] 613; Comm. cl. 8, 1875
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1342
Irish Church, 2R. [197] 114; Comm. cl. 16, Amendt. 921; cl. 25, 998; cl. 46, 1164
St. Katherine's Hospital, [195] 1945

NEVILLE-GRENVILLE, Mr. R., Somersetshire, Mid.
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1168
Army—Yeomanry Cavalry, [194] 158
Civil Service Estimates, [195] 27
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 22, [196] 853; cl. 26, 854
Endowed Schools, Leave, [194] 121; [197] 516
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1006
Income Tax, Payment of the, [195] 843
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 23, [195] 1529
Metropolis—Statues in Palace Yard, [196] 1742
Supply—Embassies and Missions Abroad, [198] 926, 952
Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 966
Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 677
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 660, 665
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 415; Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), 612; Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 807

NEWDEGATE, Mr. C. N., Warwickshire, N.
Agriculture, Department of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 501
Army—Committee on New Arms, [198] 497
Contagious Diseases (Animals), 2R. [194] 1038
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1280
Ecclesiastical Titles Act Repeal, Leave, [194] 186, 487
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 9, [196] 1748; cl. 41, 1782
Fenianism in Australia, [195] 30, 31
French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 346
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1739
Habitual Criminals, Comm. [198] 1267
Imprisonment for Debt, Consid. cl. 5, [197] 762
Ireland—Fenian Conspiracy, [194] 1790
Maynooth College, [194] 1091; [195] 49, 51, 360
195] Irish Church, Comm. Amendt.* 848; cl. 10, 1104; cl. 12, 1117; cl. 18, 1413, 1414, 1476, 1478; cl. 25, 1595, 1597; cl. 27, 1645; cl. 29, 1886
196] cl. 37, 74; cl. 39, 113, 119, 121, 134, 137, 147, 283, 341; Consid. 763; 3R. 1069
197] Lords Amendts. 1916, 1941, 1942, 1964
198] 43, 44
Libel, 2R. Amendt. [194] 1604
Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 263; [195] 980
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, [197] 411, 1542; *Res. [198] 592, 617, 621, 632, 633

[cont.

Newdegate, Mr. C. N.—cont.
- O'Farrell Papers, The, [195] 1468, 1470, 1584 ; *1743, 1755, 1758, 1854, 2064 ; [196] 17
- O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 201 ; 2R. 579
- Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 84
  - Business of the House, [195] 1473, 1978 ; [198] 157
- Pharmacy Act Amendment, Comm. [195] 1933, 1934
- Poor Law (Removal of Children), Res. [197] 1340
- Public Houses, &c. Res. [197] 456
- Roman Catholic Charities, &c. Motion for a Committee, [194] *384 ; [195] 1362 ; *Motion for Returns, [198] 1014
- Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 512
- University Tests, 2R. [194] 1444, 1451, 1452 ; Comm. [197] 786 ; add. cl. 1095
- Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 585, 586
- Witnesses (House of Commons), Motion for a Committee, [196] 624

New Parishes and Church Building Acts Amendment Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Archbishop of York)

l. Presented ; read 1ª* May 13 (No. 106)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" June 11, [196] 1582 ; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee* ; Report June 24 (No. 150)
Re-comm.* July 12
Report* July 13 (No. 184)
Read 3ª* July 15
c. Read 1º* July 20 [Bill 225]
Read 2º* July 26
Committee* ; Report July 29
Considered* July 30
Read 3º* July 30
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 94]

New Peers
- Dec 15, 1868—The Right Hon. Sir William Page Wood, Knight, Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, Baron Hatherley of Down-Hatherley in the county of Gloucester
  - William Ernest Baron Feversham Viscount Helmsley of Helmsley and Earl of Feversham of Ryedale in the North Riding of the county of York
- Feb 18, 1869—The Earl of Caithness, a Peer of Scotland, Baron Barrogill of the United Kingdom
- Mar 2—Edward Anthony John Viscount Gormanston, a Peer of Ireland, created Baron Gormanston of Whitewood in the county of Meath
- April 15—The Right Hon. Sir John Laird Mair Lawrence, baronet, G. C. B., G.C.S.I., Baron Lawrence of the Punjaub and of Grately in the county of Southampton

[cont.

New Peers—cont.
- April 23—The Right Hon. Sir James Plaisted Wilde, knight, Baron Penzance of Penzance in the county of Cornwall
- July 2 — Lord Rollo, Baron Dunning of the United Kingdom

Sat First
- Dec 10, 1868—James Bishop of Hereford
- Dec 15—The Earl of Abergavenny, after the death of his Father
  - The Lord Carysfort, after the death of his Father
- Feb 11, 1869—The Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe
- Feb 16—Archibald Campbell Archbishop of Canterbury
  - John Bishop of London
  - William Connor Bishop of Peterborough
  - Richard Chevenix Archbishop of Dublin
- Feb 18—The Lord Carleton, after the death of his Father
  - The Duke of Norfolk, after the death of his Father
- April 19—The Viscount Gough, after the death of his Father
- April 22—The Earl De La Warr, after the death of his Father
- April 26—The Lord Cloncurry, after the death of his Father
- April 30—The Earl Ferrers, after the death of his Father
- May 3—The Lord Meldrum, after the death of his Father
- May 7—The Earl of Ilchester, after the death of his Uncle
- May 10—The Lord Bishop of Tuam
- May 11—The Lord Wynford, after the death of his Father
- May 13—The Earl of Hillsborough, after the death of his Father
- June 14—The Marquess of Anglesey, after the death of his Father
  - The Earl of Radnor, after the death of his Father
  - The Lord Leconfield, after the death of his Father
  - The Lord Ross, after the death of his Brother
  - The Viscount Combermere, after the death of his Father
  - The Lord Fingall, after the death of his Father
- June 21—The Lord Hawke, after the death of his Brother
- June 22—The Lord Stuart of Castle Stuart, after the death of his Father
- June 28—The Lord Ashburton, after the death of his Father
- July 1—The Lord Stanley of Alderley, after the death of his Father

Representative Peers for Ireland
(Writs and Returns.)
- Feb 16—The Earl of Rosse, v. Henry Baron Farnham, deceased
- July 8—The Earl of Bantry, v. The Earl of Wicklow, deceased

Representative Peer for Scotland
(Writ and Return.)
- July 8—The Earl of Kellie ; Certificate read

New Writs Issued

Dec 15, 1868—For Greenwich, v. Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone, First Commissioner of the Treasury

For Oxford City, v. Right Hon. Edward Cardwell, Secretary of State

For London University, v. Right Hon. Robert Lowe, Chancellor of the Exchequer

For Pontefract, v. Right Hon. Hugh Culling Eardley Childers, First Commissioner of the Admiralty

For Birmingham, v. Right Hon. John Bright, President of the Board of Trade

For London City, v. Right Hon. George Joachim Goschen, Commissioner of Poor Law

For Southwark, v. Right Hon. Austen Henry Layard, First Commissioner of Works

For Halifax, v. James Stansfeld, esquire, Commissioner of the Treasury

For Plymouth, v. Sir Robert Porrett Collier, knight, Attorney General

For Exeter, v. Sir John Duke Coleridge, knight, Solicitor General

For Bradford, v. Right Hon. William Edward Forster, Vice President of the Committee of Council for Education

For Ripon, v. Lord John Hay, Commissioner of the Admiralty

For Truro, v. Hon. John Cranch Walker Vivian, Commissioner of the Treasury

For Wareham, v. John Hales Montagu Calcraft, esquire, deceased

Dec 29—For Louth, v. Right Hon. Chichester Samuel Parkinson Fortescue, Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland

For Clare, v. Sir Colman Michael O'Loghlen, baronet, Judge Advocate General

For Kerry, v. Viscount Castlerosse, Vice Chamberlain of the Household

For Kildare, v. Right Hon. Otho Augustus FitzGerald, Comptroller of the Household

For Westmeath, v. Algernon William Fulke Greville, esquire, Groom in Waiting

For Mallow, v. Right Hon. Edward Sullivan, Attorney General for Ireland

For Wigtown District of Burghs, v. George Young, esquire, Solicitor General for Scotland

For Clackmannan and Kinross, v. William Patrick Adam, esquire, Commissioner of the Treasury

For Hawick District of Burghs, v. George Otto Trevelyan, esquire, Commissioner of the Admiralty

For Derbyshire (Southern Division), v. Sir Thomas Gresley, baronet, deceased

[cont.

New Writs Issued—cont.

During Recess

For Renfrew, v. Archibald Alexander Speirs, esquire, deceased

Feb 17, 1869—For London City, v. Charles Bell, esquire, deceased

Feb 18—For New Radnor, v. Richard Green Price, esquire, Chiltern Hundreds

Feb 19—For Wexford Borough, v. Richard Joseph Devereux, esquire, void Election

For Westbury, v. John Lewis Phipps, esquire, void Election

Mar 4—For Bradford, v. Henry William Ripley, esquire, void Election

For Bewdley, v. Sir Richard Atwood Glass, void Election

Mar 5—For Drogheda, v. Benjamin Whitworth, esquire, void Election

For Scarborough, v. Sir John Vanden Bempde Johnstone, baronet, deceased

Mar 17—For Dumfries County, v. Sir Sydney Hedley Waterlow, incapable of Sitting and Voting

Mar 22—For Hereford City, v. George Clive, esquire, and John William Shaw Wyllie, esquire, void Election

For Blackburn, v. William Henry Hornby, esquire, and Joseph Feilden, esquire, void Election

April 9—For Sussex (Western Division), v. The Hon. Henry Wyndham, called up to the House of Peers

April 16—For Brecknock Borough, v. Howel Gwyn, esquire, void Election

May 3—Bewdley Writ—Return amended—Hon. Augustus Henry Archibald Anson, v. John Cunliffe Pickersgill Cunliffe, unduly returned

May 5—For Liskeard, v. Sir Arthur William Buller, deceased

May 31—For Stafford Borough, v. Henry Davis Pochin, esquire, and Colonel Walter Meller, void Elections

June 9—For Nottingham Town, v. Sir Robert Juckes Clifton, baronet, deceased

July 30—For New Sarum, v. Edward William Terrick Hamilton, esquire, Chiltern Hundreds

August 3—For Antrim, v. Rear Admiral George Henry Seymour, C.B., deceased

August 9—For Caithness-shire, v. George Traill, esquire, Manor of Northstead

New Members Sworn

Dec 29, 1868—Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone, Greenwich

Right Hon. Edward Cardwell, Oxford City

Right Hon. Austen Henry Layard, Southwark

Right Hon. Robert Lowe, London University

Right Hon. Hugh Culling Eardley Childers, Pontefract

Right Hon. William Edward Forster, Bradford

Lord John Hay, Ripon

Hon. John Cranch Walker Vivian, Truro

[cont.

New Members Sworn—cont.
- Right Hon. George Joachim Goschen, London City
- James Stansfeld, the younger, esquire, Halifax
- Right Hon. John Bright (being one of the people called Quakers, made the Affirmation required by Law), Birmingham
- Feb 16, 1869—Sir John Duke Coleridge, Exeter
  - William Patrick Adam, esquire, Clackmannan and Kinross
  - George Otto Trevelyan, esquire, Hawick District of Burghs
  - Right Hon. Lord Otho Augustus FitzGerald, Kildare
  - Viscount Castlerosse, Kerry
  - Sir Robert Porrett Collier, Plymouth
  - Right Hon. Henry Austin Bruce, Renfrew
  - George Young, esquire, Wigtown District of Burghs
  - Right Hon. Chichester Samuel Parkinson Fortescue, Louth
  - Right Hon. Edward Sullivan, Mallow
  - Right Hon. Sir Colman Michael O'Loghlen, baronet, Clare
  - Captain Algernon William Fulke Greville, Westmeath
  - Henry Wilmot, esquire, Derby County (Southern Division)
- Feb 23—Baron Lionel Nathan de Rothschild, London City
- Mar 1—Marquess of Hartington, New Radnor
  - Charles Paul Phipps, esquire, Westbury
- Mar 9—Henry James, esquire, Taunton
- Mar 15—John Cunliffe Pickersgill Cunliffe, esquire, Bewdley
  - Edward Miall, esquire, Bradford
- Mar 16—Sir Harcourt Johnstone, baronet, Scarborough
  - Richard Joseph Devereux, esquire, Wexford Borough
- Mar 18—Thomas Whitworth, esquire, Drogheda
- April 2—Major George Gustavus Walker, Dumfries County
- April 5—Colonel Edward Clive, and Chandos Wren Hoskyns, esquire, Hereford City
- April 6—Henry Master Feilden, esquire, and Edward Kenworthy Hornby, esquire, Blackburn
- April 13—John Samuel Wanley Sawbridge Erle Drax, esquire, Wareham
- April 19—The Earl of March, Sussex (Western Division)
- April 27—Lord Hyde, Brecknock Borough
- May 13 — Montague John Guest, esquire, Youghal
- May 31 — Right Hon. Edward Horsman, Liskeard
- June 10—Hon. Reginald Arthur James Talbot, and Thomas Salt the younger, esquire, Stafford Borough
- June 17—Charles Seely, the younger, esquire, Nottingham Town

Newspapers, &c. Bill (Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
- c. Ordered; read 1º * April 8 [Bill 66]
  - Read 2º * April 15
  - Committee *; Report April 22, [195] 1416
  - Considered * April 23
  - Read 3º * April 26
- l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) April 27
  - Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" May 31, [196] 964; after short debate, Bill read 2ª (No. 80)
  - Committee *; Report June 18 (No. 137)
  - Read 3ª * June 21
  - Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 24]

Newspapers—The Copyright Act—Delivery to the British Museum
- Questions, Sir John Gray, Mr. Baines; Answers, Mr. Ayrton July 23, [198] 559

New Zealand
- Affairs of, Observations, Viscount Bury; Reply, Mr. Monsell; long debate thereon July 22, [198] 456; Observations, The Earl of Carnarvon; Reply, Earl Granville; debate thereon July 27, 778
- The War, Observations, Earl Granville Feb 26, [194] 332
- Withdrawal of the Imperial Troops, Question, Mr. Sartoris; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 13, [195] 675

Nicol, Mr. J. Dyce, Kincardineshire
- Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 112, [197] 1765
- Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee, [196] 635
- Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), Leave, [194] 113
- India—Bank of Bombay, [194] 1186
- Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 527

Nitro Glycerine Bill (Sir John Hay, Mr. Alderman Lawrence, Mr. Graves)
- c. Resolution in Committee; Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1º * July 12 [Bill 211]
  - Read 2º * July 15
  - Committee *; Report July 22 [Bill 235]
  - Committee * (on re-comm.); Report July 29
  - Considered * July 30
  - Read 3º * July 30
- l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Morley) August 2 (No. 245)
  - Read 2ª * August 3
  - Committee * August 5
  - Report * August 6 (No. 277)
  - Read 3ª * August 7
  - Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 113]

Noel, Hon. G. J., Rutlandshire
- Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [196] 1784

Norfolk Island Bishopric Bill [H.L.] (The Earl Granville)
- l. Presented; read 1ª * April 23 (No. 73)
  - Read 2ª * April 26
  - Committee *; Report April 27
  - Read 3ª * April 29

[cont.

Norfolk Island Bishopric Bill—cont.
c. Read 1° * May 3 [Bill 104]
Read 2° * May 6
Committee *; Report May 31
Read 3° * June 1
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 16]

North, Colonel J. S., Oxfordshire
Army—Questions, &c.
Allowances to Troops in China and Japan, [194] 1463
Colonels in the Indian Army, [197] 1888, 1889
Crimean Prize Money, [197] 1669
Fines for Drunkenness, [196] 1295
Japan, Officers in, [198] 899, 902, 903, 905
Army—Adjutancies of Militia, Res. [197] 139
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1530
Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1171
Martial Law, [195] 661, 663
Militia, &c. [196] 1574
Bright, Mr., Letter of, [197] 121
Canada—Reduction of Forces, [196] 748
Contagious Diseases Act, Motion for a Committee, [196] 809
India—Banda and Kirwee Booty, [194] 1462
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. Motion for Adjournment, [196] 1450

Northbrook, Lord (Under Secretary of State for War)
Army—Military Force of the Kingdom, [195] 1436, 1448, 1451, 1462
Army—School of Musketry at Hythe, Motion for Report, [197] 1594
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), [198] 1139
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [197] 898 ; cl. 15, 920 ; cl. 33, 1155, 1156 ; Report, 1500 ; 3R. 1661
Militia, Comm. [195] 1847 ; 3R. [196] 94

Northcote, Right Hon. Sir S. H., Devonshire, N.
Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 635
Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1424
Agriculture, Department of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 499
Asia, Central, [197] 1577
British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1112
Canada and the Hudson's Bay Company, [196] 1497
China—Communication with, [198] 1038
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1322
Endowed Schools, Leave, [194] 116 ; 2R. 1413 ; Comm. cl. (A) 12, [196] 1762 ; cl. 41, 1781
Exeter, Trade of, [196] 1741
India—Questions, &c.
Auditor General of Accounts, [197] 357
Bhore Ghaut, Railway Accident at, [194] 485
Fisheries, [197] 357
Home Accounts, [197] 118
Muscat and Zanzibar, [195] 1580
Mysore, Maharajah of, [196] 1495
Native Scholarships, [194] 310
Opium Trade, [198] 449
Railways, [198] 1091
Revenues of, [196] 16
India—East India (Home Accounts), Motion for Papers, [197] 1329 [cont.

Northcote, Rt. Hon. Sir S. H.—cont.
India—East India Revenue Accounts, Res. [198] 1184
Ireland—Established Church—Value of Endowments, [194] 839
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1862, 2126 ; Comm. cl. 10, [195] 1107 ; cl. 13, 1125 ; cl. 14, 1371 ; cl. 18, 1480 ; cl. 25, 1608 ; cl. 27, 1631 ; cl. 32, [196] 24 ; cl. 39, 334, 337 ; [198] 36
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Comm. add. cl. [198] 1057
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 233
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 171
Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 632 ; Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 798

Northumberland, Duke of
Army—Military Force of the Kingdom, [195] 1448
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 33, [197] 1156
Married Women's Property, 2R. [198] 984
Militia, 3R. [196] 99
Sea Birds Preservation, Comm. cl. 2, [196] 79 ; cl. 4, 80 ; add. cl. 81

Norwich Election—Joint Address for a Commission Moved, "That an humble Address, &c." (Mr. Attorney General) Mar 12 ; after short debate, Question put, and agreed to ; Message to the Lords thereon April 1, [195] 2
l. Address agreed to June 8
Her Majesty's Answer reported June 21

Norwood, Mr. C. M., Kingston-upon-Hull
Assessed Rates, [194] 628 ; Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [197] 385
Bankruptcy, Leave, [194] 788 ; 2R. [195] 142
196] Comm. cl. 4, 1212 ; cl. 6, Amendt. 1213 ; cl. 7, 1218 ; cl. 8, 1219 ; cl. 36, Amendt. 1403 ; cl. 46, 1414, 1416 ; cl. 54, 1595 ; cl. 59, Amendt. 1597, 1605 ; cl. 126, 1902
197] cl. 131, 416 ; add. cl. Amendt. 419, 420
Contagious Diseases (Animals), 2R. [194] 1025
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Leave, [194] 680
County Courts, 2R. [194] 1561, 1572 ; [196] 684, 687
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 839
Feed Stuffs and Manures, Res. [197] 974
Imprisonment for Debt, 2R. [195] 173 ; Comm. cl. 4, [197] 429 ; cl. 5, 573
Judicature Commission, [196] 1633
Light Dues, Res. [196] 184
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1938
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 424 ; Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), 622

O'Brien, Sir P., King's Co.
Army Estimates—Military Stores, [195] 669
Army—Horse Guards and the War Office, [194] 1107
Military Appointments, [194] 354
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [197] 1180
India—Civil Service Examinations, [194] 841
Ireland—Clerk of the Crown for King's County, [197] 1421

O'Brien, Sir P.—cont.
Ireland—Trinity College (Dublin), Res. [198] 1209
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 12, [195] 1120; Lords Amendts. [198] 580
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 88
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co., [197] 983, 984
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1928
Supply—Abyssinian Expedition, Amendt. [194] 645; Motion for reporting Progress, 646, 648
  Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1464, 1467
  Foreign Office, [197] 1677
  Office of Woods, &c. Amendt. [197] 1704, 1705
  Royal Parks, &c. [197] 667, 668

O'Conor Don, The, Roscommon Co.
Ireland — Fenian Convicts, Pardon of, [194] 159
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 18, [195] 1486; cl. 27, 1872; cl. 39, [196] 136, 142

O'Donoghue, The, Tralee
Ireland—State of, [195] 2035
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 2048; Lords Amendts. [198] 62
O'Sullivan's Disability, 2R. [196] 576
Party Processions (Ireland), Leave, [194] 122; 2R. 1551

Œcumenical Council—The German Governments
Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, Mr. Otway July 19, [198] 151

O'Farrell Papers—(See Australian Legislative Assembly)

Offices Abolition Bill
(Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Ordered; read 1°* July 29 [Bill 246]
Bill withdrawn* August 3

Ogilvy, Sir J., Dundee
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 397
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. Motion for reporting Progress, [198] 1101, 1110

O'Loghlen, Right Hon. Sir C. M. (Judge Advocate General), Clare Co.
Army—Branding in the, [195] 574

O'Neill, Lord
Irish Church, Report, [197] 1489

O'Neill, Hon. E., Antrim Co.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1377; Consid. Amendt. [196] 770

Onslow, Mr. G., Guildford
Malta—New Port and Docks, [195] 1695
Supply—Houses of Parliament, [197] 685

Order of St. Michael and St. George
Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 15, [194] 1348

Order of St. Patrick
Question, The Earl of Portarlington; Answer, Earl Spencer July 5, [197] 1106

O'Reilly, Mr. M. W., Longford Co.
Army—Adjutancies of Militia, Res. [197] 139
  Drilling at Aldershot, [198] 156
Army Estimates—Army Administration, [197] 143, 147
  Land Forces, [194] 1157
India—Banda and Kirwee Prize Money, [195] 1580
  Military Appointments, [194] 1654
Ireland—Jury Panel, Monaghan Assizes, [195] 506
  Tralee Gaol, [196] 1629
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1270, 1273
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 27, [195] 1868; Lords Amendts. [198] 78
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [195] 1301, 1315
O'Sullivan's Disability, 2R. [196] 583
Parliament—Business of the House, [195] 847
  Dublin City Election, [194] 832, 1543
  Dublin City Writ, [196] 1786, 1791
Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [194] 989; Comm. [196] 1456

O'Reilly-Dease, Mr. M., Louth Co.
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1534
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1327
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1284
Ireland—Irish Society, The, Motion for a Commission, [195] 726
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 900; cl. 20, 1499; cl. 36, [196] 71; add. cl. 423
Irish Church—Organists, [195] 1197
Malta, Res. [197] 1776
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. [198] 360
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 811
Supply—Stationery Office, [197] 1695

Oriel College, Oxford, Bill
l. Bill read 2ª, after short debate Mar 8, [194] 800

O'Sullivan's Disability Bill
Banquet at Cork—Speeches of the Mayor, Question, Colonel Stuart Knox; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 18, [194] 1661
Expenses of Counsel, &c., Moved, "That there be laid before this House Returns, stating the total amount of the expenses incurred by Her Majesty's Government for the payment of Counsel, and for the attendance of Witnesses and other persons on the occasion of the different stages of the Bill for disabling Mr. Daniel O'Sullivan from holding the office of Mayor of Cork, or any other office or dignity in Ireland:

[cont.

O'Sullivan's Disability Bill—cont.

And, stating from what particular source such expenses are to be defrayed" (Sir Percy Burrell) May 13, [196] 809; Motion withdrawn

Fenian Convicts—Pardon of, Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Mar 23, [194] 1997

Mayor of Cork, The, Question postponed, Mr. Dawson May 3, [196] 13; Questions, The Earl of Stradbroke, The Marquess of Salisbury; Answers, Earl Granville May 4, 76; Question, Mr. Dawson; Answer, The Attorney General for Ireland, 102

Meeting in Cork — Party Processions Act, Question, Colonel Forde; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue May 11, [196] 573

Municipal Magistrates, Removal of, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 11, [196] 572; Question, Earl Grey; Answer, The Lord Chancellor; short debate thereon June 1, 1085

O'Sullivan's Disability Bill
(Mr. Attorney General for Ireland, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)

c. Orders of the Day postponed (Mr. Gladstone) May 5, [196] 185

196] Motion for Leave (Mr. Attorney General for Ireland) May 5, 186

After long debate, Bill to disable Daniel O'Sullivan, esquire, from holding, enjoying, or taking the Office of Mayor, or Justice of the Peace, or any office or place of magistracy in the City of Cork or elsewhere in Ireland; ordered; read 1° * [Bill 108]

Ordered, That a Copy of the said Bill, and of the said Order for the Second Reading thereof, be forthwith served upon Daniel O'Sullivan, esquire, Mayor of the City of Cork

Ordered, That Mr. Attorney General for Ireland do take care that evidence be produced in support of the said Bill, upon the Second Reading thereof

Ordered, That James Sheridan M'Leod and others [who are named] do attend this House on Tuesday the 11th day of this instant May, at Two of the clock, and give evidence on the Bill to disable Daniel O'Sullivan, esquire, from holding, enjoying, or taking the office of Mayor, or Justice of the Peace, or any office or place or magistracy in the city of Cork or elsewhere in Ireland, and produce all Documents relating to the same

. Ordered, That Mr. Attorney General for Ireland do appoint Counsel to produce and manage the evidence, at the Bar of this House, upon Tuesday the 11th day of this instant May, in support of the allegations of O'Sullivan's Disability Bill (Mr. Attorney General for Ireland) May 6, 350

. Orders for 2R. and for Counsel and Witnesses to attend, read May 11, 575

Moved, "That Counsel be now called in" (Mr. Attorney General for Ireland); after debate, Motion withdrawn

Order for attendance of Counsel and Witnesses discharged; 2R. deferred

Bill withdrawn * June 8

OTWAY, Mr. A. J. (Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs), Chatham

Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1436
Army—British Graves in the Crimea, [196] 17, 747
Army Estimates—Martial Law, [195] 664, 665
Austria—Commercial Treaty with, [196] 970
Canada—Boundaries, [198] 1441
China—Hostilities to Foreigners, [195] 578
  Pekin, Affair at, [197] 625
  Relations with, [195] 1855
  Tien-tsin, Treaty of, Motion for Papers, [197] 1798
Cuba—Capture of an American Ship in British Colonial Waters, [196] 106, 264
  Imprisonment of a British Subject, [194] 159
Diplomatic Pensions, [196] 1589
Egypt—Suez Canal, [197] 1664; [198] 1087
  Viceroy of, [196] 1205
Extradition, Law of, [194] 1462
Foreign Office—Agencies, [198] 1534
  Bidwell and Murray, Messrs., [194] 1083
  Unpaid Attachés, [197] 1675
Hayti—Civil War in, [194] 837
Italy—Nathan, Mr., Arrest of, [198] 1526
Jews in Roumania, [197] 1525
Levant—British Subjects in the, [198] 1250
Mexico—Bondholders, [198] 897
  Diplomatic Relations with, [195] 845; [197] 119
Œcumenical Council, The, [198] 151
Paraguay—British Subjects in, [198] 1248
Portugal — Cassells, Mr., Case of, [194] 126, 127
  Claims on the Government, [196] 1244
Shipping Dues in Foreign Ports, [198] 682
Société Industrielle et Agricole d'Egypte, [197] 1167; [198] 451
South Sea Islanders, Traffic in, [198] 450
Spain—Questions, &c.
  Imprisonment of a British Subject at Barcelona, [196] 1742
  "Mermaid," Case of the, [194] 1659
  "Tornado," Case of the, [194] 836; [196] 743, 1499 Treaty of Commerce, [197] 1425
Supply—Consular Services, [198] 952, 953, 954
  Embassies and Missions Abroad, [198] 937, 938, 941, 948, 950, 951, 952
  Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1467
  Foreign Office, [197] 1677, 1679
  Public Buildings, [197] 675
  Tonnage Bounties, [198] 961
Turkey — Cretan Insurgents, [195] 1099; [198] 19
United States — "Alabama" Claims, [194] 309
  Chicago—Consulate at, [198] 1294
  San Juan, Island of, [198] 1249
  Speer, Captain, Murder of, [196] 1498

Outlawries Bill

c. Read 1° * Feb 16

OVERSTONE, Lord

Endowed Schools, Comm. [197] 1874
National Gallery, Purchases for the, [198] 653
Pauperism and Emigration, [195] 958

Oxford, Bishop of
Brazilian Slave Trade, 2R. [194] 477
Ecclesiastical Dilapidations, 2R. [195] 1820
Irish Church, [197] 354; Comm. Preamble, 713; cl. 2, 751; cl. 28, 1074; cl. 69, Amendt. 1260, 1261
Parliament—Construction of the House, Res. [198] 11
Sea Birds Preservation, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 80

Oxford University Statutes Bill
(Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Mr. Mowbray)
c. Ordered; read 1º* May 28 [Bill 136]
Read 2º* June 1
Committee*; Report June 3
Read 3º* June 3
l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Derby) June 4 (No. 114)
Read 2ª* June 8
Committee*; Report June 11
Read 3ª* June 14
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 20]

Oyster and Mussel Fisheries Supplemental Bill
(Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr. John Bright)
c. Ordered; read 1º* April 13 [Bill 76]
Read 2º* April 19, and referred to a Select Committee
Report* June 4
Committee* (on re-comm.); Report June 10
Read 3º* June 11
l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Kimberley) June 14 (No. 129)
Read 2ª* June 17
Committee*; Report June 24
Read 3ª* June 25
Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 70]

Oyster Dredging
Question, Mr. Blake; Answer, Mr. Bright July 12, [197] 1667

Oyster Fishery
Colchester—The Colne Fishery, Question, Dr. Brewer; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 9, [198] 1493

Pakington, Right Hon. Sir J. S., Droitwich
Army—Courts Martial, [198] 324
Horse Guards and the War Office, [194] 1109
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1567
Army Estimates—Army Administration, [197] 146
Land Forces, [194] 1139, 1140, 1145
Military Education, [197] 143
Military Stores, [195] 669
Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1247
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 127, 148; cl. 59, 399
Navy Estimates—Men and Boys, [194] 926, 929
Salaries, [195] 76
Steam Machinery, [195] 202
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, [194] 665
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 986
Supply—Greenwich Hospital, [196] 1577

Palk, Sir L., Devonshire, S.
Beverley Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 561
Cadastral Survey, [194] 1999
Ireland—Church Leaseholds, [195] 1096
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 25, [195] 1612
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 109
Dublin City Writ, [197] 133
Parliamentary Disqualification, [197] 351
Real Estate Intestacy, Leave, [194] 967

Palmer, Sir R., Richmond
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1215, 1216; cl. 7, 1218; cl. 14, 1222, 1224; cl. 59, 1598, 1601; cl. 91, 1607; cl. 126, 1902; cl. 129, 1906, 1907; cl. 130, 1908; [197] 315, 328
Courts of Justice, New, Res. Amendt. [195] 1216, 1269
Courts of Justice (New Site), Leave, [196] 549
Imprisonment for Debt, Consid. cl. 5, [197] 764, 767
194] Irish Church, 2R. Motion for Adjournment, 1894, * 1906, 2121
195] Comm. cl. 2, 1011, 1022; cl. 10, Amendt. 1106, 1108; cl. 13, 1125, 1126; cl. 14, 1139; Amendt. 1365, 1367, 1377, 1380, 1381; Amendt. 1383, 1385, 1401; cl. 23, 1525; cl. 25, 1600; cl. 27, 1632, 1880; cl. 29, 1886, 1910
196] cl. 3, 422; add. cl. 425, 426; Consid. add. cl. 758, 766, 768, 771
197] Lords Amendts. 1935, 1964, 1973, 1979
198] 41, 574
Law Courts, New, Motion for a Committee, [197] 461
Marriage Laws, [198] 1395
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, [194] 667
New Writs, [194] 18
Patents for Inventions, [196] 892
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 24, [198] 772; Consid. 976
University Tests, 2R. Motion for Adjournment, [194] 1054, 1416, 1428; Comm. cl. 6, [197] 794; add. cl. 1090, 1098, 1099

Palmer, Mr. J. Hinde, Lincoln City
Bankruptcy, 2R. [195] 164; Comm. cl. 7, [196] 1218; cl. 54, 1596; cl. 59, 1604; cl. 88, 1606; cl. 91, 1899; cl. 126, 1903; cl. 131, [197] 416; add. cl. 418
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 19, [196] 1770
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1385
Law Courts, New, Motion for a Committee, [197] 462
Marriage Laws, [198] 1407
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Consid. [198] 1134
Railways—Communication between Passengers and Guards, [195] 29; [196] 1243
Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1858
Roman Catholic Charities, Motion for Returns, [198] 1031
Statute Law, Revision of the, Res. [196] 1252

Paraguay, British Subjects in Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, Mr. Otway August 4, [198] 1248

Parker, Mr. C. S., Perthshire
Contagious Diseases (Animals), Conveyance of Cattle, [198] 1491;—Slaughter of Cattle, 1492
Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland), Comm. [197] 159
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 29, Amendt. [196] 1777
Game Laws (Scotland) [Mr. M'Lagan], 2R. [197] 505
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 1110; cl. 24, 1243; Consid. 1462

Park Gate Chapel Marriages, &c. Bill
[H.L.] (The Lord Archbishop of York)
l. Presented; read 1ª* April 19 (No. 59)
Read 2ª* April 29
Committee*; Report April 30
Read 3ª* May 3
c. Read 1º* May 6 [Bill 111]
Read 2º* June 8
Committee*; Report June 11
Committee* (on re-comm.)—R.P. June 21
Committee*; Report June 24
Considered* June 25
Read 3º* June 28
Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 30]

Parliament

Her Majesty's Proclamation for dissolving the present Parliament, and declaring the calling of another, dated Nov. 11, 1868

Her Majesty's Proclamation in Order to the Electing and Summoning the Sixteen Peers of Scotland, dated Nov. 11, 1868

List of the Ministry (Mr. Disraeli's)
List of the Ministry (Mr. Gladstone's)
Roll of the Lords in the First Session of the Twentieth Parliament of the United Kingdom
List of Members Returned from the respective Counties, Cities, Towns, and Boroughs, to serve in the Twentieth Parliament of the United Kingdom

LORDS—

Meeting of the New Parliament—The Parliament opened by Commission Dec 10, [194] 1
Speaker of the House of Commons presented and approved Dec 11, [194] 11
A Speech of the Lords Commissioners Dec 15, [194] 14

House adjourned to Thursday Feb. 11

Her Majesty's Most Gracious Speech delivered by The Lord Chancellor Feb 16, 194] 23

. An Address to Her Majesty thereon moved by The Earl of Carysfort (the Motion being seconded by The Lord Monck), and, after short debate, agreed to, Nemine Dissentiente Feb 16, 27
. Address to be presented to Her Majesty by the Whole House Feb 18, 104
. Order [Feb 18] discharged; Address to be presented by the Lords with White Staves Feb 22, 153
. Her Majesty's Answer to the Address reported Feb 25, 283

[cont.

Parliament—Lords—cont.

194] Public Business, Question, Lord Chelmsford; Answer, The Lord Chancellor; short debate thereon Feb 18, 95
Chairman of Committees—The Lord Redesdale appointed, Nemine Dissentiente, to take the Chair in all Committees of this House for this Session Feb 16
Committee for Privileges—appointed Feb 16
Sub-Committee for the Journals—appointed Feb 16
Appeal Committee—appointed Feb 16
Receivers and Tryers of Petitions—appointed Feb 16
. Chairman of Committees—Observations, Lord Redesdale Feb 25, 284
. Easter Recess—Question, Lord Cairns; Answer, Earl Granville Mar 8, 798
House adjourned on Friday, March 19, to Monday, April 5
Whitsuntide Recess, House adjourned on Thursday, May 13, to Monday the 31st Instant

Office of the Clerk of the Parliaments and Office of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod—Select Committee appointed Feb 22, as follows:—Ld. Chancellor, Ld. President, Ld. Privy Seal, D. Richmond, M. Salisbury, M. Bath, E. Devon, E. Tankerville, E. Carnarvon, E. Malmesbury, E. Granville, Ld. Chamberlain, V. Hawarden, V. Eversley, Ld. Steward, L. Willoughby de Eresby, L. Colville of Culross, L. Foley, L. Redesdale, L. Colchester, L. Stanley of Alderley, L. Cairns
Report considered and agreed to August 10, [198] 1524

Business of the House
Bankruptcy Bill, Question, Lord Chelmsford; Answer, The Lord Chancellor; short de-194] bate thereon Feb 18, 95
. Bills relating to Ireland—Question, The Marquess of Clanricarde; Answer, Earl Granville Feb 23, 198
. Despatch of Business in Parliament—Joint Committee—Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to consider whether any facilities can be given for the despatch of business in Parliament, especially in regard to the relations of the two Houses" (The Earl Granville) Mar 15, 1309; Motion agreed to; Select Committee appointed and nominated as follows:—M. Salisbury, E. Derby, E. Granville, V. Eversley, V. Halifax, L. Redesdale
Message sent to the Commons to acquaint them therewith
. Message from the Commons that they have appointed a Select Committee of six Members to join with the Select Committee appointed by this House Mar 18, 1618
. Message from the Commons [March 18]; Select Committee to meet forthwith Mar 18, 1787
Houses of Parliament—Construction of the House, Resolution respecting the re-arrangement of the House of Lords (The Earl of Carnarvon) July 16, [198] 4; after short debate, Motion withdrawn
Irish Church Bill—Observations, Earl Granville; short debate thereon July 16, [198] 14

[cont.

PARLIAMENT—LORDS—cont.

Order in the House, Observations, Lord Romilly; Reply, Earl Granville; debate thereon June 22, [197] 400; Observations, Lord Campbell; Reply, Earl Granville; short debate thereon July 19, [198] 148

Privilege—Representative Peers for Scotland—Double Return, Petition of the Earl of Kellie, claiming also to be Earl of Mar; and of the Right Hon. John Francis Erskine Goodeve Erskine Earl of Mar, Baron Garioch: Report of Committee for Privileges May 11, [196] 561; after short debate, Report read, and agreed to (No. 99)

Private Bills

194] Ordered, That this House will not receive any petition for a Private Bill after Monday the 22nd of March next [and other Orders] Feb 25, 300

. Standing Order Committee on, appointed; List of the Committee Feb 26, 351

. All petitions relating to Standing Orders which shall be presented during the present Session referred to the Standing Order Committee, unless otherwise ordered, 351

. Opposed Private Bills, Committee appointed and nominated; List of the Committee Feb 26, 351

. Ordered, "That the time limited by the order of the 25th of February last for the reception of petitions for Private Bills be extended to the first sitting day after the recess at Easter" (The Chairman of Committees) Mar 11, 1054

. Standing Order No. 179. Secs. 1 and 2 suspended; and the time for depositing petitions praying to be heard against Private Bills, which would otherwise expire during the adjournment of the House, extended to the first day on which the House shall sit after the recess at Easter Mar 18, 1618

195] No Private Bill brought from the House of Commons shall be read a second time after Tuesday the 15th day of June next; [and other Orders] April 8, 338

Railway Bills—31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, sec. 35, Resolutions, [194] 123

Railway Bills — Standing Order No. 185, Ordered, That in all cases in which Railway Bills of this Session shall (in accordance with the provisions of the Act 31st and 32d Victoria, cap. 119) have been submitted to a meeting of the proprietors of any company in respect of additional powers conferred on such company, and shall have been approved at such meeting, it shall not be necessary to submit the Bill to a meeting of such company to be held in accordance with Standing Order No. 185, unless any of the powers specified in such Order shall have been inserted or materially altered in the House of Commons" (The Chairman of Committees) April 16, [195] 942

COMMONS—

MEETING OF THE NEW PARLIAMENT Dec 10

The House went up to the House of Peers:—and being returned—

Choice of a Speaker—The Right Honourable John Evelyn Denison unanimously called to the Chair

[cont.

PARLIAMENT—COMMONS—cont.

Mr. SPEAKER ELECT, with the House, went up to the House of Peers, where he was presented to the Lords Commissioners for Her Majesty's approbation. Being returned—

Mr. SPEAKER reported Her Majesty's Approval, and took the Oath, with other Members Dec 11

194] THE QUEEN'S SPEECH reported; Resolution for an humble ADDRESS thereon moved by Mr. H. COWPER (the Motion being seconded by Mr. MUNDELLA) Feb 16, 52; after debate, Motion agreed to; and a Committee appointed to draw up the said Address

. Report of Address brought up, and agreed to; to be presented by the Whole House Feb 18, 106

. Order discharged (Mr. Gladstone); Address to be presented by Privy Councillors Feb 22, 164

. HER MAJESTY'S ANSWER TO THE ADDRESS reported Feb 25, 308

. Kitchen and Refreshment Rooms (House of Commons)—Standing Committee appointed and nominated Feb 17, 94

. Printing — Select Committee appointed and nominated Feb 18, 123

. Public Petitions—Select Committee appointed and nominated Feb 19, 152

. Selection—Committee of Selection nominated; List of the Committee Feb 23, 279

. Public Accounts—Committee nominated; List of the Committee Mar 1, 470

Business of the House

. University Tests Bill, Question, Mr. Fawcett; Answer, Mr. Gladstone; short debate thereon Mar 11, 1092

. Despatch of Business in Parliament—Joint Committee, Observations, Mr. Gladstone Mar 15, 1459

Message from the Lords Mar 15

. Lords Message considered Mar 16, 1560

Moved, "That a Select Committee of Six Members be appointed to join with the Select Committee appointed by the House of Lords, as mentioned in their Lordships' Message of Monday 15th March, to consider whether any facilities can be given for the Despatch of Business in Parliament, especially in regard to the relations of the two Houses" (Mr. Gladstone); Motion agreed to

The Select Committee appointed as follows:—Mr. Bouverie, Mr. Disraeli, Mr. Dodson, Sir George Grey, Colonel Wilson Patten, Mr. Walpole

Message to the Lords

Message from the Lords

. Lords Message considered Mar 18, 1759; Orders made thereon

Easter Recess, Question, Mr. Hardcastle; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 22, 157; Observations, Mr. Ayrton Mar 3, 556; Question, Mr. Hadfield; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 9, 955

House adjourned from Tuesday Mar 23 to Thursday April 1

195] Irish Church Bill, Observations, Mr. Gladstone April 15, 846; April 23, 1470—Morning Sitting, Notice, Mr. Gladstone April 29, 1856

[cont.

Parliament—Commons—cont.

Morning Sittings, Question, Lord Claud Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 30, [195] 1975

Resolutions moved (Mr. Gladstone) and agreed to; Observations, Mr. Bentinck; Reply, Mr. Gladstone; short debate thereon July 5, [197] 1184

The Civil Service Estimates, Questions, Mr. Newdegate, Colonel French; Answers, Mr. Gladstone July 19, [198] 157

Whitsuntide Recess, Question, Colonel French; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 3, [196] 21; Question, Mr. J. G. Talbot; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 4, 104; Question Mr. Dent; Answer, Mr. Gladstone May 11, 585

House adjourned on Thursday May 13 to Thursday May 27

Privilege and Order

Committee for Privileges—appointed Feb 16

Standing Orders—Select Committee nominated Feb 23, as follows:—Colonel Wilson Patten (Chairman), Mr. Bonham-Carter, Sir Edward Colebrooke, Mr. Henley, Mr. Charles Howard, Mr. Lefroy, Sir Graham Montgomery, The O'Conor Don, Mr. Hastings Russell, Mr. Scourfield, and Mr. Whitbread

Private Business—Railway Bills, Resolutions (Mr. Dodson) Feb 18, [194] 105; after short debate, agreed to

Language used in Debate in the other House, Question, Mr. Milbank; Answer, Mr. Speaker July 21, [198] 368

Parliamentary Returns, Question, Mr. Peek; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 15, [197] 1887

Police Constables, Question, Mr. H. B. Sheridan; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 12, [197] 1663

Rules of Debate—University Tests Bill, Questions, Mr. Bentinck, Mr. Beresford Hope; Answers, Mr. Speaker Mar 16, [194] 1467

Disability of the Episcopal Clergy to sit in Parliament, Question, Lord Henry Thynne; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 23, [195] 1466

Parliamentary Disqualification—Treasury Allowance on Abolition of Office, Question, Sir Lawrence Palk; Answer, The Attorney General June 21, [197] 351

Witnesses (House of Commons), Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed "to consider the best means of providing for the examination of Witnesses upon Oath by the House of Commons, and its Committees" (Mr. Torrens) May 11, [196] 620; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into the expediency of adopting any further measures for the examination of Witnesses upon Oath by this House, and by its Committees" (Mr. Torrens), 627

And, on June 8, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens (Chairman), The Lord Advocate, Mr. Attorney General for Ireland, Mr. Bonham-Carter, Mr. Bouverie, Mr. Disraeli, Sir John Esmonde, Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Mr. Henley, Mr. Howes, Mr. Serjeant Kinglake, Colonel Wilson Patten, and Mr. S. H. Walpole

[cont.

Parliament—Commons—cont.

Private Bills

Standing Order No. 179. sect. 1. suspended; and the time for depositing Petitions praying to be heard against Private Bills, which would otherwise expire during the adjournment of the House, extended to the first day on which the House shall sit after the recess at Whitsuntide May 13, [196] 688

New Standing Order to follow Standing Order 70, agreed to Standing Order 70 read, and repealed; and New Standing Order in lieu thereof, agreed to

Standing Order 77 read and amended

Ordered, "That the said Orders be Standing Orders of this House" (Mr. Dodson) August 9, [198] 1485

Palace of Westminster

House of Commons Arrangements, Moved, "That this House, agreeing in substance with the Report of the Select Committee of the year 1868 concerning House of Commons Arrangements, recommends the same for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government" (Mr. Headlam) April 6, [195] 258

After short debate, Amendt. to leave out "agreeing in substance with," and insert "refers" (Viscount Bury), 278; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after further debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn

Question, Mr. Headlam; Answer, Mr. Layard April 23, 1467

Insufficient Accommodation of the House, Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 1, To leave out from "That," and add "before granting the sums required for the maintenance and repair of the present Houses of Parliament, this House deems it right to state its opinion that the present accommodation for Members is not sufficient" (Mr. Headlam), [197] 962; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Ladies' Galleries, The, Question, Mr. H. A. Herbert; Answer, Mr. Layard June 17, [197] 120

Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 9, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the grating in front of the Ladies' Gallery should be removed" (Mr. Herbert), 1582; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Question, Mr. H. A. Herbert; Answer, Mr. Layard July 16, [198] 20

Reporters' Gallery, Question, Sir John Gray; Answer, Mr. Layard July 29, [198] 898

Mosaics in the Central Hall, Question, Mr. J. G. Talbot; Answer, Mr. Layard July 22, [198] 448

Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 26, To leave out from "That" and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the circumstances under which a contract or agreement was made by the Office of Works with the Venice and Murano Glass and Mosaic Company (Limited) for the decoration of the Central Hall of the Palace of Westminster" (Mr. Raikes), 708; Question,

[cont.

Parliament—Commons—cont.
proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn
Plans for New Dining Rooms, &c., Select Committee appointed, "to consider Plans for New Refreshment and Dining Rooms for both Houses of Parliament, and for Improvements in the Ladies' Gallery of the House of Commons"
Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Layard (Chairman), Mr. Bouverie, Colonel French, Colonel Wilson Patten, and Mr. William Henry Smith July 30, [198] 1054
Crypt under St. Stephen's Chapel, Question, Mr. W. Egerton; Answer, Mr. Layard April 13, [195] 676; Question, Mr. Locke King; Answer, Mr. Layard May 13, [196] 744
Statues in Palace Yard, Question, Mr. Neville-Grenville; Answer, Mr. Layard June 14, [196] 1742

The Parliament Prorogued, by Commission, to Thursday the 28th December August 11; Her Majesty's Most Gracious Speech, [198] 1537

Parliamentary and Municipal Elections
Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed, "to inquire into the present modes of conducting Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, in order to provide further guarantees for their tranquillity, purity, and freedom" (Mr. Secretary Bruce) Mar 4, [194] 648; after short debate, Motion agreed to Nomination Days, Question, Mr. Brydges Willyams; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 9, [194] 952
Moved, "That it be an Instruction to the Select Committee to take into consideration the various methods of taking Votes by Ballot which are at present in use in portions of the British Empire and in other Countries, together with any modifications thereof which may be suggested, and to report upon the most efficient and convenient system of Balloting" (Mr. Leatham) Mar 16, 1470; after long debate, Motion withdrawn Moved, "That the Select Committee consist of twenty-one Members" (Mr. Bruce) Mar 16, 1546; after short debate, Motion agreed to Committee nominated as follows:—Marquess of Hartington (Chairman), Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Brand, Mr. J. Bright, Mr. Cross, Mr. Dalglish, Mr. Edward Egerton, Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Graves, Sir George Grey, Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Sir Frederick Heygate, Mr. Staveley Hill, Mr. Howes, Mr. Hunt, Mr. James, Mr. Leatham, Mr. Locke, The O'Conor Don, Mr. Raikes, Mr. William Henry Smith, Mr. Villiers, and Mr. Whitbread
Report of Select Committee July 23 (Parl. P. No. 352)

Parliamentary Proceedings Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess of Salisbury)
l. Presented; read 1ª* Feb 22 (No. 7)
Read 2ª, after debate Mar 4, [194] 588
Question, The Marquess of Salisbury; Answer, Earl Granville; short debate thereon Mar 8, 799

Parochial Schoolmasters (Scotland) Bill
(Mr. M'Laren, Sir Edward Colebrooke, Mr. Fordyce)
c. Ordered; read 1º* April 12 [Bill 72]
Bill withdrawn* July 28

Parochial Schools (Scotland) Bill—Petitions
Observations, The Duke of Marlborough; Reply, The Duke of Argyll; short debate thereon April 12, [195] 567; Amendments, Question, Observations, The Duke of Richmond, Lord Cairns; Reply, The Duke of Argyll April 26, 1574

Parochial Schools (Scotland) Bill (Lords)
(The Duke of Argyll)
194] l. Presented; read 1ª Feb 25, 284
. Read 2ª, after debate Mar 18, 1759 (No. 11)
196] Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into Committee" May 10, 429; after debate, Committee (No. 96)
. Report June 7, 1281; after debate, Amendments made (No. 119)
Read 3ª* June 11
c. Read 1º* June 16 [Bill 164]
197] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2º" July 12, 1711; after short debate, Bill read 2º
Committee*; Report July 13 [Bill 215]
198] Committee (on re-comm.) deferred July 19, 234
. Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. July 27, 817
. Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. August 2, 1095
. Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. August 3, 1229
. Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. August 6, 1374
. Committee (on re-comm); Report August 6, 1442
. Considered August 7, 1452 [Bill 265]
. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3º" (The Lord Advocate) August 9, 1495
Amendt. to leave out from "Bill be," and add "re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House, in respect of an Amendment to Schedule (A)" (Lord Elcho); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn
Moved, "That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House;" after further short debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn; Order for 3R. discharged; Bill re-committed in respect of Clauses 13, 16, 21, 23, 28, 65, and the Schedule (The Lord Advocate); Committee; Report, with Amendments; Considered
. Moved, "That the Bill be now read 3º;" after further short debate, Bill read 3º, and passed, with Amendments
. Question, Mr. Kinnaird; Answer, The Lord Advocate August 10, 1534

. l. Question, Lord Redesdale; Answer, Earl Granville August 7, 1451
. Bill returned from the Commons agreed to, with Amendments August 9, 1470 (No. 296)
Moved, "That the Commons Amendts. be considered To-morrow" (The Duke of Argyll)
Amendt. to leave out ("To-morrow,") and insert ("this day three months") (The Lord Redesdale); after debate, on Question,

[cont.

Parochial Schools (Scotland) Bill—cont.

198] That ("To-morrow") &c.? Cont. 43, Not-Cont. 55; M. 12; resolved in the negative, and Amendments to be considered this day three months
. Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. 1483
. Moved, "That this Bill, as amended by the Commons, be reprinted" (The Lord Redesdale) August 10, 1524; Motion agreed to

Party Processions (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. William Johnston, The O'Donoghue)

c. Motion for Leave (Mr. W. Johnston) Feb 18, [194] 122; Bill ordered; read 1°* [Bill 6]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 16, 1547; after short debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Stacpoole); A. 113, N. 70; M. 43; Debate adjourned
Debate resumed June 30, [197] 864; after debate, Debate further adjourned
Bill withdrawn* July 16

Patent Laws
Question, Mr. James Howard; Answer, The Attorney General Feb 26, [194] 356
Amendt. on Committee of Supply May 28, To leave out from "That," and add "in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived when the interests of trade and commerce, and the progress of the arts and sciences in this Country, would be promoted by the abolition of Patents for Inventions" (Mr. Macfie), [196] 888; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Patent Office
Edmunds' Scandal, The, Question, Mr. Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Ayrton May 10, [196] 469

Patten, Right Hon. Colonel J. W., Lancashire, N.
Army Estimates—Martial Law, [195] 664, 665
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1552
County Financial Boards, Leave, [196] 611
Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), Comm. [195] 221
Ireland—Rates on Disturbed Districts, [196] 20, 21
  Wetherall, Sir E. R., Appointment of, [194] 751, 753, 754, 755, 756
Ireland—O'Sullivan, Mr., Case of, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1169
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 13, [195] 1125; Lords Amendts. [197] 1961; [198] 28
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 217; 2R. 581
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [197] 868
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), Leave, [194] 1545
Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1487
Supply—House of Commons Offices, [197] 1476

Pease, Mr. J. W., Durham, S.
Coal Fields, Motion for an Address, [196] 1910
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1532
Game Laws (Scotland), Nomination of Committee; Motion for Adjournment, [196] 632
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 127

[cont.

Pease, Mr. J. W.—cont.
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. Amendt. [194] 542; Consid. add. cl. [196] 735, 739
Navy—Greenwich Hospital, [194] 717
Rateable Property, Leave, [194] 185
Revenue Officers, 2R. Amendt. [194] 1576
Supply—Houses of Parliament, [197] 680

Peek, Mr. H. W., Surrey, Mid.
Bankruptcy, 2R. [195] 165, 166; Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1216; cl. 8, Amendt. 1219; cl. 14, Amendt. 1221; cl. 46, Amendt. 1414; cl. 53, Amendt. 1418; Amendt. 1592; cl. 126, 1904, 1905; cl. 127, 1906
False Weights and Measures, &c. [194] 736
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 4, [197] 427
Metropolis—Battersea Park, [195] 843
Parliament—Morning Sittings, [197] 1187
Parliamentary Returns, [197] 1887
Valuation of Property (Metropolis), Comm. cl. 11, [197] 1482

Peel, Right Hon. Sir R., Tamworth
Navy—Admiralty Clerks, Res. [196] 1625, 1626
Parliament — Morning Sittings, [195] 1979, 1980

Peel, Mr. A. W. (Secretary to the Poor Law Commissioners), Warwick Bo.
Assessed Rates, Consid. add. cl. [197] 1083
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 29, [196] 1777
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 491

Pell, Mr. A., Leicestershire, S.
Agricultural Returns, Res. [195] 753
Agriculture, Department of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 500
Betten's Charity, [197] 356
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 444; Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1282; cl. 54, 1529; cl. 63, 1532; cl. 73, 1540; add. cl. 1773
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 59, [196] 416
Metropolitan Cattle Market, [196] 15
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 518

Pemberton, Mr. E. L., Kent, E.
Herne Bay Oyster Company, [194] 407, 838
Ireland—Maynooth College, [195] 361
  Seizure of Fishing Smacks, [197] 949
Metropolis—Courts of Justice, New, [196] 14

Pensions Commutation Bill
(Mr. Dodson, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Stansfeld)

c. Resolutions in Committee June 28
Resolutions reported; Bill ordered; read 1°* June 29 [Bill 187]
Read 2°* July 5
Committee*; Report July 6
Considered* July 7
Read 3°* July 8
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) July 9
Read 2ª* July 15 (No. 138)
Committee*; Report July 16
Read 3ª* July 19
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 32]

PENZANCE, Lord
- Bankruptcy, Comm. [198] 678
- Evidence Amendment, 2R. [198] 670, 678; Comm. cl. 1, 988; cl. 2, ib.
- Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1837; Comm. cl. 7, [197] 755; Amendt. 758; 3R. 1617
- Life Peerages, Comm. [196] 1185
- Married Women's Property, 2R. [198] 979
- Trades Unions (Protection of Funds), Comm. [198] 1075

Permissive Prohibitory Liquor Bill formerly Sale of Liquors Bill
(Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. Bazley, Mr. Dalway)
- c. Acts read; considered in Committee; a Resolution agreed to; Bill ordered; read 1° * Feb 22 [Bill 10]
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" May 12, [196] 637
- Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Colonel Jervis); after long debate, Question put, "That 'now' &c.;" A. 87, N. 193; M. 106; words added; main Question, as amended, agreed to; Bill put off for six months

PETERBOROUGH, Bishop of
- Bright, Mr., Letter of, [197] 14
- China—Missionaries in, [194] 942
- Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1853; [197] 206; Comm. cl. 7, 757; cl. 12, 870; cl. 14, Amendt. 886, 891, 907, 917; cl. 26, 1000; cl. 29, 1120; Report, 1500, 1502

Petroleum Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
- c. Ordered; read 1° * May 13 [Bill 131]
- Read 2° * June 10
- Committee *; Report July 5 [Bill 194]
- Bill withdrawn * July 22

Pharmacy Act (1868) Amendment Bill
(Lord Robert Montagu, Sir Graham Montgomery)
- c. Act read; considered in Committee; a Resolution agreed to Mar 4, [194] 683; Bill ordered; read 1° * [Bill 37]
- Read 2° * April 12
- Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" April 29, [195] 1933
- Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House will, upon this day six months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Dr. Brewer); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; Committee; Report [Bill 99]
- Considered * May 10
- Read 3° * May 13
- l. Read 1ª * (Earl Granville) May 31 (No. 108)
- Read 2ª * July 27
- Committee * July 29 (No. 238)
- Report * July 30
- Read 3ª * August 2
- c. Lords Amendts. considered August 5, [198] 1369
- Several agreed to; and one disagreed to; Committee appointed, "to draw up Reasons to be assigned to the Lords for disagreeing to the Amendment to which this House hath disagreed"

[cont.

Pharmacy Act (1868) Amendment Bill—cont.
- c. Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Secretary Bruce, The Lord Advocate, Mr. William Edward Forster, Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Adam, and Dr. Brewer
- Reason for disagreeing to one of the Lords Amendts. reported, and agreed to:—To be communicated to the Lords
- l. As returned from Commons (No. 282)
- Commons Reason for disagreeing considered; Amendt. not insisted on August 9
- Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 117]

PHILIPS, Mr. R. N., Bury
- French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 350

Pier and Harbour Orders Confirmation Bill (Mr. Lefevre, Mr. John Bright)
- c. Considered in Committee; Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1° * May 10 [Bill 114]
- Read 2° * May 13
- Order for Committee discharged; committed to a Select Committee June 1
- Report of Select Committee June 10 [Bill 157]
- Committee * (on re-comm.); Report June 11
- Considered * June 14 [Bill 161]
- Read 3° * June 14
- l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Kimberley) June 17 (No. 134)
- Read 2ª * June 18
- Committee *; Report June 25
- Read 3ª * June 28
- Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 71]

Pier and Harbour Orders Confirmation (No. 2) Bill (Mr. Lefevre, Mr. John Bright)
- c. Considered in Committee; Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1° * May 28 [Bill 137]
- Read 2° * May 31
- Order for Committee discharged; committed to a Select Committee June 3
- Report of Select Committee June 10 [Bill 158]
- Committee * (on re-comm.); Report, and consolidated into Pier and Harbour Orders Confirmation Bill [Bill 161]

Pilotage Dues on Foreign Shipping
- Question, Mr. Candlish; Answer, Mr. Bright May 10, [196] 468

Pilots—Bristol Pilots at Falmouth
- Question, Mr. R. N. Fowler; Answer, Mr. Shaw Lefevre August 10, [198] 1528

PIM, Mr. J., Dublin City
- Corn, Duty on, [195] 584
- Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 843
- 195] Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, 1031; cl. 14, 1149; Amendt. 1368, 1377, 1378; cl. 15, Amendt. 1386, 1403; cl. 16, Amendt. 1407, 1409; cl. 17, Amendt. 1411; cl. 20, 1499; cl. 25, Amendt. 1602, 1613
- 196] cl. 43, 349; cl. 59, Amendt. 395, 404; Consid. add. cl. 755, 757
- 197] Lords Amendts. 1961, 1985
- 198] 72

[cont.

PIM, Mr. J.—cont.
Money Laws (Ireland), 2R. [197] 485
Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1307
Registration of Voters, Motion for a Committee, [194] 984
Scotland—Portpatrick Harbour, [195] 991
Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 509
Stationery Office, [197] 1696
Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 593, 624

PLATT, Mr. J., Oldham
India—East India Revenue Accounts, Res. [198] 1356
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1364

PLAYFAIR, Dr. Lyon, Edinburgh and St. Andrew's Universities
Endowed Hospitals, &c. (Scotland), Comm. Amendt. [197] 150
Faraday, Proposed Monument to, [197] 1173
* Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1724; Comm. cl. 2, [198] 830; cl. 4, 1115; cl. 9, 1120; cl. 17, 1123; cl. 24, 1235; cl. 44, 1394; Consid. 1456, 1460
Supply—Learned Societies, [198] 504
Report, [198] 693
Science and Art Department, [198] 203
University Tests, 2R. [194] 1438; Comm. add. cl. [197] 1091

PLIMSOLL, Mr. S., Derby Bo.
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1366

POCHIN, Mr. H. D., Stafford Bo.
False Weights and Measures, &c. [194] 728
Pharmacy Act Amendment, Comm. Motion for reporting Progress, [195] 1934
Trade Returns, [195] 575
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 422

Police Superannuations
Question, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 27, [195] 1695

POLLARD-URQUHART, Mr. W., Westmeath Co.
Army Estimates—Superannuation Allowances, [197] 150
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 837
False Weights and Measures, &c. [194] 727
Income Tax, Res. [194] 1531; [196] 1238
Ireland—Anketell, Mr., Murder of, [197] 351
Irish Church, Comm cl. 26, [195] 1620; Lords Amendts. [198] 75
Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 253
Scotland—Poor Law, Motion for a Committee, [194] 522
Supply—Education, National, [198] 740
Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1463, 1466
Science and Art Department, [198] 217

POOR LAW
Birmingham Board of Guardians, Question, Mr. Dixon; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 22, [194] 1901—District Medical Officers, Question, Mr. Bromley-Davenport; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 11, 1089
Catholic Children in Workhouses, Question, Mr. Kekewich; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 8, [197] 1419
District Asylums, Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 22, [194] 1899
Fever Patients, Conveyance of, Question, Captain Dawson-Damer; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 1, [194] 411; Question, Captain Dawson-Damer; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 4, 626
Gilbert Unions, Question, Mr. Mitford; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 4, [194] 626; Questions, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Colonel Bourne; Answers, Mr. Goschen April 20, [195] 1195
Ireland — Medical and Educational Charges, Question, Mr. Gregory; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Feb 25, [194] 303
Keighley Union, Question, Mr. H. B. Samuelson; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 29, [198] 891
Kensington Sick Asylum District, Question, Mr. J. G. Talbot; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 15, [195] 841
Magistrates and Boards of Guardians, Question, Colonel Dyott; Answer, Mr. Goschen June 17, [197] 119
Metropolitan Lunatic Asylums, Question, Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 22, [195] 1354
Mines, Rating of Metalliferous, Question, Mr. St. Aubyn; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 1, [194] 407; Question, Colonel, Duncombe; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 26, [195] 1582
Narberth Union — Treatment of Refractory Vagrants, Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor; Answer, Mr. Goschen June 18, [197] 308; July 15, 1890
Orphan Pauper Children, Question, Mr. Rathbone; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 16, [195] 971
Pauperism and Emigration, Observations, Lord Houghton; Reply, Earl Granville; debate thereon April 16, [195] 943
Paupers, Emigration of, Question, Sir Thomas Lloyd; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 4, [194] 627
Payment of Rates by Owners, Question, Mr. Liddell; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 1, [194] 409
Poor Law Amendment Bill, Question, Mr. Kavanagh; Answer, Mr. M'Mahon Mar 2, [194] 484
Poor Law (Ireland)—Area of Rating, Question, Mr. M'Mahon; Answer, Mr. Chichester Fortescue Feb 18, [194] 111
Poor Law (Scotland)—Assessments, Question, Mr. Craufurd; Answer, The Lord Advocate Mar 12, [194] 1188
Poor Rates, Exemptions from, Question, Mr. Wheelhouse; Answer, Mr. Goschen Feb 26, [194] 356
Poor Relief Assessment—Returns, Question, Mr. Gourley; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 2, [194] 485

[cont.

Poor Law—cont.
  St. Marylebone Workhouse School, Question, Mr. Cogan ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 1, [197] 944
  St. Pancras Workhouse, Question, Colonel Barttelot ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 13, [197] 1754 ; Question, Dr. Brewer ; Answer, Mr. Goschen July 14, 1820
  Union of Parishes in Westminster, Question, Dr. Brewer; Answer, Mr. Goschen August 3, [198] 1145
  Vagrancy, Question, Mr. Hunt ; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 19, [195] 1096; Question, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone July 19, [198] 156

Poor Law
  Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, a closer and more harmonious correspondence between the Central and Local Poor Law authorities, and, in consequence, a more uniform and efficient system of parochial administration would be established, and the incidence of Local Taxation would be safely rectified if, as in the case of Education, grants, conditional on efficiency, were made from National sources, through the medium of the Poor Law Board" (Mr. Rathbone) June 22, [197] 430 ; after debate, Motion withdrawn

Poor Law — Catholic and Dissenting Children Removal
  Moved, "That in any case where a board of guardians or any parish or union shall have made due provision within the workhouse or district school for the instruction in their own faith of children not of the Established Church, their religious rights being amply secured and the spirit of the law effectually carried out, it is inexpedient that the Poor Law Board should exercise its discretionary power to enforce the removal of such children to schools not under the control of the guardians or of the parish authorities" (Mr. Thomas Chambers) July 6, [197] 1334 ; after short debate, A. 29, N. 71 ; M. 42

Poor Law — Pauperism and Vagrancy (England)
  Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed, "to consider the existing state of Pauperism and Vagrancy in England, and the principles upon which the Poor Laws are at present administered" (Mr. Corrance) May 10, [196] 471 ; after long debate, Motion withdrawn

Poor Law—Poor in England and Wales
  Moved, That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the operation and administration of the Laws for the Relief of the Poor in England and Wales (The Marquess Townshend) June 22, [197] 399 ; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Poor Law (Scotland)
  Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the operation of the Poor Law in Scotland ; and whether any and what Amendments should be made therein" (Mr. Craufurd) Mar 2, [194] 513 ; after debate, Motion agreed to Moved, "That the Select Committee on Poor Law (Scotland) do consist of Nineteen Members" (Mr. Craufurd) Mar 10; debate arising; debate adjourned till To-morrow
  Debate resumed Mar 17, 1617 ; Motion withdrawn ; Select Committee to consist of Twenty Members Committee nominated as follows :— Mr. Craufurd (Chairman), The Lord Advocate, Mr. Anderson, Sir Robert Anstruther, Mr. Armitstead, Mr. Cameron, Sir Edward Colebrooke, Mr. Ellice, Mr. Crum-Ewing, Mr. Orr-Ewing, Mr. Fordyce, Mr. John G. C. Hamilton, Mr. Loch, Mr. Mackintosh, Mr. M'Lagan, Mr. Miller, Sir Graham Montgomery, Mr. C. S. Parker, Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Solicitor General for Scotland, and Sir David Wedderburn
  Report of Select Committee July 6
  (Parl. P. No. 301)

Poor Law Board Provisional Orders Confirmation Bill (Mr. Peel, Mr. Goschen)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * June 16 [Bill 166]
  Read 2° * June 17
  Committee * ; Report June 18
  Read 3° * June 21
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Kimberley) June 22 (No. 142)
  Read 2ª * July 13
  Committee * ; Report July 15
  Read 3ª * July 16
  Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 123]

Poor Law (Ireland) Amendment Bill (Mr. M'Mahon, Mr. Blake, Mr. Downing, Mr. Stacpoole)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * Feb 24 [Bill 18]
  Question, Mr. Kavanagh ; Answer, Mr. M'Mahon Mar 2, [194] 484
  Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" April 7, [195] 309
  Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Bruen) ; Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c. ;" after short debate, Debate adjourned
  Bill withdrawn * July 8

Poor Law (Ireland) Amendment (No. 2) Bill (Mr. Gregory, Colonel Vandeleur)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * June 22 [Bill 173]
  Read 2° * June 28
  Referred to a Select Committee July 5
  And, on July 6, Committee nominated as follows :—Mr. W. H. Gregory (Chairman), Mr. Attorney General for Ireland, Mr. Blake, Mr. Cogan, Viscount Crichton, Mr. Forde, Marquess of Hamilton, Lord Claud Hamilton, Mr. H. A. Herbert, Mr. Kavanagh, Mr. O'Reilly-Dease, Sir James Stronge, and Mr. Edward Wingfield Verner
  As amended by Select Committee [Bill 213]
  Committee * (on re-comm.) ; Report July 15
  Considered * July 16
  Read 3° * July 19

[cont.

Poor Law (Ireland) Amendment (No. 2) Bill—cont.
l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Clanricarde) July 20 (No. 205)
Read 2ª * July 22
Committee * July 23
Report * July 26
Read 3ª * July 27
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 54]

Poor Law (Scotland) Act (1845) Amendment Bill (The Lord Advocate, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Adam)
c. Motion for Leave (The Lord Advocate) April 13, [195] 756; Bill ordered; read 1° * April 14
Read 2° * April 22 [Bill 80]
Referred to a Select Committee May 6
And, on May 31, Committee nominated as follows:—The Lord Advocate (Chairman), Mr. Dalglish, Mr. Charles Dalrymple, Mr. Orr Ewing, Lord Garlies, Mr. Kinnaird, Mr. M'Lagan, Sir Alexander Maitland, Mr. Dyce Nicol, Sir William Scott, and Colonel Sykes; June 10, Mr. Craufurd, Mr. Finnie, Mr. Grieve, Mr. M'Laren added
Report *; Re-comm. July 19
Bill withdrawn * July 22

Poor Law Union Loans Bill (Mr. Candlish, Mr. Hibbert, Mr. Dillwyn)
c. Ordered; read 1° * May 13 [Bill 128]
Read 2° * June 10
Committee *; Report June 17 [Bill 167]
Re-comm. *; Report June 21
Considered * June 23
Read 3° * June 23
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Devon) June 24 (No. 148)
Read 2ª * July 5
Committee * July 15 (No. 194)
Report * July 19
Read 3ª * July 22
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 45]

Poor Relief (Ireland) Act (1862) Amendment Bill (Admiral Seymour, Mr. O'Neill)
c. Ordered; read 1° * May 11 [Bill 117]
Read 2° * June 1
Committee *; Report June 8
Read 3° * June 9
l. Read 1ª * (Viscount Lifford) June 11 (No. 124)
Read 2ª * June 24
Committee *; Report June 25
Read 3ª * June 28
Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 25]

PORTARLINGTON, Earl of
Irish Church, Report, [197] 1493
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 2R. [195] 1680
St. Patrick, Order of, [197] 1106
Tenure (Ireland), Comm. [195] 1572

PORTMAN, Lord
Ecclesiastical Dilapidations, 2R. [195] 1820
Habitual Criminals, 2R. [194] 691
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. Amendt. [195] 1335
[cont.

PORTMAN, Lord—cont.
Irish Church, [197] 354
Justices of the Peace Qualification, 2R. [197] 512
New Parishes, &c. 2R. [196] 1583
Stannaries, 2R. [196] 1083

Portugal—Case of Mr. J. Cassells, a British Subject
Question, Mr. Winterbotham; Answer, Mr. Otway Feb 19, [194] 125
Claims on the Government, Question, Mr. Dalglish; Answer, Mr. Otway June 4, [196] 1243

Post Horse and Carriage Licences Duties
Acts read:—Moved, "That this House will immediately resolve itself into a Committee to consider the said Acts" (Mr. Alderman W. Lawrence) Mar 16, [194] 1523; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

POST OFFICE
Australia, Communication with, Question, Mr. Young; Answer, Mr. Monsell April 5, [195] 140—South Wales, Question, Mr. Jones; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington April 26, 1582
Book Post, &c., Question, Mr. Stapleton; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 12, [194] 1188; Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 22, 1895
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient to reduce the rate of Inland Postage on printed matter to one halfpenny for two ounces, and that the postage on newspapers should be likewise reduced to one halfpenny" (Mr. Graves) April 6, [195] 233; after short debate, Previous Question put (Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer); A. 62, N. 229; M. 167
Electric Telegraphs, Purchase of, Question, Mr. Samuelson; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 19, [194] 1787; Question, Mr. Hunt; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 7, [196] 1299—Submarine Cables, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington July 19, [198] 154
England and France, Packet Service between, Question, Sir William Gallwey; Answer, Mr. Bright July 19, [198] 154
Foreign Mails—Returns, Question, Mr. Alderman W. Lawrence; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Feb 19, [194] 124
Life Assurances, Question, Mr. Wells; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 12, [194] 1188

Mail Contracts
American Mail Contracts, Question, Mr. Bazley; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 5, [194] 716
Cunard and Inman Contracts, Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 12, To leave out from "That" and add "the Contracts entered into by the Postmaster General with Messrs. Cunard and Co. and Mr. William Inman for the conveyance of Mails from this Country to the United States be referred to a Select Committee of this House" (Mr. Seely), [194] 1281; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Question put, A. 86, N. 115; M. 29; words added; main Question, as amended, agreed to
[cont.

Post Office—cont.

Committee nominated by the Committee of Selection as follows:—Mr. Dent (Chairman), Mr. Greaves, Mr. E. T. Hamilton, Sir Massey Lopes, Mr. C. R. M. Talbot Mar 16, Mr. Graves, and Mr. Seely added by the House

Report of Select Committee Mar 23
(Parl. P. No. 106, 106-I)

Questions, Mr. Crawford, Mr. Sclater-Booth; Answers, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 16, [194] 1464

Inman Mail Service Contract, Question, Mr. Graves; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 12, [194] 1186

Packet and Telegraph Contracts, Resolution of the House of the 24th July, 1860, read and rescinded; and in lieu thereof resolved—

"That in all Contracts extending over a period of years and creating a public charge, actual or prospective, entered into by the Government for the Conveyance of Mails by Sea, or for the purpose of Telegraphic Communications beyond Sea, there should be inserted the condition that the Contract shall not be binding until it has been approved of by a Resolution of the House" (The Marquess of Hartington) July 13, [197] 1818; Motion agreed to

Ordered, That the said Resolution, and the Resolutions of the House of the 24th July 1860, be Standing Orders of this House

196] United States—Contracts for Conveyance of Mails to, Moved, "That Contracts, made subject to the judgment of the House, should be submitted to the House at as early a period in the Session as possible, &c." (Mr. Seely) June 1, 1128; after long debate, Motion withdrawn

Moved, "That Contracts for the conveyance of Mails to the United States should not in future be made for longer than three years, and that the payments should be regulated by the number or weight of letters, newspapers, &c. conveyed" (Mr. Seely), 1157; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Moved, "That, proposals having been made for a regular conveyance of Mails to the United States at the freight of a penny per ounce of letters conveyed, negotiations should be entered into with the United States Post Office, for the establishment of a penny postage, which shall include the inland rates in the two countries, as well as the sea conveyance" (Mr. Seely), 1157

After short debate, Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "it is expedient that Her Majesty's Government should take into consideration, and should endeavour to learn by communication with the Government of the United States, whether it is practicable to establish a greatly reduced rate of Postage between the two Countries" (Mr. Ayrton), 1159; after further short debate, Question, "That the words, &c.," put, and negatived; words added; main Question, as amended, put, and agreed to

[cont.

Post Office—cont.

Parl. Papers—
Correspondence—Postal Contracts No. 77
Papers—United States . . . . „ 58
Conventions—United States . . „ 181
Contract—Halifax, &c. Mail Service . . . . „ 36
Contract, Brazil, &c. . . . . . „ 331
Returns—West Indies . . . . „ 116
Correspondence—Australia . . „ 227

Money Orders—Charges on, Question, Mr. Baines; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington May 3, [196] 14

New York Mails and Plymouth—The Bremen Company, Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington April 26, [195] 1583

North German Confederation, The, Question, Mr. Hardcastle; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington April 26, [195] 1584

Portpatrick Harbour, Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Bright April 8, [195] 360; Observations, Mr. W. Johnston; Reply, Mr. Ayrton; short debate thereon April 16, 982

Stornoway, Communication with, Question, Mr. Grieve; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 22, [194] 1900

Velocipedes and Post Office Service, Question, Mr. Hambro; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington May 13, [196] 745

Wales—Services in, Question, Mr. Walsh; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington June 7, [196] 1295

Western Ports, Landing Mails, Observations, Mr. R. N. Fowler; short debate thereon May 28, [196] 924

West India Mails, Question, Mr. Stevenson; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington May 3, [196] 15—Falmouth and Plymouth, Question, Mr. R. Fowler; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington April 12, [195] 574—Sorting Letters, Question, Mr. Candlish; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington April 15, 841

Post Office Savings Banks Bill
(The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Stansfeld)

c. Ordered; read 1°* April 9 [Bill 69]
Bill withdrawn* May 6

Potter, Mr. E., Carlisle
Lord Lieutenant (Cumberland and Westmoreland), Motion for an Address, [195] 747
Printworks Regulation, Res. [194] 1540
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 199
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1370

Potter, Mr. T. Bayley, Rochdale
Foreign Office—Bidwell and Murray, Messrs. [194] 1083

Powis, Earl of
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1745
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 29, [197] 1125; cl. 41, 1162

Presentation of Benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, &c. Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Archbishop of Canterbury)

l. Presented; read 1ª * July 22 (No. 209)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" (The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol) July 29, [198] 890; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee *; Report July 30
Read 3ª * August 2
c. Read 1° * August 2 [Bill 256]
Read 2° * August 5
Committee *; Report August 5
Considered * August 7
Read 3° * August 7
l. As amended by Commons (No. 287)
Commons Amendts. considered August 10
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 109]

Prevention of Gaming (Scotland) Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Morley)

l. Presented; read 1ª * July 20 (No. 206)
Read 2ª * July 23
Committee * July 26 (No. 225)
Report * July 27
Read 3ª * July 29
c. Read 1° * July 29 [Bill 248]
Read 2° * August 2
Committee *; Report August 5
Read 3° * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 87]

PRICE, Mr. W. E., Tewkesbury
Army—Militia Quartermasters, [194] 630

Printworks Regulation
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, the hours of toil of the women and children employed in Printworks ought to be assimilated to the hours of toil of the women and children employed in factories" (Mr. Charley) Mar 16, [194] 1535; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Prisoners (Political Offenders)
Moved, "That it is the duty of the Government to institute a public inquiry into the penal discipline of our Prisons, for the purpose of a better classification of prisoners generally; distinguishing the tried from the untried, and those who may be charged with offences from those who, under exceptional circumstances, may be temporarily detained without any specific charge having been preferred against them" (Mr. George Moore) June 29, [197] 798; after debate, Question put; A. 31, N. 171; M. 140
Moved, "That Her Majesty's Government should inquire how far political offenders should be regarded as a separate class, and how far the severity of the punishment to which the political convicts in our Prisons have been already subjected may be regarded as reasonable grounds for a favourable consideration in their case" (Mr. George Moore), 815; Question put, and negatived

Prisons (Religious Instruction)
Motion for Address for "Returns of the County and Borough Prisons of England in which Religious Instruction is afforded to Prisoners of different Denominations, specifying which and at what cost to each:

[cont.

Prisons (Religious Instruction)—cont.

"And, of the number of Prisoners in each Prison, and to what Denomination they belong; the Returns to be made up to the 20th day of July 1869, inclusive (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 284, of Session 1867-8" (Mr. Maguire) July 20, [198] 345; after short debate, Motion agreed to Prisons (Scotland) Administration Act (1860) Amendment Bill (The Lord Advocate, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Solicitor General for Scotland)

c. Ordered; read 1° * June 3 [Bill 143]
Read 2° * June 17
Committee *; Report June 21
Read 3° * June 28
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Morley) June 29 (No. 159)
Read 2ª * July 16
Committee *; Report July 19
Read 3ª * July 20
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 35]

Property, Appropriation of
Moved, That there be laid before this House, a Return of all Acts of Parliament whereby property belonging to any person, corporation, or trust has been taken from such person, corporation, or trust without their consent, and without securing to them full compensation for the property so taken, or without offence being charged against such person, corporation, or trust justifying such confiscation (The Lord Redesdale) Mar 5, [194] 684
Amendt. to leave out from ("consent") and insert ("together with the reasons stated in such Acts for the appropriation of such property") (The Earl Granville); after short debate, Amendt. and original Motion withdrawn

Public Departments—Concentration of Question, Lord John Manners; Answer, Mr. Layard April 13, [195] 677

Public Offices
Expenditure on the New, Observations, Mr. Goldney; Reply, Mr. Layard; short debate thereon July 12, [197] 1669
Great George Street, Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, Mr. Layard April 30, [195] 1973

Public Offices Concentration Bill
(Mr. Layard, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)

c. Ordered; read 1° * June 8 [Bill 153]
Read 2° * and committed to a Select Committee June 24
Committee nominated by the Committee of Selection:—Sir Edward Buller (Chairman), Mr. Wilbraham Egerton Mr. H. W. Fitzwilliam, Mr. C. Sykes; July 2, Mr. C. Hanbury Tracy added, Colonel Vandeleur disch.
Report * July 6 (Parl. P. No. 296) [Bill 196]
Bill withdrawn * July 30

Public Houses, &c.
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that any measure for the general amendment of the Laws for Licensing Public Houses, Beer Houses, and Refreshment Houses should include the prohibition of the sale of Liquors on Sunday" (Mr. Rylands) June 22, [197] 447 ; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Public Parks (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. M'Clure, Mr. William Johnston, Mr. Pim, Mr. Maguire)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * June 3 [Bill 147]
Read 2° * June 8
Committee * ; Report June 11
Read 3° * June 14
l. Read 1ª * (Viscount Lifford) June 15 (No. 131)
Read 2ª * June 24
Committee * July 1 (No. 163)
Report * July 2
Read 3ª * July 5
Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 28]

Public Schools Act (1868) Amendment Bill
(Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Solicitor General)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * July 14 [Bill 217]
Read 2° * July 22
Committee * ; Report July 23
Considered * July 26
Read 3° * July 26
l. Read 1ª * (Earl De Grey) July 27 (No. 233)
Read 2ª * July 29
Committee * ; Report July 30
Read 3ª * August 2
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 58]

Public Works (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * July 8 [Bill 202]
Read 2° * July 23
Committee * ; Report July 29
Considered * July 30
Read 3° * July 31
l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 2 (No. 255)
Read 2ª * August 3
Committee * ; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 74]

Queen Anne's Bounty Bill [H.L.]
(The Lord Archbishop of Canterbury)
l. Presented ; read 1ª * July 13 (No. 185)
Read 2ª * July 20
Committee * ; Report July 22
Read 3ª * July 23
c. Read 1° * July 26 [Bill 243]
Bill withdrawn * August 9

Queensland
Alleged Slavery, Question, Sir John Simeon ; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 11, [196] 574
South Sea Islands, Slave Trade from the, Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor ; Answer, Mr. Monsell ; short debate thereon June 28, [197] 633 ; Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor ; Answer, Mr. Otway July 22, [198] 450
Parl. P. . . . . No. 408
Correspondence, 1868 . . . . [4131]

Raikes, Mr. H. C., Chester
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1415
Ireland—Representation of, [194] 357
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 917 ; cl. 25, 1601 ; cl. 27, 1870 ; cl. 32, Amendt. [196] 44
Married Women's Property, 3R. Amendt. [198] 401
Order of St. Michael and St. George, [194] 1348
Parliament—Youghal Election, New Writ, [195] 2072
Parliament—Decoration of the Central Hall, Motion for a Committee, [198] 708, 720
University Tests, 2R. Motion for Adjournment, [194] 1451 ; Comm. cl. 6, [197] 790, 793 ; add. cl. 1094, 1099

Railway Construction Facilities Act (1864) Amendment Bill
(Mr. Whalley, Mr. M'Mahon)
c. Ordered ; read 1° * April 22 [Bill 94]
Read 2° * July 8
Committee * ; Report July 16 [Bill [220]
Committee * (on re-comm.) ; Report July 21 [Bill 230]

Railways
Purchase of Railway and Telegraph Lines, Question, Mr. Samuelson ; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington Mar 19, [194] 1787 ; Question, Mr. Hunt ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 7, [196] 1299
Railway Bills—31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, sec. 35; Resolutions [194] 123
Railway Companies, Standing Order No. 185, Ordered, That in all cases in which Railway Bills of this Session shall (in accordance with the provisions of the Act 31st and 32d Victoria, cap. 119) have been submitted to a meeting of the proprietors of any Company in respect of additional powers conferred on such company, and shall have been approved at such meeting, it shall not be necessary to submit the Bill to a meeting of such company to be held in accordance with Standing Order No. 185, unless any of the powers specified in such Order shall have been inserted or materially altered in the House of Commons" (The Chairman of Committees) April 16, [195] 942
Railway Guards and Passengers Communication, Question, Mr. H. B. Sheridan ; Answer, Mr. Bright Mar 22, [194] 1903 ; Question, Mr. Palmer ; Answer, Mr. Bright April 2, [195] 29 ; Question, Mr. Hinde Palmer ; Answer, Mr. Bright June 4, [196] 1243 ; Question, Observations, Mr. H. B. Sheridan ; Reply, Mr. Bright August 6, [198] 1433
(See Titles—India, Ireland)

Railway Accidents
Questions, Observations, Mr. Selwin-Ibbetson Mar 5, [194] 737
Abergele Accident, Questions, Observations, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson ; Answer, Mr. Dillwyn May 28, [196] 936
At the Swindon Station, Question, Mr. Cadogan ; Answer, Mr. Bright Mar 18, [194] 1656

[cont.

Railways—cont.

Board of Trade Circular, Question, Observations, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson; Reply, Mr. Shaw Lefevre July 26, [198] 725
Liability of Railway Companies for Accidents, Observations, Mr. C. Denison; Reply, Mr. Bright August 6, [198] 1434
On North British Railway, Motion for "Report of proceedings taken by the legal authorities of the district of St. Boswell's, N.B., with reference to the death of Mr. Lisle, who was killed on the North British Railway on the night of the 6th of November, 1868" (Lord Kinnaird) May 11, [196] 566; after short debate, Motion agreed to (Parl. P. No. 118)
Preston Railway Station, Question, Mr. Hermon; Answer, Mr. Bright June 10, [196] 1494

Parl. Papers—
Reports, 1869—Parts I. to IV. [4120]
Returns, 1868 . . . No. 286, 291
Report of Board of Trade . No. 150
Facing Points — Rules of Board of Trade . . . No. 225

Railway Signalling, Question, Major Walker; Answer, Mr. Bright August 6, [198] 1372
Smoking on Metropolitan Railways, Question, Mr. Cadogan; Answer, Mr. Bright April 26, [195] 1579
South-Eastern Railway—Violation of Bye-law, Question, Captain Grosvenor; Answer, Mr. Bright June 21, [197] 355
Waterloo and Whitehall Railway, Question, Mr. G. Gregory; Answer, Mr. Bright April 16, [195] 972

Railways Abandonment Bill
(Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr. John Bright)
c. Ordered; read 1°* June 29 [Bill 186]
Read 2°* July 5
Committee*; Report July 16 [Bill 219]
Committee* (on re-comm.); Report July 22
Considered* July 23
Read 3°* July 30
l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Kimberley) August 2 (No. 249)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" August 3, [198] 1139; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee* August 5
Report* August 6
Read 3ª* August 7
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 114]

Rathbone, Mr. W., Liverpool
Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [197] 385, 390, 394, 397, 398; cl. 10, Amendt. 533; add. cl. 536; Consid. Amendt. 1086
194] Bankruptcy, Leave, 790
196] Comm. cl. 6, 1216; cl. 46, Amendt. 1404, 1413; cl. 47, Amendt. 1417; cl. 91, 1607; Amendt. 1608, 1899; cl. 126, Amendt. 1900, 1901, 1903, 1904
197] add. cl. 417
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 843
Imprisonment for Debt, 2R. [195] 177; Consid. cl. 5, [197] 767
Infanticide, [198] 1143
Navy—Naval Contracts, [198] 644
Orphan Pauper Children, [195] 971 [cont.

Rathbone, Mr. W.—cont.
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 679
Poor Law, Res. [197] 430, 443, 447
Registration of Voters, Motion for a Committee. [194] 975
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 423

Read, Mr. C. S., Norfolk, E.
Agricultural Returns, Res. [197] 837
Agricultural Statistics, [194] 2001, 2002; [196] 938
Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1328
Contagious Diseases (Animals), 2R. [194] 1025
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 15, Amendt. [197] 1271, 1272, 1290, 1291; cl. 7, 1768; add. cl. 1770, 1771, 1772
County Financial Arrangements, [196] 879
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 11, [196] 845; cl. 18, Amendt. 846, 848, 852; cl. 36, 855
Feed Stuffs and Manures, Res. [197] 974
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 376
Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 236
Norwich Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 9
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1925
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 189
Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 621; Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 792, 798

Real Estate Intestacy Bill
(Mr. Locke King, Mr. Bouverie, Mr. Hinde Palmer, Mr. Headlam)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Locke King) Mar 9, [194] 956; Bill ordered, after short debate
Read 1°* Mar 11 [Bill 45]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" July 14, [197] 1820
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Beresford Hope); after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 169, N. 144; M. 25; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2°
Bill withdrawn* August 4

Real Property
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, the Law as to the Duty on the succession to Real Estate, and as to the exemption of Real Estate from Probate Duty, is anomalous and unequal, and demands the early and serious attention of the Government, with a view to its amendment" (Mr. William Fowler) May 11, [196] 586; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Rebow, Mr. J. G., Colchester
Ways and Means, Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 797

Recorders Deputies Bill
(Mr. Denman, Mr. West)
c. Ordered; read 1°* May 4 [Bill 107]
Read 2°* May 5

Recorders Deputies Bill—cont.
Committee *; Report May 10
Read 3° * May 11
l. Read 1ª * (Lord Chelmsford) May 13 (No. 105)
Read 2ª * June 8
Committee * June 11
Report * June 14
Read 3ª * June 15
Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 23]

REDESDALE, Lord (Chairman of Committees)
Appropriation of Property, Motion for a Return, [194] 684, 690, 691
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1747; Report, [198] 146
Chairman of Committees, [194] 284
Coronation Oath, The, [195] 1059, 1069
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. Amendt. [198] 1077; 3R. 1289, 1290
Ecclesiastical Courts, &c., Nomination of Committee, [195] 1353
Irish Church, 2R. [197] 65, 70, 82, 291; Comm. cl. 6, 754; cl. 13, Amendt. 883; Report, 1488, 1492; add. cl. 1496, 1499; 3R. 1616
Life Peerages, Motion for an Address, [196] 10, 11; Comm. Preamble, 1192
Municipal Franchise, Report, [198] 145
Oriel College, Oxford, 2R. [194] 804
Parliament—Order in the House, [197] 407
Parliament—Construction of the House, Res. [198] 12
Parliamentary Proceedings, 2R. [194] 596, 799
Parochial Schools (Scotland), [195] 570; Report, [196] 1286; [198] 1451; Commons Amendts. 1470; Amendt. 1471, 1482, 1524
Pauperism and Emigration, [195] 969
Railway Companies Meetings, Comm. [195] 672
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [195] 572
Wiltes Peerage, Report, [196] 428

REED, Mr. C., Hackney
Herts Constabulary, [198] 1086
Metropolis—Victoria Park, [194] 486
Sunday and Ragged Schools, 2R. [196] 1959; Comm. [197] 464, 466
Tasmania—Public Worship, [194] 1085

Reformatory Schools Amendment Bill [H.L.] (The Marquess Townshend)
l. Presented; read 1ª * April 20 (No. 63)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" May 7, [196] 351; after short debate, Bill withdrawn

Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co.
Question, Mr. Eykyn; Answer, Mr. Bruce June 30, [197] 821; Observations, Mr. Eykyn, 975; Reply, Mr. Bruce; debate thereon; Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Mr. Fawcett), put, and negatived July 1, 980; Observations, Mr. Fawcett; Reply, The Solicitor General July 5, 1194

Registration of Voters
Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed, "to inquire into the Laws affecting the Registration of persons entitled to vote in the Election of Members to serve in Parliament for Boroughs in England and Wales, and to report whether any and what amendments are required therein" (Mr. Harcourt) Mar 9, [194] 970; after short debate, Motion agreed to
And, on Mar 19, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Vernon Harcourt (Chairman), Mr. Wentworth Beaumont, Mr. Bourke, Mr. Candlish, Mr. Collins, Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, Mr. Goldney, Mr. Staveley Hill, Mr. Hodgkinson, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr. Morley, Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Pemberton, Mr. Rathbone, Viscount Sandon, and Mr. Wheelhouse
Report of Select Committee July 2 (Parl. P. No. 294)

Regulation of Railways Act (1868) Amendment Bill—Afterwards Railway Companies Meetings Bill (Mr. Lefevre, Mr. John Bright)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Lefevre) April 1, [195] 24; Bill ordered; read 1° * [Bill 62]
Read 2° * April 5
Committee *; Report April 6
Read 3° * April 7
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Kimberley) April 8 (No. 44)
Read 2ª * April 12
Committee, after short debate; Report April 13, 671
Read 3ª * April 15
Royal Assent April 19 [32 Vict. c. 6]

Religious, Educational, &c. Societies Incorporation Bill [H.L.] (The Lord Romilly)
l. Presented; read 1ª * April 29 (No. 81)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" May 7, [196] 355; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee *; Report June 4 (No. 116)
Re-comm.; Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into a Committee" June 25, [197] 567; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Removal of Municipal Magistrates
Question, Mr. Eastwick; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 11, [196] 572; Question, Earl Grey; Answer, The Lord Chancellor; short debate thereon June 1, 1085
(See O'Sullivan's Disability Bill)

Representation of the People Act (1867) Amendment Bill (Mr. Henry B. Sheridan, Mr. Gourley)
c. The Ratepaying Clauses, Question, Mr. Charles Forster; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 19, [194] 127—Registration of Householders, Question, Mr. Eustace Smith; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 22, 157
Motion for Leave (Mr. H. B. Sheridan) Mar 2, 510; Bill ordered, after short debate
Read 1° * Mar 10 [Bill 43]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 7, [196] 1334; after short debate, Motion withdrawn; Bill withdrawn

Representation of the People Act, 1867—Representation of Minorities
Question, Sir Henry Hoare; Answer, Mr. Gladstone June 17, [197] 124

Representative Peers (Scotland and Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Stapleton, Colonel French, Colonel Stepney)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Stapleton) Mar 9, [194] 984; Bill ordered, after debate; read 1° *
Bill withdrawn * May 27 [Bill 41]

Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland Bill [H.L.] (The Earl Grey)
l. Presented; read 1ª, after short debate April 9, [195] 473 (No. 50)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 27, 1677
Amendt. to leave out from ("that") and insert ("a Select Committee be appointed to consider the state of the Representative Peerage of Scotland and Ireland, and the laws relating thereto" (The Duke of Buccleuch); after short debate, on Question, "Whether the words proposed to be left out, &c.;" Cont. 32, Not-Cont. 77; M. 45; resolved in the negative; Motion, as amended, agreed to; Committee appointed accordingly
Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. 1693
And, on April 30, the Lords following were named of the Committee:—Ld. Privy Seal, D. Somerset, D. Richmond, M. Bath, E. Doncaster, E. Airlie, E. Portarlington, E. Grey, V. Eversley, L. Elphinstone, L. Redesdale, L. Silchester, L. Monck
Report of Select Committee June 3 (Parl. P. L. No. 112*)

Revenue Officers Bill
(Mr. Monk, Sir Harry Verney, Mr. Craufurd)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Monk) Feb 23, [194] 271; Bill ordered, after debate; read 1° * [Bill 14]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 17, 1573
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Pease); after debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c.;" A. 88, N. 207; M. 119; words added; main Question, as amended, agreed to; Bill put off for six months

Revising Barristers—Appointment of
Question, Colonel French; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 9, [198] 1487; Question, Mr. Craufurd; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 10, 1535; Question, Mr. West; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 11, 1541

RICHARD, Mr. H., Merthyr Tydfil
*Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1294, 1329
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1967

RICHARDS, Mr. E. M., Cardiganshire
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1321, 1322
Friendly Societies, Res. [195] 508
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 5, [197] 577
Supply—Science and Art Department, [198] 217

RICHMOND, Duke of
Endowed Schools, Comm. [197] 1866, 1868, 1873
Ireland—Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 386
Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1846
Justices of the Peace Qualification, 2R. Amendt. [197] 510, 511
Parochial Schools (Scotland), [195] 1574; Comm. [196] 429, 432; cl. 1, 445; cl. 19, Amendt. 448; cl. 21, Amendt. 460, 466; Report, 1282, 1285
Sea Birds Preservation, Comm. cl. 2, Amendt. [196] 78, 79; cl. 4, Amendt. 79; add. cl. 81

RIDLEY, Mr. M. W., Northumberland, N.
Agricultural Labourers, Res. [197] 596
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1534

RIPON, Bishop of
Irish Church, 2R. [197] 53

Rivers—Pollution of Question, Mr. James Howard; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 23, [194] 202; Question, Mr. Dodds; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen July 22, [198] 453

Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Bill
(The Lord Advocate, Mr. Solicitor General for Scotland)
c. Ordered; read 1° * July 9 [Bill 207]
Bill withdrawn * July 15

ROBERTSON, Mr. D., Berwickshire
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Commission, Motion for Adjournment, [195] 2066; Nomination of Committee, [196] 629
Game Laws (Scotland) (No. 2), 2R. [198] 884

RODEN, Mr. W. S., Stoke-on-Trent
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 5, [197] 573

Roman Catholic Charities and Registration of Burials
Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed, "to inquire into the operation of the Act 23 and 24 Vic. c. 134, being an Act to amend the Law regarding Roman Catholic Charities, and into that of any Acts passed subsequently to the passing of the above mentioned Act, which may or may have been held to modify or alter the operation of the above Act, or which relate to the subject matter thereof; and into the operation of the Act 52 Geo. 3, c. 146, and into that of the 27 and 28 Vic. c. 97, which Acts relate to the Registration of Burials" (Mr. Newdegate) Feb 26, [194] 384; Question put, A. 46, N. 85; M. 39

Roman Catholic Charities—Returns
Question, Mr. Newdegate; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 22, [195] 1362
Amendt. on Committee of Supply July 30, To leave out from "That," and add "there be laid before this House, a Return showing the number of Deeds or Instruments enrolled during the last three years in the High Court of Chancery under the Act 23 and 24 Vic. c. 134, being an Act to amend the Law regarding the Roman Catholic Charities, and under any subsequent Act relating to or enlarging or extending the said Act, giving the names of the Trustees; the date of their execution of such Deeds or Instruments; and a summary or short description, together with the number of acres, of the property to which such Deeds or Instruments relate" (Mr. Newdegate), [198] 1014; after debate, Question put, "That the words, &c; A. 58, N. 50; M. 8

[cont.

Roman Catholic Charities—Returns—cont.

Romilly, Lord
- Bankruptcy, 2R. [197] 1415; Comm. [198] 15; Amendt. 18, 679; 3R. 889
- Habitual Criminals, 2R. [194] 692; Comm. cl. 10, Amendt. 1329, 1330, 1332; cl. 14, 1341; Amendt. 1342; cl. 10, Amendt. [195] 223, 226; cl. 12, Amendt. 227, 229
- Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. [198] 681
- Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1701; Comm. cl. 7, [197] 757; cl. 19, 1263, 1265; cl. 21, Amendt. 1267
- Married Women's Property, 2R. [198] 986
- Parliament—Order in the House, [197] 400
- Religious, Educational, &c. Societies Incorporation, 2R. [196] 355, 356; Comm. [197] 567, 569

Romney, Earl of
- Charity Commissioners, 2R. [197] 1749
- Contagious Diseases (Animals), 2R. [198] 888; Comm. cl. 64, 991
- Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 30, [197] 1884

Rosse, Earl of
- Irish Church, Report, [197] 1491

Roumania—Jews in
- Question, Mr. Alderman Salomons; Answer, Mr. Otway July 9, [197] 1524

Royal Patriotic Fund Office
- Defalcations by a Clerk, Question, Mr. Locke King; Answer, Mr. Cardwell Mar 16, [194] 1465
- School—The Boy M'Gregor, Question, Mr. Locke King; Answer, Mr. Cardwell April 26, [195] 1583

Russell, Earl
- Bankruptcy, [194] 102
- Brazilian Slave Trade, Comm. [194] 623
- Education, Public, [194] 805
- Ireland—State of, [196] 707
- Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1666; [197] 162; Comm. Preamble, 723; cl. 27, 1015; cl. 28, 1071; Report, 1494, 1512; 3R. 1646; Commons Amendts. [198] 283, 425
- Life Peerages, 1R. [195] 452, 473; 2R. 1657, 1670; Comm. cl. 1, [196] 1194, 1203, 1204; Report, 1373, 1387; 3R. [197] 1399
- Parliamentary Proceedings, 2R. [194] 605
- University Tests, 2R. [198] 125

Russell, Colonel Sir W., Norwich
- Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1167
- Norwich Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 15

Rutland, Duke of
- Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1687; Comm. Preamble, [197] 738; cl. 2, 749, 752; cl. 41, 1162

Ryde—Borough of
- Observations, Mr. W. W. Beach; Reply, Mr. Bruce; short debate thereon June 11, [196] 1631
- Pier, Questions, Sir James Elphinstone, Lord Henry Lennox; Answers, Mr. Childers June 21, [197] 358

Rylands, Mr. P., Warrington
- Army Estimates—Land Forces, [194] 1171
- Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, [197] 395
- Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1214; cl. 46, 1406; cl. 88, 1606; cl. 126, 1902
- Constabulary Returns, [195] 1850
- Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 440
- Government Contractors, [194] 482
- Navy—West Coast of Africa, [198] 1527
- Parliament—Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 195
- Public Houses, &c. Res. [197] 447, 458
- Sunday Trading, Comm. Motion for reporting Progress, [195] 799, 805; cl. 1, Motion for reporting Progress, [196] 1490
- Supply — Embassies and Missions Abroad, Amendt. [198] 913, 938, 949
  - Lord Lieutenant's Household, Amendt. [198] 508
  - Public Works (Ireland), [197] 1462
  - Rates on Government Property, [197] 1459
  - Stationery Office, [197] 1693
- Ways and Means, Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 787, 801

St. Aubyn, Mr. J., Cornwall, W.
- County Courts, 2R. [194] 1569
- Mines, Rating of, [194] 407
- Stannaries, Leave, [194] 399

St. David's, Bishop of
- Bishops of the South Western District, [196] 8
- China—Missionaries in, [194] 941
- Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1820; Comm. Preamble, [197] 720; cl. 12, 871

St. Katherine's Hospital
- Question, Observations, Earl Nelson; Reply, The Lord Chancellor April 30, [195] 1945

St. Lawrence, Viscount, Galway Bo.
- Ireland—Election Petitions, [195] 1096
- Sea Fisheries (Ireland), 2R. [196] 1466, 1475
- Supply—Report, [198] 693

St. Leonards, Lord
- Courts of Justice Salaries and Funds, 2R. Amendt. [198] 1062

ST. MAUR, Earl
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [197] 912

St. Michael and St. George—Order of
Question, Mr. Raikes; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 15, [194] 1348

Sale of Liquors on Sunday
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that any measure for the general amendment of the Laws for Licensing Public Houses, Beer Houses, and Refreshment Houses should include the prohibition of the sale of Liquors on Sunday" (Mr. Rylands) June 22, [197] 447; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. O'Reilly, Mr. Pim, Mr. Peel Dawson)
c. Ordered; read 1° * Mar 1 [Bill 29]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 9, [194] 989
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Murphy); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question agreed to; Bill read 2°
Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" (Mr. O'Reilly) June 9, [196] 1451
Amendt. to leave out from "That" and add "until the present system of licensing in Ireland be remodelled and placed on a new basis, it is, in the opinion of this House, inexpedient to proceed further with the consideration of this Bill" (Mr. Murphy); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. and Motion withdrawn; Bill withdrawn

SALISBURY, Marquess of
Bankruptcy, [194] 96
Beerhouses, &c. 2R. [196] 1583
Bright, Mr., Letter of, [197] 15
Civil Service Pensions, Comm. [196] 83
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 3R. Amendt. [198] 1137
Education, Public, [194] 818
Endowed Schools, Comm. [197] 1874; cl. 14, Amendt. 1877, 1879; cl. 19, 1882; cl. 30, 1883
Government of India Act Amendment, [195] 222; 1R. 1080; 2R. 1841; Report, Amendt. [196] 690, 698, 702
Governor General of India, 2R. [194] 1070
Habitual Criminals, 1R. [194] 348; Comm. cl. 4, 1313, 1316; cl. 10, 1333; cl. 13, 1338; cl. 14, 1340, 1342; cl. 10, [195] 225, 226; cl. 12, 228
India—Bengal Bank at Bombay, [197] 513
Railways—Financial Statement, [198] 542, 545
Infant Life Preservation, 2R. [197] 1739
Ireland—Cork, Mayor of, [196] 77
Irish Policy of the Government, [196] 357
197] Irish Church, 2R. 81, 82; Comm. Preamble, 738; cl. 2, 749; cl. 6, 754; cl. 13, 877; cl. 14, Amendt. 901, 916; cl. 15, Amendt. 918, 920; cl. 27, Amendt. 1001; cl. 28, 1065;
[cont.

SALISBURY, Marquess of—cont.
197] cl. 29, 1126; cl. 33, 1157, 1164; cl. 68, 1245, 1248; Report, Amendt. 1496, 1507, 1508, 1520, 1524
198] Commons Amendts. 300, 423, 443
Life Peerages, 1R. [195] 461; 2R. 1656; Comm. Preamble, [196] 1192; cl. 1, 1194, 1203; Report, 1377
Parliament—Business of the House, [198] 14
Order in the House, [197] 404
Parliament—Construction of the House, Res. [198] 12
Parliamentary Proceedings, 2R. [194] 588, 617, 620, 799
Railway Companies Meetings, Comm. [195] 671
Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland, 2R. [195] 1688, 1690
Tenure (Ireland), 2R. [195] 1182

Salmon Fisheries
Address for, "Return of the rent or value of the stake or bag-net fishings in Scotland as the same appear in the valuation roll of the counties or burghs within which such fishings are situate, with their rental for each year as shown in the valuation rolls for the last ten years" (Lord Abinger) Mar 11, [194] 1082; after short debate, Address agreed to Question, Mr. Fordyce; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 20, [195] 1196
Salmon Passes on the Shannon, Question, Mr. W. Ormsby Gore; Answer, Mr. Ayrton May 13, [196] 743; Question, Colonel French; Answer, Mr. Ayrton June 28, [197] 648
Scotch Salmon Fishery Act, 1862, Question, Lord Abinger; Answer, The Earl of Morley July 13, [197] 1753
Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into the present state of the Laws affecting the Salmon Fisheries of England and Wales, and to report whether any and what amendments are required therein" (Mr. Dodds) June 17, [197] 161
And, on June 25, Committee nominated as follows:—Mr. Dodds (Chairman), Colonel Amcotts, Mr. Assheton, Colonel W. Edwardes, Mr. Hambro, Mr. H. A. Herbert, Mr. Staveley Hill, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Knight, Mr. Liddell, Mr. William Lowther, Mr. Pease, Earl Percy, Mr. Evan Richards, and Mr. Whitwell
Report of Select Committee July 27 (Parl. P. No. 361)
Eighth Report—(Parl. P. No. 184)

Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Attorney General for Ireland, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Attorney General for Ireland) Mar 16, [194] 1543; Bill ordered, after short debate; read 1° * [Bill 56]
Read 2° * Mar 19
Committee *; Report Mar 22
Considered * April 6
Read 3° * April 7
l. Read 1ª * (Lord Dufferin) April 8 (No. 43)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 12, [195] 571; Bill read 2ª, after short debate
[cont.

Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Bill—cont.
Committee *; Report April 15
Read 3ª * April 16
Royal Assent May 13 [32 Vict. c. 9]

Salmon Fisheries Law Amendment Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered; read 1° * May 13 [Bill 130]
Bill withdrawn * June 17

Salmon Fishery Legislation
Question, Mr. Liddell; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Mar 23, [194] 2003; Question, Sir Herbert Croft; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen April 16, [195] 975
Derwent Fishery—Judgment of Special Commissioners, Question, Mr. Dodds; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 17, [194] 90; Question, Mr. Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Bruce Feb 23, 207

SALOMONS, Mr. Alderman D., Greenwich
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1414; cl. 118, 1900
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 836
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 5, [197] 576; cl. 18, 581
Insolvent Debtors and Bankruptcy Repeal, [197] 1526
Jews in Roumania, [197] 1525
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 342
Navy—Dockyard Emigrants to Canada, [196] 1297
Navy Estimates—New Works, [195] 211
  Steam Machinery, [195] 209
Stamp Duties Exemptions, [195] 1849
Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 799
Supply—Home Office, &c. Departments, [197] 1480
  Houses of Parliament, [197] 682
Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 619

SAMUDA, Mr. J. D'A., Tower Hamlets
Army—Committee on New Arms, [198] 498
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 46, [196] 1405
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 829
Light Dues, Res. [196] 158
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 344
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, 2R. [196] 1363
Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [195] 121
  Men and Boys, [194] 919
  Naval Stores, [195] 193
  New Works, [195] 213
  Steam Machinery, [195] 193
Patents for Inventions, Res. [196] 918
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 516
Rateable Property (Metropolis), Leave, [194] 183
Trades Unions, 2R. [197] 1383
Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 612

SAMUELSON, Mr. B., Banbury
Assessed Rates, Consid. add. cl. [197] 1082
British Columbia, Motion for Papers, [196] 1105
Education Votes, [197] 515
Electric Telegraphs, [194] 1787
Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1401
Factory and Workshop Act, [198] 683
Schools of Science, [198] 158
Supply—Science and Art Department, [198] 217

SAMUELSON, Mr. H. B., Cheltenham
Parliament—Ladies' Gallery, Res. [197] 1585
Poor Laws—Keighley Union, [198] 891
Slave Trade—Brazilian Vessels, [194] 354

SANDON, Viscount, Liverpool
Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), Comm. [195] 220
Education in Large Towns, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1233
Education, Primary, [198] 152
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1328
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 901; cl. 29, 1932
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 618
Parliament—Morning Sittings, [195] 1979
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 659
Registration of Voters, Motion for a Committee, [194] 980
University Tests, [198] 452

Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment Bill
(Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen)
c. Ordered; read 1° * July 28 [Bill 244]
Read 2° * August 2
Committee *; Report August 3
Read 3° * August 4
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Devon) August 5 (No. 273)
Read 2ª * August 6
Committee *; Report August 7
Read 3ª * August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 108]

Sanitary Act (1866) Amendment (Ireland) Bill (Mr. Attorney General for Ireland, Mr. Chichester Fortescue)
c. Ordered; read 1° * August 3 [Bill 261]
Read 2° * August 4
Committee *; Report August 5
Read 3° * August 6
l. Read 1ª * (Earl De Grey) August 7 (No. 279)
Read 2ª *; Committee negatived August 9
Read 3ª * August 10
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 100]

Sanitary Acts—Consolidation of Question, Lord Eustace Cecil; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 23, [194] 2000

SARTORIS, Mr. E. J., Carmarthenshire
Army—Adjutancies of Militia, Res. [197] 138
New Zealand—Imperial Troops in the Colony, [195] 675
University Tests, Comm. add. cl. [197] 1095; [198] 451

Sat First

Dec 10, 1868—James Bishop of Hereford
Dec 15—The Earl of Abergavenny, after the death of his Father
The Lord Carysfort, after the death of his Father
Feb 11, 1869—The Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe
Feb 16—Archibald Campbell Archbishop of Canterbury
John Bishop of London
William Connor Bishop of Peterborough
Richard Chevenix Archbishop of Dublin
Feb 18—The Lord Carleton, after the death of his Father
The Duke of Norfolk, after the death of his Father
April 19—The Viscount Gough, after the death of his Father
April 22—The Earl De La Warr, after the death of his Father
April 26—The Lord Cloncurry, after the death of his Father
April 30—The Earl Ferrers, after the death of his Father
May 3—The Lord Meldrum, after the death of his Father
May 7—The Earl of Ilchester, after the death of his Uncle
May 10—The Lord Bishop of Tuam
May 11—The Lord Wynford, after the death of his Father
May 13—The Earl of Hillsborough, after the death of his Father
June 14—The Marquess of Anglesey, after the death of his Father
The Earl of Radnor, after the death of his Father
The Lord Leconfield, after the death of his Father
The Lord Ross, after the death of his Brother
The Viscount Combermere, after the death of his Father
The Lord Fingall, after the death of his Father
June 21—The Lord Hawke, after the death of his Brother
June 22—The Lord Stuart of Castle Stuart, after the death of his Father
June 28—The Lord Ashburton, after the death of his Father
July 1—The Lord Stanley of Alderley, after the death of his Father

Representative Peers for Ireland
(Writs and Returns.)
Feb 16—The Earl of Rosse, v. Henry Baron Farnham, deceased
July 8—The Earl of Bantry, v. The Earl of Wicklow, deceased

Representative Peer for Scotland
(Writ and Return.)
July 8—The Earl of Kellie; Certificate read

New Peers Introduced

Dec 15, 1868—The Right Hon. Sir William Page Wood, Knight, Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, Baron Hatherley of Down-Hatherley in the county of Gloucester

Sat First—New Peers Introduced—cont.

Dec 15, 1868—William Ernest Baron Feversham Viscount Helmsley of Helmsley and Earl of Feversham of Ryedale in the North Riding of the county of York
Feb 18, 1869—The Earl of Caithness, a Peer of Scotland, Baron Barrogill of the United Kingdom
Mar 2—Edward Anthony John Viscount Gormanston, a Peer of Ireland, created Baron Gormanston of Whitewood in the county of Meath
April 15—The Right Hon. Sir John Laird Mair Lawrence, baronet, G. C. B., G.C.S.I., Baron Lawrence of the Punjaub and of Grately in the county of Southampton
April 23—The Right Hon. Sir James Plaisted Wilde, knight, Baron Penzance of Penzance in the county of Cornwall
July 2 — Lord Rollo, Baron Dunning of the United Kingdom

Saunderson, Mr. E. J., Cavan Co.
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1377; cl. 19, 1492

Savings Banks
Questions, Mr. Cawley, Mr. Hibbert; Answers, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 26, [195] 1581

Savings Banks and Post Office Savings Banks Bill (Mr. Dodson, Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)

c. Resolution in Committee July 6
Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1° * July 7 [Bill 199]
Read 2° * July 16
Committee *; Report July 19
Read 3° * July 20
l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) July 22 (No. 211)
Read 2ª * July 29
Committee *; Report July 30
Read 3ª * August 2
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 59]

Savings Banks Returns
Question, Mr. Wells; Answer, Mr. Ayrton May 4, [196] 101

Sclater-Booth, Mr. G., Hampshire, N
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [196] 1909; [197] 314
Civil Offices (Pensions), Comm. cl. 2, [196] 870, 871; Consid. cl. 3, [197] 551
Gold Coinage, [198] 1409, 1422
Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1817
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. Amendt. [195] 1298; Comm. [196] 1450
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 339
Metropolitan Street Tramways, Consid. add. cl. [196] 738

[cont.

SCLATER-BOOTH, Mr. G.—cont.

- Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [196] 1793
- Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 59, [198] 1444
- Post Office—Mails to the United States, [194] 1465
- Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1307
- Scotland—Sheriff Courts, [196] 1634
- Sunday and Ragged Schools, Comm. [197] 465
- Supply—Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 646
  - Board of Trade, [197] 1683
  - Civil Service Estimates, Vote on Account, [195] 537
  - Common Law Courts, [198] 1003
  - Consular Services, [198] 953
  - Distressed British Seamen, [198] 963, 965
  - Embassies and Missions Abroad, [198] 949, 950, 951
  - Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 677, 678
  - Home Office, &c. Departments, [197] 1480
  - House of Commons Offices, [197] 1476, 1477
  - House of Lords Offices, [197] 1476
  - Houses of Parliament, [197] 680; Report, 1441
  - Learned Societies, [198] 504, 506
  - Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 509
  - Lunacy Commission, [197] 1685
  - Miscellaneous Expenses, [198] 971, 972
  - Poor Law Commission, [197] 1688
  - Probate Court and Registries, [197] 1211
  - Public Buildings, [197] 674, 675, 676
  - Public Offices Site, [197] 1203, 1206
  - Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Department (Scotland), [197] 1710
  - Report, [198] 515, 519
  - Royal Parks, &c. [197] 668, 671
  - Treasury, &c. Departments, [197] 1478, 1479
  - Works, &c. [197] 1705
- Telegraph, Comm. cl. 5, [198] 771; cl. 12, 772
- Transit of Venus, [198] 1395
- Treasury Board, Constitution of the, [194] 124, 842
- Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 417; Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 790

SCOTLAND

- Agriculture — Employment of Women and Children, Question, Mr. W. Cartwright; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Mar 15, [194] 1355
- Ayrshire, Distributor of Stamps for, Question, Lord Garlies; Answer, Mr. Ayrton August 3, [198] 1144
- Courts of Law Commission, Question, The Earl of Minto; Answer, The Earl of Morley April 26, [195] 1575
- Cumbrae Lights, The, Question, Mr. Grieve; Answer, Mr. Shaw Lefevre July 27, [198] 799
- Education, Question, Sir Edward Colebrooke; Answer, The Lord Advocate Mar 22, [194] 1904
  - Minute of Committee of Council July 14 (Parl. P. No. 322)

[cont.

SCOTLAND—cont.

- Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 12, To leave out from "That," and add "an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, that She will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House, Return, in a tabulated form, from each county in Scotland showing the total number of non-resident proprietors qualified to vote for a Member of Parliament, distinguishing in separate columns the number of those whose property in such county as shown by the Valuation Roll is of less annual value than £100, £50, £20, and £14, and also those at and under £10 respectively; showing the nature of the qualification whether Fiars, Life Renters, Superiors, or Feuars; also the number of such County Voters resident within any Royal or Parliamentary Burgh within each county respectively" (Mr. Craufurd), [194] 1253; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.; after debate, Amendt. withdrawn
- Faggot Voting in Peeblesshire, Petition presented (Sir Edward Colebrooke); Questions, Sir Graham Montgomery; Answer, Mr. Speaker Mar 12, [194] 1185
- Game Laws (Scotland)—See that title
- Hypothec, Law of, Moved, That a Select Committee be appointed "to inquire into the operation of the Law of Hypothec in Scotland" (The Earl of Airlie) Mar 12, [194] 1178; after short debate, Motion agreed to
  - And, on Mar 18, the Lords following were named of the Committee:—Ld. Privy Seal, E. Doncaster, E. Airlie, E. Graham, E. Grey, E. Minto, E. Morley, E. Camperdown, L. Saltoun, L. Wharncliffe, L. Rossie, L. Panmure, L. Abinger, L. Portman, L. Clandeboye, and L. Colonsay
    - Report—Parl. P. . . . . l. 45
    - Return 74
  - Question, The Duke of Cleveland; Answer, The Earl of Airlie Mar 18, [194] 1652
- Income Tax, Question, Sir James Elphinstone; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 7, [196] 389; Question, Mr. Miller; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 10, 471
- Police Systems of Scotland, Observations, The Earl of Minto; Reply, The Earl of Morley; short debate thereon May 13, [196] 700
- Poor Law Amendment, Question, Mr. Anderson; Answer, The Lord Advocate August 4, [198] 1253
- Poor Law (Scotland)—See that title
- Poor Law (Scotland)—Assessments, Question, Mr. Craufurd; Answer, The Lord Advocate Mar 12, [194] 1188
- Portpatrick Harbour and Lighthouse, Question, Lord Garlies; Answer, Mr. Bright Feb 18, [194] 110; Observations, Lord Garlies Feb 26, 367; Reply, Mr. Bright, 371; Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Mar 18, 1656; Question, Sir Frederick W. Heygate; Answer, Mr. Bright April 8, [195] 360; Observations, Mr. W. Johnston; Reply, Mr. Ayrton; short debate thereon April 16, 982
- Public Business connected with Scotland, Questions, Mr. M'Laren, Mr. Bouverie; Answers, Mr. Gladstone August 5, [198] 1296

[cont.

Scotland—cont.
- Queen's Remembrancer, Question, Mr. Miller; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 12, [194] 1187
- Salmon Fisheries, Address for, "Return of the rent or value of the stake or bag-net fishings in Scotland as the same appear in the valuation roll of the counties or burghs within which such fishings are situate, with their rental for each year as shown in the valuation rolls for the last ten years" (Lord Abinger) Mar 11, [194] 1082; after short debate, Address agreed to
- Question, Mr. Fordyce; Answer, Mr. Bruce April 20, [195] 1196
- Scotch and Irish Fisheries, Question, Mr. Stacpoole; Answer, Mr. Childers July 29, [198] 893
- Scotch Salmon Fishery Act, 1862, Question, Lord Abinger; Answer, The Earl of Morley July 13, [197] 1753
- Sheriff Courts, Question, Mr. Miller; Answer, The Lord Advocate; short debate thereon June 11, [196] 1634
- Truck Act, Question, Sir David Wedderburn; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 15, [197] 1885
- Waternish Church, Isle of Skye, Question, Mr. Miller; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 15, [197] 1886; Question, Mr. Cameron; Answer, Mr. Bruce July 27, 798

Scott, Lord H. J. M. D., Hampshire, S.
- Irish Church, Comm. [195] 921
- Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 1, [198] 822
- Scotland—Faggot Votes in Scotch Counties, Motion for a Return, [194] 1273

Scourfield, Mr. J. H., Pembrokeshire
- Agricultural Labourers, Res. [197] 605
- Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 865
- Criminal Law — Liberation of Sir Eardley Culling Eardley, [195] 1200
- Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 834; cl. 22, 853
- Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1319
- Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1399; Comm. cl. 29, [196] 1772
- Irish Church, Comm. [195] 910; Consid. [196] 770, 777
- Navy Estimates—Men and Boys, [194] 922
- Parliament—Decoration of Central Hall, Motion for a Committee, [198] 720
- Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1508
- Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 662
- Post Office—Landing Mails at a Western Port, [196] 927
- Supply—Horses, Tax on, [195] 1097
  - Poor Law Commission, [197] 1688
  - Report, [194] 539
  - Stationery Office, [197] 1693
- Telegraph, Comm. cl. 4, [198] 767
- Ways and Means, Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties, [196] 803

Sea Birds Preservation Bill
(Mr. Sykes, Mr. Clay, Mr. Ward Jackson)
- c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Sykes) Feb 26, [194] 404; Bill ordered
- Read 1° * Mar 1 [Bill 28]

[cont.

Sea Birds Preservation Bill—cont.
- c. Read 2°, after short debate Mar 5, [194] 775
- Committee *; Report Mar 18 [Bill 59]
- Considered April 9, [195] 557
- Moved, "That the Bill be re-committed for the purpose of excluding Scotland from its operation" (Mr. Fordyce); Motion negatived
- Read 3° * April 12
- l. Read 1ª * (The Duke of Northumberland) April 12 (No. 54)
- Read 2ª * April 26
- Committee May 4, [196] 78 (No. 92)
- Report * May 10
- Read 3ª * May 11
- c. Lords Amendts. agreed to June 1 [Bill 125]
- Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 17]

Sea Fisheries Act (1868) Extension Bill
(Mr. Andrew Johnston, Colonel Brise, Mr. Donald Dalrymple)
- c. Ordered; read 1° * June 9 [Bill 156]
- Bill withdrawn * July 14

Sea Fisheries Act (1868) Supplemental Bill (Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, Mr. John Bright)
- c. Ordered; read 1° * June 3 [Bill 146]
- Read 2° * June 10
- Committee *; Report June 11
- Considered * June 14
- Read 3° * June 14
- l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Kimberley) June 15 (No. 132)
- Read 2ª * June 17
- Committee *; Report June 24
- Read 3ª * June 25
- Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 31]

Sea Fisheries (Ireland) Bill
(Mr. Blake, Viscount Burke, Colonel Annesley, Mr. Kavanagh)
- c. Ordered; read 1° * Mar 15 [Bill 51]
- Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 9, [196] 1457; after debate, Bill read 2°
- Bill withdrawn * July 6

Sea Fishing Boats
- Question, Sir Herbert Croft; Answer, Mr. Bright April 23, [195] 1464

Seamen's Clothing Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl of Camperdown)
- l. Presented; read 1ª * July 12 (No. 189)
- Read 2ª * July 20
- Committee *; Report July 22
- Read 3ª * July 23
- c. Read 1° * July 26 [Bill 242]
- Read 2° * July 28
- Committee *; Report July 29
- Read 3° * July 30
- Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 57]

Sea—Rule of the Road at
- Observations, Sir John Hay; Reply, Mr. Bright Feb 26, [194] 371; Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Bright April 23, [195] 1465

Seeds Adulteration Bill (Mr. Welby, Mr. Brand, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Read)
c. Ordered; read 1° * Mar 12 [Bill 49]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 16, [196] 1916; after debate, Bill read 2°
Referred to Select Committee; Select Committee nominated June 28 as follows:—Mr. Welby (Chairman), Mr. Backhouse, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Brand, Mr. Cogan, Mr. Collins, Mr. Cross, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr. M'Lagan, Mr. Morrison, Mr. Norwood, Mr. C. S. Read, Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson; July 6, Mr. O'Neill, Dr. Playfair added; July 7, Mr. Pell added
Report of Select Committee July 19 (Parl. P. No. 335)
Committee *—R.P. July 21 [Bill 222]
Committee * (on re-comm.); Report July 28
Considered * July 29
Read 3° * July 29
l. Read 1ª * (Earl of Devon) July 30 (No. 242)
Read 2ª * August 2
Committee August 5, [198] 1283 (No. 276)
Report * August 6
Read 3ª * August 7
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 112]

Seely, Mr. C., Lincoln City
Navy—Admiralty Accounts, [198] 1526
Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1281; Res. [196] 1128, 1155, 1157
Supply—Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1466

Select Vestries
Bill, pro formâ, read 1ª * Feb 16

Selkirk, Earl of
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Commons Amendts. [198] 1479
Scotland — Hypothec, Law of, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1184

Selwin-Ibbetson, Sir H. J., Essex, W.
Assessed Rates, Consid. add. cl. [197] 1083
Beerhouses, &c. Leave, [194] 403; 2R. [195] 1763
Contagious Diseases (Animals), Leave, [194] 92; 2R. 1036
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 16, [197] 1292
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 31, Amendt. [196] 1778, 1779; cl. 35, Amendt. 1779; cl. 41, 1782
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Instruction, Motion for Adjournment, [197] 467
New Zealand—Affairs of, [198] 471
Parliament—Morning Sittings, [197] 1190
Railway Accidents, [194] 737; [196] 936; [198] 725

Seymour, Rear-Admiral G. H., Antrim Co.
Navy Estimates—Dockyards, &c. [195] 120
 sSteam Machinery, [195] 209
Rule of the Road at Sea, [194] 371
Scotland—Portpatrick Harbour, [195] 986

Shaftesbury, Earl of
China—Missionaries in, [194] 946; [195] 135
*Ecclesiastical Courts, 2R. [195] 808, 840; Nomination of Committee, 1353; Withdrawal of Bill, [198] 885
Habitual Criminals, 1R. [194] 345; 2R. 697; Comm. cl. 4, 1311, 1312, 1315, 1316, 1319; cl. 10, 1323; cl. 13, 1338; cl. 17, 1348; cl. 12, Amendt. [195] 227, 228
Irish Church, Commons Amendts. [198] 281
Married Women's Property, 2R. [198] 987

Shaw, Mr. R., Burnley
Army—Canteens, [194] 1464
 Concentration of Army Offices, [195] 1577
Irish Church, Lords Amendts. [198] 73
St. James and St. Paul's, Lancashire, [195] 576
Supply—Consular Services, [198] 953

Shaw, Mr. W., Bandon
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 1732; Comm. cl. 32, [196] 36; cl. 59, 415; Consid. 780

Sheridan, Mr. H. B., Dudley
Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1334, 1336
Convention of Paris, Motion for Papers, [196] 1445, 1448
Fire Insurances, Res. [195] 305, 307, 308; [196] 574
Life Assurance Companies, Leave, [194] 585
Mexico—Bondholders, [198] 897
 Diplomatic Relations with, [195] 845
Parliament—Business of the House, [198] 906
Police Constables, Pay of, [197] 1663
Railway Guards and Passengers Communication, [194] 1903; [198] 1433, 1438, 1439
Representation of the People Act (1867) Amendment, Leave, [194] 510; 2R. [196] 1334
Sierra Leone — Thomas v. Huggins, Case of, Res. [198] 1214, 1217

Sherlock, Mr. D., King's Co.
Dublin Freemen, Leave, [197] 952
Dublin Freemen Commission, Comm. [198] 232
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1277
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 20, Amendt. [195] 1497, 1506; cl. 26, 1624
Roman Catholic Charities, Motion for Returns, [198] 1027
Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), Comm. [196] 1454
Supply—Education, National, [198] 740
 Flax Cultivation (Ireland), [198] 967
 Stationery Office, [197] 1700

Sheriffs (York County) Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered * April 29
Read 1° * May 3 [Bill 102]
Question, Mr. H. F. Beaumont; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen June 3, [196] 1208
Moved, "That the Order for 2R. be read, and discharged" (Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen); Order discharged; Bill withdrawn

SHERRIFF, Mr. A. C., Worcester (City)
Judicial Commission, The, [195] 975

Shipping Dues Exemption Act (1867) Amendment Bill
(Mr. Russell Gurney, Mr. William Cowper)
c. Resolution in Committee; Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1°* June 28 [Bill 184]
Read 2°* July 5
Committee*; Report July 6
Considered* July 7
Read 3°* July 7
l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Kimberley) July 8 (No. 178)
Read 2ª* July 27
Committee*; Report July 29
Read 3ª* July 30
Royal Assent August 2 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 52]

Shipping Dues in Foreign Ports
Question, Mr. Stevenson; Answer, Mr. Otway July 26, [198] 682

SIDEBOTTOM, Mr. J., Staleybridge
Société Industrielle et Agricole d'Egypte, [197] 1167

Sierra Leone—Case of Thomas v. Huggins
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, a Court of Inquiry should be held at Sierra Leone to investigate the charges against Mr. Horatio James Huggins, the Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone, contained in the Petition from that Settlement sent to the Secretary of State for the Colonies" (Mr. Henry Brinsley Sheridan) August 3, [198] 1214; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Silk Manufactures
Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 18, To leave out from "That," and add "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into and report upon the operation of the Commercial Treaty with France, ratified the 13th day of January 1860, and particularly as it affects the Silk Manufacture in this Country" (Mr. Staveley Hill), [197] 329; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Question put; A. 155, N. 101; M. 54

SIMEON, Sir J., Isle of Wight
Queensland—Alleged Slavery in, [196] 574
Rates and Taxes, Collection of, [194] 839
Ryde, Borough of, [196] 1632

SIMON, Mr. Serjeant J., Dewsbury
Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1333
Bankruptcy, 2R. [195] 157; Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1214; cl. 7, Amendt. 1217; cl. 47, Amendt. 1417; cl. 53, Amendt. 1418; cl. 54, 1593; cl. 59, 1600; cl. 91, 1899; cl. 131, Amendt. [197] 415
Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 863, 865
China—Communication with, [198] 1037
County Courts, 2R. [194] 1567
[cont.

SIMON, Mr. Serjeant J.—cont.
Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), 2R. [194] 775; Comm. Amendt. [195] 217, 221
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 569
Imprisonment for Debt, 2R. [195] 176; Comm. cl. 5, [197] 575; cl. (D) 12, 578; cl. 14, 580; Consid. cl. 5, Amendt. 761, 764, 766

SIMONDS, Mr. W. B., Winchester
Army—Volunteer Capitation Grant, [196] 1298

Slave Trade
Brazilian Vessels, Question, Mr. Henry Samuelson; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Feb 26, [194] 354
Cape Colony—Enslavement of Kaffir Children, Question, Mr. R. Fowler; Answer, Mr. Monsell; short debate thereon Feb 19, [194] 128
Queensland—Alleged Slavery, Question, Sir John Simeon; Answer, Mr. Monsell May 11, [196] 574
South Sea Islands, from the, Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor; Answer, Mr. Monsell; short debate thereon June 28, [197] 633; Question, Mr. P. A. Taylor; Answer, Mr. Otway July 22, [198] 450
Parl. P. August 9 . . . . . No. 408
Correspondence, 1868 . . . . [4131]
West Coast of Africa, Question, Sir William Hutt; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 8, [194] 831

Sligo Election—Joint Address for a Commission
Moved, "That an humble Address, &c." (Mr. Attorney General for Ireland) April 9, [195] 566; Motion agreed to Question, Lord Claud Hamilton; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 16, 974
Address agreed to June 8
Her Majesty's Answer reported June 21

SMITH, Mr. F. C., Nottingham
Bankruptcy, 2R. [195] 167

SMITH, Mr. J. B., Stockport
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), 2R. [195] 435; Comm. cl. 67, [197] 1539; cl. 90, 1758; cl. 96, Amendt. 1759, 1761, 1763; cl. 101, ib.
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. [196] 840
Gold Coinage, [198] 1408
India—Budget, The, [194] 201
India—East India Revenue Accounts, Res. Motion for Adjournment, [198] 1198, 1343
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 16, [195] 1409
Metric System of Weights and Measures, [195] 972
Ways and Means, Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), [195] 620

SMITH, Mr. T. E., Tynemouth, &c.
Assessed Rates, Leave, [194] 325
Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 627
Navy Estimates—Coast Guard Service, [195] 99
Post Office—Mail Packet Contracts, Motion for a Committee, [194] 1297
Registration of Householders, [194] 157

Smith, Mr. W. H., Westminster
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 18, [196] 849
District Asylums, [194] 1899
License Duties on Servants, [195] 1849
Metropolis—New Courts of Justice, [195] 356
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), Comm. cl. 22, Amendt. [198] 1055; 3R. Amendt. 1335
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, 2R. [196] 1364, 1365
Paraguay—British Subjects in, [198] 1248
Pauperism and Vagrancy, Motion for a Committee, [196] 512
Public Offices, Great George Street, [195] 1973
Telegraph, Comm. [198] 755
Valuation of Property (Metropolis), 2R. [195] 20

Solicitor General, The (Sir J. D. Coleridge), Exeter
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 32, [196] 1402; cl. 46, 1415; cl. 54, 1593, 1595; cl. 59, 1601; cl. 91, 1898
Bishops Resignation, Comm. cl. 2, [198] 1319
Durham, University of, [194] 1898
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. (A) 12, [196] 1764; cl. 15, 1766
Imprisonment for Debt, Consid. cl. 5, [197] 763
Irish Church, 2R. [194]* 1938; Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1146, 1152, 1381; cl. 20, 1500; cl. 39, [196] 339
Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1224
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, 2R. [195] 1321, 1324
Married Women's Property, 2R. [195] 794
Navy—Admiralty Clerks, Res. [196] 1626
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 226, 233
Real Estate Intestacy, 2R. [197] 1860
Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 1196, 1198
Special and Common Juries, 2R. [198] 400
Undue Influence and Bribery, [196] 1497
University Tests, Leave, [194] 272; 2R. 1041, 1046, 1054, 1457; Comm. cl. 1, [197] 789; cl. 6, 792; add. cl. 1097, 1101, 1103; [198] 452

Somerset, Duke of
Bishops of the South Western District, [196] 4
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1743; Report, [198] 146
China—Missionaries in, [194] 933; [195] 131
Civil Service Pensions, Comm. [196] 81, 85
Ecclesiastical Courts, &c., Nomination of Committee, [195] 1351
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 13, [197] 1876
Governor General of India, 2R. [194] 1078
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1341
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 13, [197] 874; cl. 25, 998; Report, 1492; 3R. 1635
Naval Stores, 2R. [195] 673
Navy—Armament of Turret Ships, [195] 340, 352
Newspapers, &c. 2R. [196] 968
Tenure (Ireland), Comm. [195] 1568

South Eastern Railway—Violation of Bye-Law
Question, Captain Grosvenor; Answer, Mr. Bright June 21, [197] 355

South Kensington Museum
Question, Lord Elcho; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster June 25, [197] 570
Deterioration of Pictures in, Motion for Address for "Copy of the Report of the Committee appointed by the Science and Art Department to inquire into the alleged deterioration of the Pictures belonging to the National Gallery, deposited at the South Kensington Museum" (Mr. Dillwyn) June 11, [196] 1635; Motion withdrawn
(See National Gallery)

Spain
Imprisonment of a British Subject at Barcelona, Question, Sir Harcourt Johnstone; Answer, Mr. Otway June 14, [196] 1741—at Cuba, Question, Mr. Crum-Ewing; Answer, Mr. Otway Feb 22, [194] 159
"Mermaid," the, Case of, Question, Mr. Headlam; Answer, Mr. Otway Mar 18, [194] 1659
Seizure of the "Mary Lowell" in British Colonial Waters, Question, Sir John Hay; Answer, Mr. Otway May 4, [196] 105; Question, Mr. Gourley; Answer, Mr. Otway May 6, 264
"Tornado," the, Case of, Question, Mr. Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Otway Mar 8, [194] 836—Petition of Crew, Observations, The Marquess of Clanricarde; Reply, The Earl of Clarendon April 8, [195] 353; Question, Mr. Bentinck; Answer, Mr. Otway May 13, [196] 743; June 10, 1499
Parl. P. . . . . [4126, 1 & 2]
Treaty of Commerce with, Question, Mr. Bazley; Answer, Mr. Otway July 8, [197] 1425

Speaker, The (Right Hon. J. E. Denison) Nottinghamshire, N.
The Right Honourable John Evelyn Denison being proposed by the Right Hon. Sir George Grey (the Motion being seconded by the Right Hon. S. H. Walpole) as Speaker, is unanimously called to the Chair; and expresses his thanks to the House Dec. 10, [194] 4
Mr. Speaker Elect is presented to the Lords Commissioners; who thereupon signify Her Majesty's approbation Dec 11, 11; Mr. Speaker reports to the Commons Her Majesty's approval of their choice, and takes and subscribes the Oath Dec 11

Adjournment of Debate—The House has, by common acceptation, conceded the right of pre-audience, when the debate is resumed, to the Member who has moved the adjournment, [194] 1470
Amendment—Motion, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair;" an Amendment moved. A Member cannot make another Motion before that which is before the House is disposed of.—Freedom of Speech—Arrest of Mr. Murphy, [198] 633 Amendment—Right of Reply—A Member who has moved an Amendment has no right of reply.—Freedom of Speech—Arrest of Mr. Murphy, [198] 632

[cont.

Speaker, The—cont.

Committee—Instruction—A proposed Instruction to a Committee is not in order when the Committee already possesses the power proposed to be given to it by the Instruction. By a Standing Order of 1854 all Committees have the power to make such Amendments as they deem fit in Bills, provided they are relevant to the subject of the Bill.—Irish Church Bill, [195] 847

Debate—A document not yet laid before the House cannot be accepted as an authentic record.—Dublin Election, [195] 1273

Debate—Latitude in Debate—A Member appearing to be discussing a subject, though there was no Question before the House, being called to Order—Mr. Speaker said, I think the House will allow the right hon. Gentleman a reasonable latitude; but I think also I must lay emphasis on the word "reasonable."—Recent Negotiations with the United States, [197] 1427, 1428

Debate—Limitation of Explanation—A Member who, under certain circumstances, has moved, "That the House do now adjourn," and subsequently wishes to withdraw his Motion, must limit his Explanation to the grounds on which he desires to do so.—Regina v. Overend, Gurney, & Co. [197] 995

Debate—Premature Discussion of a Subject—It is contrary to the rules of the House for a Member to enter upon the discussion of a Question on which he proposes a discussion on a future day.—Recent Negotiations with the United States, [197] 1428

Debate—Relevancy of Debate—On Motion for a Suspension of the Orders of the Day for the purpose of enabling the House to hold Morning Sittings, the conduct of the Mayor of Cork having been referred to, and Mr. Dawson Damer proposing to continue the subject—Mr. Speaker reminded the hon. Member that there was no Question before the House which would entitle hon. Members to discuss any Irish Question, [195] 1981; [196] 581

Debate—Speaking twice in the same debate

The Lords having struck out certain words in the Irish Church Bill, Mr. Gladstone moved "That the House do disagree with the Lords in the said Amendment." Mr. Newdegate spoke on that Question. The Motion was withdrawn, and another Motion made limited to a part only of the Lords Amendment. Mr. Newdegate rose to speak: objected to; Mr. Speaker said, this being a new Question the hon. Member was perfectly in Order, [197] 1941, 1948

Mr. Gladstone's Motion having been agreed to, he moved to disagree with the Lords in the remainder of the said Amendment; after a short debate, Mr. Gladstone rose to address the House: objected to; Mr. Speaker said, that the right hon. Gentleman having made the Motion had deprived himself of the power of speaking on it, [197] 1949

[cont.

Speaker, The—cont.

Right of reply. An hon. Member who has moved an Amendment has no right of reply—Freedom of Speech—Arrest of Mr. Murphy, [198] 632

Moved, "That the [University Tests] Bill be now read the second time;" Mr. Beresford Hope moved, "That the debate be now adjourned;" Mr. Bentinck seconded the Motion; on division, negatived; Question again proposed, "That the word 'now,' &c." Mr. Beresford Hope rose to address the House on the main Question. Mr. Speaker said, that the hon. Member having made a Motion had exhausted his powers in this debate

Mr. Bentinck also rose to speak, saying that as he had seconded the Motion [for the adjournment of the debate] merely by a gesture, he thought he was at liberty to address the House on the main Question. Mr. Speaker said that the hon. Member having seconded the Motion was not entitled to address the House—University Tests Bill, [194] 1451, 1469

Mr. Newdegate rose to speak, saying that he would conclude with a Motion. Mr. Speaker said that the hon. Member having spoken in the debate could not make a Motion.

A Member who has moved the adjournment of a debate has, by the common acceptation of the House, the pre-audience when the debate is resumed

If, however, the House has declined to accede to the Motion, and has divided upon it, the Member who moved it, having had the opportunity of addressing the House had he thought fit, has lost the power of addressing the House on the main Question, [194] 1470; [196] 1365

Debate — Effect of Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," on subsequent Motions—Motion, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair." An Amendment moved; Question, "That the words, &c." put, and agreed to. Question proposed, "That Mr. Speaker, &c." The House having agreed that the words stand part of the Question, a Member cannot move a Resolution by way of Amendment.—Regina v. Overend, Gurney & Co., [197] 977, 980

Debate—Motion for Adjournment of the House—Mr. Speaker reminds the House that the privilege of moving the Adjournment of the House upon asking a Question had been reserved by the common consent of the House for occasions of urgency.—Ireland—Rates on Disturbed Districts, [196] 19

Debate—Adjournment of the House—A Member who has spoken in the debate cannot move the adjournment of the House.—Liabilities of Railway Companies, [194] 1451, 1469; [198] 1439

Debate—Effect of moving or seconding a Motion for the adjournment of a debate—Where

[cont.

SPEAKER, The—cont.

a Member has moved the adjournment of the debate, and another Member has seconded it, it is not competent for either the Mover or Seconder of such a Motion immediately to rise and move the adjournment of the House. That must be done by some other voices.—[194] 1469

Debate—Right of Member who has moved the adjournment of a debate—Where an hon. Member has moved the adjournment of the debate, and the House has agreed, that Member has, by the common acceptation of the House, the right of præ-audience when the debate is resumed

When however the House has declined to accede to the Motion, and has divided upon it, the hon. Member who moved it, and had an opportunity to address the House if he chose, has under those circumstances lost the power of addressing the House on the Main Question.—[194] 1470; [196] 1365

Debate—Division of a proposition—The Lords having struck out words in a clause of the Irish Church Bill, and inserted other words in their place—Mr. Gladstone moved, "That the House doth disagree with the Lords in the said Amendment." Mr. Cross asked whether it was in Order to move that the proposition be divided, and that the Question be put as to the first part, stopping at the word "religion?"—Mr. Speaker said, it was possible to move an Amendment on the proposition before the House; and if the hon. Member moved an Amendment such as he had suggested, it might be done without infringing the Rules of the House.—Irish Church Bill, Lords Amendments, [197] 1921

Debate—On Motion for a Select Committee to inquire into the operation and effect of the Game Laws in Scotland, in respect of which several Bills were before the House, Lord Elcho entering into the merits of those measures—Mr. Speaker reminded his Lordship that he had entered into an engagement with the House that he would not enter into the details of these Bills.—Game Laws (Scotland), [195] 1718

Debate—Reference to a speech made in a past Debate in the present Session is not in Order.—Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, [194] 1496

Debate—Reference to Debate in the other House—Neither as a point of Privilege nor of Order can a Question referring to language used in the other House of Parliament, be with propriety addressed to the Speaker of this House, [198] 368

Debate—Order—A Member is not in Order in referring to the proceedings of a Committee now Sitting, [197] 1322

Debate — Order in Debate — Lord Claud Hamilton having used strong expressions in reference to the conduct of the President of the Board of Trade, Mr. W. M. Torrens rose to Order, and remarked upon the noble Lord's language in general terms.—Mr Speaker said, that when an hon. Member rose to Order, he was not at liberty to review the general tenor of a Speech, but must object to some definite expression at the moment it is spoken.—State of Ireland, [195] 2008

Debate—Motion—Effect of Motion made—A Member who has made a Motion has deprived himself of the power of speaking on it, [197] 1949

Debate—Withdrawal of a Motion—A Resolution having been moved is in the possession of the House, and it is for the House to decide whether it will permit the whole or any part of it to be withdrawn.—Freedom of Speech—Arrest of Mr. Murphy, [198] 633

Election Petitions—A Petition complaining of the "illusory character" of the qualification of certain voters of Peebles and Selkirk at the General Election, and praying for a remedy, is not an Election Petition within the Corrupt Practices Act. Sec. 50.—Faggot Votes in Peeblesshire, [194] 1185

Instruction—A proposed Instruction to a Committee is not in order when the Committee already possesses the power proposed to be given to it by the Instruction. By a Standing Order of 1854 all Committees have the power to make such Amendments as they deem fit in Bills, provided they are relevant to the subject of the Bill.—Irish Church Bill, [195] 847

Questions — Motion for Adjournment of the House on asking a Question—Mr. Speaker reminds the House that the privilege of moving the Adjournment of the House on asking a Question has been reserved by the common consent of the House for occasions of urgency.—Ireland—Rates on Disturbed Districts, [196] 19

Special and Common Juries Bill
(Viscount Enfield, Mr. Headlam, Mr. Denman)

c. Question, Viscount Enfield; Answer, The Attorney General Feb 26, [194] 352
Ordered * June 10
Read 1° * June 23 [Bill 175]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" July 21, [198] 398; after short debate, Bill read 2°

Special Bails Bill
(Mr. Hadfield, Mr. Denman)

c. Ordered; read 1° * June 11 [Bill 162]
Read 2° * June 16
Committee *—R.P. June 25
Committee *; Report June 28
Considered * June 29
Read 3° * June 30
l. Read 1ª * (The Lord Chancellor) July 1
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 13, [197] 1749; Bill read 2ª (No. 166)
Committee *; Report July 20
Read 3ª * July 22
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 38]

SPENCER, Earl (Lord Lieutenant of Ireland)
Ireland—Religious Disturbances, [197] 1227
St. Patrick, Order of, [197] 1107

STACPOOLE, Mr. W., Ennis
Army—Questions, &c.
Ball Ammunition, Possession of, [198] 1292
Cavalry Regiments for India, [198] 154
Courts Martial, [196] 1495
Militia Officers, [196] 749
Relief of Regiments in India, [197] 1421
Rintoul, Captain, Case of, [196] 389
Fisheries—Scotch and Irish, [198] 893
India—Tonk, Nawab of, [194] 310
Ireland—Fenian Convicts—O'Donovan Rossa, [198] 1433
Fisheries, Inspectors of, [194] 830 ;—Commissioners of, 1084
Glebes and Glebe Houses, [198] 1088
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 59, [196] 403
Militia, Comm. [195] 1417
Navy—"Crocodile" Transport, [195] 1197
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. Motion for Adjournment, [194] 1558
Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland), 2R. [194] 993
Submarine Telegraph Cables, [198] 154

Stamp Acts—Consolidation of the Question, Mr. Crawford ; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 2, [195] 30

STANHOPE, Earl
Dublin Freemen Commission, 3R. [198] 1289
Fine Arts Copyright and Consolidation Amendment (No. 2), 2R. [195] 1941
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1346
Infant Life Preservation, 2R. [197] 1739
197] Irish Church, 2R. 98 ; Comm. cl. 2, 751 ; cl. 6, Amendt. 754 ; cl. 27, 1001, 1021 ; add. cl. 1259, 1260 ; Report, 1488 ; Amendt. 1490, 1493 ; 3R. Amendt. 1625, 1654
198] Commons Amendts. 292, 435
Life Peerages, 1R. [195] 470, 471 ; Motion for an Address, [196] 10 ; Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. 1192, 1204 ; Report, 1390 ; 3R. [197] 1393
Parliament—Order in the House, [197] 406
Parliament—Construction of the House, Res. [198] 10

STANLEY, Right Hon. Lord, Lynn Regis
Civil and Diplomatic Appointments, Res. [195] 491
Ireland—State of, [195] 1996, 2024, 2025
Patents for Inventions, Res. [196] 904

STANLEY, Hon. Captain F. A., Lancashire, N.
Greenwich Hospital, Comm. [197] 557

STANLEY, Hon. W. O., Beaumaris
Sea Birds Preservation, 2R. [194] 775

Stannaries Bill (Mr. St. Aubyn, Mr. Pendarves Vivian, Mr. Brydges Willyams, Mr. Kekewich)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. St. Aubyn) Feb 26, [194] 399 ; Bill ordered, after short debate ; read 1º* [Bill 24]
Read 2º* Mar 12
Committee* ; Report April 30 [Bill 101]
Considered* May 6
Read 3º* May 10
l. Read 1ª* (The Lord Portman) May 11 (No. 98)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" June 1, [196] 1083 ; Bill read 2ª
Committee* June 8 (No. 123)
Report* June 11
Read 3ª* June 14
Royal Assent June 24 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 19]

STANSFELD, Right Hon. J. (Lord of the Treasury), Halifax
Army—Japan—Officers in, [198] 901
Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan, 2R. [198] 1324
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 842 ; cl. 5, 844 ; cl. 8, 845 ; cl. 18, 846, 848, 849 ; cl. 24, 853 ; cl. 26, 854 ; cl. 36, 855 ; add. cl. 858
Diplomatic Salaries, &c., Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1336 ; cl. 7, 1339
Income Tax, [196] 1238
Land—Transfer of, [194] 2000
Scotland—Salmon Fisheries, [195] 1196
Supply—Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1470
Office of Woods, &c. [197] 1704, 1705
Report, [198] 519
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 433 ; Res. 1. (Corn, &c.), 639 ; Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 788, 796, 798, 799

STAPLETON, Mr. J., Berwick-on-Tweed
County Courts, 2R. [194] 1569 ; [196] 687
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 4, Amendt. [198] 1273, 1274 ; cl. 11, 1279 ; cl. 13, Amendt. 1282
Imprisonment for Debt, Comm. cl. 5, [197] 577 ; Consid. cl. 5, 763 ; Amendt. 764
Ireland—Maynooth, Professors of, [196] 748
Irish Church, Consid. Amendt. [196] 777 ; 3R. 1015
Metropolis—St. James' Park, [196] 12
Œcumenical Council, The, [198] 151
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 802 ; Consid. 1463
Patents for Inventions, Res. [196] 915
Post Office—Postage on Newspapers, [194] 1188
Real Estate Intestacy, Leave, [194] 959
Representative Peers (Scotland and Ireland), Leave, [194] 984
Ritualistic Processions, [195] 355
Ways and Means—Financial Statement, [195] 428 ; Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 785

Statute Law Revision
Question, Mr. Hadfield ; Answer, The Attorney General Mar 18, [194] 1653
Amendt. on Committee of Supply June 4, To leave out from "That" and add "the Royal Commissions (1833 and 1845), and other measures for the revision of the Statute Law, having occasioned an expenditure of £80,619 5s. 1*d.*, and the results being unsatisfactory, it is, in the opinion of this House, expedient to discontinue the present course of proceeding, and the expenditure consequent thereon" (Mr. Hadfield), [196] 1244; after short debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.," A. 217, N. 64; M. 153

[cont.

Statut Law Revision—cont.

Steam Boilers Inspection Bill
(Mr. Henry B. Sheridan, Mr. Vickers, Mr. Brady)
c. Resolution in Committee; Resolution reported; Bill ordered; read 1°* April 7
Bill withdrawn * August 9 [Bill 64]

Stepney, Colonel J. S. C., Carmarthen, &c.
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1323
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1007

Stevenson, Mr. J. C., South Shields
Durham, University of, [194] 1897
Light Dues, Res. [196] 169
Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Leave, [198] 1515
Post Office—West India Mails, [196] 15
Shipping Dues in Foreign Ports, [198] 682
University Tests, Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [197] 788

Stipendiary Magistrates (Deputies) Bill
(Viscount Sandon, Mr. Muntz, Mr. Rathbone)
c. Ordered; read 1°* June 23 [Bill 176]
Read 2°* June 29
Committee*; Report July 5
Considered* July 6
Read 3°* July 8
l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Carnarvon) July 9 (No. 179)
Read 2ª* July 16
Committee*; Report July 19
Read 3ª* July 20
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 34]

Stone, Mr. W. H., Portsmouth
Navy—Government Dockyards, Reductions in the, [194] 377
Post Office—Landing Mails at a Western Port, [196] 936

Stopford, Mr. S. G., Northamptonshire, N
Army—British Graves in the Crimea, [196] 17, 747

Stradbroke, Earl of
Ireland—Cork, Mayor of, [196] 76

Straits Settlements Bill [H.L.]
(The Earl Granville)
l. Presented; read 1ª* July 27 (No. 231)
Read 2ª* July 30
Committee*; Report August 2
Read 3ª* August 3
c. Read 1°* August 3 [Bill 259]
Read 2°* August 5
Committee*; Report August 6
Read 3°* August 7
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 88]

Stratford de Redcliffe, Viscount
Irish Church, 2R. [196] 1695
Life Peerages, Report, [196] 1384
Turco-Persian Boundary, [196] 1
United States—"Alabama" Claims, [196] 1227

Stratheden, Lord
Canning Statue, The, [198] 1484
Parliament—Order in the House, [198] 147

Stronge, Sir J. M., Armagh Co.
Ireland—Portadown, Riots at, [197] 1171

Stuart, Colonel J. F. D. C., Cardiff
Cardiff Docks—Accidents in the, [194] 739

Suburban Commons Bill
(Mr. Cowper, Mr. Liddell)
c. Ordered; read 1°* June 22 [Bill 174]
Read 2°* and committed to the Select Committee on Metropolitan Commons Act (1866) Amendment Bill July 1
Report of Select Committee July 19 (Parl. P. No. 334)
Bill withdrawn* July 21

Sullivan, Right Hon. E. (Attorney General for Ireland), Mallow
Dublin Freemen Commission, Leave, [197] 819, 955; 2R. 1183; Comm. [198] 231, 233
Ireland—Questions, &c.
Bankruptcy Law, [194] 1355
Cashel Election, [195] 977, 1935
Cork, Mayor of, [196] 102
Dublin, Lord Mayor of, [196] 746
Election Petitions, [195] 1096
Fisheries, Inspectors of, [194] 831;—Commissioners of, 1085
Incumbered Estates Court—Earl of Lanesborough's Estate, [195] 520
Jury Panel, Monaghan Assizes, [195] 503; [197] 1343
Ireland—Dublin Election, Motion for a Commission, [195] 1278, 1283
Ireland—Sligo Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 566
194] Irish Church, 2R. 1814
195] Comm. cl. 2, 1017, 1022; cl. 7, 1100; cl. 10, 1103, 1107; cl. 13, 1125, 1126, 1136; cl. 14, 1142, 1365, 1372, 1382, 1384; cl. 16, Amendt. 1404, 1406, 1407, 1410; cl. 18, 1413, 1479, 1480; cl. 19, 1493; cl. 20, 1502; cl. 22, 1508; cl. 23, 1524; cl. 25, 1602, 1610; cl. 26, 1622, 1625; Amendt. 1627, 1628; cl. 27, 1638, 1880; cl. 28, Amendt. 1881; cl. 29, 1914

[cont.

Sullivan, Right Hon. E.—cont.
196] cl. 30, 22 ; cl. 32, 32 ; cl. 33, 53, 54, 59 ; cl. 39, 133, 134, 135 ; cl. 44, 349 ; cl. 52, Amendt. 350 ; cl. 61, 421 ; add. cl. 424 ; Consid. 756, 767, 768, 772, 777
197] Lords Amendts, 1958, 1960 ; Amendt. 1962, 1975, 1976
198] Amendt. 46, 99
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 186, 243 ; 2R. 575, 582, 584
Parliament—Drogheda Writ, [194] 797
Dublin (City) Election, [194] 1543
Youghal Writ, [195] 2069
Prisoners (Political Offences), Res. [197] 813
Salmon Fisheries (Ireland), Leave, [194] 1543
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 24, [198] 772
Witnesses (House of Commons), Motion for a Committee, [196] 624

Sunday and Ragged Schools Bill
(Mr. Charles Reed, Mr. Bazley, Mr. Graves, Mr. M'Arthur)
c. Ordered ; read 1°* April 8 [Bill 67]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" June 16, [196] 1959
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day three months" (Mr. Percy Wyndham) ; after short debate, Question put, "That 'now,' &c. ;" A. 228, N. 71 ; M. 157 ; main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2°
Committee ; Report, after short debate June 22, [197] 464 [Bill 170]
Re-comm. *—R.P. June 25
Re-comm. *—R.P. July 1
Re-comm.* ; Report July 5 [Bill 205]
Considered* July 8
Read 3°* July 12
l. Read 1ª* (The Earl of Shaftesbury) July 13
Read 2ª* July 19 (No. 188)
Committee* ; Report July 20
Read 3ª* July 22
Royal Assent July 26 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 40]

Sunday Trading Bill
(Mr. Thomas Hughes, Lord Claud Hamilton)
c. Ordered ; read 1°* Feb 18 [Bill 5]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 3, [194] 557
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Taylor) ; after short debate, Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" Amendt. withdrawn ; main Question put, and agreed to ; Bill read 2°
Committee—R.P. April 14, [195] 799
Committee—R.P. June 9, [196] 1490
Bill withdrawn* July 28

Supply—Diplomatic Service, Expenses of Question, Mr. White ; Answer, Mr. Gladstone Mar 8, [194] 836 ; April 2, [195] 27

SUPPLY
194] Committee on Motion, "That a Supply be granted to Her Majesty ;" Queen's Speech referred ; Motion considered ; Resolved, "That a Supply be granted to Her Majesty" Feb 22 ; Resolution, "That a Supply be granted to Her Majesty," reported, and agreed to Nem. Con. Feb 23, 279

Supply—cont.
194] Considered in Committee Feb 26, 383—Supplementary Civil Service Estimate 1868-9 £131,844—Resolution—Resolution reported, and, after short debate, agreed to Mar 2, 536
Considered in Committee Mar 4, 641—Abyssinian Expedition—Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £3,600,000, be granted, &c." (The Chancellor of the Exchequer) ; after short debate, Moved, "That the Chairman do report Progress" (Sir Patrick O'Brien), 646 ; after further short debate, Motion withdrawn ; original Question put, and agreed to ; Resolution reported, and agreed to Mar 5, 773
Considered in Committee Mar 5, 770—Deficiencies : Post Office Packet Service £6,989 0*s.* 6*d.*—Excesses on Grants, Civil Service Estimates £400,894 7*s.* 4*d.*—Resolutions reported Mar 8
Considered in Committee Mar 8, 863—Navy Estimates—Resolutions reported Mar 9
Considered in Committee Mar 11, 1111—Army Estimates—Resolutions reported Mar 12
195] Considered in Committee April 2, 52—Navy Estimates—Resolutions reported April 5
Considered in Committee April 5, 181—Navy Estimates—Resolutions reported April 6
Considered in Committee April 9, 522—Civil Service Estimates—£1,586,800 on Account—Resolution reported April 12
Considered in Committee April 12, 660—Army Estimates—Resolutions reported April 13
Considered in Committee May 10—Civil Service Estimates—£1,583,300 further on Account—Resolution reported May 11
196] Considered in Committee—Army Estimates June 10, 1573 ; Resolutions reported June 11
197] Considered in Committee June 17, 143—Army Estimates—Resolutions reported June 18
The Education Votes, Question, Mr. Samuelson; Answer, Mr. W. E. Forster June 24, 515
Considered in Committee June 28, 652—Civil Service Estimates—Resolutions reported July 8
Considered in Committee July 5, 1200—Civil Service Estimates — Resolutions reported July 6
Considered in Committee July 8, 1456—Civil Service Estimates — Resolutions reported July 9
Considered in Committee July 12, 1677—Civil Service Estimates — Resolutions reported ;
198] and, after short debate, agreed to July 22, 515
Considered in Committee July 19, 163—Civil Service Estimates—Resolutions reported July 22
Considered in Committee July 22, 498—Civil Service Estimates — Resolutions reported ; and, after debate, agreed to July 26, 686
Considered in Committee July 26, 727—Civil Service Estimates — Resolutions reported July 27
Considered in Committee July 29, 908—Civil Service Estimates — Resolutions reported July 30
Considered in Committee July 30, 997—Supplementary Civil Service Estimates—Telegraphic Services—Greenwich Hospital—Resolutions reported July 31 [cont.

Supply—cont.

SUPPLEMENTAL VOTES

SUPPLIES (DEFICIENCIES), 1867-8.

COMMITTEE Mar 8—REPORT Mar 9

	Total of Vote. £	s.	d.
Navy Services	366,545	5	6

CIVIL SERVICES—viz.:

COMMITTEE Mar 5—REPORT Mar 8

CLASS I.	£	s.	d.
Royal Palaces	7,704	2	2
British Embassy Houses, Paris and Madrid	2,048	10	9
Public Record Repository ...	2,363	14	6
British Consulate and Embassy Houses, Constantinople ...	334	15	5

CLASS II.
Office of Works and Public Buildings	780	19	2
Office of Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues (1866-7 and 1867-8)	1,494	18	3
Inspectors of Factories, Fisheries, &c.	7,355	12	3
Household of Lord Lieutenant, Ireland	1,377	11	10
Chief Secretary, Ireland, Offices...	1,874	7	11
Superintendent of Roads, South Wales	122	7	2
Landed Estates Record Offices ...	177	4	11
Printing and Stationery	8,468	9	10

CLASS III.
Law Charges, England	458	10	2
Criminal Prosecutions, &c. ...	22,234	18	1
Police, Counties and Boroughs, Great Britain	196,136	14	7
Probate Court	10,803	12	11
County Courts	66,288	1	4
Land Registry Office	89	3	8
Court of Chancery, Ireland ...	7,302	7	0
Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, Ireland	6,444	3	3
Officers of the Judges on Circuit, Ireland	2,202	16	0
Registry of Judgments, Ireland ...	373	1	10
Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency, Ireland	534	19	4
Court of Probate, Ireland ...	1,461	7	7
Landed Estates Court, Ireland ...	2,689	11	8
Dublin Metropolitan Police and Police Justices, Ireland ...	803	1	9
Maintenance of Prisoners in County Gaols, &c., and removal of convicts	4,712	11	7
Convict Establishments in the Colonies	15,180	6	4

CLASS IV.
Royal Irish Academy	61	10	0
Belfast Theological Professors ...	144	1	9

[cont.

Supply—cont.

CLASS V.	Total of Vote. £	s.	d.
Governors and others, West Indies, &c.	1,504	18	3
Treasury Chest	2,303	13	3
Ministers at Foreign Courts, Extraordinary Expenses ...	5,384	16	9
Special Missions, Outfits, &c. ...	4,741	6	0

CLASS VI.
Superannuation and Retired Allowances	547	11	7
Relief of distressed British seamen	2,787	5	0
Nonconforming and other Ministers, Ireland	2,690	3	0

CLASS VII.
Temporary Commissions ...	3,357	16	11
Flax Cultivation in Ireland ...	500	0	0
Miscellaneous Expenses formerly Civil Contingencies	5,053	3	7
Total	£400,894	7	4

COMMITTEE Mar 5—REPORT Mar 8

Post Office Packet Service ...	6,989	0	6

After short debate, Vote agreed to [194] 770

SUPPLEMENTAL GRANTS, 1868-9

COMMITTEE Mar 4—REPORT Mar 5

	£
Expedition to Abyssinia [194] 641	3,600,000

After debate, Vote agreed to

COMMITTEE Feb 26—REPORT Mar 2

CIVIL SERVICES—viz.:

CLASS I.
Public Buildings	11,738
University of London—Buildings ...	5,000

CLASS II.
Printing and Stationery	18,000

CLASS III.
Law Charges, England	10,000
Criminal Prosecutions, Sheriffs Expenses, &c.	12,000
Common Law Courts, England ...	10,000
County Prisons and Reformatories, &c., Great Britain	10,000
Common Law Courts, Ireland ...	2,000
Criminal Proceedings, Scotland ...	5,000
Courts of Law and Justice, Scotland...	1,000
Constabulary of Ireland	17,200

CLASS V.
Livingstone Search Expedition ...	1,906
Compensation to Abyssinian Captives	9,000

[cont.

Supply—cont

CLASS VI.	Total of Vote.
Superannuations and Retired Allowances	£ 19,000
Total	£131,844

NAVY ESTIMATES, 1869-70.

COMMITTEE Mar 8—REPORT Mar 9

63,300 Men and Boys—Statement of the First Lord of the Admiralty (Mr. Childers) on moving a Resolution "That 63,000 Men and Boys be employed for the Sea and Coastguard Service for the year ending 31st March, 1870, including 14,000 Royal Marines" Mar 8, [194] 863; after long debate, Vote agreed to	Numbers. 63, 000

NAVY ESTIMATES, 1869-70.	Total of Vote. £
(1.) Wages to Seamen and Marines..	2,762,353
(2.) Victuals and Clothing for ditto...	1,172,268
After short debate, Vote agreed to [194] 932
COMMITTEE April 2—REPORT April 5
(3.) Admiralty Office	168,704
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £168,704, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £168,204, &c." (Sir James Elphinstone); after debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to [195] 52
(4.) Coast Guard Service, Royal Naval Coast Volunteers, and Royal Naval Reserve ... [195] 83	224,073
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(5.) Scientific Branch	62,820
(6.) Dockyards and Naval Yards at Home and Abroad	1,086,004
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £1,086,004, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £1,056,004, &c." (Mr. Corry); after debate, A. 46, N. 122; M. 67; Vote agreed to [195] 99
COMMITTEE April 5—REPORT April 6
(7.) Victualling Yards and Transport Establishments at Home and Abroad ... [195] 181	80,671
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(8.) Medical Establishments at Home and Abroad ... ... [195] 185	54,757
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(9.) Marine Divisions [195] 185	16,566
After short debate, Vote agreed to (10.) Naval Stores for the Building, Repair, and Outfit of the Fleet and Coast Guard, Steam Machinery, and Ships built by Contract:
Section I. Naval Stores ...	£ 801,572
After short debate, Vote agreed to [195] 187
Section II. Steam Machinery and Ships built by Contract	767,070
After debate, Vote agreed to [195] 193
(11.) New Works, Buildings, Machinery, and Repairs [195] 210	749,816
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(12.) Medicines and Medical Stores ..	79,300
(13.) Martial Law and Law Charges	18,144
(14.) Miscellaneous Services	120,650
Total for the Effective Service ...	8,164,768
(15.) Half Pay, Reserved Half Pay, and Retired Pay to Officers of the Navy and Royal Marines [195] 216	£ 723,231
After short debate, Vote agreed to (16.) Military and Civil Pensions and Allowances:
Section I. Military Pensions and Allowances	569,728
Section II. Civil Pensions and Allowances	222,566
Total for the Naval Service ...	9,680,293
FOR THE SERVICE OF OTHER DEPARTMENTS OF GOVERNMENT.
(17.) Army Department (Conveyance of Troops)	£ 316,348
Grand Total ...	£9,996,641

ARMY ESTIMATES, 1869-70.

COMMITTEE Mar 11—REPORT Mar 12

Statement of the Secretary of State for War (Mr. Cardwell) on moving Resolution (A), "That the number of Land Forces for the service of the year ending the 31st March 1869-70 be fixed at 127,366 men, together with 1,760 Native Indian Troops" Mar 11 [194] 1111

After long debate, Vote agreed to

NUMBERS.	Numbers.
(A.) General Staff, Regimental and Military Educational Establishments (Average Numbers) ...	125,529
(B.) Native Indian Troops	1,760

I.—REGULAR FORCES.	Total of Vote. £
(1.) General Staff and Regimental Pay, Allowances, and Charges ...	5,313,800
(2.) Commissariat Establishment, Services, Movement of Troops, &c.	1,185,600
COMMITTEE April 12—REPORT April 13
(3.) Clothing Establishments, Services, and Supplies	460,800
(4.) Barrack Establishments, Services, and Supplies	512,900

[cont.

[cont

Supply—cont. Total of Vote.

(5.) Divine Service £43,800
(6.) Administration of Martial Law ... 2,000
(7.) Hospital Establishment, Services, and Supplies [195] 666 366,800
After short debate, Vote agreed to

II.—Reserve Forces.

(8.) Militia and Inspection of Reserve Forces
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £952,700, be granted, &c.;" after short debate, Motion withdrawn [196] 667

Committee June 10—Report June 11

Militia and Inspection of Reserve Forces ... [196] 1573 952,700
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(9.) Yeomanry Cavalry
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £89,300, be granted, &c.;" after short debate, A. 117, N. 27; M. 90; Vote agreed to 89,300
(10.) Volunteer Corps 414,000
(11.) Army Reserve Force (including Enrolled Pensioners) 81,200

III.—Stores.

ommittee April 12—Report April 13

(13.) (including 12) Military Store Departments for the Supply and Repair of Warlike and other Stores, including manufacturing Departments ... [195] 668 1,150,000
After short debate, Vote agreed to

IV.—Works and Buildings.

(14.) Superintending Establishment of, and Expenditure for Works, Buildings, and Repairs, at Home and Abroad ... [195] 669 884,000
After short debate, Vote agreed to

V.—Various Services.

Committee June 17—Report June 18

(15.) Establishments for Military Education ... [197] 143 158,200
After short debate, Vote agreed to (16.) Surveys of the United Kingdom 118,500
(17.) Miscellaneous Services ... 90,600
(18.) Administration of the Army ... 223,400
After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 143

Total Effective Services £12,047,600

VI.—Non-Effective Services.

(19.) Rewards for Distinguished Services, &c. ... ... £ 27,000
(20.) Pay of General Officers [197] 149 73,000
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(21.) Full Pay of Reduced and Retired Officers and Half-pay 480,500
(22.) Widows' Pensions, &c. ... 156,400
(23.) Pensions for Wounds ... 22,300

[cont.

Supply—cont. Total of Vote.

(24.) Chelsea and Kilmainham Hospitals (In-Pensions) ... [197] 149 £ 34,400
After short debate, Vote agreed to (25.) Out-Pensions 1,239,300
(26.) Superannuation Allowances ... 132,000
After short debate, Vote postponed [197] 149
(27.) Militia, Yeomanry Cavalry, and Volunteer Corps 17,900

Total Non-Effective Services £2,182,800

Recapitulation.

Effective Services 12,047,600
Non-Effective Services ... 2.182,800
Amount Written off as Irrecoverable ... ... —
Total Effective and Non-Effective Services £14,230,400

Exchequer Bonds ... ... £ 3,300,000

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES, 1869-70.

⁂ The Votes marked † are "to complete sums" for the several Services named.

Class I.—Public Works and Buildings.

Committee June 28—Report July 8. Total of Vote.

Great Britain: £

(1.) †£36,418, Royal Palaces ... 54,418
After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 652
(2.) †£84,887, Royal Parks ... 128,825
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £84,887, be granted, &c." [197] 654
Moved, "That the Item of £52, for the Gatekeeper at Clarence Gate, Roehampton, be omitted from the proposed Vote" (Mr. A. Guest); after debate, agreed to Original Question, as amended, proposed, "That a sum, not exceeding £84,825, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £56,000, &c." (Mr. Goldney); after debate, A. 42, N. 98; M. 56 [197] 665
Original Question, as amended, again proposed Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £71,700, &c." (Mr. Cawley), negatived; original Question, as amended, put, and agreed to
(3.) †£82,479, Public Buildings ... 122,479
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £82,479, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That the Item of £20,220, for fuel and light, be reduced by the sum of £1,320" (Mr. Candlish); after debate, Motion negatived; Vote agreed to [197] 675
(4.) †£10,000, Furniture of Public Offices 14,000

[cont.

Supply—cont.	Total of Vote. £
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £10,000, be granted, &c." [197] 676 Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £6,000, &c." (Mr. Brogden); after short debate, A. 52, N. 112; M. 60; Vote agreed to
(5.) † £17,000, Westminster Palace, Acquisition of Land [197] 679 After short debate, Vote agreed to	25,000
(6.) † £34,026, Houses of Parliament Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £34,026, be granted, &c." [197] 679 Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £32,805, &c." (Mr. Monk); after debate, A. 51, N. 129; M. 78 Original Question again proposed Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £31,526, &c." (Mr. White); after short debate, Motion negatived Original Question again proposed Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £33,526, &c." (Mr. Locke King); after further short debate, Motion negatived; Vote agreed to	47,026

COMMITTEE July 5—REPORT July 6

(7.) † £40,000, Public Offices Site ... After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1200	48,000
(8.) † £22,000, New Home and Colonial Offices	32,000
(9.) † £20,000, Public Record Repository	30,000
(10.) † £2,435, Chapter House, Westminster ... [197] 1209 After short debate, Vote agreed to	3,635
(11.) † £5,264, Probate Court and Registries ... [197] 1210 Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £5,264, be granted, &c." Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £5,026, &c." (Mr. Monk); after short debate, Motion withdrawn Original Question again proposed Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £3,764," &c. (Mr. W. Cowper); after further short debate, A. 66, N. 137; M. 71; Vote agreed to	8,264
(12.) † £19,048, Sheriff Court Houses, Scotland	29,048
(13.) † £46,000, National Gallery Enlargement	55,000
(14.) † £20,000, University of London (Buildings)	30,000
(15.) † £13,000, Glasgow University	20,000
(16.) † £7,000, Edinburgh Industrial Museum ... [197] 1212 After short debate, Vote agreed to	10,000
(17.) † £54,834, Burlington House ... Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £54,834, be granted, &c." Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £36,834, &c." (Mr. Goldney); after short debate, Motion withdrawn Original Question again proposed Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £48,640, &c." (Mr. Goldney); A. 79, N. 118; M. 39; Vote agreed to	64,834

[cont.

Supply—cont.	Total of Vote. £
COMMITTEE July 8—REPORT July 9
(18.) † £91,045, Post Office and Inland Revenue Buildings [197] 1456 After short debate, Vote agreed to	135,045
(19.) † £58,475, Harbours of Refuge After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1456	69,475
(20.) † £3,300, Portland Harbour ... After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1457	5,300
(21.) † £7,000, Metropolitan Fire Brigade	10,000
(22.) † £19,839, Rates on Government Property ... [197] 1457 After short debate, Vote agreed to	29,839
(23.) † £1,880, Wellington Monument	2,800
(24.) † £267, Palmerston Monument ...	667

IRELAND :

(25.) † £95,455, Public Buildings ... Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £95,455, be granted, &c." Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £87,667, &c." (Mr. Candlish); after short debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to ... [197] 1460	145,455
(26.) † £2,362, Ulster Canal ...	3,362

ABROAD :

(27.) † £26,810, Lighthouses Abroad After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1463	31,810
(28.) † £687, Embassy Houses, Paris and Madrid ... ... Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £687, be granted, &c." Moved, "That the Item of £185 for Salary of Clerk of the Works, &c., be omitted from the proposed Vote" (Mr. Hibbert); after debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to [197] 1466	1,887
(29.) † £37,583, Embassy Houses and Consular Buildings, Constantinople, China, Japan, and Tehran ... After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1468	52,585
Total Civil Services Class I. ...	£1,210,754

CLASS II.—SALARIES AND EXPENSES OF PUBLIC DEPARTMENTS.

ENGLAND :

COMMITTEE July 8—REPORT July 9	£
(1.) † £31,438, House of Lords' Offices After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1474	46,438
(2.) † £36,482, House of Commons' Offices ... [197] 1476 After short debate, Vote agreed to	54,482
(3.) † £39,275, Treasury and Subordinate Departments [197] 1478 After short debate, Vote agreed to	59,275
(4.) † £57,696, Home Office and subordinate Departments [197] 1480 After short debate, Vote agreed to	85,696

[cont.

Supply—cont.

	Total of Vote. £
COMMITTEE July 12—REPORT July 22
(5.) † £47,413, Foreign Office ...	70,413
After debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1677
(6.) † £23,884, Colonial Office ...	34,884
(7.) † £27,413, Privy Council Office and Subordinate Departments ...	41,413
(8.) † £68,033, Board of Trade and Subordinate Departments ...	101,033
After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1680
(9.) † £1,921, Privy Seal Office ...	2,921
(10.) † £13,265, Charity Commission	19,265
After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1683
(11.) † £6,694, Civil Service Commission	9,694
(12.) † £13,281, Copyhold, Inclosure, and Tithe Commission [197] 1684	20,281
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(13.) † £7,000, Copyhold, Inclosure, and Drainage Acts Expenses ...	11,000
(14.) † £25,324, Exchequer and Audit Department	37,324
(15.) † £28,060, General Register Office	42,060
After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1684
(16.) † £3,000, Lunacy Commission ...	5,000
After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1685
(17.) † £30, 550, Mint	45,550
(18.) † £11,110, National Debt Office	16,110
(19.) † £23,669, Patent Office ...	34,669
After short debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1685
(20.) † £13,417, Paymaster General's Office	20,417
(21.) † £176,762, Poor Law Commission ... ... [197] 1686	211,762
After debate, Vote agreed to
(22.) † £14,624, Public Record Office	22,624
After debate, Vote agreed to [197] 1693
(23.) † £3,009, Public Works Loan Commission	4,509
(24.) † £1,684, Registrars of Friendly Societies	2,484
(25.) † £264,135, Stationery Office and Printing	412,635
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £264,135, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £263,185, &c." (Mr. Miller); after short debate, A. 35, N. 110; M. 75; Vote agreed to ... [197] 1693
(26.) † £18,227, Woods, Forests, &c., Office of	27,227
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £18,227, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £18,084, &c." (Sir Patrick O'Brien); after debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to ... [197] 1701
(27.) † £18,722, Works and Public Buildings, Office of	34,222
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £18,722, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £16,722, &c." (Mr. Craufurd); after debate, Motion negatived; Vote agreed to ... [197] 1705
(28.) † £18,000, Secret Service ...	27,000
	[cont.

Supply—cont.

	Total of Vote. £
SCOTLAND:
(29.) † £4,317, Exchequer and other Offices	6,317
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £4,317, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That the Item of £217 13*s.* for Queen's Plates be omitted from the proposed Vote" (Mr. Lusk); after debate, A. 73, N. 191; M. 118; Vote agreed to ... [197] 1710
COMMITTEE July 22—REPORT July 26
(30.) † £9,298, Fishery Board ...	13,298
Amendt. to leave out £9,298, and insert £3,531 6*s.* 7*d.* (Mr. Craufurd); Question put, "That £9,298 stand part of the said Resolution;" A. 150, N. 45; M. 105
(31.) † £5,391, General Register Office	7,391
(32.) † £4,166, Lunacy Commission ...	6,166
(33.) † £9,838, Poor Law Commission	17,838
After short debate, Vote agreed to [198] 507
IRELAND:
(34.) † £3,664, Lord Lieutenant's Household ... [198] 508	6,164
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £3,664, be granted, &c." [198] 508
Moved, "That the Item of £1,562 6*s.* 2*d.* for Queen's Plates be omitted from the proposed Vote" (Mr. Rylands); after debate, A. 59, N. 79; M. 20; after debate, Vote agreed to
(35.) † £15,453, Chief Secretary's Office	23,453
(36.) † £100, Boundary Survey ...	500
(37.) † £1,238, Charitable Donations and Bequests Office	2,238
(38.) † £13,722, General Register Office	20,722
(39.) † £65,328, Poor Law Commission	97,328
(40.) † £3,182, Public Record Office ...	4,682
COMMITTEE July 26—REPORT July 27
(41.) † £18,196, Public Works Office ...	27,196
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £18,196, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £14,609, &c." (Mr. Blake); after short debate, Motion withdrawn; Vote agreed to ... [198] 742
Total Civil Services Class II. ...	£1,733,681
CLASS III.—LAW AND JUSTICE.
COMMITTEE July 29—REPORT July 30
ENGLAND:
(1.) † £27,835, Law Charges ...	41,835
(2.) † £116,973, Criminal Prosecutions	199,973
(3.) † £45,242, Common Law Courts	67,242
	[cont.

Supply—cont.	Total of Vote.
(4.) † £325,575, County Courts ...	487,575
After short debate, Vote agreed to [198] 909
(5.) † £61,733, Probate Court ...	91,733
After short debate, Vote agreed to [198] 909
(6.) † £8,870, Admiralty Court Registry	13,870
(7.) † £3,490, Land Registry Office...	5,490
After short debate, Vote agreed to [198] 910
(8.) † £21,224, Police Courts (London and Sheerness)	32,224
(9.) † £141,449, Metropolitan Police	211,449
(10.) † £235,000, County and Borough Police, Great Britain	282,000
(11.) † £208,712, Government Prisons, England, and Transportation ...	322,712
(12.) † £175,632, County Prisons and Reformatories, Great Britain ...	282,632
(13.) † £21,910, Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum	32,910
(14.) † £14,335, Miscellaneous Legal Charges	21,335
SCOTLAND:
(15.) † £50,198, Criminal Proceedings	75,198
(16.) † £36,764, Courts of Law and Justice	54,764
(17.) † £15,099, Register House Departments	22,099
(18.) † £16,949, Prisons	24,949
IRELAND:
(19.) † £58,364, Law Charges and Criminal Prosecutions	87,364
(20.) † £29,379, Court of Chancery ...	44,379
(21.) † £20,097, Common Law Courts	30,097
(22.) † £5,510, Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency	8,510
(23.) † £9,003, Landed Estates Court	13,003
After short debate, Vote agreed to [198] 911
(24.) † £7,380, Probate Court ...	11,380
(25.) † £1,130, Admiralty Court Registry ... ... [198] 911	2,130
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(26.) † £9,857, Registry of Deeds ...	14,857
(27.) † £2,262, Registry of Judgments	3,262
(28.) † £65,043, Dublin Metropolitan Police ... [198] 912	97,043
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(29.) † £603,544, Constabulary ...	905,544
(30.) † £14,193, Government Prisons and Reformatories	71,193
(31.) † £6,000, County Prisons ...	9,000
(32.) † £3,272, Dundrum Criminal Lunatic Asylum ...[198] 913	4,872
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(33.) † £1,730, Four Courts Marshalsea Prison ... [198] 913	2,530
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(34.) † £5,820, Miscellaneous Legal Charges	8,820
ABROAD:
(35.) † £85,452, Convict Establishments in the Colonies	128,452

[cont.

Supply—cont.	Total of Vote.
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.
COMMITTEE July 30—REPORT July 31
	£
† £5,000, Common Law Courts (England)... ... [198] 1002	5,000
After short debate, Vote agreed to
† £5,000, Military Prisoners ...	5,000
Court of Chancery	88,500
Court of Bankruptcy	49,50
Total Civil Services Class III. ...	£3,860,426
CLASS IV.—EDUCATION, SCIENCE, AND ART.
COMMITTEE July 19—REPORT July 22
GREAT BRITAIN:	£
(1.) † £560,711, Public Education...	840,711
After long debate, Vote agreed to [198] 163
(2.) † £158,253, Science and Art Department ... [198] 200	232,253
After debate, Vote agreed to
(3.) † £75,203, British Museum ...	113,203
After short debate, Vote agreed to [198] 219
(4.) † £10,978, National Gallery
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £19,978, be granted, &c."
After debate, Committee—R.P.
COMMITTEE July 22—REPORT July 26
Question again proposed; after debate, Vote agreed to [198] 498	15,978
(5.) † £1,110, National Portrait Gallery	1,710
(6.) † £8,300, Learned Societies ...	12,300
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £8,300, be granted, &c." [198] 503
Moved, "That the Item of £500 for the Royal Academy of Music be omitted from the proposed Vote" (Mr. Monk); after debate, Motion negatived; Vote agreed to
(7.) † £6,449, University of London...	9,449
(8.) † £12,337, Universities, &c., in Scotland	18,337
(9.) † £2,100, Board of Manufactures, Scotland ... [198] 506	3,100
After short debate, Vote agreed to
IRELAND:
COMMITTEE July 26—REPORT July 27
(10.) † £191,950, Public Education ...	373,950
After debate, Vote agreed to [198] 727
(11.) † £530, Commissioners of Education (Endowed Schools)	730
COMMITTEE July 22—REPORT July 26
(12.) † £1,240, National Gallery ...	2,240
(13.) † £1,084, Royal Irish Academy	1,684
(14.) † £1,710, Queen's University ...	3,210
(15.) † £2,865, Queen's Colleges ...	4,265
(16.) † £1,250, Belfast Theological Professors, &c.	2,050

[cont.

Supply—cont. Total of Vote.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

COMMITTEE July 30—REPORT July 31 £
† £1,200, Science and Art Department 1,200
Endowed Schools, England, Commission 8,000

Total Civil Services Class IV. ... £1,644,370

CLASS V.—COLONIAL, CONSULAR, AND OTHER FOREIGN SERVICES.

COMMITTEE July 29—REPORT July 30
(1.) † £155,667, Diplomatic Services 233,367
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £155,667, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £145,667, &c." (Mr. Rylands); after long debate, A. 66, N. 66; The Chairman declaring himself with the Noes; original Question again proposed; and, after further debate, agreed to ... [198] 913
(2.) † £174,451, Consular Services ... 261,451
After short debate, Vote agreed to [198] 952
(3.) † £46,298, Colonies, Grants in Aid ... ... [198] 952 68,298
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(4.) † £3,134, Orange River Territory and St. Helena 4,134
(5.) † £5,360, Slave Trade, Commissions for Suppression of ... 7,360
(6.) † £23,343, Tonnage Bounties, &c. 35,343
After short debate, Vote agreed to [198] 960
(7.) † £9,500, Emigration [198] 962 13,500
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(8.) † £500, Coolie Emigration ... 700
(9.) † £9,047, Treasury Chest ... 19,047

Total Civil Services Class V. ... £643,200

CLASS VI. — SUPERANNUATION AND RETIRED ALLOWANCES, AND GRATUITIES FOR CHARITABLE AND OTHER SERVICES.

COMMITTEE July 29—REPORT July 30
(1.) † £171,877, Superannuation and Retired Allowances ... [198] 963 290,377
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(2.) † £31,600, Merchant Seamen's Fund Pensions, &c. 47,600
(3.) † £30,400, Relief of Distressed British Seamen [198] 965 45,400
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(4.) † £27,320, Non-conforming Clergy, Ireland ... [198] 966 41,320
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(5.) † £13,045, Hospitals and Infirmaries, Ireland 19,045
(6.) † £4,825, Miscellaneous Charitable Allowances, &c., Great Britain ... 6,825
(7.) † £4,834, Miscellaneous Charitable Allowances, &c., Ireland 6,834

[cont.

Supply—cont. Total of Vote.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATE.

COMMITTEE July 30—REPORT July 31 £
† £30,000, Superannuations and Retired Allowances 30,000

Total Civil Services Class VI. ... £487,401

CLASS VII.—MISCELLANEOUS, SPECIAL, AND TEMPORARY OBJECTS.

COMMITTEE July 29—REPORT July 30
(1.) † £31,000, Temporary Commissions ... ... [198] 966 46,000
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(2.) † £31,147, Local Dues on Shipping 46,147
(3.) † £380, Malta and Alexandria Telegraph, &c. 780
(4.) † £2,000, Flax Cultivation, Ireland ... ... [198] 968 3,000
After short debate, Vote agreed to
(5.) † £23,247, Miscellaneous Expenses 35,247
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £23,247, be granted, &c."
Moved, "That a sum, not exceeding £19,804 6*s*., &c." (Mr. Fawcett); after short debate, Question put, and negatived; Vote agreed to [198] 968

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATE.

COMMITTEE July 30—REPORT July 31
† £4,500, Miscellaneous Expenses ... 4,500

Total Civil Services Class VII. ... £135,674

REVENUE DEPARTMENTS, 1869-70.

COMMITTEE July 30—REPORT July 31 £
Vote I. Customs (Salaries and Expenses) 1,008,343
Vote II. Inland Revenue (Salaries and Expenses) 1,604,616
Vote III. Post Office Services ... 2,362,841
After short debate, Vote agreed to [198] 1001
Telegraph Service 90,000

Total of Revenue Departments... £5,065,800

POST OFFICE PACKET SERVICE.

COMMITTEE July 30—REPORT July 31
† £709,780, POST OFFICE PACKET SERVICE ... ... [198] 1101 £ 1,089,780
After short debate, Vote agreed to

COMMITTEE June 10—REPORT June 11
NEW COURTS OF JUSTICE AND OFFICES (Purchase of Site) ... [196] 1577 £ 14,093
After short debate, Vote agreed to

COMMITTEE June 10—REPORT June 11
GREENWICH HOSPITAL—For six months ending 30th September ... ... £ 64,479
After short debate, Vote agreed to [196] 1577
COMMITTEE July 30
REPORT July 31
For six months ending 31st March, 1870 68,118
£132,597

[cont.

Supply—cont.

SUMMARY.

WAYS AND MEANS.

SCHEDULE OF WAYS AND MEANS REFERRED TO IN SECTION 5 OF THE CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION ACT—viz.:

	£	s.	d.
Granted per Act 32 Vict. c. 1. s. 1. for the Service of the Years ending 31st March 1868 and 1869	4,506,272	13	4
Granted for the Service of the Year ending 31st March 1870—viz.:
Per Act 32 Vict. c. 1. s. 2	3,900,000	0	0
Per Act 32 Vict. c. 8 ...	17,100,000	0	0
Per Section 1 of this Act	21,746,684	2	3
Per Section 4 of this Act (being Surplus Ways and Means granted for the Service of preceding Years)	798,132	17	9
TOTAL GRANTS OF WAYS AND MEANS to meet the following Supplies:—
1868-9 £4,506,272 13 4 1869-70 43,544,817 0 0	£48,051,089	13	4

Supply—cont.

SUMMARY.

SUMS VOTED IN SUPPLY, SESSION 1869.

1867-8—(Deficiencies.)		£	s.	d.
NAVY SERVICES		366,545	5	6
CIVIL SERVICES		400,894	7	4
POST OFFICE PACKET SERVICE		6,989	0	6
1868-9—(Supplemental.)
EXPEDITION TO ABYSSINIA ...		3,600,000	0	0
CIVIL SERVICES		131,844	0	0
1869-70
NAVY SERVICES		9,996,641	0	0
ARMY SERVICES		14,230,400	0	0
EXCHEQUER BONDS		3,300,000	0	0
CIVIL SERVICES—viz.:	£
I. Public Works and Buildings	1,210,754
II. Salaries, &c. Public Departments...	1,733,681
III. Law and Justice	3,860,426
IV. Education, Science, and Art ...	1,644,370
V. Colonial and Consular Services ...	643,200
VI. Superannuation, &c.	487,401
VII. Miscellaneous	135,674
		9,715,506	0	0
REVENUE DEPARTMENTS		5,065,800	0	0
POST OFFICE PACKET SERVICE		1,089,780	0	0
ADVANCES FOR NEW COURTS OF JUSTICE AND OFFICES		14,093	0	0
ADVANCES FOR GREENWICH HOSPITAL AND SCHOOL		132,597	0	0
TOTAL OF SUPPLIES CHARGEABLE UPON THE ABOVE WAYS AND MEANS—		£48,051,089	13	4

SYDNEY, Viscount (Lord Chamberlain)
Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, Her Majesty's Answer, [194] 283

SYKES, Colonel W. H., Aberdeen City
Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1434
Annuity Tax (Edinburgh), Leave, [194] 283
Army—Cartridge-making, [194] 410
  Mauritius—Troops at the, [196] 1590
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1566
Bayswater Market and Baths, 2R. [194] 542
Canada (Rupert's Land) Loan, 2R. [198] 1334
China—Hong Kong Gambling Houses, [197] 1667
  Hostilities to Foreigners, [195] 577
  Pekin—Affair at, [197] 625
China—Tien-Tsin, Treaty of, Motion for Papers, [197] 1779
Civil and Diplomatic Appointments, Res. [195] 491
Civil Offices (Pensions), Comm. [196] 868; cl. 3, 871; cl. 4, 874
Colonial Returns, [196] 470
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 15, [197] 1289; cl. 45, Amendt. 1294; cl. 63, 1532; cl. 101, 1764; add. cl. 1770

[cont.

SYKES, Colonel W. H.—cont.
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 36, [196] 855
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 9, [196] 1747
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1005
India—Azeem Jah, Prince, [198] 1090
  Indian Field Officers, [195] 1
  Indian Officers, Return of, [194] 204
India—East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Res. [198] 1195
Metropolis Gas Bills, [194] 303
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 343; 3R. 1342
Navy—African Squadron, Motion for Returns, [195] 44
  Greenwich Sixpence, [195] 1853
  Instructions to Officers on Foreign Stations, [194] 1353, 1354
Navy Estimates—Men and Boys, [194] 913
  Salaries, [195] 65
Parliament—Returns, [194] 111
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. [198] 805; cl. 1, 822; cl. 2, 833, 1112; cl. 4, 1113; Consid. 1464
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1588
Supply—Colonies, Grants in Aid, [198] 958
  Common Law Courts, [198] 1002

[cont.

SYKES, Colonel W. H.—cont.
Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1469
Education, Public, [198] 199
Embassies and Missions Abroad, [198] 927
Embassy Houses Abroad, [197] 1467
Foreign Office, [197] 1679
Furniture, Public Departments, [197] 677
House of Lords Offices, [197] 1475
Industrial Museum, Edinburgh, [197] 1213
Public Buildings, [197] 676
Public Works (Ireland) (Salaries), [198] 745, 746
Royal Parks, &c. [197] 665
Stationery Office, [197] 1697
Tonnage Bounties, [198] 961
Works, &c. [197] 1708
Vacating of Seats, Leave, [194] 219

SYKES, Mr. C., Yorkshire, E.R.
British Columbia—Motion for Papers, [196] 1105
Sea Birds Preservation, Leave, [194] 404; 2R. 775; Consid. add. cl. [195] 557

SYNAN, Mr. E. J., Limerick Co.
Ireland—O'Sullivan, Mr., Case of, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1164
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 2, [195] 1041; cl. 14, 1150; cl. 15, 1400; cl. 25, 1615; cl. 32, [196] 41; cl. 33, Amendt. 53, 55; cl. 59, 400; Lords Amendts. [198] 71; Amendt. 98
Medical Officers Superannuation (Ireland), 2R. [197] 490
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 239
Poor Law (Ireland) Act Amendment, 2R. [195] 321
Poor Law (Removal of Children), Res. [197] 1340
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1926
Sheep and Cattle, Foreign, Importation of, [194] 205
Supply—Education, Public, [198] 735

TALBOT, Mr. J. G., Kent, W.
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 10, [198] 1279
Irish Church, 3R. [196] 1019
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister, Comm. Amendt. [198] 357
Metropolis—Cremorne Gardens, [196] 1743
Parliament—Mosaics in the Houses of Parliament, [198] 448
Whitsuntide Holidays, [196] 104
Poor Law—Kensington Sick Asylum District, [195] 841
Railway Guards and Passengers Communication, [198] 1088, 1089
Supply—Lord Lieutenant's Household, [198] 513, 514
University Tests, Comm. cl. 6, [197] 791

Tasmania, Public Worship
Question, Mr. C. Reed; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 11, [194] 1085

TAUNTON, Lord
Endowed Schools, 2R. [197] 616
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 28, [197] 1025; cl. 68, 1237; Report, 1493
Parliament—Order in the House, [197] 406

TAYLOR, Right Hon. Colonel T. E., Dublin Co.
Dublin Freemen, Leave, Motion for Adjournment, [197] 820
Parliament—Drogheda Writ, [194] 151, 797

TAYLOR, Mr. P. A., Leicester
Army—Lunatics—Murder of Sergeant Barnes, &c. [195] 1576
Conviction of three Children at Salisbury, [195] 675; [196] 1608
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. Amendt. [198] 1004
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1730
Italy—Nathan, Mr., Arrest of, [198] 1526
Loan Societies, [194] 1086
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, [194] 670
Poor Law—Vagrants in Sacks, Narberth Union, [197] 308, 1890
South Sea Islands—Slave Trade from the, [197] 633; [198] 450
Sunday Trading, 2R. Amendt. [194] 561; Comm. [195] 799, 802

Telegraph Bill Formerly }
Electric Telegraphs Bill }
(Mr. Dodson, The Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Question, Mr. Baines; Answer, The Marquess of Hartington April 15, [195] 845 Considered in Committee July 5, [197] 1214; Resolutions agreed to Resolutions reported; Bill ordered; read 1°* July 6 [Bill 197]
Read 2°* July 16
198] Select Committee to consist of the Marquess of Hartington, Mr. Hunt, and Five Members to be nominated by the Committee of Selection July 19, 234
Report of Select Committee* July 22 (Parl. P. No. 348)
. Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" (The Marquess of Hartington) July 26, 746
. Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the Bill be referred back to the Select Committee, to examine and take evidence upon the Contracts entered into with the several Telegraphic, Railway, and Canal Companies, with a view to determine whether they are of the character of fraudulent or of improvident Contracts contemplated in the Resolution of this House of the 24th day of July 1860; and to examine the calculations upon which the Estimates of Receipt and Expenditure, as set forth in the Reports of Mr. Scudamore and in the Statement of the Postmaster General when submitting Resolutions upon this subject, are based, with a view to determine whether there is any reasonable prospect that said Estimates may be realized" (Mr. Robert Torrens), 751; after debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 148, N. 23; M. 125; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c." put, and agreed to; Committee; Report [Bill 233]
. Considered; after short debate, Bill read 3° July 29, 974

[cont.

Telegraph Bill—cont.
198] l. Read 1ª * (The Marquess of Lansdowne) July 30 (No. 243)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" . August 3, 1135; after short debate, Bill read 2ª
Committee *; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 73]

Tenants Purchase by Instalments (Ireland) Bill [H.L.] (The Lord Dunsany)
l. Presented; read 1ª * July 1 (No. 161)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 27, [198] 773; after short debate, Motion and Bill withdrawn

Tenure (Ireland) Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess of Clanricarde)
l. Presented; read 1ª * April 5 (No. 36)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" April 20, [195] 1157; Bill read 2ª, after debate
Moved, "That the House do now resolve itself into a Committee" April 26, 1536; after long debate, Motion withdrawn
Moved, "That the Order for the House to be put into Committee be discharged" July 27, [198] 776; Order discharged

Thames Embankment, Proposed Viaduct
(See Metropolis—Title, Thames Embankment)

THYNNE, Lord H. F., Wiltshire, S.
Corrupt Practices Commissions, [195] 1975
Episcopal Clergy, Disabilities of the, [195] 1466

TIPPING, Mr. W., Stockport
Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 862
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 63, [197] 1533

TITE, Sir W., Bath
Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1245
Courts of Justice (New Site), Leave, [196] 560
Metropolis—Finsbury Park, [196] 741
Thames Embankment, South Side, [195] 1464
Metropolis—Thames Embankment, Motion for a Committee, [194] 277
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 337; Comm. add. cl. 1057, 1059; 3R. 1342
Parliament—House of Commons Arrangements, Res. [195] 273, 279, 302
Supply—Houses of Parliament, Report, [197] 1436

Titles of Religious Congregations Act Extension Bill (Mr. Headlam, Mr. Pease)
c. Ordered; read 1° * May 13 [Bill 127]
Read 2° * June 7
Committee *; Report June 11 [Bill 156]
Read 3° * June 14
l. Read 1ª * (The Duke of Saint Albans) June 15
Read 2ª * July 2 (No. 130)
Committee *; Report July 5
Read 3ª * July 6
Royal Assent July 12 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 26]

Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act (1868) Amendment Bill
(The Lord Advocate, Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Solicitor General for Scotland)
c. Ordered; read 1° * June 3 [Bill 144]
Read 2° * June 17
Committee *; Report June 28 [Bill 182]
Committee * (on re-comm.); Report July 22
Read 3° * July 23
l. Read 1ª * (The Lord Chancellor) July 26
Read 2ª * August 6 (No. 227)
Committee *; Report August 7
Read 3ª * August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 116]

TOLLEMACHE, Mr. J., Cheshire, W.
Cattle Disease (Cheshire), Res. [197] 1811

TORRENS, Mr. R. R., Cambridge Bo.
Assessed Rates, 2R. [196] 1327; Comm. cl. 4, [197] 527
Malta, Res. [197] 1774, 1779
New Zealand—Affairs of, [198] 489
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Motion for a Committee, [194] 657; Instruction to Committee, 1511
Telegraph, Comm. Amendt. [198] 751; cl. 12, 771

TORRENS, Mr. W. M., Finsbury
Capital Punishment Abolition, 2R. [198] 877
Dublin Freemen, Leave, [197] 956
Extradition, Law of, [194] 1462
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1794
Ireland—Incumbered Estates Court—Earl of Lanesborough's Estate, [195] 521
State of, [195] 2007, 2008
Irish Church, Lords Amendts. [198] 79
Marlborough Street Police Court, Motion for Papers, [198] 1229
Metropolis—Finsbury Park, [196] 740
Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans), 2R. [198] 338; Comm. cl. 22, 1056; add. cl. 1057, 1060; Consid. 1128, 1131; 3R. 1335, 1338, 1339, 1340
Metropolitan Poor Act (1867) Amendment, 2R. Motion for Adjournment, [196] 963, 1340
Poor Law — Metropolitan Lunatic Asylums, [195] 1354
Sick Poor Asylums, [194] 954
Supply—Royal Parks, &c. [197] 672
Treasury, &c. Departments, [197] 1479
Telegraph, Consid. Amendt. [198] 974
United States—"Alabama" Claims, [194] 309
Witnesses (House of Commons), Motion for a Committee, [196] 620, 627

TOWNSHEND, Marquess of
Aggravated Assaults Amendment, 2R. [196] 564, 565
Children, &c. Protection, 2R. [197] 1864
Education of Children, 2R. [197] 1738
Industrial Schools (Great Britain), 2R. [196] 353
Infant Life Preservation, 2R. [197] 1739, 1740
Lodgers Property Protection, 2R. [196] 562
Poor in England and Wales, Address for a Commission, [197] 399
Reformatory Schools Amendment, 2R. [196] 351, 352

TRACY, Hon. C. R. D. HANBURY- Montgomery, &c.
Army—Military Labour, Res. [195] 642 ; [196] 1209 ; [198] 684
Navy Estimates — Coastguard Service, [195] 94, 95
Navy—Royal Naval Reserve, [194] 484

Trade Marks Registration Bill
(Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Mr. John Bright)
c. Considered in Committee ; Resolution reported ; Bill ordered ; read 1°* May 13 [Bill 126]
Bill withdrawn* July 16

Trade Returns from Public Departments
Question, Mr. Pochin ; Answer, Mr. Bright April 12, [195] 575

Trades Unions
Funds of, Questions, Mr. Gourley, Mr. Hadfield ; Answers, Mr. Bruce Feb 18, [194] 112
Report of Commission, Observations, Mr. Serjeant Cox ; Reply, Mr. Bruce Feb 26, [194] 366
Eleventh Report—Parl. P. [4123]
(See title Friendly Societies)

Trades Unions, &c. Bill
(Mr. Thomas Hughes, Mr. Mundella)
c. Ordered ; read 1°* April 9 [Bill 68]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" July 7, [197] 1344 ; after short debate, Bill read 2°
Bill withdrawn* July 12

Trades Unions (Protection of Funds) Bill
(Mr. Secretary Bruce, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen)
c. Ordered ; read 1°* July 13 [Bill 216]
Bill read 2°, after short debate July 19, [198] 233
Committee* ; Report July 22
Read 3°* July 23
l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Morley) July 26 (No. 226)
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" July 30, 992 ; Bill read 2ª, after short debate
Committee* ; Report August 2
Read 3ª* August 3
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 61]

Treasury Board, Constitution of the Question, Mr. Sclater-Booth ; Answer, Mr. Ayrton Feb 19, [194] 124 ; Observations, Mr. Sclater-Booth ; Reply, The Chancellor of the Exchequer ; debate thereon Mar 8, 842

TRELAWNY, Sir J. G. S., Cornwall, E.
Sunday Trading, Comm. [195] 805

TREVELYAN, Mr. G. O. (Lord of the Admiralty), Hawick, &c.
Greenwich Hospital, Leave, [195] 1701 ; Comm. [197] 561
Navy Estimates—New Works, [195] 212

TREVOR, Lord A. E. HILL- Downshire
Ireland—Cashel Election, [195] 976
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 155

TRURO, Lord
Army—Military Force of the Kingdom, [195] 1461

TUAM, Bishop of
*Irish Church, 2R. [197] 104 ; Comm. cl. 46, 1164 ; 3R. 1613 ; Commons Amendts. [198] 440

Turkey
British Subjects in the Levant, Question, Mr. R. N. Fowler ; Answer, Mr. Otway August 4, [198] 1250
Christians in Crete, Question, Mr. Serjeant Dowse ; Answer, Mr. Otway July 16, [198] 19
Cretan Insurgents, Question, Mr. Monk ; Answer, Mr. Otway April 19, [195] 1099
Turco - Persian Boundary Line, Question, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe ; Answer, The Earl of Clarendon May 3, [196] 1

TURNOR, Mr. E., Lincolnshire, S.
Cattle Plague in Roumania, [197] 1081

Turnpike Acts Continuance
Select Committee appointed, "to inquire into the Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Schedules of the annual Turnpike Acts Continuance Act, 1868, and report their opinion thereon" (Mr. Gathorne Hardy) Mar 17, [194] 1617
And, on April 2, Committee nominated as follows :—Lord George Cavendish (Chairman), Sir Robert Anstruther, Mr. Beach, Mr. Wentworth Beaumont, Mr. Hardcastle, Mr. Henniker-Major, and Mr. Welby
Report of Select Committee June 14
(Parl. P. No. 262)

Turnpike Acts Continuance, &c. Bill
(Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Secretary Bruce)
c. Ordered ; read 1°* July 1 [Bill 191]
Read 2°* July 8
Committee* Report July 22
Considered*; July 23
Read 3°* July 26
l. Read 1ª* (Earl of Morley) July 27 (No. 230)
Read 2ª* July 30
Committee* August 2
Report* August 3
Read 3°* August 5
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 90]

Turnpike Roads Bill
(Mr. Whalley, Mr. Blake)
c. Ordered ; read 1°* Mar 16 [Bill 52]

Turnpike Trusts
Question, Mr. G. Clive ; Answer, Mr. Bruce Mar 2, [194] 483 ; Question, Mr. Whalley ; Answer, Mr. Bruce May 3, [196] 16 ; Observations, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen ; Reply, Sir George Jenkinson July 23, [198] 619

[cont.

Turnpike Trusts—cont.
Repair of Bridges, Question, Sir Herbert Croft; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen July 15, [197] 1886

United States
"Alabama" Claims, Question, Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens; Answer, Mr. Otway Feb 25, [194] 309; Observations, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe; Reply, The Earl of Clarendon June 4, [196] 1227
Consulate at Chicago, Question, Mr. Bowring; Answer, Mr. Otway August 5, [198] 1293
Hog Cholera, The, Question, Earl Cowper; Answer, Earl De Grey and Ripon April 16, [195] 942
(See Post Office)
Murder of Captain Speer, Question, Mr. Cubitt; Answer, Mr. Otway June, 10, [196] 1498
Recent Negotiations with the, Observations, Mr. Gladstone; Reply, Sir Henry Bulwer July 8, [197] 1425
San Juan, Island of, Question, Viscount Milton; Answer, Mr. Otway August 4, [198] 1248

University Tests Bill
(Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Bouverie, Mr. Grant Duff)
194] c. Considered in Committee; after short debate a Resolution agreed to Feb 23, 272; Bill ordered; read 1°* [Bill 15]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" Mar 10, 1041
Amendt. to leave out "now," and add "upon this day six months" (Mr. Mowbray); Question proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" after short debate, Debate adjourned
Debate resumed Mar 15, 1415; after debate, Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned" (Mr. Beresford Hope); A. 75, N. 251; M. 176
Question again proposed, "That 'now,' &c.;" Moved, "That this House do now adjourn" (Mr. Raikes); after short debate, Motion withdrawn; after further short debate, Question, "That 'now,' &c.," put, and agreed to; main Question put, and agreed to; Bill read 2°
197] Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" June 29, 767
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "this House will, upon this day three months, resolve itself into the said Committee" (Mr. Bentinck); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, Amendt. withdrawn; main Question, "That Mr. Speaker, &c.," put, and agreed to; Committee—R.P. 788
Committee; Report July 2, 1090
Considered* July 5
Read 3°* July 8
l. Read 1ª* (The Earl Russell) July 9 (No. 177)
198] Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª" July 19, 125; after short debate, a Question being stated thereupon, the Question was put, Whether the said Question shall be now put? Cont. 54, Not-Cont. 91; M. 37; Division List, Cont. and Not-Cont. 144

University Tests Bill and the House of Lords
Question, Mr. Sartoris; Answer, The Solicitor General; short debate thereon July 22, [198] 451
Durham University, Question, Mr. Stevenson; Answer, The Solicitor General Mar 22, [194] 1897

Vacating of Seats Bill
Moved, "That leave be given to bring in a Bill to repeal section twenty-six of the Act of the sixth year of Queen Anne, chapter seven, relating to the Re-election of Members accepting office under the Crown" (Viscount Bury) Feb 23, [194] 210; after short debate, Motion withdrawn

Vaccination Amendment Bill [H.L.]
(The Marquess Townshend)
l. Presented; read 1ª* April 29 (No. 85)
Bill withdrawn* July 15

Valuation of Property Bill—Formerly Rateable Property Bill
(Mr. Goschen, Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Goschen) Feb 22, [194] 185; Bill ordered, after short debate; read 1°* [Bill 11]
Question, Mr. Liddell; Answer, Mr. Goschen Mar 18, 1660
Bill withdrawn* July 1

Valuation of Property (Metropolis) Bill Formerly Rateable Property (Metropolis) Bill
(Mr. Goschen, Mr. Arthur Peel, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Motion for Leave (Mr. Goschen) Feb 22, [194] 170; Bill ordered, after debate; read 1°* [Bill 12]
Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2°" April 1, [195] 17; after short debate, Bill read 2°
Question, Mr. Liddell; Answer, Mr. Goschen April 8, 359
Committee*; Report April 30
Committee (on re-comm.)—R.P. July 8, [197] 1482 [Bill 100]
Committee*; Report July 13
Considered* July 23
Read 3°* July 26
l. Read 1ª* (The Earl of Kimberley) July 27
Read 2ª* July 29 (No. 229)
Committee*; Report July 30
Read 3ª* August 2
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 67]

VANCE, Mr. J., Armagh City
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 1, [196] 841; add. cl. 857, 858
Ireland—Questions, &c.
Cashel Election, [195] 1935
Firearms, Use of, by the Irish Constabulary, [197] 1668
Hackney Carriages in Dublin, [195] 583
Portadown—Riots at, [197] 1171

[cont.

VANCE, Mr. J.—cont.
Prisons, [195] 1855
Rumoured Resignation of the Lord Lieutenant, [194] 2003
Ireland—Ulster, Recent Events in, Motion for Papers, [198] 356
194] Irish Church, 2R. 1964
195] Comm. cl. 12, 1112; cl. 16, Amendt. 1409, 1410; cl. 25, 1606; cl. 26, 1627; cl. 29, Motion for reporting Progress, 1931
196] cl. 36, 71; cl. 58, 393; Consid. 756, 772; Amendt. 776
197] Lords Amendts. Amendt. 1963, 1964
198] 79, 573
Parliament—Dublin City Writ, [196] 1791, 1792; [197] 128
Parliament—Beverley Election, Motion for an Address, [195] 565
Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 1559
Supply—Motion for reporting Progress, [197] 1482
Ways and Means—Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), [196] 806

Venus (1874), Transit of
Considered in Committee August 6, [198] 1394
Resolved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty praying Her Majesty that She will be graciously pleased to give directions for the carrying out of the arrangements necessary for observing the Transit of Venus which will take place in the year 1874; and to assure Her Majesty that this House will make good any expense that may be incurred thereby"
Resolution reported August 7

VERNER, Mr. E. Wingfield, Lisburn
Dublin Freemen Commission, 2R. [197] 1176
Ireland—Anketell, Mr., Murder of, [194] 1091
Dublin, Lord Mayor of, [196] 746
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 910; cl. 12, 1118; cl. 15, 1403

VERNER, Mr. W., Armagh Co.
Ireland—Caledon—12th July in, [198] 448
Portadown—Riots at, [197] 1170
Irish Church, 2R. [194] 2043; Comm. cl. 26, [195] 1625

VERNEY, Sir H., Buckingham
Ancient Monuments, Preservation of, [195] 27
British Columbia—Motion for Papers, [196] 1098
Canada—Dockyard Emigrants, [196] 105
Hudson's Bay Company, [194] 309; [197] 1526
Revenue Officers, 2R. [194] 1576
Supply—Consular Buildings, &c. [197] 1470
Learned Societies, [198] 504, 506

VILLIERS, Right Hon. C. P., Wolverhampton
Assessed Rates, Consid. Amendt. [197] 1088

VIVIAN, Hon. Captain J. C. W. (Lord of the Treasury), Truro
Army—Questions, &c.
Henry-Martini Rifle, [198] 1370, 1371
MacLoughlin, Dr., Case of, [198] 896
Mauritius—Troops in the, [196] 1591
Military Labour, [196] 1209
Relief of Regiments in India, [197] 1421
Volunteers, Ammunition for the, [196] 1591
Wimbledon Review, [198] 1493
Army—Clerks of the Works and Royal Engineers, Res. [197] 135
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1569
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1006
Ireland—Military Prison, Dublin, [198] 325
Militia, Comm. [195] 1419

VIVIAN, Mr. H. Hussey, Glamorganshire
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1562
Coal Fields, Motion for an Address, [196] 1911
Navy—North Country Coal, Use of, [195] 1354

Volunteer Act (1863) Amendment Bill
(Captain Vivian, Mr. Secretary Cardwell)
c. Ordered; read 1° * July 22 [Bill 236]
Read 2° * July 26
Committee *; Report July 29
Considered * July 30
Read 3° * July 30
l. Read 1ª * (Lord Northbrook) August 2 (No. 257)
Read 2ª * August 3
Committee *; Report August 5
Read 3ª * August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict c. 81]

WALKER, Major G. G., Dumfriesshire
Army—Militia and Reserve Forces, Motion for Returns, [195] 1759, 1763
Army of Reserve, Res. [196] 1465
Contagious Diseases (Animals) (No. 2), Comm. cl. 90, Amendt. [197] 1759; cl. 122, 1765
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 395
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 39, [196] 317
Militia, Comm. [195] 1418
Parochial Schools (Scotland), Comm. cl. 1, [198] 820; cl. 18, Amendt. 1124; cl. 24, 1239, 1384
Railway Signalling, [198] 1372

WALPOLE, Right Hon. S. H., Cambridge University
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 6, [196] 1214; cl. 46, 1412, 1415, 1416
British Museum—Temple Collection, [195] 1579
Ecclesiastical Titles Act Repeal, Leave, [194] 189, 412
Financial Statement, [195] 584
Imprisonment for Debt, Consid. cl. 5, [197] 764
194] Irish Church, 2R. Motion for Adjournment, 1994, 2004
195] Comm. cl. 2, 1015; cl. 10, 1108; cl. 12, 1110; cl. 14, 1371, 1372; cl. 17, 1411, 1412; cl. 20, 1503; cl. 27, 1634
197] Lords Amendts. 1958, 1961
198] 92, 98
Newspapers, &c. Comm. [195] 1417
O'Sullivan's Disability, Leave, [196] 199

[cont.

Walpole, Right Hon. S. H.—cont.
Parliament—Business of the House, [194] 1093
Parliament — Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 192
Speaker, Election of a, [194] 6
Supply—British Museum, [198] 219
University Tests, 2R. [194] 1457; Comm. [197] 782

Walpole, Hon. F., Norfolk, N.
Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1437

Walsh, Hon. A., Radnorshire
Army—Royal Horse Artillery, [197] 359
Inclosure of Commons, [195] 976
Post Office—Services in Wales, [196] 1295

Walter, Mr. J., Berkshire
Assessed Rates, Consid. [197] 1089
Convict Richard Bonner, [194] 162
Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 575
Endowed Schools, Leave, [194] 120; 2R. 1402; Comm. cl. 9, [196] 1745; cl. 15, 1767; cl. 29, 1775; cl. 41, 1781
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 14, [195] 1151; cl. 18, 1475, 1484; cl. 32, [196] 23; Lords Amendts. [197] 1981; [198] 29
Law Courts, New, Motion for a Committee, [197] 463
Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 555
Parliament — House of Commons' Arrangements, Res. [195] 299
Permissive Prohibitory Liquor, 2R. [196] 664
Real Estate Intestacy, Leave, [194] 963
Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1936
Telegraph, Comm. cl. 3, [198] 763; cl. 4, 768
University Tests, Comm. cl. 6, [197] 791; add. cl. 1096, 1103

Warehousing of Wines and Spirits, &c. Bill

(Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer)
c. Resolution in Committee; Resolution agreed to; Bill ordered; read 1° * July 8 [Bill 201]
Read 2° * July 19
Committee *; Report August 3
Considered * August 4
Read 3° * August 4
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 5 (No. 272)
Read 2ª* August 6
Committee *; Report August 7
Read 3ª* August 9
Royal Assent August 11 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 103]

Water Supply Bill

(Mr. Biddulph, Mr. Goldney, Colonel Napier Sturt, Marquess of Lorne)
c. Ordered; read 1° * April 15 [Bill 83]
Bill withdrawn * May 27

WAYS AND MEANS

195] Considered in Committee April 8, 363—Financial Statement of The Chancellor of the Exchequer on moving the First Resolution, "That, towards raising the Supply granted to Her Majesty, the Duty of Customs now charged on Tea shall continue to be levied and charged on and after the 1st day of August 1869 until the 1st day of August 1870, on the importation thereof into Great Britain and Ireland: viz.—Tea . . . the lb. 0*s.* 6*d.*;" after long debate, Motion agreed to Resolutions reported, and agreed to; Bill ordered April 9, 566
Considered in Committee April 12, 585
Moved, "That the Duties of Customs chargeable upon the articles under-mentioned, imported into Great Britain and Ireland, shall cease and determine, viz.:—Corn, Grain, Meal, and Flour, and articles of the like character, viz.:—
[Then the articles are set forth.]
After debate, Resolution withdrawn; other Resolutions agreed to; Resolutions reported April 13
Customs and Excise Duties — Considered in Committee May 13, [196] 780
Re-committed Resolutions—1. (Beer and Ale, on importation into Great Britain and Ireland) — 2. (Male Servants, Carriages, or Horses or Mules, or Armorial Bearings, and Horsedealers), agreed to Resolutions reported, and agreed to; Bill ordered; read 1° * June 8
Considered in Committee July 30, [198] 1054

Questions thereon

Assessed Taxes, Question, Mr. Barnett; Answer, Mr. Ayrton April 9, [195] 478
Cabs and Omnibuses, Licenses on, Question, Mr. Gourley; Answer, Mr. Bruce August 11, [198] 1541
Corn, The Duty on, Question, Mr. Macfie; Answer, Mr. Gladstone April 9, [195] 479; Question, Mr. Pim; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 12, 584; Question, Mr. A. Johnston; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 15, 844
Excise Licence on Horses, Question, Sir Henry Hoare; Answer, Mr. Scourfield April 19, [195] 1097
Fire Insurance Policies—Rebate or Drawback, Question, Mr. H. B. Sheridan; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer May 11, [196] 574
Income Tax, Question, Mr. Pollard-Urquhart; Answer, Mr. Stansfeld June 4, [196] 1238
Income and Assessed Taxes, Payment of, Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 17, [197] 122
Malt Duty, Question, Mr. M'Combie; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer Mar 14, [194] 625; Question, Sir George Jenkinson; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer August 4, [198] 1247
Payment of Income Tax, &c., Question, Mr. Walpole; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 12, [195] 584; Question, Mr. Neville-Grenville; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 15, 843
Stamp Duties Exemptions, Question, Mr. Alderman Salomons; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 29, [195] 1849

[cont.

Ways and Means—cont.
Taxes on Servants, Question, Mr. W. H. Smith; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer April 29, [195] 1849; Question, Viscount Galway; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer June 1, [196] 1097
Tax on Shepherds' Dogs, Question, Mr. Cameron; Answer, The Chancellor of the Exchequer July 1, [197] 947

SUMMARY.

WAYS AND MEANS.

SCHEDULE OF WAYS AND MEANS REFERRED TO IN SECTION 5 OF THE CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION ACT—VIZ.:

	£	s.	d.
Granted per Act 32 Vict. c. 1. s. 1. for the Service of the Years ending 31st March 1868 and 1869	4,506,272	13	4
Granted for the Service of the Year ending 31st March 1870—viz.:
Per Act 32 Vict. c. 1 s. 2	3,900,000	0	0
Per Act 32 Vict. c. 8 ...	17,100,000	0	0
Per Section 1 of this Act	21,746,684	2	3
Per Section 4 of this Act (being Surplus Ways and Means granted for the Service of preceding Years)	798,132	17	9
TOTAL GRANTS OF WAYS AND MEANS to meet the following Supplies:— 1868-9 £4,506,272 13 4 1869-70 43,544,817 0 0	£48,051,089	13	4

WEDDERBURN, Sir D., Ayrshire, S.
Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. cl. 1, [198] 1013
Game Laws (Scotland), Motion for a Committee, [195] 1730
Game Laws (Scotland) [Mr. M'Lagan], 2R. [197] 504
Game Laws (Scotland) (No. 2), 2R. [198] 881
Hypothec Abolition (Scotland), 2R. [198] 386
India—Barracks at Morar, [197] 1418
India — East India Revenue Accounts, Res. [198] 1357
Scotland—Truck System, [197] 1885

WEGUELIN, Mr. C., Youghal
Parliamentary and Municipal Elections, Instruction to Committee, [194] 1508

Weights and Measures (False) and Adulteration
Amendt. on Committee of Supply Mar 5, To leave out from "That" and add "in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that Her Majesty's Government should give their earliest attention to the widespread and most reprehensible practices of using False Weights and Measures and of adulterating Food, Drink, and Drugs, with the view of amending the Law as regards the penalties now inflicted for those offences, and of providing more efficient means for the discovery and prevention of fraud" (Lord Eustace Cecil),
[cont.

Weights and Measures (False) and Adulteration—cont.
[194] 718; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn

Weights and Measures, Metric System
Question, Mr. J. B. Smith; Answer, Mr. Bright April 16, [195] 972

WELBY, Mr. W. E., Lincolnshire, S.
Customs and Inland Revenue, Comm. cl. 18, [196] 850
Feed Stuffs and Manures, Res. [197] 969
*Seeds Adulteration, 2R. [196] 1916, 1938
Ways and Means, Res. 2. (Customs and Excise Duties), Amendt. [196] 806

WELLS, Mr. W., Peterborough
Post Office—Life Assurances, [194] 1188
Savings Banks, [196] 101

West Indies
Question, Sir Charles Adderley; Answer, Mr. Monsell July 15, [197] 1889
Clergy in the, Question, Mr. Crum-Ewing; Answer, Mr. Monsell Mar 23, [194] 2001

WEST, Mr. H. W., Ipswich
Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 54, [196] 1593, 1596; cl. 88, 1606; cl. 126, 1901; cl. 130, [197] 314, 324, 327; cl. 131, 416
Court of Common Pleas (County Palatine of Lancaster), 2R. [194] 774; Comm. [195] 218
Imprisonment for Debt, 2R. [195] 178; Comm. cl. 4, [197] 424; cl. 5, 577; cl. 18, 581
Revising Barristers, Appointment of, [198] 1541

WESTBURY, Lord
Bankruptcy, [194] 103; Comm. [198] 17
Common Law Courts (Ireland), Comm. add. cl. [194] 1459
Ecclesiastical Courts, &c., Nomination of Committee, [195] 1352
Fine Arts Copyright and Consolidation Amendment (No. 2), 2R. [195] 1936, 1942
Ireland—Dublin City Election, Address, [196] 1398
Irish Church, 2R. [197] 229; Comm. Preamble, 732; cl. 7, Amendt. 755, 758; cl. 8, Amendt. 759; cl. 9, Amendt. ib.; cl. 13, Amendt. 874, 880; 3R. 1648
Tenure (Ireland), 2R. [195] 1187; Comm. 1549

WESTMEATH, Marquess of
Ireland—Agrarian Outrages, [195] 1534
State of, [195] 1971; [196] 732
Tenure (Ireland), Comm. [195] 1554

WHALLEY, Mr. G. H., Peterborough
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1328
Income Tax, Res. [194] 1530, 1534
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 894; cl. 2, 1037; cl. 12, 1118; cl. 18, 1488; cl. 25, 1616; cl. 37, [196] 73; cl. 39, Amendt. 107, 117, 130, 138, 139, 317, 318; cl. 59, Amendt. 406, 407; Lords Amendts. [197] 1984; [198] 86, 578
Local Taxation, Motion for an Address, [194] 249
[cont.

Whalley, Mr. G. H.—cont.
  Murphy, Mr., Arrest of, Res. [198] 611, 613, 621
  New Zealand—Affairs of, [198] 492
  O'Farrell Papers, The, [195] 1757
  Party Processions (Ireland), 2R. [194] 1559
  Pharmacy Act Amendment, Comm. [195] 1934
  Poor Law—Removal of Children, Res. [197] 1341
  Supply—Education, Public, [198] 170
    Home Office, &c. Departments, [197] 1481
    House of Commons Offices, [197] 1477
  Trades Unions (Protection of Funds), 2R. [198] 233
  Turnpike Trusts, [196] 16

Whatman, Mr. J., Maidstone
  Army—West Kent Militia, [195] 678

Wheelhouse, Mr. W. St. John, Leeds
  Army — Camping System, Major M'Gwire's, Motion for Papers, [198] 725
  Courts of Justice, New, Res. [195] 1245
  Evidence Amendment, 2R. [195] 1807
  French Treaty, Motion for a Committee, [197] 338
  Hospitals, &c. Rating Exemption, 2R. [195] 1814
  Poor Rates, Exemption from, [194] 356
  Printworks Regulation, Res. [194] 1538
  Special and Common Juries, 2R. [198] 400
  Supply—Education, Public, [198] 196

Whitbread, Mr. S., Bedford
  Army Estimates—Buildings and Repairs, [195] 669
  Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 130, [197] 320, 328
  Dublin Freemen, Leave, [197] 959
  Endowed Schools, 2R. [194] 1398; Comm. cl. 10, [196] 1750; cl. (A.) 12, 1764
  Metropolitan Street Tramways, 2R. [194] 554
  Parliament — Dublin City Writ, [196] 1793; [197] 133

White, Hon. Captain C. W., Tipperary Co.
  Metropolis — Hyde Park, Furious Riding in, [197] 1591

White, Mr. J., Brighton
  Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 631, 639, 645
  Army—War Office and Horse Guards, [194] 625; Res. 1094, 1111
  Assessed Rates, Comm. cl. 1, Amendt. [197] 390
  Audit of Public Accounts, [197] 630
  Civil Offices (Pensions), Consid. [197] 541
  Coronation Oath, The, [198] 893
  Diplomatic Service, Expenses of the, [194] 836
  Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866, [197] 1194
  Fortifications (Provision for Expenses), Comm. [198] 1007
  Navy—Lord High Admiral, Office of, [194] 627
    Official Salaries, [195] 27
  Parliament—Address in Answer to the Speech, [194] 73
  Real Property, Res. [196] 596
  Société Agricole et Industrielle d'Egypte, [198] 451

White, Mr. J.—cont.
  Supply—Abyssinian Expedition, [194] 645
    House of Lords Offices, [197] 1474
    Houses of Parliament, [197] 680; Amendt. 683; Report, 1435
  Telegraph, Comm. [198] 754
  Vacating of Seats, Leave, [194] 210

Whitwell, Mr. J., Kendal
  Bankruptcy, Comm. cl. 4, [196] 1212; cl. 5, Amendt. ib.; cl. 15, Amendt. 1225; cl. 46, Amendt. 1416; cl. 54, 1593
  Bishops Resignation, Comm. cl. 2, [198] 1318, 1321
  Clerks in the Customs, [198] 1525
  Supply — Embassies and Missions Abroad, [198] 944
    Miscellaneous Expenses, [198] 974
    Public Offices Site, [197] 1208
    Public Works (Ireland) (Salaries), [198] 515
    Superannuations, [198] 962
    Temporary Commissions, [198] 966
  Telegraph, Comm. cl. 4, [198] 768

Whitworth, Mr. T., Drogheda
  Supply—Learned Societies, [198] 506

Williams, Mr. W., Denbigh, &c.
  County Courts, 2R. [194] 1565
  Election Expenses, 2R. [194] 578
  Libel, 2R. [194] 1615
  Merchant Shipping and Navigation, Leave, [198] 1514
  Parliament—Dumfriesshire Election, Motion for a Committee, [194] 191
  Thames Embankment and the Metropolitan Railway Company, [198] 1528

Williamson, Sir H., Durham, N.
  Light Dues, Res. [196] 183

Willyams, Mr. E. W. Brydges, Cornwall, E.
  Parliamentary, &c. Elections — Nomination Days, [194] 952

Wilmot, Colonel H., Derbyshire, S.
  Army—Adjutancies of Militia, Res. [197] 139

Wiltes Peerage
l. Report from the Committee for Privileges that the Petitioner had not made out his claim considered; Moved, that the said Report be agreed to May 10, [196] 426
  Amendt. to leave out from ("That,") and insert ("the Petition of the claimant to the dignity of Earl of Wiltes be referred back to the Committee for Privileges in order that the same be re-heard") (The Duke of Cleveland); after short debate, Amendt. withdrawn; original Motion agreed to; Resolved and adjudged, That the Petitioner hath not made out his claim, 428 (Parl. P. l. No. 100)

Winchilsea, Earl of
  Furious Riding, Conviction for, [197] 1105
  Irish Church, Commons Amendts. [198] 320
  National Gallery, Purchases for the, [198] 652
    Res. [198] 1140

Wine Duties—Reduction of
Question, Mr. Akroyd; Answer, Mr. Ayrton July 6, [197] 1270

WINGFIELD, Sir C. J., Gravesend
Abyssinian War, Motion for a Committee, [196] 1434
Central Asia, [197] 1561
Government of India Act Amendment, Comm. [198] 1363; cl. 2, 1365, 1366; cl. 6, 1367
Governor General of India, Comm. [198] 1368
Gravesend County Court, [195] 1579
India—Appeals, [197] 1423
Punjaub Tenancy Act, [194] 1085; [196] 748
India—East India Revenue Accounts, Comm. Res. [198] 1190
Navy Estimates—Men and Boys, [194] 926

WINTERBOTHAM, Mr. H. S. P., Stroud
*Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. (A) 12, Amendt. [196] 1752, 1765
Portugal—Cassells, Mr., Case of, [194] 125, 127
Supply—Colonies, Grants in Aid, [198] 958
University Tests, Comm. add. cl. [197] 1103

Wisley Common
Moved, "That a Select Committee be appointed to consider the proposed Inclosure of Wisley Common" (Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen) April 2, [195] 125; after short debate, A. 43, N. 22; M. 21
And, on April 6, Committee nominated as follows:—Sir Francis Goldsmid (Chairman), Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Goldney, Mr. Frederick Stanley, and Mr. Brown Westhead
Report of Select Committee April 26 (Parl. P. No. 169)

Witnesses (House of Commons) Bill
(Sir John Esmonde, Mr. Bonham-Carter)
c. Ordered; read 1°* May 13 [Bill 129]
Read 2°* June 22
Bill withdrawn * July 20

WYLLIE, Mr. J. W. S., Hereford City
India—Kohat, Garrison of, [194] 488

WYNDHAM, Hon. P. S., Cumberland, W.
Irish Church, Comm. [195] 890; cl. 23, 1530; cl. 39, [196] 135, 138, 309
Sunday and Ragged Schools, 2R. Amendt. [196] 1969

WYNN, Sir W. W., Denbighshire
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1321

WYNN, Mr. C. W. W., Montgomeryshire
Elections (Wales), Res. [197] 1323

YORK, Archbishop of
Bishops Resignation, 2R. [197] 1742
Ecclesiastical Dilapidations, 2R. [195] 1818, 1820
Endowed Schools, Comm. cl. 14, [197] 1878
Increase of the Episcopate, 2R. [195] 1338, 1340
Irish Church, Comm. cl. 23, [197] 929; Report, 1488
New Parishes, &c. 2R. [196] 1582, 1583
Sea Birds Preservation, Comm. cl. 2, [196] 78

Yorkshire and Lancashire, Shrievalties of Question, Mr. Gathorne Hardy; Answer, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen Mar 1, [194] 411

Youghal New Writ
Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland to make out a new Writ for the electing of a Burgess to serve in this present Parliament for the Borough of Youghal, in the room of Christopher Weguelin, esquire, whose Election has been determined to be void" (Mr. Glyn) April 30, [195] 2068
Amendt. to leave out from "That," and add "the issuing of a new Writ for Youghal be postponed until the Minutes of Evidence taken on the Election Petition be printed" (Mr. Collins); after short debate, Question put, "That the words, &c.;" A. 102, N. 70; M. 32; main Qestion put, and agreed to

YOUNG, Mr. A. W., Helston
Bishops Resignation, Comm. cl. 2, [198] 1319
Imperial Gas, Consid. [195] 1790
Special and Common Juries, 2R. [198] 400

YOUNG, Mr. G. (Solicitor General for Scotland), Wigton, &c.
Habitual Criminals, Comm. cl. 13, [198] 1281
Parliament—Bewdley Writ, [194] 667
Parochial Schools (Scotland), 2R. [197] 1735; Comm. cl. 59, [198] 1444
Post Office—Communication with Australia, [195] 140

Zanzibar (Jurisdiction of Consul) Bill
(Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Ayrton)
c. Ordered* July 20
Read 1°* July 22 [Bill 237]
Read 2°* July 26
Committee*; Report July 29
Read 3°* July 30
l. Read 1ª* (The Marquess of Lansdowne) August 2 (No. 246)
Read 2ª* August 3
Committee*; Report August 5
Read 3ª* August 6
Royal Assent August 9 [32 & 33 Vict. c. 75]

ERRATA.

In Volume [194] p. 377, line 4 from bottom, for Mr. C. Wykeham Martin, read Mr. P. Wykeham Martin.
In Volume [195] p. 788, line 4, for Mr. C. O. Morgan read Mr. G. O. Morgan.
In Volume [197] p. 1818, line 20, for Mr. Layard read Mr. Laird.

END OF VOLUME CXCVIII., AND FIFTH AND LAST VOLUME OF SESSION 1868-9.

UL 30 SEP 1963